The Prime Minister: As we announced on 7 May 1999 Official Report, column 485, we have undertaken the sale of gold to produce a better balance in the portfolio of UK reserves. On the advice of the Bank of England we made this public to ensure the sale was carried through on a clear and transparent basis. I wrote to the South African President on 11 June to set out these reasons in some detail and to follow up discussions we had already had with his Government. However, the letter also contained information received in confidence from the South African government. It is established practice under Section 1(c) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose such information.

Public Appointments

Mr. Singh: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many appointments to quangos he made between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; [92042]

(2) how many members of Britain's (a) ethnic minority communities and (b) Asian community he appointed to quangos between (i) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (ii) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999. [92113]

The Prime Minister: The number of appointments I have made to bodies listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies" are as follows:

Between 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999—58.

In addition The Queen has made a number of appointments to such bodies on my recommendation.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office set out the Government's new policy on collection and disclosure of ethnic origin data for public appointees in his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, North (Helen Jones) on 11 November 1998, Official Report, column 200. This policy came into effect with regard to new appointments and re-appointments from 1 April 1999.

However, owing to the small number of public appointments I have made since 1 April 1999 (two women and five men) information about ethnic origin cannot be provided since to do so would risk identifying individuals without consent.

Information on ethnic origin with regard to appointments I have made prior to 1 April 1999 is not held in the form requested. However, I have asked my Office to research what information is available and I will write to my hon. Friend in due course.

China (Human Rights)

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Prime Minister what improvements have been made by the Chinese Government in respect of (a) human rights and (b) the situation in Tibet since his discussions with Jiang Zemin in Beijing in October 1998. [92051]

The Prime Minister: We continue to monitor the observance of human rights in China and the situation in Tibet. We regularly raise our concerns with the Chinese authorities. We are addressing the issue with China through our bilateral and EU/China human rights dialogues. Since October, two rounds of talks have taken place as well as three EU/China human rights seminars. China has signed the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and invited the UN Special Rapporteur on Torture to visit. These positive steps will help to bring about China's closer co-operation with UN human rights mechanisms. We will continue to encourage China to ratify the international covenants which it has signed and we will continue to support developments in China's legal system which we believe will bring about positive change to human rights in the longer term.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1999, Official Report, column 433, on Special Advisers, if he will set out the terms of the similar arrangements which applied under previous Administrations as they relate to briefing hon. Members of the party in Government. [91858]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 July 1999]: The introduction of the "Model Contract for Special Advisers" in May 1997 set out for the first time in a public document the duties and responsibilities of Special Advisers. These include helping to brief party MPs and officials on issues of Government policy, which, like the other duties, is not new. It ensures that Party publicity is factually accurate and consistent with Government policy. Successive Administrations have recognised that this is an appropriate task for Special Advisers.

Policy Unit

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions members of his policy unit have visited the Republic of Ireland on official business since 1 May 1997, indicating the name of the member and the dates of travel in each case. [92272]

The Prime Minister: None.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many times he has held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting and the names of the Irish Ministers and officials at each meeting. [92270]

The Prime Minister: Since I came to office I have had numerous meetings with the Irish Government to discuss the political situation in Northern Ireland and a range of other issues of mutual interest. Given the frequency and nature of the meetings, it is not possible to list all the separate occasions and locations. The meetings have, however, usually been held in London, Dublin or Belfast and made public in the normal way at the time. In addition, I have of course met the Taoiseach at European and other international meetings. In line with normal practice, I was supported at the meetings by the appropriate number of officials.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister for what reason no announcement has yet been made in respect of the co-ordination within Government of animal welfare policies; when he expects to make such an announcement; and if he will make a statement. [92308]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 July 1999]: We are committed to continue working to ensure highest possible standards of animal welfare. Major steps already taken include announcing at the end of last year the end to all cosmetics testing on animals in the United Kingdom and no new licences have been issued for such tests since we came to power. We have also negotiated the phase-out across Europe of battery cages for laying hens. To date, co-ordination between Government Departments has been on an informal basis. However, this will be put on a formal basis this autumn by the establishment of an Interdepartmental Ministerial Group.

Bilderberg Group

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister from whom members of the Government received invitations to attend meetings of the Bilderberg Group. [92863]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Hereford (Mr. Keetch) on 7 May 1999, Official Report, columns 476–77.

Who sends invitations is a matter for the Bilderberg Group.

European Commission

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the current state of disciplinary proceedings against Commission officials implicated in alleged fraud; how many are involved; at what levels; and what is the timescale for concluding such proceedings. [92865]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office my right hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin) on 20 January 1999, Official Report, column 505 in which she undertook to write to the hon. Member. She did so on 30 April 1999 and a copy of the letter was placed in the Libraries of the House.

The European Commission has been asked to provide an update on progress made since then and when proceedings are expected to conclude. I have asked my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office to write to the hon. Member when this information is received.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92654]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 July 1999]: In accordance with the terms of the Ministerial Code, Ministers are required always to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements. Trips in and around London will normally be made by Government car. The last time I used a train was on 22 June 1999 to travel to Birmingham to attend a Conference to mark the anniversary of the New Deal and to present awards to the 100,000th New Dealer.

Tibet

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what discussions he proposes to have about the continued occupation of Tibet with the Chinese President Jiang Zemin, when he visits the United Kingdom in the autumn; [92188]

(2) what representations he proposes to make to the Chinese President, Jiang Zemin, this autumn about the detention of Gedhun Choekyi Nyima, recognised by the Dalai Lama as the 11 Panchen Lama of Tibet. [92189]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 July 1999]: We are very much looking forward to the first ever State Visit by a President of the People's Republic of China this Autumn. During President Jiang's visit we expect to discuss a full range of bilateral, regional and international issues.

Sutherland Commission

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik) of 21 July 1999, Official Report, column 1184, when he expects his Government to complete its consideration of the majority and minority reports of the Sutherland Commission; and if the Government will then make a formal response to the Commission's recommendations in respect of funding of nursing and personal care. [93030]

The Prime Minister: We are considering the Royal Commission's proposals and the reactions to the Commission's report. We will announce our decisions in due course.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92653]

Mr. Stuart Bell: To attend the Church of England General Synod in York in July 1998.

SCOTLAND

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the European Communities working groups which met over the last 12 months with a representative from his Department in attendance; if he will list the number of times each met; if he will indicate the nature of the Government's representation; and if he will make a statement. [88472]

Dr. Reid: Officials from my Department regularly attended European Communities working groups when matters of importance to Scotland—in particular, fisheries, agriculture and structural funds issues—were being discussed. Occasionally, my Department was represented by officials from the United Kingdom's Permanent Representation to the European Union.

Oncologists

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of clinical and medical oncologists per 100,000 population for each health authority in Scotland. [90806]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 28 June 1999, Official Report, column 30. Clinical and medical oncologists are not based throughout Scotland, but are employed in Cancer Centres in five locations—Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh, Glasgow and Inverness. They provide services at the centres and on an outreach basis according to need, to cover all health authorities. There is not a specific number of oncologists or proportion of oncologists' time assigned to each NHS Trust or Health Board.

Scottish Adjacent Water Boundaries Order 1999

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reasons, prior to laying the Scottish Adjacent Waters Boundaries Order 1999 (S.I., 1999, No. 1126), his Department did not invite observations from the Scottish Parliament. [91074]

Dr. Reid: Observations were not invited from the Scottish Parliament because it did not exist when the Draft Order was laid before this Parliament on 8 March and debated by both Houses on 23 March.

Genetically Modified Fish

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 21 July 1999, Official Report, column 531, what was the transgenic nature of the work at Otter Ferry Salmon Ltd.; and what were the results of the research. [93195]

Dr. Reid: The work involved the production of genetically modified Atlantic Salmon. Copies of a growth hormone gene taken from Chinook Salmon were introduced into 10,000 Atlantic Salmon eggs by micro-injection. The fish were grown in a land-based containment facility for up to one year. A high level of containment was maintained throughout the project. A small number of fish were identified as transgenic, based on accelerated growth. Approximately 50 of the fish grew at four times the normal rate, with no sign of abnormalities. The project was terminated after approximately a year, and all the fish were destroyed.

Departmental Nomenclature

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make an announcement on the name by which his Department is to be known. [93604]

Dr. Reid: With the agreement of the Prime Minister, my Department will be known as the Scotland Office.

HEALTH

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those NHS Trusts in England which are not millennium compliant. [90104]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 July 1999]: At 31 May 1999, there were four out of 477 National Health Service organisations considered by the NHS Executive to be making 'unsatisfactory' progress in their preparations for Year 2000. They were: Rochdale Healthcare NHS Trust; Mid Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust; Oxfordshire Ambulance NHS Trust; Luton and Dunstable Hospital NHS Trust. In each case action is being taken by the NHS Trusts concerned with the support of the NHS Executive to ensure they will be fully prepared with compliant systems and equipment or effective contingency plans in place by 30 September 1999, the deadline set for all NHS organisations.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken to ensure Mid Essex Hospital Trust is millennium compliant. [90003]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 July 1999]: Mid Essex Hospital Services National Health Service Trust is working towards the 30 September deadline to ensure that all systems are compliant or that effective contingency plans are in place if full compliance cannot be achieved. The NHS Trust has appointed its Director of Nursing as the new project manager in charge of its response to the year 2000 issue and the Chief Executive of the NHS Trust is personally involved in the process. The NHS Executive Eastern Regional Office year 2000 team and the NHS Trust are working closely to ensure that appropriate plans are in place and that all deadlines are met. Work is being undertaken in the following areas, which were assessed as "unsatisfactory" in the 31 May returns:

The production and regular updating of inventories for information technology systems.

The identification of proposals to fix or replace information technology systems which are not year 2000 compliant.

The assessment of legal liabilities arising from year 2000 non-compliance.

The identification of key areas of risk, which would result in year 2000 compliance not being addressed by 30 September 1999.

It is the NHS Trust's intention that it will meet the deadline of 30 September.

Myodil

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the drug Myodil was granted a product licence of right under the terms of the Medicines Act 1968. [90764]

Ms Jowell: Documentation held by the Medicines Control Agency indicates that a product licence of right for Myodil was granted in September 1972, although the MCA cannot categorically verify that date. An entry on the MCA's computerised Produce Licence database gives the date of authorisation as 19 November 1973. This may be the date on which the formal notification was sent to the company. There were over 39,000 applications for product licences of right and it is reasonable to assume that there would have been some delay in processing those applications.

Fluoridation

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the legal framework regulating the fluoridation of water supplies; and if he will make a statement. [91552]

Ms Jowell: The White Paper "Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation" acknowledged that present legislation on fluoridation is not working. We have commissioned a scientific review of the evidence on fluoride and health, which is due to be complete by the end of February 2000. If the review confirms that there are benefits to dental health from fluoridation and that there are no significant risks, we intend to introduce a legal obligation on water companies to fluoridate where there is strong local support for doing so.

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of fluoridating all drinking water in the north-west. [92699]

Ms Jowell: Assuming the review of scientific evidence shows benefits from fluoridation and no significant risks, decisions on schemes will be taken by local authority area and costs will be assessed for each individual scheme.

Cancer Care

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the members of the Cancer Care Action Group and the organisations for which they work; [91983]

(2) if he will report on the progress made by the Cancer Care Action Group in identifying and implementing improvements to the quality of care for patients and their relatives; and if he will make a statement. [91984]

Mr. Hutton: We recognise the importance of voluntary sector organisations in the care and support of patients with cancer. The Cancer Care Action Group has been established to promote more effective involvement of these organisations in the development and implementation of policy on cancer care. The Group includes representatives of cancer-related voluntary sector organisations and the National Health Service Executive. The organisations represented are:

Breakthrough Breast Cancer

Breast Cancer Care

Cancer Black Care

CancerBacup

Cancerlink

Colon Cancer Concern

Crocus Trust

Help the Hospices

Leukaemia Care Society

Macmillan Cancer Relief

Marie Curie Cancer Care

National Cancer Alliance

National Conference of Cancer Self Help Groups

National Council for Hospices and Specialist Palliative Care Services

The Prostate Cancer Charity

St. Christopher's Hospice

Sargent Cancer Care for Children

Sue Ryder Foundation

Women's Nationwide Cancer Control Campaign.

The Group is chaired by the Chief Nursing Officer and representatives of the NHS Executive and members of the National Cancer Forum also attend.

The Cancer Care Action Group first met in January 1999. It reviewed and advised on current cancer policy initiatives, the development of the National Health Service Cancer Information Strategy and psychosocial support for patients with cancer. The group also identified the need for further work to improve voluntary sector involvement in initiatives to improve quality in the NHS, and in education and training for health professionals.

Nurses (Expenses)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action he is planning to take to ensure that nurses are refunded the costs of all work-related journeys; [92208]

(2) how many clinical nurses working in the community are not refunded for the cost of their work-related journeys; [92207]

Mr. Denham: It is the responsibility of local employers to ensure that systems are in place to refund all staff for the costs of expenses necessarily incurred on National Health Service business. I am not aware of any clinical nurses working in the community who are not refunded expenses necessarily incurred on NHS business. I will be happy to look into any particular case the hon. Member has in mind.

Doctors (General Practice)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the procedures for the selection of doctors to vacant general practices; and when those procedures were last revised. [92228]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no current plans to review the procedures for the selection of doctors to vacant general practices.

The procedures were last revised on 10 December 1998 when The National Health Services (General Medical Services) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1998 were issued.

Barnet Hospital

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people failed to attend appointments arranged for acute treatment at Barnet Hospital in 1998–99. [92365]

Mr. Denham: Data are not collected from individual hospitals, only National Health Service trusts. Barnet General Hospital is part of Wellhouse NHS Trust.

In 1997–98 there were 6,592 did not attends (DNAs) for first outpatient attendances and 19,183 DNA's for subsequent outpatient attendances arranged for acute treatment, at Wellhouse NHS Trust.

In 1998–99 there were 753 failed to attends for elective inpatient admission and 6,370 DNAs for outpatient appointments.

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 July 1999, Official Report, column 362, on primary care groups (management allowances), when he expects the information requested to be available centrally. [92394]

Mr. Denham: Validated information is expected to be available in the autumn.

Children (Care and Treatment)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives he has announced to enhance the care and treatment of children. [92439]

Mr. Hutton: A number of major initiatives have recently been announced. The "Sure Start" project is aimed at developing partnerships and local services for young children and their families in areas of disadvantage to ensure that the health, educational, social and emotional needs of children aged under 5 years are met, and that they arrive at school ready to thrive. In England £452 million has been committed to the development of the Sure Start project over the next three years.

On child and adolescent mental health services, specific targets have been set in the National Priorities Guidance 1999–2002—which reflects the unevenness and inequality in the current pattern of these services, recognises our commitment to service improvement and features an additional investment of £84 million over the next three years.

On 13 July the Department and the Department for Education and Employment Ministers wrote to chief executives of local education authorities offering funding to support local healthy schools programmes to safeguard and improve the physical and mental health and well being of pupils and teachers as a factor in improving school standards. The budget for this programme in 1999–2000 is £4 million.

Last May we announced the introduction of Diana Children's Community Nursing Teams, to help families in the community with children suffering from life threatening illnesses, the budget for which is £4.2 million over the next three years.

The "Quality Protects" programme, which is funded at £375 million over the next three years, was announced last September. This initiative will transform the management and delivery of children's social services and provide better life chances for children in the care of local authorities and children in need.

AD2000

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been recruited to take part in the AD2000 trial based at the Clinical Trials Unit University of Birmingham; what the target number of participants is; and when he expects the trial to be completed. [92434]

Mr. Hutton: The AD2000 study opened to recruitment in the West Midlands in October 1998 and the national launch was held in December 1998. As of 21 July, 239 patients had been entered from 20 centres. The target is 3,000 participants. The first results—on the short-term effects of donepezil on behavioural problems, activities of daily living, and well-being of carers—are expected to become available in the year 2000. The AD2000 study is also investigating the longer-term effects of donepezil on disease progress and the cost-effectiveness of donepezil, in particular the need for institutionalisation. Long-term effectiveness results are not expected until after the year 2002 when recruitment should be completed.

Nurses (Salaries)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average salary of (a) male and (b) female nurses. [92436]

Mr. Denham: We estimate that the average annual basic pay for male and female nurses (qualified and unqualified), after the implementation of the April 1999 pay award, is £15,900 and £16,000 respectively. The national terms and conditions for National Health Service nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff are the same for male and female staff. Therefore, the difference between these figures simply reflects the variations in the grade and seniority mix of male and female nurses.

These estimates are based on the results from the Department's August 1997 Earnings Survey, scaled up to reflect pay awards since August 1997. The figures are the average full-time equivalent basic pay levels i.e. the basic pay of part-time staff was scaled up to that of full-time staff, and exclude payments for overtime and other leads and allowances.

Acute Care

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in the NHS have no (a) piped oxygen facilities and (b) air conditioning or temperature control in their acute wards. [92371]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Under-age Tobacco Sales

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with national representatives of trading standards officers about implementation of the proposed Draft Tobacco (Prohibition of Advertising and Promotion) Regulations 1999. [R] [92249]

Ms Jowell: Officials of the Department have met representatives of the Local Government Association and trading standards officers' umbrella body, the Local Authorities Co-ordinating body on Food and Trading Standards to discuss the proposed Enforcement Protocol for local authorities to tackle under-age tobacco sales.

Draft Concordat (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish, before the summer adjournment, the most recent draft concordat between his Department and the National Assembly for Wales. [92333]

Ms Jowell: Work on the health and social care concordat is proceeding well. A draft of the concordat should be ready to be discussed with colleagues in Wales once the overarching concordats have been put to the First Secretary. I do not intend to publish the concordat in advance of that.

Imported Food Regulations 1984

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prosecutions have been made for breaches of the Imported Food Regulations 1984 since they came into force. [92697]

Ms Jowell: The general provisions of the Imported Food Regulations 1984 and the Imported Food (Scotland) Regulations 1985 were replaced by the Imported Food Regulations 1997, which apply to the whole of Great Britain. Figures on the number of prosecutions under these Regulations are not kept centrally.

Doctors (Complaints)

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about the procedure available to investigate complaints against doctors; and if he will make a statement. [92637]

Mr. Denham: The procedures for investigating complaints against doctors generate much interest and are regularly the subject of correspondence. Complaints often involve complex assessments of clinical judgments which require expert review. Detailed guidance has been provided to National Health Service employers for the handling of complaints and any disciplinary action which needs to be taken as a result. Investigations need to be dealt with as quickly as possible. They should balance the employer's responsibility to protect the interests of patients with the need to ensure fair treatment for the doctor complained against.

Northwick Park Hospital

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to modernise the accident and emergency department at Northwick Park hospital; and at what cost. [92631]

Mr. Denham: Northwick Park Hospital, which forms part of The North West London Hospitals National Health Service Trust, has received two tranches of NHS modernisation funding to develop its accident and emergency facilities:

February 1999—£782,000 to provide 5 additional treatment rooms, a new x-ray machine and enable improvements to the entry areas and layout within the Department; May 1999—£630,000 to provide a six bedded resuscitation unit and ancillary accommodation.

Implementation of these improvements will help to reduce the length of time patients wait to be treated and the quality of the environment in which they are treated.

GM Crops

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if GM crops designed to produce products or by-products with medicinal properties will be subject to regulation under the Medicines Act 1968. [92722]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 23 July 1999]: Products and by-products made from genetically modified crops which satisfied the definition of a medicinal product, as defined in Article 1 of Directive 65/65/EEC, would be subject to medicines legislation. The Medicines Act does not cover the regulation of crop cultivation. The Department of the Environment Transport and the Regions is responsible for implementing Directive 90/220 on the deliberate release of genetically modified organisms.

Correspondence

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to provide a substantive answer to the questions tabled for answer on 7 July 1999 about millennium compliance by the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Ref. 90003 and 90104). [92580]

Mr. Denham: I have replied to the hon. Member today.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when will he reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam of 3 March concerning a constituent, Mrs. J. Timms. [92925]

Mr. Denham: I shall reply to the hon. Member's letter shortly.

Acquired Brain Injuries

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 3 December 1998, Official

Report, column 258, on acquired brain injuries, when the consultation on new guidance will commence; and when it will be completed and published. [92568]

Mr. Hutton: Consultation is currently taking place with the National Health Service and the voluntary sector. It is expected that the guidance will be published in the spring of 2000.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 139, on beta interferon, when he plans to announce his decisions following the consultation on the paper, "Faster Access to Modern Treatment". [92734]

Mr. Denham: Ministers will be making an announcement in due course.

Community Care (Direct Payments) Act 1996

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implementation of the Community Care (Direct Payments) Act 1996 by local authorities. [93070]

Mr. Hutton: The number of people receiving direct payments is increasing steadily. The latest data which are available show 1,400 people receiving direct payments on 30 September 1998, compared with 1,000 people on 1 December 1997. The Department is working with local authorities, users and other stakeholders to increase further the number of people who are able to benefit from the increased independence which direct payments can offer.

North and East Devon Health Authority

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 525, on the North and East Devon Health Authority, when he plans to publish his assessment of the Appeal Court decision. [92567]

Mr. Denham: I will write to the hon. Member.

Residential Allowance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 204, on residential allowance, when he will publish his proposals for consultation. [92566]

Mr. Hutton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. Moor

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the costs to the NHS of (a) the legal and administrative arrangements for the selection to the vacant general practice formerly held by Dr. Moor of Wigrove Road, Fenham, Newcastle and (b) subsequent locum and other temporary arrangements after Dr. Moor's resignation. [92237]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when Dr. Moor resigned from his general practice in Wigrove Road, Fenham, Newcastle and what was the date of each subsequent (a) advertisement of the practice, (b) selection panel hearing and (c) appeal hearing. [92235]

Mr. Denham: Dr. Moor resigned from his practice in Wingrove Road, Fenham, Newcastle on 31 March 1998.

The advertisement for the practice vacancy appeared in the British Medical Journal on 30 January 1998.

Selection panel hearings have been held on the following dates:

27 and 28 February 1998

21 July 1999.

There have been no appeal hearings to date.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons he directed the advertising of the vacancy to the general practice formerly held by Dr. Moor of Fenham, Newcastle to be made a second time; and how many NHS patients were on the practice list at the time. [92236]

Mr. Denham: An appeal on a point of law by an unsuccessful Partnership was made against this practice vacancy and was subsequently upheld.

Accordingly my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State instructed the Health Authority to select a fresh selection panel to reconsider the original applications in accordance with Regulation 17(11) of the General Medical Services Regulations 1992.

There were 3,393 patients on the practice list at the time the vacancy was declared.

Medical Student Places

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce a decision on the allocation of additional medical student places. [92461]

Mr. Denham: The Higher Education Funding Council for England announced the allocation of 684 extra medical student places to Higher Education Institutions on 22 June 1999. These were in addition to 158 places that had already been allocated earlier this year. An announcement of more than 100 further places is planned for the spring of next year.

General Practice Vacancies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appeals against selections to general practice vacancies were handled by the NHS Executive; what was the average length of time from advertising the practice vacancy to the appeal; and in how many cases (i) more than one appeal was heard and (ii) the same practice vacancy was advertised more than once, in each year since 1994. [92233]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of the instructions and guidance issued by his Department to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence, since its establishment. [93053]

Mr. Denham: I will write to the hon. Member.

Lancashire and South Cumbria (Health Authority Reorganisation)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to make changes to the health authority structures in the regions of Lancashire and South Cumbria; [92926]

(2) what estimate he has made of the savings which could be made from the unification of North West Lancashire and South Lancashire health authorities in terms of management costs. [92927]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Executive North West is presently considering the impact of recent policy changes on organisations across the whole region, including health authorities and trusts. It is proposing to engage Members of Parliament, health authorities, NHS trusts, primary care groups, community health councils and others in local dialogue to discuss the way ahead. At this stage, the regional office has no specific intentions, nor has it made any recommendations for health authority changes in Lancashire and South Cumbria. Any reconfigurations which may emerge from this process will reflect these discussions and not be driven purely by financial considerations.

Accident and Emergency Units

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many accident and emergency units in England and Wales have been closed following merger with a neighbouring accident and emergency unit in each year since 1980. [92571]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not collected centrally. It is for health authorities to decide what facilities are required for local populations.

Public Appointments

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appointments to public bodies were made by his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnicity; and if he will list the chairmen appointed to those bodies in those years, similarly broken down. [92516]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is given in the table. The Department's goals and objectives for ensuring recruitment from all sections of the community were published by the Government on 25 May in "Quangos: Opening Up Public Appointments 1999–2002" copies of which are available in the Library.

The names of those appointed as chairman as at 1 March 1998 are listed in the Departmental Public Appointments Annual Report 1998, copies of which are available in the Library. Information as at 1 April 1999 will be published shortly and copies of the 1999 Annual Report will be placed in the Library.

They show that between 1 April 1998 and 31 March 1999, 13.1 per cent. of all appointments made were to people from an ethnic minority background while 48.1 per cent. were to women. This compares with 10.7 per cent. and 45.5 per cent., during the previous 12 month period.

Workplace Back Pain

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investment his Department is making in pilot projects to combat back pain in the workplace. [92929]

Ms Jowell: We are providing £500,000 to support pilot projects under the 'Back in Work' programme. Project proposals of between £5,000 and £50,000 have been invited from businesses, trade unions and workplace organisations. The closing date for applications is 31 August.

This programme is part of the Healthy Workplace Initiative which is jointly sponsored by the Department and the Health and Safety Executive. The Healthy Workplace Initiative was launched on 9 March this year by myself and my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for health and safety.

Social Care Workers

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to encourage the social care work force to obtain additional qualifications. [92937]

Mr. Hutton: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Quality Projects Initiative

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the progress of the Quality Projects Initiative. [92936]

Mr. Hutton: The quality protects programme was launched in September 1998 and is designed to transform the management and delivery of children's social services. It is supported by a new £375 million special children's grant.

All local authorities are required to submit an annual quality protects management action plan (MAP) to show how they intended to improve their children's services. The MAPs for Year 1 submitted in January were all assessed as reaching an acceptable standard. As a result of this I wrote to all local authorities confirming that subject to Parliamentary approval they would be receiving payment of their allocation of the children's special grant for 1999–2000. In their MAPs due to be received in January 2000 we will expect to see evidence of real improvements in the quality of services being provided by local authorities.

On 29 June we published a national overview report, Mapping Quality in Children's Services: An Evaluation of Local Responses to the Quality Protects Programme, which presents the key messages and findings from the first round of MAPs. Copies of the report are available in the Library. It identifies many examples of good practice from across the country but it also highlights major areas where improvement is urgently needed. To support local authorities tackle some of these development needs we will be publishing a national work programme later in the summer which will set out a plan of work by the Department at national, regional and local level. Sixteen quality protects project teams have been set up within the Department to develop policy and disseminate good practice on a range of issues including disabled children, children's participation, placement choice, new child protection guidance and ethnic minority children.

We shall also be publishing our revised objectives for children's services, supported by a full set of performance indicators, which sets out clearly our expectations of the part to be played by local authorities in delivering better outcomes for some of the most vulnerable children in our society.

We have appointed eight regional development workers to drive forward measures to improve services and to work with local authorities to help implement their management action plans.

When we launched the quality protects programme we said that elected members had a crucial role in ensuring that the programme was a success. In order to help members understand their roles and responsibilities, we have recently held seven joint Departmental/Local Government Association regional seminars for members.

Personal Social Services

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of total gross expenditure in England in 1998–99 on personal social services was accounted for by services for (a) children and (b) the elderly. [92938]

Mr. Hutton: Gross expenditure data for England in 1998–99 on personal social services are not available until spring 2000. Comparative data for 1997–98 showed that 50 per cent. of total gross expenditure was accounted for by services for the elderly and 23 per cent. for children.

Casualty Department Modernisations

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many casualty department modernisation schemes are planned this year to (a) provide for expansion or redevelopment and (b) improve telemedicine links. [92928]

Mr. Denham: Of the 169 Accident and Emergency modernisation schemes going forward this year, there are 63 involving expansion and redevelopment. A further 45 schemes involve redesign or general refurbishment of Accident and Emergency departments. In addition 34 schemes will improve telemedicine links.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

47. Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the preparedness of key sectors of the UK infrastructure for the millennium bug. [91385]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Mr. Plaskitt), Official Report, columns 14–15.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Question Time

48. Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Council if she will ensure that oral questions to the Secretaries of State for Defence, Culture, Media and Sport, International Development and Northern Ireland last for one hour each. [91386]

Mr. Tipping: No. Within the current time available this could only be done at the expense of questions to other Ministers.

53. Mr. Amess: To ask the President of the Council what proposals she has for reform of Question Time. [91486]

Mrs. Beckett: I have no immediate plans for procedural change but am prepared to look at any constructive proposals. Some adjustment to the question rota will be discussed through the usual channels in the autumn to reflect the consequences of devolution.

Thursday Sittings

49. Mr. Edwards: To ask the President of the Council what assessment she has made of the experiment in relation to Thursday sitting hours. [91387]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey), Official Report, column 16.

House of Lords Reform

50. Shona McIsaac: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on progress on proposals for the reform of the House of Lords. [91388]

51. Dr. Iddon: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on progress on proposals for the reform of the House of Lords. [91389]

Mrs. Beckett: The Royal Commission on the reform of the House of Lords issued a consultation document in March of this year and I understand that, in response, it has received over 1,300 written submissions concerning the long-term reform of the House of Lords from members of the public, MPs, peers, academics and a range of organisations.

The Commission is keen to secure the widest possible range of views on the issues raised by its terms of reference and it has organised a series of public meetings throughout the UK to enable it to probe and test the written evidence it has received and to hear the views of members of the general public. The final meeting will be in London on 27 July.

There is no reason to believe that the Royal Commission will not report on schedule by the end of this year.

Legislative Process

52. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to speed up the legislative process. [91485]

Mrs. Beckett: I have no plans to speed up the legislative process as such. The House's procedures already provide sufficient flexibility in cases of urgency. I am looking at ways of improving the quality of legislation. When this involves the publication of draft Bills for pre-legislative scrutiny, this may appear to lengthen the legislative process.

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by her Department since June 1997, indicating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [92004]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 636, by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health.

As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that their policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, my Department will work closely with the Women's Unit to develop good practices for carrying out gender impact appraisal.

Management and Services Review

Mrs. Roe: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on the Report of Mr. Michael Braithwaite on the Review of Management and Services to the House of Commons Commission. [93530]

Mr. Kirkwood: On 26 October 1998, Mr. Michael Braithwaite was invited by the House of Commons Commission to undertake a review of the system of management and decision-making responsibilities for services to the House which was set up following the inquiry in 1990 by Sir Robin Ibbs.

The Commission has considered the Report of the team lead by Mr. Braithwaite at three meetings, the last of which was on 19 July. The Report was published today as House of Commons paper 745.

The Commission is grateful to Mr. Braithwaite and his colleagues for reporting fully on the complex issues referred to them and for their constructive recommendations. The team considers the proposals in the Report provide a coherent framework for building on the Ibbs Report's recommendations on management, financial control and decision-making in the House.

The Commission welcomes comments from Members, staff of the House and others which should be addressed, in writing, to the Secretary of the Commission.

Parliamentary Data and Video Network

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what monitoring is undertaken of the frequency with which hon. Members and staff are unable to access the PDVN network; with what results; and if he will make a statement. [92801]

Mr. Allan: The Parliamentary Data and Video Network (PDVN) is monitored on an operational basis with real time information. This indicates to Parliamentary Communications Directorate staff when an individual piece of infrastructure equipment is not responding to the network. This is a dynamic process and is actioned for fault reporting purposes.

There is no individual monitoring of access problems by individuals, but trends are established and pursued. It is currently not possible to report on the availability of individual services on the PDVN. Tools to provide this information will be implemented in the coming months.

Regrettably, there have recently been some serious problems with the network infrastructure which have prevented access to PDVN users. A project to replace the overloaded components of the network was initiated some time ago and will be implemented during the forthcoming summer recess.

Women's Organisations (Consultation)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the women's organisations which have been consulted over proposed legislation by her Department during this session; and if their responses have been published. [86996]

Mrs. Beckett: The Privy Council Office has made no proposals for primary legislation during this Session.

However, the Government are committed to making sure that policies are inclusive and take full account of the needs and experience of all those affected by them. "Guidelines on Policy Appraisals for Equal Treatment", published in November 1998, commit policy makers to assessing how proposals affect different groups of people.

DEFENCE

Army Personnel Centre

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Army Personnel Centre for the financial year 1999–2000. [93586]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Chief Executive of the Army Personnel Centre has been set the following Key Targets for 1999–2000.

Key Target 1—The percentage of filled posts (excluding posts gapped for less than 28 days and all posts for private soldiers and subaltern officers) to be 91 per cent. or greater.

Key Target 2—The proportion of personnel posted in-year by the APC, whose rank and Service qualifications of the post, to be 92 per cent. or greater.

Key Target 6—To achieve a year-on-year reduction of 1 per cent. in operating costs.

2nd Division

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of transferring the HQ of 2nd Division from York to Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement. [91320]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The main cost of the move will be works required to prepare the headquarters building in Edinburgh, for which some £250,000 has been allowed in this current financial year, and staff transfer costs, for which provision of some £750,000 has been made over the next two years. As far as savings in annual staff costs are concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 424.

Depleted Uranium Ammunition

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the environmental effects of targeting depleted uranium ammunition on dummy armour. [91844]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Elizabeth Peace to Mr. John Bercow, dated 26 July 1999:

I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question about the environmental assessment of targeting depleted uranium (DU) on dummy armour as such firings were part of a research programme managed by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) on behalf of the Ministry of Defence (MOD).

DU ammunition was last fired at the DERA Eskmeals range at hard targets or dummy armour in September 1995. Public concern about the risk of contamination from DU prompted DERA, in December 1993, to commission an independent study by W S Atkins Environment. The report of the study, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House, concluded that there was no significant risk to the public, site personnel or the environment. The comprehensive environmental monitoring programme, that DERA continues to conduct, confirms that this is still the case. The monitoring reports are all within the public domain; the most recent reports, for 1995/96, were presented to the Environment Agency and local councils at the beginning of last year and further reports will be available to the public in due course as a matter of routine.

I hope the above is helpful.

JP233 System

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what exports of JP233 Runway Denial System the Government have approved; and if he will make a statement on JP233 system support technicians with respect to their recall from abroad by his Government. [91880]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 15 July 1999, Official Report, column 286. The Government are strongly committed to applying the terms of the Ottawa Convention under which JP233 would be prohibited as an anti-personnel landmine. The recall or reassignment to other tasks of any technicians working overseas is a matter for their employer.

Chinook Helicopters

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, (1) pursuant to his answer of 14 July 1999, Official Report, column 229, if he will place the full contents of the Air Safety Action Message CH-47–99-ASMA-02 161228Z in the Library and indicate the actions taken by his Department for each of the checks identified; [92096]

(2) if he will assess, in relation to the crash of Chinook ZD576, the circumstances of the US incident that resulted in the issuing of the Air Safety Action Message CH-47–99-ASAM-02 161228Z; and if he will make a statement; [92088]

(3) if he will list the reported instances of hydraulic contamination reported on Chinook helicopters for each year since 1993; [92086]

(4) if hydraulic contamination has been identified as the (a) possible and (b) confirmed cause of instances of uncommanded flight manoeuvres on the Chinook helicopter since December 1993; [92087]

(5) if Air Accidents Investigation Branch personnel investigating the fatal crash of RAF Chinook ZD576 have identified problems relating to hydraulic contamination; and if he will make a statement; [92061]

(6) what instances of (a) confirmed and (b) suspected hydraulic contamination have been reported on Chinook helicopters since the issuance of the Air Safety Action Message CH-47–99-ASAM-02 161228Z. [92085]

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what design changes were made to the FADEC software for RAF Chinook MK2 after May 1994; and what was the cost to his Department of this work; [92329]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 13 July 1999, Official Report, column 96, on Chinook helicopters, if the redesign changes incorporated in the FADEC software undertaken by Textron Lycoming between 1989 and June 1994 were covered by warranty; [92324]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 13 July 1999, Official Report, column 96, on Chinook helicopters, what was the cost to his Department of the redesign changes incorporated in the FADEC software by Textron Lycoming between 1989 and June 1994; [92323]

(4) how many representations he has received since 1 May, requesting that he re-open the inquiry into the loss of the RAF Chinook on the Mull of Kintyre. [92330]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Members and copies of my letters will be placed in the Library of the House.

Kosovo

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what criteria the Government will decide what proportion of the costs incurred by the British armed forces (a) during the air campaign over the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and (b) as part of the contribution to KFOR, will be met from the Treasury Contingency Reserve and what proportion from his Department's budget; and if he will make a statement. [92295]

Mr. George Robertson: As I explained to the House on 21 June 1999, Official Report, column 743, it has been agreed with my Treasury colleagues that the Reserve will cover the net additional costs of those operations where my Department is unable to accommodate them without detriment to other commitments.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops the UK has pledged to KFOR; how many have been deployed so far; and when he expects all the UK troops pledged to KFOR to be deployed. [92823]

Mr. George Robertson: The United Kingdom has provided all of the forces for NATO which were requested by NATO. We currently have around 10,000 personnel committed to KFOR operations.

The withdrawals of the 1st Battalion Parachute Regiment, the 1st Battalion Royal Gurkha Rifles and the 1st Battalion Irish Guards, which I announced on 19 July 1994, Official Report, column 418, means that number will reduce to around 7,000 by mid-October as other nations build up their contributions.

The UK contribution to KFOR will be kept under review.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions (a) he, (b) British military personnel and (c) his officials, (i) have had and (ii) will have with (1) French, (2) German and (3) Spanish authorities to review operations surrounding the Kosovo conflict. [91577]

Mr. George Robertson: The Ministry of Defence is looking at the lessons learned from the Kosovo conflict, and is contributing to similar work at NATO. I and my Department will continue to have contacts with Allies, including France, Germany and Spain on a wide range of issues, including lessons learned.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers aged under 18 years are currently deployed in NATO's K-FOR in (a) the Balkans and (b) Kosovo. [92126]

Mr. George Robertson: Information is not available in precisely the detail requested. However, as at 1 June 1999, 17 soldiers aged under 18 were stationed in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to provide a figure for the number of Serbian tanks destroyed in Kosovo. [92493]

Mr. George Robertson: The NATO Munitions Effectiveness Assessment Team is carrying out a full assessment of the damage inflicted on Serbian military vehicles. Their findings are expected by the end of the year.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he will make for the winter accommodation of British forces in Kosovo in respect of (a) corimec cabins, (b) new hard-walled buildings and (c) requisitioned buildings; and what is the latest date by which (i) these decisions must be taken and (ii) the purchase and construction cycle must start and finish. [92490]

Mr. George Robertson: On Friday 23 July, the Defence Procurement Agency placed a contract with Hunting Engineering Ltd. to supply, build, maintain and operate temporary field accommodation (TSA) for our forces in Kosovo at an estimated cost of about £110 million. TFA will comprise hard-walled living accommodation, appropriate to the range of weather conditions encountered in the area, together with administrative and other facilities. The accommodation is planned to be fully deployed by December and is expected to obviate the need to occupy requisitioned buildings.

Cadets

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people recruited to each of the armed forces in the most recent year for which figures are available had been a member of the (a) Army Cadets, (b) Sea Cadets, (c) Air Training Corps and (d) Combined Cadet Force. [92540]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Full information is not available to answer the question precisely as raised. The information available for Financial Year 1998–99 is as follows:

Of the people who joined the Army, 2,762 had been members of the Army Cadets, and 562 had been members of the Combined Cadet Force.

Of the people who joined the Naval Service, it is known that 371 had been members of the Sea Cadets, 232 had been members of the Combined Cadet Force, and 456 had been members of either the Air Training Corps or the Army Cadets. This is based on research covering about 85 per cent. of entrants in the year.

Of the people selected to join the Royal Air Force, 693 had been members of either the Air Training Corps or the Combined Cadet Force (RAF section).

Joint Strike Fighter

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the expenditure made by his Department on the Concept Demonstration phase of the Joint Strike Fighter project for each financial year from 1995–96 to 1999–2000. [91336]

Mr. George Robertson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 26 July 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about expenditure made on the Concept Demonstration Phase of the Joint Strike Fighter project for each financial year from 1995–96 to 1999–2000. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

Payments made by my Department to the United States on the Concept Demonstration Phase of the Joint Strike Fighter programme from 1995–96 to 1999–2000 are as follows:

All figures are at outturn prices for the years in question.

Mr. Doug Henderson: A total of 92 Service personnel who were aged 16 or 17 have died since 1 January 1982. Nearly half these deaths occurred off-duty, and the majority of these were as a result of traffic accidents. A summary of the information is as follows:

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many appointments to public bodies were made by his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnicity; and if he will list the chairmen appointed to those bodies in those years, similarly broken down. [92517]

This includes the following appointments of Chairmen: His Honour Judge Rogers (Advisory Committee on Conscientious Objectors), Mr. John Bridgeman (National Employers' Liaison Committee) and Mr. G. Richards (Oil and Pipelines Agency).

(b) 1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999: 31; (i) 24 male, seven female; (ii) 31 white. This includes the following appointments of Chairmen: Sir John Cadogan (Defence Nuclear Safety Committee), Sir Michael Beetham (RAF Museum), Sir Barry Wilson (Royal Naval Museum) and Baroness Dean (Armed Forces Pay Review Body).

These figures include new appointments as well as reappointments.

Appointments to the technical Boards under the Defence Scientific Advisory Council are not included (they have previously been included in answers to similar questions). The Cabinet Office has recently agreed that, as these Boards are sub-Committees of the Council, they should not be classified as advisory NDPBs. Appointments to the Council itself are included.

Within the overriding principle of selection based on merit, MOD is committed to increasing diversity in appointments to its NDPBs and raising the representation of women, people from ethnic minority groups and disabled people in line with government-wide objectives. To this end, MOD publishes an annual Plan for Public Appointments and Equal Opportunities (the plan for 1999–2002 was published in "Quangos: Opening up Public Appointments") which sets objectives and targets.

Mr. George Robertson: Some 16,300 UK Service personnel are currently serving with NATO, either in support of NATO operations in Kosovo, Albania and Bosnia, or in Headquarters appointments. Just over 300 are deployed in support of the UN's peacekeeping operation in Cyprus.

Turkish Defence Minister (Visit)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the dates of the recent visit to the United Kingdom of the Turkish Defence Minister; what was his itinerary; which Ministers and companies he met; and what portion of the cost of the visit was met by the United Kingdom Government. [92084]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Turkish Defence Minister visited the United Kingdom on 12–14 July. On 13 July, he held meetings with the Secretary of State for Defence, and visited Royal School of Artillery, Larkhill. On the evening of the 13th, the Under-Secretary of State for Defence held a dinner in his honour. On 14 July, he visited Flag Officer Sea Training and the Permanent Joint Headquarters. He met representatives of the following UK companies: Marconi Electronics Systems Ltd., Matra British Aerospace Dynamics UK, Alvis plc, GKN Westland Helicopters Ltd. and British Aerospace plc. The United Kingdom Government paid for the in-country costs of the Turkish Defence Minister; the Turkish ambassador held a private dinner on 12 July.

Personnel (Bosnia)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom service personnel have been killed in Bosnia in the last three years. [92214]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 21 July 1999]: Since 1 January 1996, 23 United Kingdom Army personnel have died while serving in Bosnia. There were no deaths of Royal Navy and Royal Air Force personnel.

None of these deaths were the result of hostile action.

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom military personnel have visited Turkey in each of the last three years; and in which capacities. [90441]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Senior military personnel who have visited Turkey in the last three years are as follows: in 1997, the Commander in Chief Fleet; in 1998, the Vice Chief of the Defence Staff, the new Commander in Chief Fleet, the Assistant Chief of the General Staff and Flag Officer Sea Training and in 1999, the Chief of the Defence Staff, the Chief of the Air Staff and the Judge Advocate General. There have also been high-level visits to UK forces deployed on Operation 'Northern Watch'. A full list of all military personnel who have visited Turkey is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Armed Forces Chaplains

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the religious faiths ministered to by chaplains in each of HM armed forces; if he will list for each faith (a) the number of chaplains at each rank and (b) the highest rank obtained by a chaplain since 1969; what bodies govern the promotion of chaplains; and when the rules governing armed service chaplains were last amended; [92932]

(2) if he will break down into budget heads the annual cost of the chaplaincy service for each of the armed forces. [92933]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Absence without Leave

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men and women were reported absent without leave in 1998; and how many were not recovered. [92735]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Firearms Training

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 98, on firearms training, if he will list the schools where a combined cadet force gives pupils access to firearms training; how many firearms, of what calibre, are stored on school premises; and how many pupils are enrolled in training programmes each year. [92677]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Armed Forces (Religious Faiths)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many persons in each of the armed forces subscribe to or identify with each major religious faith according to personnel records. [92934]

Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) of 15 July 1999, Official Report, column 286, on weapons exports, from which section of the defence budget the costs are to be met; what is the size and timing of the expenditure involved; and by what means Parliament will be informed of the expenditure after it has been incurred. [92423]

Mr. George Robertson: The costs will be met from Section J of Vote 1. The exact size and timing remains to be determined, but I refer my hon. Friend to the Minute laid before Parliament on 4 February 1999 which reported the estimated cost to be between £15 and £17 million. Once the gift has been made in full, it will be recorded in the Appropriation Account.

Portsmouth Naval Base

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what physical constraints would prevent Portsmouth Naval Base becoming the home base port for the two new aircraft carriers for the Royal Navy if their overall weight displacement was over 46,000 tons. [92422]

Mr. George Robertson: The size of the new aircraft carrier is currently estimated to be up to 40,000 tonnes but this will very much depend on the design selected. There are no known physical constraints that would prevent Portsmouth Naval Base from becoming the base port for the vessels currently envisaged.

Treasury Contingency Fund

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what applications his Department has made to the Treasury Contingency Reserve for funds in each year since 1989; how much was requested; how much was received; and if he will make a statement. [92283]

Mr. George Robertson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Suppliers (Contracts)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts exist with suppliers outside the United Kingdom for the replacement of ordnance and ammunition expended in operations by the British armed forces; which companies service those contracts, and for which items; and if he will make a statement. [92284]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

(2) if he will make a statement on the collaboration between the Atomic Weapons Establishment and the United States Defence Nuclear Facilities Safety Board; and if he will list the co-operative agreements between the Atomic Weapons Establishment and the United States Defence Nuclear Facilities Safety Board which have been in existence since 1 January 1990, indicating when each agreement was made; [92258]

(3) how many staff from the Atomic Weapons Establishment have been stationed at the United States Defence Nuclear Facilities Safety Board as part of an exchange of staff since 1 January 1997; [92256]

(4) how many times members of staff from the Atomic Weapons Establishment have visited the United States Defence Nuclear Facilities Safety Board since 1 January 1997; on what dates each visit took place; and what was the purpose of each visit. [92255]

Mr. George Robertson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Low Flying Sorties

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-level sorties under 220 feet were undertaken during (a) the Kosovo conflict and (b) the Gulf War. [92634]

Mr. George Robertson: The RAF did not undertake any operational low-level sorties during the course of the Kosovo campaign. Precise figures for the Gulf war are not available, but in excess of 170 operational low-level sorties were flown by the RAF at altitudes below 250 feet.

Royal Tournament

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 426, on the Royal Tournament, if he will arrange for performances of the Royal Military Tattoo 2000 to be staged at principal garrison towns in addition to those at Horse Guards Parade in London. [92627]

Mr. George Robertson: The Royal Military Tattoo 2000 is the Armed Forces' flagship contribution to the nation's Millennium celebrations with a theme of Defence of the Realm: Past, Present and Future. It will combine pageantry, son et lumière and state of the art technology and has been specifically design for production on Horse Guards Parade. It is not suited to being staged at other venues around the country without major modification and considerable additional expense.

Royal Ordnance, Bridgwater

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the strategic security of supply for ammunition and explosives in relation to Royal Ordnance, Bridgwater, indicating the actions he is proposing. [92553]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 23 July 1999]: The Ministry of Defence recognises that the British Armed Forces need to have access to reliable sources of supply for ammunition and explosives. We are currently negotiating with Royal Ordnance potential partnering arrangements covering a wide range of ammunition products. It is too early to predict the outcome of these negotiations. The industrial base required to support the company's likely future business, including individual Royal Ordnance factories, is a matter for the company.

RAF Menwith Hill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all current bilateral agreements between the United Kingdom and the United States affecting RAF Menwith Hill. [92943]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The presence of the United States Visiting Forces at RAF Menwith Hill is governed by the NATO Status of Forces Agreement of 1951 and other arrangements appropriate to the relationship which exists between the governments of the United Kingdom and United States for the purposes of our common defence. These arrangements are confidential and are withheld under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to defence, security and international relations.

Married Quarters

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average annual cost of maintaining a Defence Housing Executive administered married quarter for the latest year for which figures are available. [92191]

Mr. Spellar: In the Defence Housing Executive (DHE) 1999 Corporate Plan, the action plan sets out a key target relating to the unit cost of housing and aims to achieve a figure of less than £5,400 per property. The figure is calculated by dividing the total cost of the DHE (£349,152 million including some £100 million rental payment to Annington Homes Ltd) by the number of properties occupied (including those which are Substitute Services Families Accommodation) (63,195). The equivalent figure for Financial Year 1998–99 is £5,460. The cost of the upgrade programme is not included as this is outside the routine cost of housing provision.

Future Aircraft Carrier

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the impact of recent operations in South East Europe on the Future Aircraft Carrier programme. [91335]

Mr. George Robertson: Recent operations in the Gulf and the Balkans have demonstrated the important part that aircraft carriers can play in supporting a range of activities from peacekeeping to military action. We are carrying out a full study into the lessons learned from the Kosovo conflict. Initial conclusions will be made available to the House in the Defence White Paper in the autumn and a more definitive account should be available by next spring.

Overseas Students (Sandhurst)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if, in respect of overseas students at the Royal Military Academy Sandhurst for each year from 1992 to 2000 inclusive, he will list the total number of overseas students indicating their countries of origin. [92488]

(2) in respect of overseas students at the Royal Military Academy Sandhurst (a) what is the current cost per student to (i) the defence budget and (ii) the Foreign and Commonwealth Office budget and (b) what is the total annual cost to those budgets. [92489]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Armed Forces Training

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers, sailors and airmen were in training on 1 April. [92944]

Mr. Doug Henderson: On 1 April 1999, the number of soldiers, sailors and airmen/airwomen under training were:

Naval Service (including RN ratings and RM other ranks)—3,542

Army soldiers—12,490

RAF airmen/airwomen—2,345.

Radiation Exposure

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research his Department has (a) undertaken and (b) assessed in relation to the heath effects of (i) radiation emanating from military use of infra-red cameras and (ii) microwave radiation emitted from military surveillance equipment; what guidance is issued to personnel using this equipment; what instructions have been issued to medical staff in order to monitor any effects from the use of this equipment; and what instructions have been issued to military personnel to protect civilians from radiation exposure. [92935]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Traumatised Service Personnel

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) financial and (b) material assistance his Department has provided to the Ty Gwyn clinic for traumatised service personnel at Colwyn Bay; what similar facilities exist elsewhere in the United Kingdom; and what rules govern the admissions policy of military hospitals for dealing with post-traumatic stress disorder. [92736]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department does not provide financial or material assistance to the Ty Gwyn clinic, and I am not aware of any similar facilities in the United Kingdom which specialise in the treatment of traumatised Service personnel. Admission of Service personnel suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder to the Duchess of Kent's Psychiatric Hospital, Catterick, would be on the basis of clinical judgment. Former Service personnel are eligible for treatment of post traumatic stress disorder at the Duchess of Kent's Psychiatric Hospital, free of charge as NHS patients, if they live within the catchment area of the hospital. If not, the cost of treatment would need to be met by their local health authority in accordance with NHS budgetary procedures. Admission of former Service personnel would depend on spare capacity being available.

Armed Forces Personnel

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel have (a) left and (b) joined the (i) Army, (ii) Navy and (iii) RAF in the last two years for which figures are available. [88704]

Mr. Doug Henderson [pursuant to his reply 2 July 1999, c. 293]: I regret to inform the hon. Member that some of the information I gave was incorrect. For outflow of UK Regular Forces between 1 April 1998–31 March 1999, the figure for the Royal Air Force should read 4,889 and the total should read 27,435.

Tomahawk Missiles

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the cessation of production of Block III Tomahawk missiles in the United States later this year on the capabilities of the Royal Navy submarine fleet. [91328]

Mr. George Robertson: The Tomahawk Block III production line at Raytheon was closed for new orders some time ago, and we expect that the missiles ordered by the UK will all have been delivered by the end of 1999. The capabilities of the RN submarine fleet will not be affected by the closure.

The US Department of Defence has now embarked on a programme for refurbishment and upgrade of older missile stock up to Block III standard which will carry it through the period up to 2004–05, when the next version of Tomahawk, called Tactical Tomahawk (TACTOM), becomes available. The replacement of the Royal Navy's Tomahawk missiles used in the Balkans, currently being negotiated, will come from this refurbishment and upgrade programme.

Ballistic Missile Pre-feasibility Study

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the unclassified version of the summary of the ballistic missile defence pre-feasibility study. [92487]

Mr. George Robertson: I am placing in the Library today a declassified version of the report which presents the findings of the Ministry of Defence UK Ballistic Missile Defence Pre-Feasibility Programme. In addition to the report itself, I am placing in the Library two related documents, an Executive Summary of the report and a Statement of Work, setting out the scope of the Pre-Feasibility Study.

Trident Warhead

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work is (a) in progress and (b) planned on changing the Trident warhead from fixed to variable yield. [93172]

Mr. George Robertson: The UK has flexibility in the choice of yield for the warheads on its Trident missiles.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Racial Discrimination

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Government intend to submit to the relevant international bodies its latest periodic reports under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Council of Europe Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities. [93579]

Mr. Straw: The United Kingdom's Fifteenth Report under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and its first Report under the Council of Europe Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities were submitted to the United Nations and Council of Europe respectively on 23 July 1999. Copies of the Reports have been placed in the Library.

Leave to Remain

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to replace the current application forms for foreign nationals wishing to apply for leave to remain in the United Kingdom. [93580]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The current application forms expire on 14 October 1999. Revised versions of the seven existing forms will be prescribed during September and it is planned to make them available before the end of that month. From the time they are issued until 1999, applications may be made on either the newly prescribed forms or the present versions. Only the new forms may be used for applications made on, or after, 15 October 1999. Copies will be placed in the Library as soon as they are available.

Immigration Rules

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the purpose of the concession to Immigration Rules in respect of the one year rule and women suffering domestic violence. [92471]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under the Immigration Rules, spouses of British Citizens or of people settled in the United Kingdom are not given settlement on arrival or following the marriage; they are granted an initial period of 12 months. At the end of this 12 month probationary period, settlement will be granted if the Secretary of State is satisfied that the marriage is still subsisting and that each of the parties has the intention of living permanently with the other as his or her spouse.

If, for whatever reason, the marriage has broken down during the probationary year, settlement is normally refused. That is because the fundamental reason for the person's admission in the first place—to continue or commence stable family life—no longer exists. In the past, cases where violence was the reason for the breakdown of a marriage have been considered sympathetically but it was held that domestic violence could not normally override the requirements of the Immigration Rules.

The probationary period is intended as a safeguard against abuse. If settlement were granted immediately there would be no recourse against applicants who desert their partners as soon as they arrive in the country. The absence of a probationary period would also allow more bogus marriages to escape detection. We, therefore, have no intention of abolishing this requirement of the Rules, which in the generality of cases is the only sensible way to operate a firm but fair immigration control.

However, we were aware that this policy placed a small minority of individuals in a distressing dilemma in that their insecure immigration status left them feeling "trapped" in a violent marriage. They faced a stark choice between staying within the violent relationship or leaving their sponsor and being refused settlement.

As I said in my reply to my hon. Friend on 16 June 1999, Official Report, columns 164–65, the domestic violence concession has been introduced for overseas spouses who wish to remain in the United Kingdom, but who wish to leave their partner because of domestic violence before completion of the 12 month probationary period. The concession allows them to settle in the United Kingdom even though they are no longer living with their sponsor provided they comply with the conditions set out in the concession.

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to monitor the impact of the concession to immigration rules on domestic violence and the one year rule. [92470]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The concession will be closely monitored in order to assess its effectiveness. Arrangements have been made for officials to note the details of all applications under this concession once a decision has been reached.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92675]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 23 July 1999]: I last travelled by train during the course of my official duties when I visited a Drugs Arrest Referral Scheme, the Television Video Links Project and delivered a speech at the Association of Chief Police Officers' Conference in Manchester on 14 July.

Passport Agency

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what computer systems, printers, laminators and other production equipment which were planned to have been replaced by the introduction of new systems by private contractors are still being used at (a) Liverpool and (b) Newport offices of the Passport Agency; and if he will make a statement. [92905]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The United Kingdom Passport Agency planned to retain its existing main computer and some peripheral equipment in all its Regional passport offices until the new issuing system had been implemented in all six offices. This was to facilitate communication and data collection, service telephone inquiry bureau and provide a contingency.

In the Liverpool office, older equipment continues to be used to service urgent applications for customers calling at the office, in the telephone inquiry bureau and in administrative sections. In Newport, the older system is used in the telephone inquiry bureau and in administrative sections.

The delay in implementing new systems at other passport offices will mean longer use of old equipment and the Agency is negotiating with support companies to ensure maintenance and development work is carried out.

Wormwood Scrubs

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 July 1999, Official Report, column 466, on Wormwood Scrubs, if he will place in the Library a copy of the action plan drawn up in response to the Chief Inspector of Prisons' first 15 recommendations contained in his 1996 inspection report including the response to the recommendations to date; and if he will make a statement. [93026]

Mr. George Howarth: I have arranged for copies of the response to the first 15 recommendations contained in Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons' report of his 1996 inspection of Wormwood Scrubs to be placed in the Library.

Child Curfews

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what forecast he has made of the number of local child curfews (a) applied for and (b) implemented, in the first year of the provision being available; and if he will make a statement. [92885]

Mr. Boateng: I have not made a forecast. Applying for a local child curfew is optional for local authorities, to be considered in the light of the wider crime and disorder strategies they are developing under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 and of the outcome of local consultation.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, stating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91683]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her on 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 636, by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Health.

As lead department for race equality issues, the Home Office is committed to ensuring that through the impact of its policies, all sections of society are treated equally. The Department is working closely with the Women's Unit to develop good practice for carrying out gender impact appraisal.

Policy appraisal for equal treatment—including the impact of policies on women—is an integral part of policy development. Guidance was issued throughout the department on 4 December 1998 and is part of the department's policy development checklist.

Correspondence

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed dated 10 March seeking his Department's approval for an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall relating to crime reduction. [92773]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 23 July 1999]: We have no record of having received the letter of 10 March to which the right hon. Member refers, but have since received a copy from his office.

"Kno Way" is an excellent example of a project involving the police, business and the voluntary sector in tackling crime and anti-social behaviour. It is to be particularly praised in addressing the issue of safety for vulnerable and elderly people.

An exhibition about the project in the Upper Waiting Hall of the House of Commons would have the full support of my Department. I will be writing to the right hon. Member formally to record my views.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter dated 7 June from Mr. K. Allden, of Brixham, South Devon, concerning an incident involving the Devon and Cornwall Constabulary. [93186]

Mr. Boateng: Mr. Allden was sent a reply to his letter on 14 July.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the earliest date of unopened post received by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [93029]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is currently no unopened post in the Mail Handling Section. However, there is a separate procedure for dealing with applications and accompanying fees in the Travel Documents Case Management Unit. These letters are normally unopened until they are processed and a cashier issues a receipt for the fee. As at 26 July, the earliest date of unopened Travel Documents applications was 16 June.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current backlog of cases at the Liverpool office of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate; and how many of these cases have been outstanding for over (a) six months, (b) 12 months and (c) two years. [92898]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: At 30 June 1999, the current backlog of cases in the Liverpool office stands at 95,200. 84,000 cases have been outstanding for six months; 50,800 have been outstanding for 12 months and 3,200 for two years. This Government inherited large backlogs and are putting in place steps to deal with them.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress made with the pilot implementation of the integrated information technology system in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [92902]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Pilot implementation will begin only after the system has passed its contractual acceptance tests. Those tests represent the final stage of the formal testing process which began in June. I intend that the testing should be exhaustive. The pilot stage is accordingly unlikely to begin much before the end of this year.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases are held in the Central Work in Progress Store of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate; and how many of the cases have been outstanding for more than (a) six months, (b) one year and (c) two years. [92901]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are approximately 110,144 cases held in the Work in Progress Store of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. Of these cases, 20,927 have been outstanding for more than six months, 36,330 have been outstanding for more than one year, and 52,887 have been outstanding for more than two years.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what targets he has set for the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to reply to correspondence from (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public; and what has been the performance of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in meeting those targets in each month since the beginning of 1999. [93028]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Home Office Public Service Agreement commits the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to reply to 95 per cent. of correspondence from (a) hon. Members within 15 working days. Since January 1999, a monthly average of 16 per cent. met the target.

In respect of (b), correspondence from members of the public, the Home Office Public Service Agreement commits the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to reply to 95 per cent. of correspondence within 20 working days. Since January 1999, a monthly average of 72 per cent. met the target.

UK/US Treaties

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the current bilateral (a) treaties and (b) agreements between the United Kingdom and US Governments which include provisions relating to the interception of communications. [93073]

Mr. Straw: There are arrangements appropriate to the relationship which exists between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States for the purpose of our common defence. It is the long-standing practice of this Government and previous Administrations not to comment on the detail of such confidential arrangements.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions have taken place in the period 1 May 1997 to 31 December 1998 between Ministers and United States citizens concerning the interception regime operated in the United Kingdom. [93072]

Mr. Straw: During the period in question, I have had discussions with the Attorney-General of the United States Government on several occasions about the interception regime operated in the United Kingdom, in particular in the context of encryption and the use of intercept product as evidence.

Passports

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if court orders can be endorsed in children's passports; and if he will make a statement. [93165]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Where children hold passports, a court can require the surrender of a passport to prevent a child being removed from the jurisdiction, and so the endorsement of a court order may not be necessary. However, the endorsement of passports with summaries of court orders has been considered by the Parent/Carer Child Abduction Co-ordinating Group, which is an inter-departmental group of officials, together with Re-unite. The Group will be looking at the effectiveness of introducing endorsements of the passports of children at risk of abduction.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the contract for the supply of blank passports to the Passport Agency which expires in October 1999 has been renewed. [93088]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Discussions are in progress with the contractor to ensure a continuing supply of blank passport books.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are in place for the updating of photographs on children's passports before a formal renewal of the passport is required; and if he will make a statement. [93166]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no legal requirement for the photograph on a child's passport to be updated before the formal renewal of the passport after five years. While the appearance of young children can change rapidly, a photograph provides evidence to an immigration officer of basic characteristics, and only in a minority of cases would a child not be able to be identified. The United Kingdom Passport Agency has issued passports to young children for many years without difficulty prior to the policy change in October 1998 requiring separate passports. An application can be made for an amended passport with a new photograph in at a cost of £11.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals have been made to his Department for private sector involvement in the issuing of passports; if he will list the proposals received; and if he will make a statement. [93168]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It would not be appropriate to disclose details of the proposals submitted for Private Sector Involvement in the Issue of the British Passport. This information is commercially confidential. The high level criteria applied in awarding the United Kingdom Passport Agency's contract for the passport issuing arrangements were security, continuity of service, compatibility, management information systems, archive system, commercial and technical criteria, examining support/speed/method/customer service, evergreening and cultural compatibility. On the basis of these criteria, contracts were awarded to the supplier who put forward the best solution.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors led to the timing of the introduction of new computer systems at the Passport Agency; and if he will make a statement. [93169]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The factors that led to the timing of the introduction of the new computer systems in the United Kingdom Passport Agency were the need to modernise existing systems, to enhance the Agency's capacity to prevent passport fraud and improve the security of the British passport, to replace obsolete printing equipment, to provide better customer information and to continue to improve the Agency's efficiency and effectiveness and the need for the introduction of the new system to coincide with its quiet season between October and the end of the year. The new computer systems were introduced at the Agency's request.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date work on the procurement of private sector involvement in the issuing of passports began; and if he will make a statement. [93170]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The procurement exercise to involve the private sector in the issuing of passports began with the placing of a notice in The Official Journal of the European Communities and Government Opportunities on 25 October 1996. A description of the procurement methodology is given in Annexe B of the summary of the business case for private sector involvement which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passports have been issued by the Passport Agency in each year since 1995–96 and in 1999–2000 to date. [93167]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

Stalking

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under anti-stalking legislation; how many such prosecutions were successful; and in how many cases the Crown Prosecution Service has appealed against the sentences given. [92234]

Mr. Boateng: Available data from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database, for 1997 and provisionally for 1998, are given in the table.

Part IV of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 provides that the Attorney-General may refer to the Court of Appeal sentences for certain offences which he believes to be unduly lenient, for the Court of Appeal to review and, if appropriate, increase. Offences contrary to sections two and four of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 do not come within the ambit of part IV and so there have been no such references.

Number of persons proceeded against at magistrates courts and convicted at all courts for offences under s2 and s4 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997[1] England and Wales, 1997 and 1998[2]

Offence/disposal	1997	1998[2]

Police Service (Women)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women left the police service before reaching normal retirement age in each of the last five years; what were the reasons for their early retirement; if he will list the number and reasons for women's early retirement in Merseyside Police; and what initiatives he has to retain in and recruit women to the police service. [92259]

Mr. Boateng: The Police service, supported by the Government, seeks to encourage applications to the police service from all under represented groups. As part of this strategy, we are proposing to review the whole recruitment process from application to selection with a view to removing any discriminatory practices.

Women now represent 15.17 per cent. of police officers in England and Wales and there has been a steady increase in female representation at senior ranks. There are now three women chief constables out of a total of 43.

While we are encouraged with the steady increase in the number of women officers and we welcome local force initiatives, we do accept that women are still poorly represented, and we intend to look at what further action can be taken to increase female representation throughout the service.

The number of women who left the police service before reaching normal retirement age, together with the number and reasons for women taking early retirement in Merseyside are listed in the tables:

Numbers of women leaving the service in England and Wales

Single Currency

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much expenditure his Department (a) has incurred to date and (b) expects to incur in the future, on preparations for possible United Kingdom entry into the European single currency; and if he will make a statement. [92554]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 23 July 1999]: Following the publication of the Government's Outline National Changeover Plan, the Home Office is considering what preparation may be necessary for the introduction of the euro. The Home Office has no specific budget for euro preparations.

Existing staff resources have been used in the initial management planning that has taken place to date. No additional cash expenditure has been incurred. Nor will any additional funds be sought in the foreseeable future to draw up plans. Departmental changeover work will continue using existing staff resources.

Ms Loraine Whiting

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up a public inquiry into the death of Ms Loraine Whiting, a constituent of the hon. Member for Sittingbourne and Sheppey. [92497]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 23 July 1999]: This tragic case has already been investigated at a Coroner's inquest and by the Police Complaints Authority. I do not consider that a further inquiry would bring any significant new information about the case to light.

Immigration Appellate Authority

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instruct the Immigration Appellate Authority to send an explanatory statement to Mr. Wright of Holne, near Buckfastleigh, Devon, in relation to its decision of 2 December 1998 to refuse a visa to his wife Mrs. Miranda Musraj (Wright); and if he will make a statement. [92216]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 21 July 1999]: The Immigration Appellate Authority (IAA) sent an explanatory statement to Mrs. Musraj (Wright) and her representative on 23 July 1999. The date set for the hearing of the appeal is 18 August 1999 at 10 a.m. at Taylor House, London. It is not the normal practice of the IAA, who are completely independent of the Home Office, to send a copy of the statement to any person other than the appellant and their nominated representative.

Public Safety Radio Communications Project

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he will ensure that Bedfordshire Police Authority has sufficient funds to cover the introduction of the Public Safety Radio Communications Project. [92533]

Mr. Boateng: The Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO), which is responsible for managing the Public Safety Radio Communications Project (PSRCP) is at an advanced stage of negotiations with British Telecommunications which will lead to a firm price for authorities to consider as part of their business case.

Over the next three years, the police service will receive an additional £1.24 billion in central government funding. The Government have also relaxed the rules on the use of capital receipts from the sale of assets. Police Authorities now have the freedom to use all proceeds from sales for capital investment. The scope for additional funding for the PSRCP is under consideration.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers left the Metropolitan police other than through ill health and ordinary retirement (a) during 1998 and (b) during 1999 to date. [93085]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the number of officers leaving the Metropolitan police other than through ill health and ordinary retirement was 645 in 1998 and 389 to 22 July 1999.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the number of police officers expected to retire from the Metropolitan police (a) during 1999, (b) in 2000 and (c) in 2001. [93086]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the number of officers expected to retire from the Metropolitan police service during 1999 to 2001 is:

2001: 900.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of officers who left the Metropolitan police other than through ill health and normal retirement during the past two years (a) left the police service altogether and (b) transferred to other UK police forces. [93087]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the information requested is given in the table:

Percentage

	1997	1998
Officers leaving the police service altogether	18.4	23.1
Officers transferring to other police forces	18.8	13

Note:
When 100 per cent. = the total number of officers who left the Metropolitan police in each year.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many detective inspector and detective chief inspector posts within the Metropolitan Police remain unfilled. [93083]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that at the end of June, 73 detective inspector posts were unfilled, and there was one detective chief inspector more than the budgeted manpower target.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police recruits were admitted to each initial training course at the Metropolitan Police Training College at Hendon (a) during 1998 and (b) during 1999 to date. [93084]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the number of police recruits admitted to each initial training course at the Metropolitan Police Training College at Hendon during 1998 and 1999 to date, is as given in the table:

Tobacco

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with national representatives of trading standards officers about implementation of the proposed Draft Tobacco (Prohibition of Advertising) Regulations 1999. [R] [92248]

Mr. Straw: To date, I have had no meetings to discuss the proposed Draft Tobacco (Prohibition of Advertising) Regulations 1999 with national representatives of trading standards officers.

Football Offences

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in London have been charged with offences under the Football (Offences) Act 1991 following incidents at London clubs. [92396]

Kate Hoey: The Metropolitan Police advise that in season 1998–99 there were 47 arrests under the Football (Offences) Act 1991. Of these, 24 people were charged with offences under the 1991 Act. A further eight people were issued with a caution. Information is not readily available for earlier years and I will write to my hon. Friend when this becomes available.

Firearms Consultative Committee

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the future of the Firearms Consultative Committee. [93082]

Mr. Boateng: Under the terms of the Firearms Consultative Committee Order 1996, the Firearms Consultative Committee will continue in existence until 1 February 2000. It is open to the Government at that stage to make a further Order for three years. This will be considered nearer the time.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to appoint a new chairman to the Firearms Consultative Committee. [93081]

Mr. Boateng: We are presently considering the arrangements for chairing the Firearms Consultative Committee.

Fire Service

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency plans he has made in relation to the possibility of a national firefighters' strike. [92899]

Mr. George Howarth: There are already well-established contingency arrangements for dealing with threats of industrial action in the fire service. These include arrangements, where possible and where needed, for military assistance to fire authorities so that emergency fire cover can be provided. The Government are also ready to consider such other measures as may be appropriate, to discharge their overriding responsibility for ensuring the protection and security of the public.

Police Discipline

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the outcome of the disciplinary proceedings against two police officers involved in a disturbance on the Holloway Road on 17 March 1996; and what measures have been taken to address the concerns of the victims. [92679]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that a Commander's Discipline Board found two officers guilty of making an unnecessary arrest, and disciplined them. Both officers were cleared of using excessive force. The person who was arrested made a formal complaint, which led to disciplinary proceedings. It will have been for the Police Complaints Authority to inform the complainant of the outcome.

Local Inmates Database

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 12 July 1999, Official Report, column 77, on the Local Inmates Database, what is the ethnic composition of the prison population. [92930]

Mr. George Howarth: The requested information is given in the table. This information is included in the April 'Prison Population Briefing' at the internet site http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/areas/prisf.htm.

Firearms Clubs

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 25 May 1999, Official Report, column 98, on firearms training, if he will list those schools that have target-shooting clubs approved by his Department; how many firearms, of what calibre, are stored on school premises; and how many pupils are enrolled in these clubs each year. [92678]

Mr. Boateng: For reasons of security, it is not our policy to publish the locations at which firearms are stored. Records of the number and calibre of firearms held by individual schools and of the number of pupils enrolled in the shooting club are not kept centrally. Each school club appoints a responsible adult to take charge of all aspects of shooting at the school. The responsible adult must have personal experience of the weapons used by the school and at least one year's experience of exercising control of the age group of pupils concerned. This adult is issued with a firearm certificate by the police on which the club's guns are entered. Before any school club is granted approval, the police inspect the armoury in which the guns will be stored. No club is allowed to hold more guns on the club certificate than can be safely stored in the armoury under secure conditions. Nor are they allowed to possess guns with muzzle energies and velocities greater than those stipulated on the range safety certificate.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

2. Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the ways in which the establishment of the new Film Council will benefit the British film industry. [91340]

21. Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the ways in which the establishment of the new Film Council will benefit the British film industry. [91359]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Film Council will deliver a coherent strategy for the development of a sustainable UK film industry, taking forward the vision set out in the Film Policy Review. The Council will be a Lottery distributor in its own right, guaranteeing, for the first time, a dedicated share of Lottery resources for film amounting to at least £27 million, a significant increase on previous years.

Over the next three years, the Film Council will receive in the region of £150 million to put into support for the film industry and film culture.

Cyclists (Royal Parks)

10. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress he has made on proposals to improve provision for cyclists in the Royal Parks. [91348]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Royal Parks Agency has agreed to provide a number of new cycle routes through the Royal Parks. Progress depends on the availability of resources and the outcome of consultation. I have asked the Agency to consider how provision for cyclists can be extended further.

New Opportunities Fund

11. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the New Opportunities Fund will award its first grants. [91349]

Mr. Banks: The New Opportunities Fund announced its first awards on 12 July 1999. A total of £1,870,443 has been awarded under its out-of-school-hours child care programme to 115 projects across the UK creating a total of 8,736 new out-of-school child care places.

Funding Agreements

12. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the objectives are of the three-year funding agreements negotiated by his Department with its sponsored bodies. [91350]

Mr. Chris Smith: Funding agreements provide a focus for my Department's relationship with its sponsored bodies. They detail the outputs which each of the bodies has agreed to achieve in return for public funding.

BBC Scotland

14. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Scottish Executive on the relationship between BBC Scotland and the rest of the BBC. [91352]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have had no such discussions. The BBC's Royal Charter and Agreement ensure the Corporation's independence in the management of its day-to-day affairs.

Cultural Events (Access)

15. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures his Department is taking to provide greater access to cultural events for schoolchildren from a wider range of social backgrounds. [91353]

Mr. Banks: Working with our sponsored bodies, my Department encourages all publicly funded organisations to ensure the widest possible access to cultural events. The New Audiences fund, managed by the Arts Council of England, has provided grants to pilot projects aimed at attracting new and younger audiences to such events. For example, New Generation Audiences will provide free tickets to cultural events to schoolchildren and encourage them to exchange information using the latest technologies.

Seaside Resorts

16. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department is taking to encourage family holidays at UK seaside resorts, with particular reference to Scarborough and Whitby. [91354]

Janet Anderson: Our strategy, "Tomorrow's Tourism", contains a host of initiatives designed to promote quality in tourism in this country, including a model regeneration plan for resorts. It also identifies actions to help increase access to tourism for those with low incomes, for families, for elderly people and for people with disabilities.

Single Regeneration Budget awards of over half a million pounds to the Yorkshire and Humberside Coastal Tourism Initiative (which includes Scarborough and Whitby) and almost £3 million to the Falsgrave Community Investment Initiative in Scarborough will help encourage families to holiday in the area.

National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts

17. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on progress with the establishment of the National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts. [91355]

Mr. Chris Smith: NESTA is preparing to launch its main programmes in the Autumn and has already launched eight pioneer projects.

Cricket

18. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to encourage more state schools to play cricket. [91356]

Mr. Banks: As well as the various initiatives aimed at encouraging sport in schools through Sport England's Active Schools programme, the English and Wales Cricket Board have an number of initiatives aimed specifically at encouraging schools to play cricket. These include the Wrigley Schools Cricket Tournament, a Kwik Cricket based competition for state primary schools and the production of a new Development Game for secondary schools designed to bridge the gap between Kwik and hardball cricket.

Social Exclusion

19. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment his Department has made of the contribution that arts and sport can make to tackling social exclusion; and if he will make a statement. [91357]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department has led an inter-departmental Policy Action Team which reported to the Social Exclusion Unit on the contribution arts and sport can make to combating social exclusion. The team found that participation in the arts and sport can develop individuals' talents and self-confidence, encourage collective effort and contribute to improvements in health and education attainment and reductions in crime and unemployment. Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Netball

20. Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support his Department provides for netball in Essex. [91358]

Mr. Banks: This year, Sport England will provide the All England Netball Association with over £420,000 to promote netball in all parts of the country, including Essex. Some of this funding will be used to employ a team of seven development officers, one of whom is responsible for Essex.

Essex Local Authorities are planning to run a netball event as part of the Millennium Youth Games next year with the support of lottery funding.

Competitive Sports (Schools)

22. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to encourage competitive sport within schools. [91360]

27. Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what contribution the national lottery is making to encourage the playing of competitive sporting fixtures in schools. [91365]

Mr. Banks: We are well aware of the value of encouraging competitive games both within and between schools. As well as being one of the criteria schools have to meet to be awarded a Sportsmark, we have asked Sport England to ensure that arranging inter-school competitive fixtures is a key part of the job description of the new Active Schools Co-ordinators. This initiative will be supported by £30 million from the Lottery Sports Fund.

Sports (National Lottery Funding)

23. Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he will take to ensure that sports bodies which receive money from the national lottery are accountable for their spending. [91361]

Mr. Banks: Sports bodies are fully accountable to Sport England for all aspects of their projects and are required to sign a contract to this effect before receiving funding.

Youth Music

24. Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when schools will be able to apply for funding to promote youth music from the new body set up by his Department and the Department for Education and Employment. [91362]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The National Foundation for Youth Music, which is a charitable body operating independently of Government, is currently consulting on its proposed criteria and eligibility. The consultation period will conclude on the 1 October, after which finalised criteria and eligibility will be published.

30. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the number of children who will benefit from the new National Foundation for Youth Music. [91368]

Mr. Chris Smith: The National Foundation for Youth Music is an independent body, and is responsible for identifying its policies and outputs without reference to Ministers. The Foundation's ultimate aim is to ensure that every child has the opportunity to access music-making.

Museum Attendance

25. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact of introducing free entry for children on museum attendance. [91363]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of child visits at those national museums and galleries in England which adopted free entry for children from April this year is being regularly monitored. An assessment of the policy's effectiveness will be made when sufficient information is available from which to draw reliable conclusions.

Royal Parks Constabulary

26. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will review the powers of the Royal Parks Constabulary constables in relation to the area and roads surrounding St James's and Hyde parks. [91364]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have no plans to review the powers of the Royal Parks Constabulary in relation to the area and roads surrounding St. James's and Hyde Parks. The Constabulary's primary duty is to maintain order in the Royal Parks and making them safe for park users. If there is a need to apprehend a person beyond the boundary of a Royal Park, they can call upon the Metropolitan Police for assistance. Constitution Hill in the Green Park, Birdcage Walk in St James's Park, and the North, South, West and East Carriage Drives in Hyde Park are already the policing responsibility of the Royal Parks Constabulary.

Sports (Women)

28. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action his Department is taking to increase the proportion of adult women who participate in sport. [91366]

Mr. Banks: The Government has made clear its determination to improve opportunities for women at all levels in sport, whether as participants, competitors, coaches or administrators. We are working closely with the Sports Councils and others to find ways to encourage more women to take part in sport, and our Sports Strategy will address the issue of increasing participation by all sections of the community.

Football World Cup 2006

29. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has made to the Football Association about the bid to host the 2006 World cup. [91367]

Mr. Banks: The Government are providing the fullest diplomatic and promotional support for The FA's bid in accordance with FIFA bidding guidelines. As Parliamentary time allows, I will continue to meet members of the FIFA Executive when they visit this country, and accompany the 2006 bid team abroad when requested.

I am determined that The FA's bid should continue to be pursued with the utmost vigour and integrity, and very much hope that the bidding process between now and July 2000 will be conducted in a spirit of friendly rivalry. I believe it is an excellent bid with a very good chance of success.

Millennium Dome

34. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what will be the arrangements by which schools may apply for free tickets for schoolchildren to the millennium dome. [91372]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company has sent to schools an Information and Booking form for educational visits to the Dome at Greenwich. The form is available from NMEC's 12 regional offices. The form includes details about the Education Tours scheme through which up to one million free tickets will be available to schools. Each school will be able to apply for up to 100 free tickets. As the brochure explains, details of how to apply for free education tours will be sent to schools in September. Copies of the Information and Booking Form will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

35. Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the effect which the millennium experience will have on the tourist industry. [91373]

Mr. Chris Smith: The British Tourist Authority (BTA) has estimated the number of overseas visits to the UK in 2000 as 27.5 million. The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) forecasts 2.4 million overseas visitors to the Dome. The BTA has also indicated that as a direct result of the Millennium Experience an additional £300m-£500m of overseas tourist revenue will be brought into the UK economy. It is conceivable that as a result of the Millennium celebrations this figure could be doubled if the knock-on effect to related industries is taken into account. The BTA has further estimated that 10,000–15,000 new tourism-related jobs will be created. This is excellent news for the whole of the UK.

36. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the representation of the various English regions through the Millennium Experience. [91374]

Janet Anderson: While there are no exhibits within the Dome which are dedicated specifically to the English regions, there are a number of opportunities for regional representation. For example, I am pleased to say that as part of the "Our Town Story" project, the Wirral is due to have its day in the Dome on 31 May 2000.

"Our Town Story", sponsored by McDonald's, is linked to the Theatre space and Education Centre at the Dome. It enables more than 20,000 schoolchildren and other members of the community in every education authority and library board area in the UK to stage a performance in the Dome telling the story of their community. The "Our Town Story" stage will seat 500 people and will be a professionally equipped theatre space.

37. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the importance being attached to religion in the organisation of the millennium celebrations. [91375]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Government recognise the important significance of the year 2000 as a Christian anniversary, and is keen to see this reflected in the official celebrations. However, we also wish to ensure that celebrations are accessible and relevant to people of all religious persuasions and none. Through the Lambeth Group, my Department, the Millennium Commission and the New Millennium Experience Company are working closely with the Christian churches, ecumenical groups and other faith communities to ensure that the spiritual aspect of the occasion receives proper recognition. We are also working with Church groups in the four nations of the UK to deliver ecumenical Millennium Church Services in London, Edinburgh, Cardiff and Belfast on Sunday 2 January 2000.

38. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures will be in place to facilitate visits from schoolchildren from the most peripheral parts of the United Kingdom to the dome at Greenwich; and if small, rural schools in Scarborough and Whitby will be eligible for such arrangements. [91376]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is not responsible for travel arrangements to the Dome for schoolchildren or any other groups. Very few, if any, visitor attractions subsidise or pay for school travel and very few provide significant numbers of free entry tickets for schoolchildren. NMEC is providing up to one million free school tickets under the Education Tour scheme. All schools in the UK can apply for these tickets. NMEC has also worked hard to negotiate deals with travel providers and operators which represent good value for money for visitors to the Dome. NMEC has informed schools about these providers and operators in their area.

39. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of school pupils from Scotland will be able to visit the dome on a free basis. [91377]

Janet Anderson: There are up to one million free tickets available to schoolchildren. Final details of allocations, including the ballot arrangements, will be announced in due course. However, the free tickets will be on a pro rata to school population basis. Under the Education Tours Scheme, schools in Scotland will be allocated about 8.5 per cent. of the free tickets. However,

NMEC are not able at this stage to indicate how those tickets will be finally apportioned to the individual Local Education Authorities (LEA's) or individual schools.

40. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will extend the duration of the millennium dome exhibition beyond 31 December 2000. [91378]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Millennium Experience at the Dome is planned as the centrepiece of the nation's millennium celebrations and will run for one year from 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2000, and be a truly unique and once-in-a-lifetime experience for visitors. The Government are committed to identifying a sustainable, viable use for the Dome after the Millennium Experience ends and launched a competition for that purpose on 4 March 1999. The competition is proceeding well and the outcome will be announced in Spring 2000.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what training Millennium Dome staff will receive in order to deal with problems; and what powers they will have in respect of the public. [91267]

Janet Anderson: All staff will receive appropriate training in line with best practice for the nature and scope of their duties and responsibilities.

Sports Participation

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action his Department is taking to increase the proportion of (a) pensioners, (b) people with disabilities and (c) people from ethnic minorities who participate in sport. [91311]

Mr. Banks: The Government fund Sport England to develop programmes in all these areas. On (a), Sport England believes in lifelong participation in sport, and its Active Communities programme has seen substantial investment in initiatives with particular appeal to older participants, such as capital Lottery funding for walking, keep-fit/yoga, swimming, cycling, golf and bowls. For example, 290 awards have been made to bowls projects, grants of £26 million supporting project costs of £42.5 million. Through the monitoring of completed Lottery projects, Sport England reports that participation among senior citizens at these facilities has doubled.

Sport England also monitors the age structure of the population and its Facilities Planning Model (a mathematical model aimed at assessing the needs for sport and recreational facilities) is used, on a local community and national level, to determine facilities required for each age group, including older people. Through its advice to local authorities Sport England encourages the needs and concerns of older people to be incorporated in Local Sports Strategies and Best Value practices.

Other work in this area includes support for GP referral schemes, working with the health sector to encourage physical activity to maintain good health.

On (b), Sport England has adopted the approach that, wherever possible, support should be channelled through mainstream sport rather than separate disability organisations. This decision was based on consultation and feedback from all parts of sport for people with disabilities.

Sport England has overseen the formation of the National Federation of Disability Sport, which brings together all the key disability sports organisations. With the election of a management board and appointment of key staff at both a national and regional level, it is able to ensure that people with disabilities can receive proper sporting opportunities.

As well as its own Disability Advisory Group, Sport England also has a service team of staff with the appropriate skills to co-ordinate and audit the disability work that Sport England is doing across the range of all its service areas, including Lottery programmes. Baselines of sporting provision for people with disabilities in England have been established and research carried out to find out their exact needs.

On (c), Sport England has made special efforts to tackle the problems that exist in this area, including setting up its own advisory Group and working with the Commission for Racial Equality jointly to appoint two staff to work on anti-racism initiatives with the governing bodies of sport.

Six sports were initially identified as priority areas for work: cricket, basketball, rugby league, rugby union, athletics and swimming. The starting point for each sport is the formulation of a racial equity statement.

Sport England has also given financial support to help develop action plans for sports which seek the elimination of racism.

Sport England has contracted the Office for National Statistics to conduct a survey to measure accurately levels of participation by members of the ethnic minorities. By establishing the sporting needs of the Black, Asian and other ethnic minorities support can be much more effectively tailored.

Sport England has also organised and run generic equity workshops for the governing bodies of sport. This is a structured programme and part of the Running Sport range of education and training support.

In addition, following the publication of the Football Task Force's report "Eliminating Racism from Football", I asked the football authorities to consider how they could implement the recommendations.

This has been a good start, but I want to ensure that racism is tackled by all sports. To that end I have written to the Governing bodies of cricket, tennis, athletics, rugby union and league asking them how the problems can be addressed within their sports. I hope to meet with those Governing Bodies, the Commission for Racial Equality and the Local Government Association to discuss how we can go about removing racism from sport in the very near future.

Lottery Funding (East Midlands)

Mr. Conker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will take steps to ensure that the Gedling Borough Council area receives a comparable share of the lottery money per capita to other parts of the country; [91561]

(2) what steps he is taking to address the unequal regional distribution of lottery grants, with particular reference to the East Midlands. [91560]

Mr. Banks: We recognise that some parts of the country have done less well than others from Lottery funding. We are determined to ensure that Lottery money is allocated more fairly and equitably in the light of need across the whole of the United Kingdom.

The National Lottery Act 1998 contained a number of measures designed to bring this about. Distributors must now examine the needs of their sectors systematically and draw up strategic plans which reflect those needs and their proposals for addressing them. They have new powers to encourage specific applications where these are not forthcoming spontaneously, to delegate decision-making closer to the grass roots, and to enter into joint schemes. Revised Policy Directions issued to the distributors last year also stressed the need to ensure that all parts of the country have access to Lottery funds.

Last November, my Department hosted a conference in Barnsley to discuss how the Lottery can assist in the regeneration of coalfield communities. In addition, we are working with the distributors to examine the reasons for the low take-up of funds in many coalfield areas. The results of the first phase of this research, which establishes the extent of the problem, were published on 13 July 1999. We are currently analysing these results and are about to commission further work to consider what needs to be done to ensure that such areas receive their fair share of Lottery money.

Welsh Language Television

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to improve the reception of television channels carrying Welsh language programmes throughout Wales; and if he will make a statement. [92711]

Janet Anderson: BBC Wales and S4C analogue broadcasts presently reach 97.6 per cent. of the population of Wales. The nine Welsh transmitter sites in the launch phase for digital terrestrial television will deliver BBC services to 70 per cent. of the population and S4C services to 63 per cent. BBC and S4C also broadcast their services on digital satellite, and will broadcast on digital cable when available. The BBC, ITC and the digital broadcasters are now considering plans for the further development of digital terrestrial television across the UK.

Public Appointments

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many appointments to public bodies were made by his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnicity; and if he will list the chairmen appointed to those bodies in those years, similarly broken down. [92520]

Mr. Chris Smith: The information is noted in the following table, which includes all appointments which fall under my responsibility or where my role is to advise my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, or through him Her Majesty The Queen.

My Department has published an action plan on equal opportunities in "Quangos—Opening up Public Appointments 1999–2002", which was published by the Government on 25 May 1999 and deposited in the Libraries of both Houses. The action plan sets out DCMS objectives and targets for improving representation of women, people from ethnic minority groups and from people with disabilities.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Compliance Costs

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what reductions were achieved in the compliance costs of regulation administered by his Department and its public bodies for the last year for which data are available; what mechanisms exist for monitoring the post-implementation costs of such regulation; and if he has established targets for reduction in the compliance costs of regulation administered by his Department and its public bodies. [92317]

Mr. Mudie: Details of regulations that imposed compliance costs on business are published in the Department's regulatory impact assessments and laid before the House. A summary of all the regulatory impact assessments published by the Department and the other regulatory Departments in Whitehall are published every six months in a White Paper, and are available on a monthly basis on the Cabinet Office Regulatory Impact Unit's website.

The Department published details on the quality and quantity of its regulatory activity in the Departmental Annual Report.

There is no arbitrary target for reducing the compliance costs of regulation. However, all Departments are required to make an assessment of the risks, costs and benefits of any regulatory proposal that has an impact on businesses, charities and voluntary bodies before they decide to act. Without an assessment of this kind there can be no collective agreement of a regulatory proposal.

University Appointments

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many professors were appointed to university posts in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnicity. [92511]

Mr. Mudie: The available data include those entering their current Higher Education Institution on appointment as professors either on promotion or as a result of a move from a professorial post elsewhere. Those gaining professorial rank within their existing institution are therefore excluded.

Figures for the two most recent years are shown in the table.

Public Appointments

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many appointments to public bodies were made by his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnicity; and if he will list the chairmen appointed to those bodies in those years, similarly broken down. [92515]

Mr. Mudie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment made a total of 68 appointments and re-appointments to non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) in 1997–98. Of these, 48 were men and 20 were women. Three were from ethnic minorities. Included in the total of 68, are the appointments or re-appointments of seven chairs, all of whom were men. None was from an ethnic minority.

In 1998–99, my right hon. Friend made a total of 142 appointments and re-appointments to NDPBs. Of these, 101 were men and 41 were women. Nineteen were from ethnic minorities. Included in that total of 142, are the appointments or re-appointments of eight chairs, one of whom was a woman. None was from an ethnic minority.

Secondary School Teachers

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures the Government are taking to expand the availability of secondary school teachers specialising in (a) physics, (b) mathematics and (c) information technology; and if he will make a statement. [92577]

Ms Estelle Morris: The wide ranging reforms to the teaching profession set out in our Green Paper "Teachers—meeting the challenge of change" will make teaching more attractive. Over time, it will substantially boost our ability to ensure the supply of high quality teachers we need.

We are also investing £130 million in shorter term measures, many of which target these shortage subjects. Last October, I announced £5,000 incentives for graduates in maths and science subjects to go into teaching. These have already brought a substantial increase in PGCE applications in those subjects, by 37 per cent. for maths and 33 per cent. for physics. This comes on top of £10 million of financial assistance for trainee teachers in shortage subjects, including maths, physics and technology, and the waiver of PGCE tuition fees. We have also launched a scheme to recruit 600 mature maths and science graduates and match them to vacancies in schools. Other action targeting these subjects includes the high-profile national advertising campaigns of the Teacher Training Agency. They also work closely with higher education institutions and professional subject associations on a range of initiatives to boost recruitment to teaching.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children of secondary school age have a statement of Special Educational need and what proportion that represents of the overall numbers of such children in (a) North West Leicestershire, (b) the county of Leicestershire, not including the City of Leicester, (c) the City of Leicester, (d) the East Midlands and (e) England. [92507]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information available is shown in the table.

Numbers and percentage of pupils in maintained secondary schools by local education authority area in England January 1999 (provisional)

	Numbers of pupils with statements of Special Educational need	Numbers of pupils in schools	Percentage of pupils with statements

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children of primary school age have a statement of Special Educational need and what proportion that represents of the overall numbers of such children in (a) North West

Leicestershire, (b) the county of Leicestershire, not including the City of Leicester, (c) the City of Leicester, (d) the East Midlands and (e) England. [92508]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information available is shown in the table.

Leicestershire Education Authority

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what capital investment in schools in the Leicestershire Education Authority has taken place in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to date; and what the planned levels are for the next two years. [92579]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Table A shows the capital investment the Government have made in schools in Leicestershire in the three years up to 1999–2000. Table B shows the level of investment the Government intend to make for the following two financial years, provided resources allow. This represents commitments arising from existing projects. We cannot indicate what investment we will make in new projects in Leicestershire at this stage.

[1] Education Capital Programme: Includes capital expenditure supported by the Authority's own resources.
[2] Education Capital Programme 1998–99: This figure is provisional only, based on estimates by the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions.
[3] Annual Capital Guidelines: This is used in the calculation of the LEA's Basic Credit Approval (BCA), where the LEA's capital receipts are taken into account. Just because a project has been taken account of in calculating the ACG, it does not mean that the LEA has to use its BCA for that purpose.
[4] Supplementary Credit Approval (SCA): Unlike BCA, receipts are not taken into account when calculating the level of SCA. However, unless the SCA specifically says otherwise, the LEA is not obliged to use the SCA for the purpose for which it was calculated.
[5] New Deal for Schools (NDS): Some of the grant figures for VA schools would have changed slightly in order to reflect the actual costs of the project.
[6] National Grid for Learning and Security in Schools: While the majority of the expenditure supported by the grant will be capital in nature, some will be revenue. It is not possible to isolate the two elements.
[7] VA Grant: Capital grant is paid in respect of Governors' liability, at a rate of 85 per cent. Actual amount of grant paid may change depending on the costs of project on tender.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Millennium Dome

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what contribution the Office of Science and Technology plans to make to exhibitions at the Millennium Dome. [91148]

Mr. Battle: The prime responsibility for exhibitions at the Millennium Dome rests with the New Millennium Experience Company.

However, officials from the Department of Trade and Industry and the Office of Science and Technology have had several discussions with the New Millennium Experience Company about ideas and source material for exhibits which promote greater public understanding of science, engineering and technology and its key role in shaping the world of the 21st century. These have covered such areas as sustainable development, bio-engineering and future transport technology.

Post Office

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many appointments to the Post Office within the last 12 months have been made before the final date of (a) trawl and (b) external application was reached. [91001]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that it does not use a trawl system for job vacancies. All vacancies filled internally are subject to an open resourcing policy, which enables anyone in any grade in the organisation to apply. Closing dates for the receipt of applications for all posts filled internally or externally are strictly adhered to, and the Post Office is not aware of any appointments made within the last 12 months before the final dates for either internal or external applications were reached.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 25 June 1999, Official Report, column 474, on Parcelforce, if the loans to Parcelforce have been repaid; and if they are repayable at commercial rates of interest. [91178]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 13 July 1999]: The loans to Parcelforce from the Post Office Group Centre have not been repaid.

It is Post Office normal practice to charge its constituent businesses, including Parcelforce, interest at a commercial rate on their in-year funding requirements. As Parcelforce is not a legal entity and therefore has no share capital, other loans to Parcelforce from the Post Office Group Centre are treated within the Post Office Group as a surrogate for equity and, as such, do not carry an obligation for interest payments.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of Crown post offices; and when he will lift the moratorium on conversion of Crown post offices to agency status. [91314]

Mr. Ian McCartney: As announced in the White Paper "Post Office Reform: A World Class Service for the 21st Century" published on 8 July, the Government have agreed a strategy for the future of Crown post offices, which reflects proposals put by the Post Office to the trade unions, of retaining a core of directly owned and managed Crown offices at which at least 15 per cent. of the total business transacted by the counters' network will be done. The lifting of the moratorium on the conversion of Crown offices to agency status was announced on 7 December 1998 by the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson).

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the future of the powers of entry, search and arrest currently enjoyed by the Investigation Branch of the Royal Mail under his proposals for a limited company. [91481]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Consolidation of the reform package in primary legislation will involve changes to a range of existing powers in order to reflect the new framework which separates Government ownership from Post Office business operations and introduces new, independent regulation. The future of the powers of entry, search and arrest, currently available to the Investigation Branch of the Royal Mail will be considered in this wider context.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if (a) the postal archives and (b) the Post Office Museum will become part of the public limited company under his proposals for the Post Office. [91480]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Post Office is currently looking at plans for the future management of its heritage collection in the light of the recent closure of the National Postal Museum. No firm decisions have yet been reached but we will be assessing the impact of public limited company status on any proposed plans.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions his Department has held with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport regarding the future of the Post Office Archives and the Post Office Museum; and if he will make a statement. [91479]

Mr. Ian McCartney: There have not been any discussions between Departments, but the Post Office is considering proposals for the future management of its heritage collection in the light of the recent closure of the National Postal Museum in London. I understand that the Public Record Office and Museum and Galleries Commission guidelines continue to be met.

Viewing of the philatelic collection is available by appointment, as has always been the case. The artefacts collection is currently not on public display, but is accessible through written application to:

The Post Office Archives Centre
Freeling House,
Mount Pleasant Complex,
London.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, under the proposal for the Post Office outlined in the Post Office White Paper, the Government will underwrite any debt issued or raised. [91739]

Mr. Ian McCartney: As the White Paper sets out, the Government believe that borrowing by the Post Office should, on value-for-money grounds, be from the National Loans Fund, but at a commercial rate without a Government guarantee.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the studies carried out in Europe by the European Commission referred to on page 19 of the Post Office White Paper regarding the need for greater competition in postal services. [91747]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The European Commission had the following studies carried out in accordance with Article 7(3) of the Postal services directive 97/67/EC:

Study of the impacts of liberalisation in the postal sector: Liberalisation of incoming and outgoing intra-community cross-border mail (Price Waterhouse Coopers).

Study on costing and financing of universal service obligations in the postal sector in the European Union (NERA)

Study on the weight and price limits of the reserved area in the postal sector (Ctcon)

Study on the liberalisation of clearance, sorting and transport (Ctcon)

Study of the impact of liberalisation of direct mail (Arthur Andersen)

Modelling and quantifying the scenarios for liberalisation (MMD).

The first five of the above are available on the internet at http://www.ispo.cec.be/ under "postal services". We understand that the sixth will be available shortly.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Post Office Regulator will be required to publish details of internal transfer pricing arrangements under the proposals in the Post Office White Paper. [91736]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are committed to a transparent regulatory regime. The new postal services Commission will therefore not only have powers to require information, but to publish information for the benefit of consumers and in the interests of good regulation. They will, therefore, have the ability to publish details of internal transfer pricing arrangements. The Government do not propose to require them to do so.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, under the proposed public limited company status for the Post Office, it will be possible for the company to be put into (a) receivership by creditors, (b) voluntary liquidation and (c) compulsory liquidation. [91740]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Once the Post Office has become a public limited company under the Companies Acts, it will be subject to the full range of company law.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Post Office's power to acquire land by compulsory purchase order will apply to its non-monopoly services following its conversion to a public limited company. [91745]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Post Office privileges which have been granted in the past, including the Post Office's power to acquire land by compulsory purchase in certain circumstances, were provided to facilitate the universal service obligations (USO) placed on the Post Office. The USO is not limited to services within the monopoly area. For example, it also covers standard parcels and the registered letter service. The Government have decided that these privileges should remain for now but that they should be kept under review by the Regulator.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he made of the compatibility of his proposals relating to the duties to be owed by the directors of the Post Office plc with the provision of the Companies Acts. [91751]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The intention of transforming the Post Office into a public limited company is to underline the clear separation of the functions of ownership and management. In particular it will make it absolutely clear that the Directors owe their duties to the company and not directly to the Government as owner. This will reinforce the new arm's length relationship between the Government and the Post Office Board.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he has implemented to ensure that the transfer of Royal Mail Priority Services to Parcelforce does not result in any monopoly services being delivered by Parcelforce. [91735]

Mr. Ian McCartney: No monopoly business is carried by Parcelforce. However, as set out in the White Paper, under the transfer of Priority Services much of the operational activity, at least initially, continues to be carried out by Royal Mail. This raises the possibility of the Post Office monopoly business improperly subsidising wider Parcelforce business in the competitive arena. The Government therefore asked its auditors for the Post Office to look at the business case for the transfer; at the basis on which revenues and costs would be treated under the new arrangements; and, in particular, whether this was on a defensible basis from a competition point of view and with accounting transparency. In the light of the advice from the auditors, the Government have confidence that the arrangements are satisfactory. They will continue to be monitored by the auditors until the Regulator has its own arrangements in place.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what additional Government services the Government plans to deliver through the sub-post office network. [91748]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The unrivalled reach of the nationwide network of post offices, and the trust in which it is held by its customers, make it ideally suited as a delivery channel for a wide variety of Government business. As at present, Post Office Counters Ltd. will remain free to bid for this business.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to introduce legislation to create the Post Office as a public limited company. [91752]

Mr. Ian McCartney: As soon as parliamentary time permits, primary legislation will be brought forward to consolidate the reform of the Post Office and the postal market.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry over what periods the Post Office will be permitted to borrow under the proposals in the Post Office White Paper. [91750]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The precise terms, including maturity of any borrowing, will depend on the investment concerned and will be discussed with the Post Office as part of the notification and approval process.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if debt incurred by the Post Office under the proposals in the Post Office White Paper will be accounted for as Government debt. [91743]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Under national accounts definitions, as the Post Office is in the public sector, Post Office debt will score within the Public Sector Net Cash Requirement (previously Public Sector Borrowing Requirement) which is closely related to changes in Public Sector Net Debt.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by what mechanism the company referred to at paragraph 18, page 51 of the Post Office White Paper will enforce the duties which it is proposed the directors of that company will owe to that company. [91734]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Once the Post Office has become a public limited company under the Companies Acts, it will be subject to the full range of company law. Its directors will be subject to the legal duties imposed on directors under those Acts.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how the non-monopoly services of the Post Office will account for the cost of capital tied up in its fixed assets; and how such fixed assets will be valued under the arrangement proposed in the Post Office White Paper. [91737]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Postal Services Directive 97/67/EC lays down specific requirements about transparency of accounts which address these issues. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has instructed the Post Office to comply with these requirements and will be ensuring that they do so. How the non-monopoly services of the Post Office will account for the cost of capital tied up in its fixed assets, and how such fixed assets will be valued, will be a matter in the first instance for the Board of the Post Office. These accounts will be independently audited and, in due course, will also be subject to scrutiny by the new independent regulator, the Postal Services Commission. All services will be included.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what power the proposed Post Office Regulator will have to ensure fair competition by the Post Office in the area of those non-monopoly services which are still subject to the universal service obligation. [91744]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The regulator will have a range of powers to ensure that the Post Office competes fairly and does not act anti-competitively, including in the competitive area. It is proposed that the Postal Services Commission will have concurrent powers with the Director-General of Fair Trading to apply competition rules in respect of the Post Office (and other licensed postal operators).

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Post Office will be included in the proposed Utilities Bill. [91741]

Mr. Ian McCartney: No. We intend to bring forward separate legislation on the Post Office as soon as Parliamentary time allows.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plan he has to ensure that following its conversion to a public limited company Ministers remain accountable to Parliament for the Post Office. [91757]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The current arrangements will remain in place and in fact be strengthened. The Post Office is currently required by the Post Office Act 1969 to provide my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State with its accounts and annual reports and my right hon. Friend is required to lay them before each House. This arrangement will continue. An obligation will also be laid on the Regulator to report annually to my right hon. Friend and this report will also be laid before each House. In addition, the Government have undertaken to report annually to Parliament on the progress of the reforms set out in the White Paper, and particularly on the functioning of the arm's length relationship. The aim will also be to report once the Strategic Plan has been approved, though commercially confidential details of the Plan will not be revealed. But the Government will not be involved in the day to day management or detailed issues, as noted on pages 44–45 of the White Paper.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what safeguards will be incorporated in the measures proposed in the Post Office White Paper to ensure that the terms of the loan arrangement, other than the rate of interest, are on an arm's length basis. [91742]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Post Office Board will be clearly accountable for running the business successfully on the basis of a rolling five-year strategic plan agreed with the Government. Any borrowing for growth investments will be on commercial terms. The Government will be responsible for approving annually the five-year rolling strategic plan and approving borrowing for major acquisitions and other growth investments, but otherwise will not be involved in normal management and commercial matters which fall to the Post Office.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers will be given to the Post Office regulator to ensure that the debt:equity ratio of the Post Office non-monopoly services will be similar to those operating generally in the private sector of these markets, under the arrangement proposed in the Post Office White Paper. [91755]

Mr. Ian McCartney: To place the Post Office on a more commercial footing, and one where it can be better benchmarked against its competitors, the balance sheet will be restructured with the Post Office ceasing to hold, and have access to interest from, the present level of accumulated External Financing Limit surpluses. It is planned that the change will take effect on 1 April 2002. During the interim period, the Government will consider with the help of professional advisers the appropriate shape of the balance sheet.

The Regulator will be responsible for ensuring fair competition and that there is no undue cross subsidy from the monopoly to competitive market, nor an abuse of a dominant position. In particular, it is intended that the Regulator will be able to require the Post Office to provide regulatory accounts and other financial information clearly distinguishing between monopoly and competitive services, and in the competitive area, between Universal Service Obligation (USO) and non-USO services. It is also intended that the Regulator will have a power to impose changes in accounting practices if this would facilitate transparency.

Until we have primary legislation, the Regulator will advise my right hon. Friend on these and other matters relating to the Secretary of State's regulatory duties in relation to the Post Office.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what fee will be paid by the Department of Social Security to sub post offices for administering cash benefit payments under the arrangements applicable from 2003. [91749]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The contractual arrangements between the Benefits Agency and Post Office Counters Ltd. are commercially confidential, as are the contractual arrangements between Post Office Counters Ltd. and certain retail banks under which customers of those banks can access their accounts at post offices.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under the proposals in the Post Office White Paper, what measures will be put in place to ensure that charges between the monopoly service provider division of the Post Office and the non-monopoly service provider divisions are arrived at on an arm's length basis; what services will be included in these arrangements; and how they will be valued. [91756]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Postal Services Directive 97/67/EC lays down specific requirements about transparency of accounts which address these issues. The Secretary of State has instructed the Post Office to comply with these requirements and will be ensuring that they do so. All services will be included. How they will be valued will be a matter in the first instance for the Board of the Post Office. These accounts will be independently audited and, in due course, will also be subject to scrutiny by the new independent regulator, the Postal Services Commission.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Post Office exemption from traffic regulations will apply to its non-monopoly service vehicles under the proposals set out in the Post Office White Paper. [91753]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Post Office privileges which have been granted in the past, including those relating to aspects of traffic regulations, were provided to facilitate the universal service obligations (USO) placed on the Post Office. The USO is not limited to services within the monopoly area. For example, it also covers standard parcels and the registered letter service. The Government have decided that these privileges should remain for now but that they should be kept under review by the Regulator.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many community sub-post offices there are in the United Kingdom. [91766]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post office that at the end of May 1999 there were 2,082 community sub-post offices in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what borrowing limits his Department will propose be laid down by Parliament for borrowing by the Post Office under the proposed arrangements for borrowing subject to Government approval set out in the Post Office White Paper. [91754]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Under the new framework announced in the White Paper, the Post Office will be able to borrow for growth investments up to an annual limit of £75 million in each of the next five years. The Post Office will be free to seek approval for growth investments costing more than £75 million, as necessary, but the approval of Ministers will be required. The Government will approve Post Office requests for borrowing for these larger investment cases which are consistent with the rolling five-year strategic plan, commercially robust, and pose no undue risk to the taxpayer. The precise terms of any borrowing will depend on the investment concerned.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the possible steps being considered by his Department under its proposals to liberalise further the postal market referred to at page 21 of the Post Office White Paper. [91746]

Mr. Ian McCartney: This is a matter to be considered by the new regulatory body, the Postal Services Commission, not the Department. The White Paper makes it clear that the Regulator should be free to consider all appropriate mechanisms.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those countries included in his Department's analysis of the postal services of other countries in which the postal services have been reformed in a way similar to that proposed in the Post Office White Paper; and what system of price regulation was adopted, listing in each case the appropriate formula. [91738]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Among the developed countries, Australia, New Zealand, all the Nordic countries, Ireland, Belgium and Austria have now adopted models of a government-owned plc. Of the different systems of price regulation, the information available is as follows:

Australia

Australia Post sets charges which are reviewed by an external body, the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission. The Government may disallow a variation of postage rates for ordinary post within Australia.

Denmark

In the reserved area the Minister of Transport determines the conditions for the fixing of postal charges for inland letters covered by the exclusive right. Tariffs are determined by Post Danmark and are approved on the basis of a price cap model. This consists of the rates being regulated by the percentage development in the gross price index (consumer price index) with deduction of 1 per cent.

Ireland

The Regulator is responsible for sanctioning tariff increases for letter post only.

New Zealand

Maintains a relationship between the price of the standard letter and movements in the Consumer Price Index.

Sweden

There is a price cap on the domestic letter rate for private individuals. The charge to private individuals for delivery of letters weighing up to 500g may be increased by a maximum of the average change in the net price index over a three year period.

Belgium

The postal service provider sets the tariffs and pricing structures for public service activities within the pricing framework laid down in its management contract (with the Government). Price ceilings are subject to the approval of the relevant Government minister.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has met representatives of the Post Office to discuss the reduction in the size of the network; and if he will make a statement. [92017]

Mr. Ian McCartney: There have not been any such meetings. The Government remain committed to a nationwide network of post offices, and will be discussing with the Post Office the criteria for access to post offices which we intend to publish by the end of this year. The Regulator will have a duty to monitor performance against these criteria.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many staff were employed by the Post Office in Scotland for each of the past five years; and what forecast he has made of staff levels for each of the next five years. [92005]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that the numbers of staff employed in Scotland for each of the last five years were as follows:

Year	Royal Mail	Post Office Counters Ltd.	Parcelforce	Total
1995	13,286	1,276	920	15,482
1996	13,675	1,270	930	15,875
1997	14,028	1,203	940	16,171
1998	14,872	1,207	950	17,029
June 1999	14,541	1,152	926	16,619

No forecasts of staff levels in Scotland for the next five years are available.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many sub-post offices in Scotland were closed on a temporary basis in each of the past five years; and how many of these were subsequently re-opened. [92016]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that the numbers of sub-post offices closed in Scotland on a temporary basis and subsequent reopenings in each of the last five years were as follows:

29 temporary closures of which two reopened within the year; nine other offices reopened from previous years' closures.

1995–96

17 temporary closures of which three reopened within the year; three other offices reopened from previous years' closures.

41 temporary closures of which five reopened within the year; 14 other offices reopened from previous years' closures.

35 temporary closures of which four reopened within the year; eight other offices reopened from previous years' closures.

44 temporary closures of which 14 reopened within the year; eight other offices reopened from previous years' closures.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has for continuation of free postal services for (a) Braille material and (b) talking books, as part of his programme of Post Office restructuring. [91949]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 19 July 1999]: As set out in the White Paper on Post Office Reform, the Government believe that there is a genuine need for special services for the blind and has made clear that the Post Office will continue to be obliged to provide them under the reform programme.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what level of losses sustained by non-monopoly services of the Post Office following its conversion to plc status will be regarded as constituting a subsidy from the monopoly services of the Post Office. [92052]

Mr. Ian McCartney: It will be the responsibility of the Regulator to ensure that any cross-subsidy from the monopoly area to competitive activities is the minimum required, in their opinion, to ensure the continued provision of services required by the universal service obligation at a uniform tariff. It will be for the Regulator to determine the extent to which this is affected, if at all, by plc status.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date Ministers were advised that the Horizon project should be cancelled. [92134]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The decision to proceed with the Horizon project in a restructured form and without the benefit payment card culminated in an agreement in principle signed between ICL and Post Office Counters Ltd. on 24 May 1999.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Minister has specific responsibility for the Horizon Project. [92067]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 20 July 1999]: I have specific responsibility under the Secretary of State for Post Office issues, including the Post Office's interest in the Horizon project.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many sub-post offices in (a) urban, (b) suburban and (c) rural areas are provided with a guaranteed minimum level of income. [92413]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 22 July 1999]: I understand from the Post Office that, as part of the new subpostmasters remuneration system, all sub-post offices receive some level of guaranteed minimum income. The system, which was specifically designed to help support smaller, mainly rural offices, includes a fixed element and an element which varies according to the amount of business a sub-post office handles. The fixed element is a larger proportion of the overall pay for small offices.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what payments are made per transaction to post offices for processing each DSS benefit payment; and what payments will be made where post offices act as agents for banks and individual payments not made via automated credit transfer into bank accounts. [92346]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The remuneration arrangements between Post Office Counters Ltd. and subpostmasters and subpostmistresses are commercially confidential.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average number of transactions of DSS benefit payments processed by post offices broken down by category of post office; and what estimates he has made of the forecast decrease in transactions as automated credit transfer is encouraged. [92347]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that the number and percentage in 1998–99 of DSS benefit payment transactions processed by category of post office are as follows:

	Number of transactions	Percentage
Crown offices	181,469,895	23.9
Sub-post offices	572,503,350	75.4
Community offices	4,555,729	0.6
Other	759,288	0.1

Existing paper-based methods of paying benefits at post offices are to be progressively phased out between 2003 and 2005 in favour of more modern means of payment based on the existing Automated Credit Transfer system.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) post offices and (b) sub-post offices there are in each parliamentary constituency in England and Wales; how many have been opened in each of the last five years; and how many have been closed. [92460]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that it is not possible to provide figures for post offices and sub-post offices opened and closed in each of the last five years in each parliamentary constituency in England and Wales. However, I will shortly be placing in the Library a list of the numbers as at the end of March 1998 of Crown post offices and sub-post offices in each parliamentary constituency in England and Wales. I will forward a copy of this list to the hon. Member as soon as is practicable.

Insolvency

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research he has commissioned during the current review of company law into the services provided by insolvency practitioners and their cost; when the results of that research will be published; and if he will make a statement. [91783]

Mr. Ian McCartney: A comprehensive review of company law was announced in March 1998 with the aim of a final report in the Spring of 2001. A consultation document on the strategic framework was published earlier this year with the intention to publish a summary of responses in the autumn.

In February this year a separate review, joint with the Treasury, of company rescue mechanisms was announced which will include consideration of the cost of and access to the service of insolvency practitioners. This review is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

Miners (Respiratory Diseases)

Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidelines his Department has set for the length of time which former miners suffering 80 per cent. emphysema should expect to wait for a spirometer test. [92121]

Mr. Battle: This is the longest running personal injury action in the UK and the development of an agreed assessment process, which can handle the 77,000 claims received, has inevitably taken some considerable time. However, as soon as agreement in principle on spirometry testing was reached in March we awarded the contract for the programme of spirometry testing throughout Scotland, England and Wales to Healthcall Services Limited. This is principally to help prioritise claims for the full medical assessment process, but will also enable us to extend offers of interim payments to new categories of miners and, in some cases, make full and final offers. Some 3,300 claimants have already been assessed, and we anticipate that the majority of the remaining existing claimants will be completed by the Autumn, with the most elderly being considered first. This should help ensure that those with severe disabilities are invited to be tested at an early stage.

Airlines

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive further evidence from the Director General of Fair Trading about the proposed alliance between American Airlines and British Airways. [91219]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 13 July 1999]: My officials have held a number of discussions with officials from the Office of Fair Trading and I have met the Director-General of Fair Trading three times to discuss this case. I am not yet at a stage at which I can reach a final decision.

Gender Discrimination

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people in Scotland have (a) taken cases alleging gender discrimination to an employment tribunal and (b) had their cases upheld in the last 12 months for which figures are available and in the three previous years. [92129]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The number of people in Scotland who have taken cases alleging gender discrimination to an Employment Tribunal over the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999 was 192 of which 11 were upheld. The following table provides the figures for the last three financial years.

Year	Applications	Upheld
1996–97	196	20
1997–98	240	28
1998–99	196	16

Electronic Correspondence

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will make it his policy to reply to electronic correspondence electronically; and if he will make a statement. [92028]

Mr. Byers: It is already my policy to respond to electronic correspondence electronically where practicable.

Genetic Testing

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to introduce restrictions on the use of genetic testing by employers; and if he will make a statement. [92251]

Mr. Byers: The Government are considering carefully the Human Genetics Advisory Commission's report on "The Implications of Genetic Testing for Employment", which was published on 14 July 1999. We intend to publish our response in due course.

Biotechnology

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Minister for Science has completed his examination of the growth of biotechnology clusters announced on 16 April; and if he plans to publish the report of the findings. [92246]

Mr. Battle: The study led by my noble Friend the Minister for Science on biotechnology clusters has been completed and the report will be published shortly.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 374, on statutory instruments, for what reasons the cost of providing the information would be disproportionate. [92478]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 22 July 1999]: It would have exceeded £500.

Ilisu Dam

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will request from the Swiss Government, their consent to place in the Library their environmental impact assessment into the Ilisu Dam project. [92757]

Mr. Wilson: The Environmental Impact Appraisal Report (EIAR) is being prepared for the company bidding for this project; supplemental reports are being prepared for the Swiss authorities. We have already asked the company and the Swiss authorities whether they are prepared to allow ECGD to release these documents. They have advised that they are not prepared to agree release at the present time. We understand that they intend to release the reports when they have been finalised.

BNFL

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the value of BNFL's operations in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement on future market opportunities for BNFL in the United States. [92815]

Mr. Battle: In 1997, the turnover of Westinghouse's nuclear business—which BNFL acquired for $900 million along with Morrison Knudsen in March this year—was $1.1 billion. BNFL's US subsidiary, BNFL Inc, earned revenue of $67.6 million. BNFL's current US order book is worth a potential $9 billion if all contract options are exercised. BNFL has been set the target of enhancing its financial performance further through material and progressive growth in profits generated from ordinary activities. Its success in winning an increasing share of the US clean-up business will help contribute towards this goal.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what method is being used by BNFL to put a value on its United States contracts for the purpose of Government proposals to sell its stake in the company. [92816]

Mr. Battle: BNFL has been set the target of increasing the overall contribution made by its US business to BNFL profits, and of increasing towards 15 per cent. the proportion of BNFL profits derived from the US business.

MOX Shipments

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) of 29 June 1999, Official Report, column 116, on MOX shipments, if he will list the qualifications and career experience of the technical experts advising on the process of separating plutonium from MOX fuel. [92761]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 23 July 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith), 7 July 1999, Official Report, column 578. The advice in that reply was given by the Head of the Safeguards Office in the Department of Trade and Industry who has a first class honours degree in chemistry. This official worked initially for the Ministry of Defence at the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston, dealing with plutonium chemistry, measurement methods and underground nuclear testing. He then moved to the UKAEA's Harwell Laboratory, where he led work on the development of radiometric instrumentation for the non-destructive measurement of nuclear materials. Before moving to the DTI as Head of the Radiation Dosimetry Branch of the National Physical Laboratory, this official was responsible for the UK's long-term research and development programme concerning the management and disposal of radioactive wastes at the then Department of the Environment. The official has been chairman of the IAEA's Standing Advisory Group on Safeguards Implementation since August 1996.

Competitiveness Indices

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are his Department's currently preferred indices of competitiveness; and what their levels were in May of each year since 1979. [92561]

Mr. Byers: The Competitiveness White Paper, published on 16 December 1998, announced the Government's intention to develop a set of competitiveness indicators to measure the UK's progress. This work is in hand and will be published in due course.

Unfair Dismissals

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many and what proportion of (a) men and (b) women who have appealed to an employment tribunal in respect of unfair dismissal during the last 12 months have had their claim upheld. [92510]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Between 1 July 1998 and 30 June 1999, the Employment Tribunals received a total of 35,017 applications for unfair dismissal. Of those determined at a tribunal hearing the following numbers were upheld:

	Male	Female
Total determined	3,585	1,770
Numbers successful	1,493	791

Arms Exports (Africa)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences Her Majesty's Government have (a) granted and (b) refused for the export of arms to (i) Zimbabwe, (ii) Uganda and (iii) Rwanda for the period 1 January 1998 to the present day; and if he will make a statement. [91333]

Dr. Howells: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 1 January 1998 and 7 July 1999, 46 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and 23 Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Rwanda, Uganda or Zimbabwe of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List.

In the same period, two applications for such SIELs were refused; no applications for such OIELs were refused in full.

Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings and OIELs may also cover a range of countries. Where this is so, the licence is included in the table in the total for all of the relevant ratings and/or countries.

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict. This information should be considered in light of the answer given by the then Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Certain Open General Export Licences cover the export to specified countries, including Uganda and Zimbabwe, of certain goods on the Military List. Copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

Premium Telephone Lines

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review the regulatory framework governing the use by businesses of premium telephone lines; and if he will make a statement. [92276]

Mr. Wills: The Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services (ICSTIS) has responsibility for regulating premium rate services. ICSTIS enforces an effective Code of Practice which has provisions to ensure that consumers are given adequate information to enable them to take informed decisions about the use of premium rate services. The Code ensures that the costs of calls to premium rate lines used by businesses must be given in advertisements and has provisions limiting the time spent by callers on these services. ICSTIS and Oftel are planning to review the regulatory framework for premium rate services later this year to ensure that consumers continue to benefit from the right level of protection.

Money Lenders

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review the regulatory framework governing the activities of private money lenders; and if he will make a statement. [92275]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State published last week the Government's Consumer Strategy White Paper "Modern markets: confident consumers", which sets out many proposals to improve and review consumer credit legislation. These include:

reviewing the consumer credit licensing system;

requiring wealth warnings to be included in documents given to prospective customers instead of transient advertisements on radio, television and cinema; changing the wealth warning required in advertisements for equity release schemes; changing the way the annual percentage rate of charge (APR) of the total charge of credit is calculated in the UK so that it is calculated on the same basis throughout the European Union; changing the way the APR for low-start mortgages is calculated; and reviewing rules on extortionate credit.

A copy of the White Paper is available from the Library of the House.

Compliance Costs

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reductions were achieved in the compliance costs of regulation administered by his Department and its public bodies for the last year for which data are available; what mechanisms exist for monitoring the post-implementation costs of such regulation; and if he has established targets for reduction in the compliance costs of regulation administered by his Department and its public bodies. [92314]

Mr. Byers: Details of regulations which impose compliance costs on business are published in the Department's regulatory impact assessments copies of which are placed in the Libraries of both Houses. A summary of all regulatory impact assessments published by the Department and the other regulatory Departments in Whitehall are published every six months by way of Command Paper, and are available on a monthly basis on the Cabinet Office Regulatory Impact Unit's website. Where appropriate, regulatory impact assessments also contain information on how a regulation will be monitored.

The Department published details on its regulatory activity in its Departmental Expenditure Plans Report (Cm. 4211). Recent examples of measures already taken or planned to reduce burdens on business include:

the establishment of a new Small Business Service which will offer smaller firms practical assistance to help them meet their regulatory obligations. Consultation on its proposed role began on 30 June; consultation on proposals for a new service to help new small employers get to grips with running a payroll, to be operated through the Small Business Service;

plans to consult on increasing the threshold below which companies need not have their accounts independently audited from its current level of £350,000; and proposals to amend the Working Time Regulations to give more flexibility and to reduce the detailed record-keeping for employers.

Although there is no arbitrary target for reducing the compliance costs of regulation we are committed to minimising the burden of regulation on business. In addition all Departments are required to make an assessment of the risks, costs and benefits of any regulatory proposal which has an impact on businesses, charities and voluntary bodies before they decide to act. Without an assessment of this kind there can be no collective agreement to a regulatory proposal.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, indicating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91999]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her on 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 636, by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Women.

As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that its policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, this Department is working closely with the Women's Unit on gender issues. Our approach to developing policy initiatives is consistent with the principles set out in the joint document from the Cabinet Office, Home Office and Department for Education and Employment, "Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment", which was published in November 1998.

Family Credit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families claiming family credit have (a) one child, (b) two children, (c) three children, (d) four children, (e) five children and (f) six children or more; and if he will break these numbers down by regions. [92574]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what new instructions have been issued regarding counting money in claimants' current accounts as capital for the purpose of determining entitlement to housing benefit. [92575]

Angela Eagle: We have not issued any new instructions regarding counting money in claimants' current accounts as capital for the purpose of determining entitlement to Housing Benefit. The policy remains that all holdings with a clear monetary value are treated as a claimant's capital. This includes the amount held in their current account after offsetting any amounts of income paid into the account used in the assessment of Housing Benefit entitlement.

Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent studies have been commissioned by the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board relating to the needs of severely and profoundly deaf people; and what recommendations from those studies his Department has acted on. [92562]

Mr. Bayley: The Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board (DLAAB) is an advisory body and does not itself commission work. However, in 1998 the Board was commissioned by the Department of Social Security to undertake a study on deafness in children and young adults. This work will be completed shortly.

In addition, the Department more recently commissioned the Board to undertake a study of deaf-blind people who had claimed DLA. The Department is currently acting on certain findings arising from this work, in particular recommendations on improving evidence gathering on claims from deaf-blind people and on the need to increase the understanding of the problems arising from the combination of deafness and blindness amongst those responsible for administrating Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many members of the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board are (a) deaf and (b) have a professional specialism in hearing impairment. [92563]

Mr. Bayley: The Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board has one member who has a severe hearing impairment. She is consultant psychiatrist in mental health services for deaf people and has been a trustee of the Royal National Institute for Deaf People since 1996.

Benefits (Scotland)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, for each state benefit, he will forecast the number of claimants and total cost by benefit for Scotland for the next three years together with forecasts for (a) Scotland's pro-rata share of the United Kingdom administration costs and (b) budgeted costs for the central and local administration and the branch network for facilities in Scotland. [92390]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) on 23 July 1999, Official Report, column 673.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the level of spending on social security in Scotland in each of the last five years (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the United Kingdom total broken down to show spending on (i) benefit payments, (ii) Scotland's pro-rata share of United Kingdom administration costs and (iii) actual spending on central and local administration and the branch network for facilities in Scotland. [92389]

Mr. Timms: DSS accounts for its administrative costs operationally (by Agency and Business Unit). It does not maintain accounting records by geographical territory and it is therefore not possible to provide reliable expenditure information covering all Departmental operations in the format requested. An estimate of Social Security Benefit Expenditure in Scotland in the past five years can be found in the table.

Estimated Social Security benefit expenditure in Scotland (and as a percentage of Great Britain expenditure)

Year	Expenditure (£ million)	Percentage
1994–95	7,970	10.0
1995–96	8,300	9.9
1996–97	8,680	9.9

1. Expenditure excludes payments of certain benefits to people living overseas.
2. Expenditure figures have been rounded to nearest £10 million.

The above figures are consistent with those published in the Departmental Report 1999.

Pensions

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the difference was in each year since 1980 between the amount by which pensions would have increased for married couples, with the spouse as a dependent adult, if they had been based on (a) the retail prices index and (b) average earnings. [92485]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table. Information is also provided on what the rate would have been if the link uprating by the higher of earnings or prices had been retained.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Opinion of the Advocate General in the case of Preston and Others v Wolverhampton Healthcare NHS and Others (Case Number C78/98) will be published; and what is the reason for the delay. [92536]

Mr. Timms: The European Court of Justice has indicated that the Advocate General is due to issue his opinion on 14 September 1999 in the case of Preston and Others v Wolverhampton Healthcare NHS Trust and Others (case number C78/98).

The Advocate General had been expected to issue his opinion on the case on 6 July 1999. The date on which an opinion is issued is a matter for the Advocate General. We are unaware of the reason for the delay on this particular case.

Lone Parents

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the impact of the New Deal on the incomes of lone parents who have been helped into work. [92473]

Angela Eagle: The New Deal for Lone Parents provides practical help and advice for lone parents on Income Support who want to make the move into work. Since it was launched, the service has helped over 16,500 lone parents into work.

In addition, a range of new measures will mean that lone parents will be even better off in work. Key initiatives include; the National Minimum Wage; the new 10p starting rate of income tax, from which people on low incomes gain up to £2.88 a week; and the Working Families Tax Credit which, from October, will guarantee a minimum income of £200 a week for every family in full-time work.

Analysis of benefit administration data for a sample of around 300 lone parents who moved into work and on to Family Credit following participation in the New Deal for Lone Parents as at [illegible]h 1998 showed that they were, on average, £40 a [illegible]tter off.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) new claims of invalidity benefit were made in each year since 1995, (b) exits from incapacity benefit to other work or benefits were made in each year since 1995 and (c) claimants of incapacity benefit were resident in each local authority in (i) Tyne and Wear, (ii) the counties of Northumberland and Durham, and (iii) the area covered by the former county of Cleveland in each year since 1995. [92225]

Mr. Bayley: The number of new claims which resulted in an award of Incapacity Benefit, and the number of people leaving Incapacity Benefit for each year since it was introduced in April 1995 are set out in the table.

The main reasons for leaving Incapacity Benefit are receipt of a medical certificate advising that the recipient can return to work, a decision by the adjudication officer that the person does not satisfy the medical test of incapacity (the all work test) and the award of State Retirement Pension. It is estimated that every year about 100,000 people who have been sick for 28 weeks or more leave Incapacity Benefit voluntarily for work. However, detailed information on the destinations of Incapacity Benefit leavers is not routinely collected and it is not known how many actually return to work in any year.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many winter fuel payments have been made in respect of last winter; how many of the payment cheques issued have not been cashed; and how many payments are still due to be paid; [92851]

(2) if he will list the number of winter fuel payments and their value made in each month in the current year. [92853]

Mr. Timms: The administration of Winter Fuel Payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Willetts, dated 23 July 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary questions asking how many winter fuel payments (WFP) have been made in respect of last winter; how many of the payment cheques have not been cashed and how many payments are still due to be paid. You also asked if he would list the number of winter fuel payments (and their value) made in each month in the year.

I am unable to provide all of the information in the format requested, as this would only be available at disproportionate cost. The Benefits Agency (BA) does not collect statistics on the number of uncashed payments.

Delivery of the payments was broadly similar to the previous winter and about 10 million payments were automatically issued last winter to eligible customers. This figure does not include those customers who were identified as entitled to a WFP at a later date because of a retrospective award of a qualifying benefit or those whose benefits were maintained clerically.

Approximately 1.4 million £50 payments were issued automatically to pensioners receiving Income Support (IS) or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) by the end of November 1998. A further 8.6 million £20 or £10 payments were issued to other eligible pensioners by the end of January 1999. Around 3.4 million of the £20 or £10 payments were issued via Automated Credit Transfer to the customer's bank account, 5.2 million were sent to Post Offices for issue along with the weekly pension payment and the remainder issued via girocheque or payable order directly to the customer's address.

BA records indicate that payments have been issued to all customers where the information held suggested entitlement. BA offices will investigate claims from customers who may have expected a payment, but did not receive one, if they contact the office which normally deals with their pension or benefit.

Approximately 113,000 of the payments issued to Post Offices were returned to BA offices without being cashed. Staff investigated the reason for non-collection (for example, death of the pensioner or prolonged hospitalisation); the vast majority of these have now been re-issued.

I hope this is helpful.

Pensioners

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the numbers of (a) single pensioners and (b) married couple pensioners in each year since 1980. [92486]

Mr. Timms: Information is not available in the format requested. State Retirement Pensions are paid to individuals. Category A pension is payable on a person's own contribution record and Category B pension is paid to a married woman (or a widow) on her husband's insurance record. It is not possible to identify someone's marital status from the category of pension. Such information as is available is in the table.

Departmental Costs (Scotland)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the amounts his Department and its agencies spends on (a) running costs, (b) wage costs and (c) other administrative costs for those facilities and staff based in Scotland; indicating the headquarters administration costs and the total costs for the branch network. [92357]

Mr. Timms: DSS accounts for its administrative costs operationally (by Agency and Business Unit). It does not maintain accounting records by geographical territory and it is therefore not possible to provide reliable expenditure information in the format requested. For information on the Benefits Agency in Scotland, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Angus (Mr. Welsh) on 16 July 1999, Official Report, columns 349–50.

Public Appointments

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many appointments to quangos he made between (a) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (b) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; and in each case of those how many were members of Britain's (i) Asian and (ii) ethnic minority communities; [92142]

(2) how many appointments to public bodies were made by his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnicity; and if he will make a statement. [92514]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Details of all [1] appointments made to this Department's Non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs)

	1 June 1997 to 31 May 1998	1 June 1998 to 31 May 1999
Total	190	142
Male	119	88
Female	71	54
Asian	10	3
Other ethnic minorities	7	3

[1] Includes appointments to the Department's Tribunal NDPBs, made by the Lord Chancellor or President of the Independent Tribunal Service.

The overall reduction in the proportion of ethnic minority appointments made to this Department's public bodies has been caused by the fact that there have been no new non-judicial appointments to the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS). This is because ITS is to be replaced by The Appeals Service, which will only comprise of judicial appointees, on 1 April 1999. Non-judicial ITS appointments currently make up 69 per cent. of all this Department's public appointments. While effort is made to ensure social diversity on our remaining public bodies, the constitution of these bodies restricts the pool from which suitable candidates can be sought. For example, legislation governing war pensions committees stipulates that members should be drawn from ex-service organisations. We have two overall commitments for equal opportunities and public appointments:

the equal representation of women and men, pro-rata representation of members of ethnic minority groups, and increased participation of disabled people; and the appointment on merit, using fair selection procedures, which recognise non-traditional career patterns as suitable qualifications for appointment.

This Department's plan on equal opportunities was published on 25 May 1999, in the document "Quangos: Opening Up Public Appointments", and was deposited in the Library. This plan sets objectives and robust targets for improving the representation of women from 36 per cent. towards 50 per cent., from 5.8 per cent. towards 7.5 per cent. for people from ethnic minority groups, and that people with disabilities are appropriately represented.

Social Security (Scotland)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the additional (i) headquarters functions, (ii) buildings, (iii) computer systems and (iv) other administrative functions which would be required for a separate Scottish social security system on the basis that the system inherited his Department's staff, buildings and systems in Scotland. [92676]

Mr. Timms: No. Social security is a reserved matter handled on a GB-wide basis and there are no plans to change this. The information requested is therefore not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

TREASURY

Low-paid Workers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total cash value of (a) the extra money paid to low-paid workers as a result of the introduction of the minimum wage in 1999–2000 and (b) the increase in child benefit in 1999–2000. [91226]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 13 July 1999]: It is not possible to give a cash value for the extra money paid to low-paid workers as a result of the introduction of the minimum wage. However, the Low Pay Commission estimated in its first report that the average increase in income for those affected by the minimum wage would be 30 per cent.

The estimated total cash value of the increase in child benefit between 1998–99 and 1999–2000 is £0.9 billion.

Tax Credits

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Inland Revenue will begin to publicise the Working Families Tax Credit and the Disabled Person's Tax Credit. [91830]

Dawn Primarolo: Plans are already in hand to launch a high profile publicity campaign in early September. The campaign will consist of TV and national press advertising, leaflets and posters.

NIRS2

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to instruct the Inland Revenue to consult with pension providers in respect of the proposed NIRS2 compensation package. [92146]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 July 1999]: The Government are considering the content of the Public Accounts Committee report, "Delays to the new National Insurance Recording System". A full response will be given to the Public Accounts Committee on all recommendations. Meanwhile, the Inland Revenue is in regular contact with the pensions industry.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if staff at the Contributions Agency aged 60 years or over were allowed to continue in employment on a year-to-year basis until the age of 65, prior to the Agency's transfer from the Department of Social Security. [92202]

Dawn Primarolo: In July 1996, the Contributions Agency (CA) advised its staff that they were considering changing the normal retirement age because the Agency was faced with a need to reduce staff numbers. After lengthy consultation with Trade Union Side, the CA gave notice in August 1997 that with effect from 31 July 1998 the normal retirement age for all staff would be 60. As a transitional measure, people could be retained for up to 12 months, but not beyond age 62 for people at pay bands B2 and B3 (equivalent to Executive Officer level); and not beyond age 65 for people in pay bands up to and including B1 (equivalent to Administrative Officer level). No extensions of service were to be given beyond 31 July 1999.

Tobacco Products

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the tax revenue raised from tobacco products in 1998. [92240]

Dawn Primarolo: The amount of tax revenue (excise duty and VAT) raised from tobacco products in 1998 was £10,090 million.

Value Added Tax has been estimated from Office for National Statistics figures for household final consumption expenditure on tobacco.

Special Advisers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the sums paid to the Exchequer by political parties reimbursing the Government for the cost of services supplied by special advisers to backbenchers of the governing party (a) from 1 May 1987 to 1 May 1997 and (b) since 1 May 1997. [92074]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 21 July 1999]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer which the Prime Minister gave him today.

National Assembly for Wales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish, before the summer adjournment, the most recent draft of the concordat between the Treasury and the National Assembly for Wales. [92327]

Mr. Milburn: Work on the concordat is proceeding well. I hope to be in a position to put a draft concordat to the Assembly Cabinet shortly. I do not intend to publish the concordat in advance of that.

VAT (Labour-intensive Services)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Commission's current proposals regarding the application of VAT on labour-intensive services. [92831]

Dawn Primarolo: The Commission's proposal, which provides for Member States to apply a reduced rate of VAT to certain local labour-intensive services on an experimental basis, is still under discussion in a Council working group. Member States have been asked to draw up a list of services which would be covered by the measure but no agreement has yet been reached.

Smuggling

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans there are for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to purchase x-ray machines capable of screening articulated lorries and containers to assist in combating illegal immigration and alcohol and tobacco smuggling; and if he will make a statement. [92768]

Dawn Primarolo: There are currently no plans for such purchases.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what funds have been allocated in (a) the present financial year and (b) in 2000–01 for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to purchase x-ray machines capable of screening articulated lorries and containers to assist in combating alcohol and tobacco smuggling. [92769]

Dawn Primarolo: No such funds have been allocated in the present financial year. Funding plans for 2000–01 have not yet been finalised.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the revenue value of detected alcohol and tobacco fraud and smuggling for each of the last three financial years from (a) sources within the EU, (b) sources outside the EU and (c) diversion fraud. [92765]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that Customs do not hold records that differentiate between sources within and sources outside the EU.

The revenue value of smuggled tobacco and alcohol products detected by Customs for the last three financial years has been:

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Smuggled	29	76	140
Diversion Fraud	No comparable figures	207	245

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the target levels for the present financial year for the detection of alcohol and tobacco fraud and smuggling; and what progress has been made in achieving these target levels in the first three months of the current financial year. [92766]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs targets for the detection of alcohol and tobacco smuggling and fraud for the present financial year are:

to detect alcohol and tobacco fraud and smuggling to the revenue value of £307 million, and to disrupt or dismantle 25 major excise smuggling organisations.

Data in respect of our performance against these targets during the first three months of the year (April-June) are still being collated and validated. However, the emerging results are encouraging and, if this pattern continues, Customs consider they are on course to achieve the targets by the end of 1999–2000.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) fines, (b) charges and (c) convictions have resulted each year since 1 January 1990 from the (i) detection of fraud and (ii) detection of misdeclaration of goods on (1) cigarettes, (2) hand rolling tobacco, (3) cigars, (4) spirits, (5) cider, (6) fortified wines, (7) wine and (8) beer entering the United Kingdom. [92764]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that central records are not kept in this format.

Excise Goods

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures are (a) in place and (b) planned to prevent the purchase of non-duty paid excise goods through the internet. [92767]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise are aware of the risks from this form of smuggling. Staff at postal and courier depots have been alerted and Customs are looking separately at the wider issues involved.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those proposals for private finance initiatives for each department of state made since 1 May 1997, stating for each the proposed (a) contribution from private finance and (b) date of commencement; and if he will list in each case whether the sums involved count against the ceilings for public investment set by the Treaty of Maastricht. [92771]

Mr. Milburn: (a) Table 1 gives the details underpinning Table B16 of 1999 FSBR covering PFI/PPP projects signed from 1 May 1997 to 1 April 1999. Under PFI, the public sector contracts for services not assets, and capital investment is only one of the activities undertaken by the private sector in order to supply these services. The figures in Table 1 therefore do not reflect the total value of these contracts, but do reflect Treasury estimates of capital expenditure by the private sector.

(b) Table 2 shows a list and start dates of those projects which the Treasury has been informed are operational.

Customs Duty

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue has been collected each year since 1 January 1990 in (a) customs duty and (b) indirect tax from (i) cigarettes, (ii) hand rolling tobacco, (iii) cigars, (iv) spirits, (v) cider, (vi) fortified wines, (vii) wine and (viii) beer entering the United Kingdom by (1) post and (2) private carrier. [92770]

Dawn Primarolo: The table provides details of Excise Revenue for Post for the calendar years 1993–1998. Earlier information is not available. This does not include VAT and Customs Duty, which are not readily available. Excise duties are recorded as a global sum; the breakdown in the table is based on samples of goods imported.

Import duty schedule: net receipts

Calendar year	Tobacco	Spirit	Wine	Total

1997	140	6	19	165
1998	144	6	20	170

It is assumed that private carrier means fast parcel operators, for which the revenue is not separately recorded.

Duty Free

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1999, Official Report, column 859–60, if he is able to estimate the increased revenue to the Treasury as a result of the abolition of duty free shopping for this financial year and the next. [93160]

Dawn Primarolo: We have estimated that the abolition of duty free sales within Europe could yield £120 million in revenue receipts in a full year, but this does depend entirely on how the companies providing the services seize on the new commercial opportunities that are now open to them. This estimate will be kept under review as further information on the marketing strategies of the operators becomes available.

Duty Differentials

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the duty differential on (a) beer, (b) spirits and (c) tobacco between the United Kingdom and the rest of the European Community. [93141]

Mrs. Roche: Any changes to the levels of UK alcohol and tobacco duties is a matter for the Chancellor's Budget deliberations.

VAT

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the rates of VAT in each of the member states of the European Union for each of the main commodities and services. [93125]

Dawn Primarolo: The table details the standard and reduced rates of VAT in each member state and the main commodities and services subject to a reduced rate.

Compliance Costs

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reductions were achieved in the compliance costs of regulation administered by his Department, its public bodies and by other departments for which Treasury Ministers are responsible for the last year for which data is available; what mechanisms exist for monitoring the post-implementation compliance costs of such regulation; and if he has established targets for reduction in the compliance costs of regulation administered by his Department and its public bodies and by other Departments for which Treasury Ministers are responsible. [92316]

Mrs. Roche: Details of regulations that imposed compliance costs on business are published in the Chancellor's Departments' regulatory impact assessments and laid in both Houses. A summary of all the regulatory impact assessments published by the Chancellor's Departments and the other regulatory Departments in Whitehall is published every six months in a White Paper, and is available on a monthly basis on the Cabinet Office Regulatory Impact Unit's website.

There is no arbitrary target for reducing the compliance cost of regulation. However, all Departments are required to make an assessment of the risks, costs and benefits of any regulatory proposal that has an impact on businesses, charities and voluntary bodies before they decide to act. Without an assessment of this kind, there can be no collective agreement of a regulatory proposal.

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Minister from his Department has attended each of the meetings of the European Council of Finance Ministers held in 1999 to date. [93173]

Ms Hewitt: Attendance at the meetings of the Economic and Finance Council of Ministers held in 1999 to date, is set out as follows:

Date
18 January	The Chancellor of the Exchequer
8 February	The Chancellor of the Exchequer
15 March	The Chancellor of the Exchequer and myself
10 May	Myself
25 May	The Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Paymaster General
12 July	The Chancellor of the Exchequer

Migration (North-East)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the level of net migration from each local authority area in Tyne and Wear and the counties of Durham and Northumberland in each of the past five years, separately identifying net migration (a) within and (b) outside the North East. [92462]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 26 July 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question for an estimate of the level of net migration from each local authority area in Tyne and Wear and the counties of Durham and Northumberland.

The estimates of net migration are not sufficiently reliable to be published as a separate component of the total population estimate for each local authority. It is not, therefore, our policy to release them.

Unemployment

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how often and when the definition of unemployment used for measuring unemployment has been changed since 1979. [92556]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 26 July 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the definition of unemployment.

The ONS measure of unemployment, derived from the Labour Force Survey (LFS), is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed people who are: a) without a paid job; b) available to start work within the next two weeks and c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained. The LFS has used the ILO definition since 1984. Prior to this a slightly different definition was used. This included people who were without a paid job who were looking for work in the reference week, or prevented from seeking work by temporary sickness or holiday, or were waiting to start a job they had already obtained or were waiting for the results of a job application. Full-time students who were seeking work but who were not available to start work in the next two weeks because they had to complete their education were excluded. The definition was used from spring 1979 to spring 1983.

The Labour Force Survey measure of unemployment has been compiled and published on the same definition since 1984 (annually 1984–1991; quarterly 1992 to March 1998) and a monthly moving average of each three month period from April 1998.

The ONS also published the monthly numbers of people who are claiming unemployment related benefits, also known as the Claimant Count. There have been nine changes affecting the coverage of the monthly claimant count since 1979 which have been significant enough to warrant a recasting of the consistent seasonally adjusted series. Further details of these discontinuities are given in the November 1995 edition of Labour Market Trends, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Multinationals

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of United Kingdom gross domestic product is accounted for by multinational corporations. [92680]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 26 July 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on multi-national corporations.

The proportion of gross domestic product accounted for by multi-national corporations is not available.

Some limited information on the activity of foreign owned businesses was published in an article 'Globalisation: scope, issues and statistics' in the November 1997 edition of Economic Trends, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. This article included:

information on the proportion of net output accounted for by foreign-owned manufacturing enterprises derived from the Annual Census of Production; estimates of the proportion of turnover and persons employed accounted for by foreign owned businesses involved in certain service industries.

Foreign Investment

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total investment in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the Australian and (c) the New Zealand economy was accounted for by gross foreign direct investments in each year since 1970. [92682]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Austin Mitchell, date 26 July 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on foreign direct investment.

The proportion of foreign direct investment in the UK of total investment over the last ten years, expressed as a percentage is:

1990: 16.2
1991: 8.7
1992: 9.2
1993: 10.2
1994: 5.7
1995: 11.1
1996: 13.2
1998: 26.2

More information can be found on the ONS databank available through the House of Commons library. The ONS does not publish information for Australia and New Zealand, although data are published in the OECD publication International Direct Investment Yearbook 1998, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Money Trading

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money was traded on a daily basis on average (a) on the UK foreign exchanges and (b) in the rest of the world in each year since 1979. [92565]

Ms Hewitt: Average daily turnover during April in foreign exchange spot, forwards, and swaps is set out in the table:

	1989	1992	1995	1998
UK	184	291	464	637
Rest of World	534	785	1,108	1,345

These are estimates derived from triennial surveys coordinated by the Bank for International Settlements since 1989.

Population Statistics

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion and number of people in each of the regions to be covered by the new regional development agencies are in the age range (a) 50 to 65 years, (b) 65 to 85 years, (c) 85 and over, (d) above pensionable age and (e) above 50 years; what proportion of the population as a whole in each region these figures represent; and if he will provide figures on the same basis showing the estimated population figures for (i) 2004, (ii) 2009, (iii) 2014, (iv) 2019 and (v) 2024. [93438]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Fox to Mr. Eddie O'Hara, dated 26 July 1999:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics has been asked to reply to your recent question asking for population statistics for the new Regional Development Agencies. I am replying in Dr. Holt's absence.

Public Appointments

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many appointments to public bodies were made by his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnicity; and if he will make a statement. [92513]

Ms Hewitt: The Government announced in their publication "Quangos—Opening up Public Appointments 1999–2002" (copies deposited in the Libraries of both Houses) their commitment to the equal representation of women and men in public appointments and a pro rata representation of members of ethnic minority groups. In moving towards achieving these commitments, the Chancellor's departments have set an ambitious overall goal that women should form a minimum of 40 per cent. of appointments to Chancellor's Departments' Public Bodies by 2003 (or for small bodies that at least one appointment should be held by a woman). There is also a goal that each of the Chancellor's Departments' Public Bodies should include at least one appointment from a member of the ethnic minorities by 2003 and that ethnic minorities should account for a minimum of 4 per cent. of appointments to larger bodies. The following table gives details of appointments made to NDPB's of the Chancellor's departments and agencies over the periods requested. Information on the number of appointments by both gender and ethnic origin cannot be provided since the number of new appointments in each category is less than five.

NDPB	Appointments 1997–98	Appointments 1998–99
Policy Holders Protection Board	4	1
Royal Mint Advisory Committee	3	2
Statistics Advisory Committee	2	0

Social Security Contributions

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the forecast levels of social security contributions for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland for each of the next three years. [92391]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my right hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) on 23 July 1999, Official Report, column 699.

Social Security Contributions (Scotland)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the level of social security contributions in Scotland over each of the last five years (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the United Kingdom total. [92388]

Dawn Primarolo: The available estimates of the share of National Insurance contributions made by Scottish residents are based on a 1 per cent. sample of National Insurance records in respect of employees. The latest information available is given in the table:

	Estimated Scottish share of UK total Percentage	Scottish estimate £ billion
1995–96	8.6	3.8
1996–97	9.0	4.2

WALES

Primary School Funding

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on primary school funding in Wales. [93146]

Mr. Hain: This is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

CABINET OFFICE

Office of Public Service

Mr. Shepherd: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when the Government propose to make an order in council to place the former functions of the Office of Public Service within the remit of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration and the Code of Practice on Open Government. [92645]

Mr. Kilfoyle: An order-in-council restoring the Parliamentary Ombudsman's jurisdiction over the part of the Cabinet Office whose functions were formerly carried out by the Office of Public Service was approved at Her Majesty's Privy Council Meeting on 21 July. The Order, which will also bring that part of the Cabinet Office within the remit of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, will be laid before the Parliamentary Ombudsman.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many times ministers in his Department met members and officials in the United States Government between 1 May 1997 and 1 December 1997; and if he will list the dates and locations of each meeting, the ministers involved and the names of the US ministers and officials at each meeting. [90424]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Cabinet Office Ministers had the following meetings with the following members and officials in the United States Government between 1 May and 1 December 1997.

Date/Minister	Location	Meetings
12 July-16 July 1997 Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster	Washington	Janet Caldow, Institute of Electronic Government Larry Haas, Office of Management and Budget Dr. Harold C. Relyea, Library of Congress Dr. Thomas, Brookings Bob Stone, National Performance Review John Kamensky, National Performance Review Patrick Kennedy, President's Management Council David Barram, US General Services Admin Senator Sam Brownback, Chairman of the Senate Oversight of Gov. Sub-Committee

Smartcards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what assessment he has made of the benefits of requiring the carrying of smartcards by persons seeking access to Government services. [91718]

Mr. Kilfoyle: There is no intention that people should be obliged to carry smartcards to obtain general access to public services. However, the experience of the private sector shows that smartcards can be popular and effective. The Government is interested in the benefits which smartcards can offer both for secure authentication and the enhancement of privacy.

The Central Information Technology Unit (CITU) in the Cabinet Office is currently chairing an Interdepartmental Steering Group on Smartcard Technology, which is developing a framework for their possible use in service delivery.

Civil Servants

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many civil servants are in post in each department and grade broken down by (a) gender and (b) ethnicity. [92512]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Civil Service Statistics personnel statistics are collated and published annually by the Cabinet Office. The latest information shown in the tables, is for staff in post at 1 April 1998.

Minister without Portfolio

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what meetings the former Minister without Portfolio held with members and officials of the United States Government during his visit in January 1998 to Florida and Washington; and if he will list the date and location of each meeting and the names of the United States officials who took part in each meeting. [92285]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The itinerary of the former Minister without Portfolio shows the following meetings with United States Government officials during his visit to Florida and Washington in January 1998:

Official	Date	Location
Capricia Marshall, Executive Assistant to the First Lady	5 January 1998	The White House, Washington
Melanne Verveer, Deputy Chief of Staff to the First Lady	5 January 1998	The White House, Washington
Mark Penn, White House, pollster	5 January 1998	The White House, Washington
Ellen McCullough Lovell, Director of the White House Millennium Programme	5 January 1998	The White House, Washington

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, stating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91677]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Women on 14 July 1999, Official Report, House of Lords, column 636.

Anti-drugs Co-ordinator

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many times the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator has met Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting and the names of the Irish Ministers and officials at each meeting. [92271]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator has not had any meetings with either Ministers or officials of the Irish Government.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what action the Government are taking to tackle age discrimination within Government departments. [92204]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Cabinet Office has this week issued "Age Diversity in the Civil Service: Guidance for Departments and Agencies".

This Guidance is designed to help Departments and agencies to implement the Code of Practice published by the Department for Education and Employment in June. It includes advice on avoiding age and age-related criteria, such as age limits, for recruitment, selection, training and development.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Meat Inspection Charges

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations which he has met to discuss meat inspection charges. [R] [90386]

Mr. Rooker: Since the beginning of this year, my right hon. Friend the Minister and I have separately met representatives of the Federation of Fresh Meat Wholesalers (now the British Meat Federation) and jointly met a delegation of small plant operators led by an all-party group of hon. Members. I have also had meetings with a representative of turkey producers, the National Farmers Union, Dr. Richard North, and a further meeting with representatives of the all-party parliamentary group. With the Parliamentary Secretary, I have recently met with representatives of the Small Abattoir Federation (SAFe) and the Country Landowners Association (CLA), and with my right hon. Friend the Minister I have met with the Meat and Livestock Commission. These meetings included discussions on charging, but, with the exception of that with SAFe, they were not set up specifically for that purpose.

In addition, all Ministers in the Department have had issues of charging raised with them when attending functions around the country.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) of 17 June 1999, Official Report, columns 216–18, on the Common Fisheries Policy, if alternative management measures include (a) the amendment of the existing quota and (b) the introduction of a permit system. [91767]

Mr. Morley: I have placed in the Library of the House copies of the research objectives of the study to which he refers. These include evaluation of possible adjustment of the operation of the quota system. This is not intended to affect quota share. It does not include a permit system.

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, stating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91678]

Mr. Morley: The Government is committed to making sure that its policies are fair and inclusive and take full account of the needs and experiences of all those affected by them.

Although the nature of the Ministry's responsibilities means that much of its activity does not have a gender-specific impact, the Ministry has guidance in place which requires, among other things, the preparation of an impact analysis during policy development in cases where there is the possibility of differential impact on differing groups such as men and women. No formal impact assessments have been drawn up since June 1997. The women's organisations listed in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State on 23 June 1999, Official Report, column 418, have been contacted for views on a wide range of policies, and on legislative proposals.

Beef Premiums

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will pay 80 per cent. of the beef premium on the first instalment. [92431]

Mr. Rooker: The EC legislation currently specifies that the advance of the beef special premium is at 60 per cent. of the total payment. Although increases in the advance have been authorised in the past there has been no proposal to date from the Commission to increase the rate this year.

Pigmeat

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers he has to invoke Article 36 of the Treaty of Rome to restrict the importation of pigmeat; and if he will make a statement. [92429]

Mr. Rooker: In certain circumstances, Article 30 (ex Article 36) of the Treaty allows the maintenance of restrictions on the free movement of goods where these can be justified for the protection of the health and life of humans or animals or on the grounds of public morality or policy. However, it is clear from Rulings by the European Court of Justice that we cannot use Article 30 to impose higher UK standards on imports where EU law has been harmonised as it has been in the case of both pigmeat and farm animal welfare.

Lay Holdings

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy not to increase the number of lay holdings over 10 hectares owned by corporate bodies. [92430]

Mr. Morley: The Wash Fishery Order 1992 restricts all lay holders to a maximum holding of 10 hectares. The Eastern Sea Fisheries Committee are grantees of the Order and can allocate larger areas to lay holders only if they have obtained ministerial permission. To date, the Committee has not made a formal request to do so.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate his Department has made of the effect of the proposed climate change levy on protected horticulture; and if he will make a statement. [92298]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) on 15 June 1999 Official Report, column 118.

Defensive Labelling

Dan Norris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to minimise defensive labelling by food producers in respect of nut content. [92491]

Mr. Rooker: We are urging industry to take action on so-called defensive labelling, such as "may contain nuts", so that it is restricted to cases where it is really necessary and not used as an alternative to improving production procedures. The UK Food and Drink Federation (FDF) and the British Retail Consortium (BRC) have both recently produced guidance notes for their members on this. Discussions with industry are continuing.

Public Appointments

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many appointments to public bodies were made by his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnicity; and if he will list the chairmen appointed to those bodies in those years, similarly broken down. [92519]

Mr. Morley: The appointments made to public bodies are:

	Chairmen	Total
(a) 1997–98
Total	30	223
Male	27	190
Female	3	33
White	30	221
Ethnic	—	2
(b) 1998–99
Total	4	85
Male	3	67
Female	1	18
Ethnic	—	2

Departmental Plans on equal opportunities setting objectives and targets for improving the representation of women, people from ethnic minority groups and from people with disabilities were published by the Government on 25 May 1999 and deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

Veterinary Laboratory Agency

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Veterinary Laboratory Agency. [93601]

Mr. Nick Brown: I am pleased to announce that the 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Veterinary Laboratory Agency were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

TB (Badgers)

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response the Government have received to the submission on recommendation 69 on TB and badgers, which they made to the Standing Committee to the Bern Convention. [93603]

Mr. Nick Brown: Following submission of the document in April, the UK Government has responded to a number of subsequent questions from the Secretariat to the Bern Convention and has supplied additional technical information. At the request of the Secretariat, the information has been consolidated into a single document, which has been forwarded to the Secretariat and is now being sent to delegates of the Standing Committee. A copy of this latest document, which supersedes the earlier one, has been placed in the Library of the House.

Easter 1998 Floods

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Broxtowe (Dr. Palmer) of 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 744, on floods, what further progress the Environment Agency has made in implementing its Action Plan in response to the Independent report on the Easter 1998 floods. [93605]

Mr. Morley: The Chairman of the Agency has provided me with a report of progress up to the end of June 1999. Copies are being placed in the House Libraries.

I am pleased to note that the Agency remains on course for completing the substantial work programme set out in the Action Plan. In line with the priorities that I set out last October, the Agency has received an independent report on its management structures and skills base and the recommendations will be implemented by next April. An elaboration of the Environment Agency's flood defence supervisory duty was published in May, along with interim high level targets for the Agency and other flood and coastal defence operating authorities. The Agency is now working with others to ensure that flood and coastal defences are identified and inspected; the results recorded and assessed; and appropriate action to remedy defects put in hand. Consultation on further development of high level targets and the supervisory duty is in hand.

The Agency has reported that indicative maps of floodplains have been produced ahead of the September target, and are currently being distributed to local authorities for use in both development control and emergency planning. These maps are being used to review the Agency's database of properties at risk of flooding. Further work has been done on flood warning, with an extension to the number of properties now able to receive direct Automatic Voice Messages through the telephone system. Flood warning messages have been reviewed and a new system to replace the present colour-coded warnings is planned from September 2000. The Agency is embarking on a significant programme of work, both internally and with partners such as local authorities and the emergency services, to ensure that the necessary preparations are made. I have agreed with the Agency that it is important to ensure that these arrangements are introduced successfully and are coupled with a campaign to increase public awareness.

The programme of improvements to the Agency's telemetry network is starting following MAFF agreement to grant aid work in England. The National Assembly for Wales is separately considering the telemetry programme in Wales.

The Agency continues to make good progress in implementing the Easter Floods Report and I will ensure that the House is updated on future progress.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, stating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91679]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her on 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 609, by my right hon. friend the Minister for Women.

As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that its policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, my Department is working closely with the Women's Unit to develop good practices for carrying out gender impact appraisal.

My Department has not carried out any gender impact assessments since June 1997.

Palestine National Authority

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to support the Palestine National Authority in developing its economy. [92239]

Mr. Hoon: Our support for the Palestine National Authority in the development of its economy includes our aid assistance of £8 million each year to the Authority, our support for the Interim Economic Issues (for which £2 million has been set aside by the Department for International Development) and technical assistance to the Ministry of Economy and Trade and Negotiations Affairs Department. The UK also contributes 16 per cent. of EC aid to the Palestinians. We expect this to amount to over £50 million over the next five years.

Concordat (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish, before the summer adjournment, the most recent draft of the concordats between his Department and the National Assembly Wales. [92326]

Mr. Robin Cook: Work on the international relations and European Union concordats, in which my Department has a considerable interest, is preceding well. We hope to put the draft concordats to the Assembly Cabinet shortly. The concordats will not be published in advance of that.

Minurso Mission

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to provide a contingent of personnel to the United Nations Minurso mission organising the referendum in the Western Sahara. [92636]

Mr. Hoon: We have no plans at present to reintroduce a contingent to Minurso due to heavy commitments elsewhere.

Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which states which are parties to the Partial Test Ban Treaty have not (a) signed and (b) ratified the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. [92754]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Those states which are parties to the Partial Test Ban Treaty but have neither signed nor ratified the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty are: Afghanistan, Botswana, Bahamas, Central African Republic, Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Gambia, India, Iraq, Lebanon, Libya, Mauritius, Nigeria, Pakistan, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Syria, Tanzania, Tonga and Trinidad and Tobago.

Those states which are parties to the Partial Test Ban Treaty but have signed but not ratified the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty are: Antigua and Barbuda, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Burma, Chile, Colombia, Cyprus, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Israel, Kenya, Kuwait, Laos, Liberia, Malawi, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russia, San Marino, Seychelles, Singapore, Slovenia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Switzerland, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Uruguay, USA, Venezuela, Western Samoa and Zambia.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to encourage the entry into force of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. [92758]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We continue to urge those states which have not yet ratified the treaty to do so as soon as possible—in particular those whose ratification is essential for it to enter into force.

Britain has played a leading role in preparing for a Special Conference of states that have ratified the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty this October in Vienna, to consider ways of accelerating the process of bringing the treaty into force.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the General Affairs Council held in Brussels on 19 and 20 July; and if he will make a statement. [92707]

Ms Quin: 1. The General Affairs Council in Brussels on 19 July 1999 adopted the A points listed in document 10103/99. Copies of the documents listing the A points will be placed in the Library as soon as they become available.

Open Debate

2. The GAC had a wide-ranging exchange of views in public session on lessons from Kosovo for the EU's external relations. They agreed that more needed to be done to improve the effectiveness and consistency of EU responses to international crises. An important first step should be to make sure the new CFSP structures introduced by the Amsterdam Treaty worked.

Presidency Presentation on Procedure

3. The Council noted the Presidency's plans for taking forward preparatory discussions for the Inter-Governmental Conference.

Middle East Peace Process

4. The GAC agreed conclusions welcoming the new government in Israel and looking forward to further developments in the Middle East Peace Process. The GAC hoped that the forthcoming visit to the region by the Presidency, Commission and EU special envoy would further enhance ties with the region.

CFSP

5. The GAC was joined over lunch by Javier Solana, appointed Secretary-General of the Council and High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy by the European Council at Vienna. He looked forward to starting his new post in late October or November, and outlined key areas for immediate work, including ways of strengthening CFSP and implementing the Common Strategy on Russia.

WTO/New Round: Commission Communication

6. The Commission presented a Communication on the proposed new trade Round. The General Affairs Council will return to the subject in October.

Western Balkans

7. The GAC welcomed the appointment of Mr. Bernard Kouchner as Special Representative of the UN Secretary-General. It stressed the urgency of setting up an international civilian presence in Kosovo. It gave political agreement to a Regulation setting up a European Agency for Reconstruction.

8. The GAC examined the EU sanctions regime and agreed that measures affecting the Serb people rather than the Belgrade regime would be the first to be lifted. They agreed to examine ways to alleviate the situation of democratic bodies in the FRY. They affirmed that parties competing in elections in the FRY should not have anyone convicted or indicted by the International Criminal Tribunal for Yugoslavia as candidates.

9. The GAC welcomed plans for the Stability Pact summit in Sarajevo on 30 July and heard a presentation by Mr. Bodo Hombach, EU Special Representative and Co-ordinator of the Pact.

10. The GAC welcomed the informal political dialogues to be held on 20 July with Bosnia-Herzegovina and Croatia, and decided to consider the creation of EU/Croatia consultative task force. It agreed with the Commission that it would be feasible to envisage opening negotiations for a Stabilisation and Association Agreement with Macedonia.

East Timor

11. The GAC discussed East Timor and reiterated its strong support for the UN-organised consultation process which enables the East Timorese people to express their views as to the future of the territory.

Twinning

12. The GAC discussed ways of improving procedures for the financing of twinning projects.

Nomination of the Commission

13. The GAC approved Member States' formal nomination for the new Commission.

European Conference

14. The third meeting of the European Conference took place on 19 July, attended by Foreign Ministers of EU Member States, Central and Eastern European candidate countries, Cyprus, Malta and Switzerland. Discussion focused on the Western Balkans, looking at the way forward and lessons to be learned from the Kosovo crisis. The Conference also agreed conclusions on combating transnational organised crime.

Co-operation Councils with Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan

The first Co-operation Councils with Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan were held on 20 July, following the entry into force of their Partnership and Co-operation Agreements with the EU on 1 July.

GCHQ (Pension Rights)

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08, if he is now able to estimate the cost of compensation for loss of pension rights which have been incurred in respect of the 14 former employees of GCHQ. [92459]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 22 July 1999]: GCHQ officials are close to reaching agreement with the CCSU on the basis for calculating the amount of compensation in each of the 14 individual cases; there remain issues relating to tax and to the precise method of payment which may have implementations for the overall cost. It is expected these will all be resolved soon. The Government Actuaries department will then be asked to calculate the precise cost of the scheme.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current IGAD negotiations concerning the civil war in Sudan. [92822]

Mr. Hoon: In the run up to the current IGAD peace negotiations in Nairobi, we have been pressing the case for a comprehensive ceasefire and for the IGAD Partners Forum proposal of a secretariat which would support a sustained and accelerated negotiation.

We are following the course of the talks closely, but it is too early to confirm how successful the talks have been.

International Criminal Court Treaty

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to put forward detailed proposals for the ratification of the International Criminal Court Treaty. [92810]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government will bring forward legislation to enable ratification of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court as soon as the Parliamentary timetable permits. We are strongly committed to the Court and want to be among the first sixty States to ratify.

Burma

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the State Peace and Development Council in Burma concerning dialogue with the Committee Representing the People's Parliament. [92811]

Mr. Hoon: Our policy is to press the SPDC to enter into substantive dialogue with democracy leaders, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and ethnic minority leaders. We do so regularly.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the introduction of sanctions on Burma. [92812]

Mr. Hoon: Our leading role in international action on Burma is supported by the interest shown by the public, non-governmental organisations and pressure groups in the UK in bringing pressure to bear on the regime. Representations received include calls both for and against sanctions.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Burmese Government concerning the re-opening of universities and colleges. [92813]

Mr. Hoon: Since universities and colleges closed in 1996, we have raised the issue with the Burmese regime on a number of occasions. We shall continue to do so. The question has also been covered in UN resolutions, most recently that of the UN Commission on Human Rights adopted in April 1999.

Child Soldiers

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Governments of (a) Liberia, (b) Colombia, (c) Nigeria, (d) Sri Lanka, (e) Sudan, (f) the Democratic Republic of Congo, (g) Sierra Leone and (h) Ethiopia concerning the rehabilitation of child soldiers. [92809]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We believe that the use of children as soldiers, in contravention of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, is one of the worst violations of children's rights. We are working to encourage and assist the demobilisation and rehabilitation of child soldiers around the world.

The majority of child soldiers today are fighting in guerilla organisations, not for governments. We therefore need to take a broad approach to the issue.

Our approach is based on a combination of support for international efforts in this field, in particular the work of the UN Special Representative for Children in Armed Conflict, Olara Otunnu, whose recent visits have included Sri Lanka, Colombia and Sudan; discussions with governments, such as the Governments of Sudan, Democratic Republic of Congo and Sierra Leone; ensuring that the needs of former child soldiers are effectively addressed in any post-conflict reconstruction, eg in Sierra Leone; and, with the Department for International Development, support for practical measures to address this issue, eg in Liberia, Democratic Republic of Congo, Uganda and Sierra Leone.

We have heard allegations that Ethiopia may have used child soldiers in its war with Eritrea, but we have seen no evidence to confirm this. We continue to monitor the situation. We are not aware of any reports of the use of child soldiers in Nigeria.

Balkans

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the (a) mandate and (b) composition of the 13 July High Level Group for Kosovo and the Western Balkans. [92828]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: At the Cologne Summit of 20 June, the Heads of State of Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Russia, the UK and the US directed that the economic reconstruction process be guided by the High Level Steering Group. The first meeting of this group took place on 13 July under the joint chairmanship of Yves Thibault de Silguy of the European Commission and James Wolfensohn of the World Bank, and was attended by Finance Ministers of Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the UK, the US and Finland, the Managing Director of the IMF, the President of the EIB and the President of the EBRD, the Special Co-ordinator of the Stability Pact for South Eastern Europe, and the Deputy Secretary-General to the UN.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92753]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 23 July 1999]: In accordance with the terms of the Ministerial Code, Ministers are required always to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements. The last time I used a train in the course of my official duties was on Saturday 26 June to travel to Gatwick Airport to board a commercial flight to Rio de Janeiro to attend the EU Latin America and Caribbean Summit.

Botswana

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Botswana. [93161]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Relations between the UK and Botswana are excellent, and several thousand British citizens live and work in Botswana. British exports to Botswana amounted to around £20 million last year, while imports from Botswana amounted to about £77 million. The Department for International Development maintains an aid programme in-country aimed at poverty reduction, education, HIV/AIDS awareness and public sector reform. The British Council is engaged by the Government of Botswana to recruit teachers from the UK, and to place trainees in UK institutions.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list with dates and details all public interest immunity certificates he has issued since 1 May 1997. [92733]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 23 July 1999]: Details of the two public interest immunity certificates signed by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs since 1 May 1997 are as follows:

Date	Case
30 October 1998	R v. Mullen
10 April 1999	Paul and John Grecian v. HM Customs and Excise

In both cases, disclosure of the documents referred to in the certificates would have caused real harm to the work of the security and intelligence agencies.

In addition, one certificate was signed by another Foreign Office Minister, Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean, on 26 September 1997 in the case of Rowland and Norgen v. Bock and Gouden Akker Properties. Disclosure of the document referred to in the certificate would have caused serious harm to the UK's foreign relations and could have revealed the identity of an informant.

Postal Services (Yugoslavia)

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the postal services between the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia will be returned to the level applying before the recent military operation. [92638]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 23 July 1999]: The United Nations civilian presence in Kosovo has identified 10 key areas which are priorities for rehabilitation. The postal service is one of these.

The Royal Mail have informed us that they hope to re-establish a surface mail service between the UK and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) within the next fortnight, but that no alternative route for air mail services has yet been identified given the flight ban between the territory of the EU and that of the FRY.

Sanctions and Arms Embargoes

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the sanctions and arms embargoes currently implemented by the United Kingdom. [93581]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As of today's date, the United Kingdom implements Security Council resolutions which impose arms embargoes or wider sanctions regimes in relation to Angola, Iraq, Liberia, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The Government have also implemented an arms embargo on Ethiopia and Eritrea, called for in non-binding SCR 1227 (1998).

The United Kingdom implements additional sanctions imposed by the European Union of Afghanistan, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Burma, China, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, the Gambia, Libya and Sudan.

The UK currently implements two arms embargoes as a result of decisions by the OSCE—on Armenia and Azerbaijan.

There is also a national arms embargo on Iran.

I shall keep the House informed of current sanctions regimes and arms embargoes and their scope on a yearly basis. All new sanctions or arms embargoes and any amendments to existing sanctions or arms embargoes will be announced at the time. We shall be laying a list of sanctions regimes and arms embargoes implemented by the UK in the Libraries of the Houses. A "Summary of Additional UK Restrictions on the Export of Strategic Goods" which includes details of additional national controls, will be annexed to this list. Both documents will shortly be available on the FCO website. These documents replace the "Summary of Government Commitments Regarding the Application of Strategic Export Controls", copies of which are currently in the Libraries of the Houses and on the FCO website. An updated version of the sanctions list will be laid in the Library annually or more frequently if policy changes require a revision.

Westminster Foundation for Democracy

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the annual report of the Westminster Foundation for Democracy will be available. [93582]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Copies of the Westminster Foundation for Democracy's annual report for 1998–99 will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses this week.

The foundation makes a valuable contribution to the promotion of democracy overseas. Its activities include providing assistance to political parties, parliaments, the independent media, trade unions, human rights groups, women's groups and other non-governmental organisations involved in political development.

In 1998–99, the foundation received £3,168,815 from the FCO, along with £211,256 from corporate and charity sources. With these funds it supported 274 new projects and managed another 223. It directed most of its funds to supporting democratic institutions in its priority areas, which are: Central and Eastern Europe, the Commonwealth of Independent States and Anglophone Africa. It also supported worthwhile projects in other parts of the world, such as South East Asia and the Middle-East.

In particular, the foundation initiated three important technical assistance projects in Bosnia-Herzegovina, Nigeria and Indonesia, all of which are undergoing crucial transition processes towards fair and free democracy. The foundation can also pride itself on groundbreaking work in Qatar in the lead up to their Central Municipal Council elections, where women were given the vote and allowed to stand as candidates for the first time ever in the Gulf states. Most recently, the foundation has been preparing the ground to initiate projects in Kosovo, if and when this is appropriate.

Export Restrictions (Balkans)

Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what United Kingdom specific export restrictions currently apply to Bosnia-Herzegovina and Croatia; for what reasons; and what proposals the Government have to lift them. [93583]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: UK national export controls in general apply to all countries.

The only UK specific export control currently in place on Bosnia-Herzegovina and Croatia is Group 3, Part 1, Schedule 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, which prohibits the export without an export licence of certain all-wheel drive utility vehicles capable of off-road use, heavy-duty recovery vehicles and drop-sided trucks.

This control was introduced to address concerns that such vehicles might be used by paramilitary groups against British troops deployed on peacekeeping duties in the former Yugoslavia.

We are currently taking steps to remove this control in respect of Bosnia-Herzegovina and Croatia, as we no longer perceive the uncontrolled export of these vehicles as a threat to British troops.

EU Arms Embargo

Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent changes there have been to the EU arms embargo against Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement. [93584]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Council of the European Union adopted on 19 July a Council Decision amending Common Position 96/184/CFSP to allow transfers of small arms to the police forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina. This decision was taken in order to promote peace and stability in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Member States are required to inform the Council of any transfers made under this exemption. The export of small arms to the police forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina remains licenseable under the terms of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many serious offences were alleged to have been committed in 1998 by persons entitled to immunity. [93585]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: From a community of over 17,500 persons entitled to immunity, 21 alleged serious offences by such persons were drawn to the attention of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 1998. "Serious offences" are defined in accordance with the 1985 White Paper on Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges, i.e., as any offence that would in certain circumstances carry a maximum penalty of 6 months or more imprisonment. The majority of alleged serious offences in 1998 involved driving under the influence of drink and shoplifting.

Lord Levy

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the nature of the briefings provided to Lord Levy prior to his recent visit to Syria and Jordan. [93054]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office provided Lord Levy with background briefing on Syria and Jordan before his visit.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer of 20 July 1999, Official Report, column 962, on the middle-east, if he will place in the Library the full texts of telegrams from British posts in Jordan and Syria concerning the diplomatic missions carried out by Lord Levy. [92941]

Mr. Robin Cook: Under the Code of Practice on access to government information, exemption 2, internal telegrams are not made public. This is in line with previous government practice.

However, I can inform the hon. Member that our Ambassador in Amman reported that Lord Levy's was > "a highly successful visit which has given a valuable fillip to bilateral relations".

Our Ambassador in Damascus said he was "most grateful" to Lord Levy for undertaking a programme of "notably warm and substantive meetings".

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples) of 13 July 1999, Official Report, column 140, on the Prime Minister's personal representative, if he will list Lord Levy's official engagements in Jordan and Syria. [92942]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples) on 13 July 1999, Official Report, column 140.

Ministerial Visits

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1999, Official Report, column 464, on ministerial visits, if he will list the dates on which he and his ministers plan to be absent from the office during the summer adjournment for reasons other than departmental business. [93089]

Mr. Robin Cook: Ministers' holiday plans during the summer adjournment are personal and it is not the normal practice to disclose such information.

UN Commission on Human Rights

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 8 July 1999, Official Report, column 597, on the 55th Session of the UN Commission on Human Rights, what are the terms of reference of the Special Rapporteur study; and what measures he will take to promote public awareness of the study. [92931]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities recommended the appointment of a Special Rapporteur in August 1998. The mandate has to be endorsed by the UN Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC), currently under way in Geneva. Subject to ECOSOC's approval, the Special Rapporteur will carry out a study on the concept practice of Affirmative Action to be presented to the Sub-Commission. The Special Rapporteur will invite comments from governments and NGOs preparing his study.

Public Appointments

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many appointments to public bodies were made by his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnicity; and if he will list the chairmen appointed to those bodies in those years, similarly broken down. [92521]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The following appointments or reappointments were made to FCO non-departmental public bodies in 1997, 1998 and 1999.

Total number of appointments	33	54	21

Information on the ethnic origin of individuals appointed before 1 April 1999 was given in confidence. We cannot therefore disclose it.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 27 July 1999

CABINET OFFICE

European Communities Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the (a) purpose and (b) activities over the past 12 months of the (i) Horizontal Questions Working Group, (ii) General Affairs Working Group and (iii) Quality of Legislation Working Group, meeting at European Communities level. [91877]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Horizontal Questions Working Group reports to the Internal Market Council, and deals with cross-cutting issues concerning the internal market. Cabinet Office interest in the Working Group is confined to discussions on better regulation and simplification of legislation at the European level.

The General Affairs Working Group reports primarily to the General Affairs Council (i.e. Foreign Ministers) and deals with a very wide range of general EU internal (co-ordination, institutions, etc.) and external (foreign relations) matters. Cabinet Office interest is via the Civil Service Corporate Management (CSCM) in discussing terms and conditions of employment of European civil servants (i.e. those employed in the Commission, Council Secretariat, European Parliament Secretariat, etc.) and in terms and conditions for MEPs.

The Quality of Legislation Working Group, a time-limited group is working on the negotiation of an Inter-Institutional Agreement (i.e. between the European Parliament, the Commission and the Council) on the quality of drafting of Community legislation. Cabinet Office interest is via the Cabinet Office Legal Advisors (COLA), the Regulatory Impact Unit (RIU) and its legal advisers.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office will not be making a statement at this stage.

Public Appointments

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many appointments to public bodies were made by his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, broken down by (i) gender and (ii) ethnicity; and if he will list the chairmen appointed to those bodies in those years, similarly broken down. [92518]

Mr. Kilfoyle: For the purposes of this answer it includes appointments made by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and those made by the Prime Minister to public bodies for which the Cabinet Office is responsible.

The public bodies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible as Minister for the Cabinet Office and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster are: the Advisory Committee on Advertising; the Advisory Committee on Justices of the Peace in Lancashire, Greater Manchester and Merseyside; the Better Regulation Task Force; the Civil Service Appeal Board and the People's Panel Advisory Group.

The Prime Minister appoints members to: the Advisory Committee on Business Appointments; the Committee on Standards in Public Life; the Security Commission and Security Vetting Appeals Panel; the Political Honours Scrutiny Committee; the British Government Panel on Sustainable Development and the Senior Salaries Review Body. There are no ministerial appointments to positions in the Women's National Commission.

The details of appointments made are given in the table. However, while appointments have been made to women and members of ethnic minority groups I am unable, with the exception of gender information for the Advisory Committee on JPs, to disclose the numbers as to do so would risk identifying individuals without their consent.

	April 1997 to March 1998		April 1998 to March 1999
	Members	Chair	Members	Chair
Advisory Committee on Business Appointments	3	1	4	0

Political Honours Scrutiny Committee	1	0	0	0
British Government Panel on Sustainable Development	0	0	5	1
Senior Salaries Review Body	0	0	4	1
People's Panel Advisory Group	5	1	0	0

The Government have made some progress in increasing representation of women, members of ethnic minority groups and of people with disabilities. Full departmental plans on equal opportunities were published by the Government on 25 May 1999 and deposited in the Libraries of both Houses. The plans set objectives and targets for improving representation of women, people from ethnic minority groups and from people with disabilities.

Anti-drugs Strategy

Mr. Field: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what funding programmes local drug rehabilitation and prevention organisations can apply for under the Government's anti-drugs strategy. [93202]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Local drug service providers can bid to provide services under the prison service drugs strategy programme and the health and social services programmes and for contracts to provide services for the probation service.

It is the role of Drug Action Teams and local commissioning agencies to ensure that individual services work coherently within a local strategic framework. Local service providers may seek guidance from the Drug Action Team on making bids for funding. Bids should be made to the relevant statutory agencies.

Equal Treatment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he has established a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [93464]

Mr. Kilfoyle: As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that their policies are relevant to the lives that people live today my Department is working with the Women's Unit, Home Office, and DfEE to develop good practices for ensuring that our policies meet the changing needs of all members of society.

"Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment", published by the Cabinet Office, Home Office, DfEE and the Women's Unit in November 1998, has been circulated to staff within my Department to ensure that the effects of any policy changes on all sections of the population are considered at the earliest stage of policy development.

As part of the Modernising Government White Paper, we have made a commitment to increasing the number of female senior civil servants from 18 per cent. to 35 per cent. and those from ethnic minorities from 1.6 per cent. to 3.2 per cent. by 2004–05. We will be setting targets for people with disabilities later in the year.

Modernising Government White Paper

Mr. Browne: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he will publish the milestones for meeting the commitments set out in the Modernising Government White Paper. [93279]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Modernising Government White Paper was published on 30 March 1999 (CM3981). It set out key policies and principles underpinning the Government's long-term programme of reform to modernise public service. The programme involves everyone working in public services and everyone who uses them.

I have today published a document setting out the milestones that need to be reached in order to meet the commitments we made in the White Paper. As we make clear in the document, our approach to ensuring that these commitments are taken forward means identifying key strategic drivers for change as well as the achievement of specific targets. We will be doing more work to develop measurable outcomes and will include them within the work on the next round of public service agreements.

The document describes progress to date in Modernising Government and work that will lead to further changes over coming months. The table of milestones names officials able to provide more detail on specific aspects. It is also being published electronically on the Cabinet Office website which we intend updating regularly to show progress. Copies of the document will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

Mr. McWalter: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to her oral answer of 26 July 1999, Official Report, column 15, to the hon. Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack) when the July monthly Statement on millennium compliance in the public sector will be made. [93807]

Mrs. Beckett: The Statement was made by way of written question on 23 July 1999, Official Report, column 665.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the President of the Council how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to her Department for written answer on a named day since 15 April; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that day. [87316]

Mrs. Beckett: Of the 12 written questions tabled to my Department for a named day since 15 April, 85 per cent. (11) received an answer on that day.

Mr. Brady: To ask the President of the Council how many parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day between May 1997 and 14 April 1999; and what percentage of them received a substantive response on that named day. [91062]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 15 April 1999, Official Report, column 302.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Organic Waste

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if the House of Commons composts organic waste produced on the Parliamentary Estate. [93328]

Mrs. Roe: The Palace of Westminster contract for waste disposal does not specify that organic waste should be composted.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Sure Start

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money from the Sure Start

Programme has been granted to projects in the parliamentary constituencies of (a) Birkenhead, (b) Wallasey, (c) Wirral, West and (d) Wirral, South. [91248]

Ms Jowell: No money from the Sure Start programme has been granted to projects in the parliamentary constituencies of Birkenhead, Wallasey, Wirral, West and Wirral, South. These parliamentary constituencies were not included within the 60 areas of the country invited to develop a local Sure Start programme in the first round. The 60 areas were chosen as trailblazers because they were areas which scored highly on an index of local deprivation and were areas where there was existing local capacity, so that they could set up quickly and therefore play a mentoring role to future programmes.

We aim to set up 250 programmes in England by 2001–02 and are planning to invite a second round of applications in the autumn.

Laboratory Teaching

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment with what scientific professional and academic organisations he has had discussions on (a) the improvement of the school scientific laboratory infrastructure and (b) the laboratory teaching of (i) physics, (ii) chemistry, (iii) biology, (iv) environmental sciences and (v) other sciences. [91279]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I, my ministerial colleagues and officials have regular meetings with a number of academic and professional organisations, notably the Association for Science Education, to discuss various aspects of science teaching. We have had no meetings specifically to discuss school scientific laboratory infrastructure and teaching, but we are considering how best to work together with relevant organisations on this and other areas. We are committed to developing partnerships with such organisations to improve standards in all subjects, including science, and I will be working to improve and expand such partnerships in the coming months.

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, stating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91685]

Ms Hodge: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health on 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 636.

As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that their policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, the Department for Education and Employment is working closely with the Women's Unit to develop good practices for carrying out gender impact appraisal.

Higher Education

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students enrolled in full-time higher education courses in England and Wales in each of the years from 1993 to 1998; and how many such students failed to complete their courses in each of those years. [91930]

Mr. Mudie: The number of entrants to higher education courses, in each of these years, is given in the table.

Home Domiciled Entrants to Higher Education Courses [1]
England and Wales

Total entrants	496,949	532,442	555,560	549,079	561,683	565,232

Note:
1. Full-time and part-time courses. Excluding HE students in FE colleges.
2. Figures for 1993 were collected on a different basis to those in later years. Includes a small number of HE students in FE colleges in Wales.

The available information on non-completion consists of UK level full-time and sandwich first degree non-completion rates published in the Departmental Annual Report. The table shows these non-completion rates for the same period:

UK [1] Full-time and sandwich first degree non-completion rates

	Percentage
Year	Non-completion [2]
1993–94	[3]17–18
1994–95	[3]17–18
1995–96	[3]18–19
1996–97	[4]n/a
1997–98	[4]n/a
1998–99	[4]n/a

[1] The institutional coverage of the non-completion rates is restricted to the former UFC-funded universities in the UK and former polytechnics in England.
[2] "Non-completion" covers all those leaving degree courses because of exam failure, ill health, personal and other reasons. It includes those switching to a lower level course but it excludes students transferring between degree courses or subjects.
[3] Ranges are given, because the introduction of a new data source in 1994–95 made it difficult to measure non-completion, under existing definitions, accurately.
[4] n/a = not available.

"Non-completion" covers those who leave full-time and sandwich first degree courses for various reasons including exam failure, but students who failed their final examinations are not separately identified. The non-completion rates relate to a narrower range of courses and have a different institutional coverage than the entrant figures shown. Therefore, it would be inappropriate to use the non-completion rates shown to estimate the number of entrants each year who did not complete.

The Department is currently working with the higher education funding bodies in the UK to develop a method of calculating non-completion rates which can be applied to all UK higher education institutions and which takes into account the non-traditional routes that some students follow. These routes may include changing courses or institutions, repeating years or leaving higher education for a year or more before continuing their studies.

It is intended to publish the results of this work in the next Departmental Annual Report.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for (a) his Department and (b) associated bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (1) fuel types and (2) engine cubic capacities; how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (A) his Department and (B) associated bodies listed in the National Asset Register will be replaced in (x) 1999–2000, (y) 2000–1 and (z) 2001–2 by vehicles using (a1) petrol, (b2) diesel, (c3) natural gas, (d4) electric batteries and (e5) other; and how much his Department plans to spend in each year on vehicle replacements. [90689]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 19 July 1999]: The information provided in the following table is in respect of vehicles owned and leased by the DfEE, its non departmental public bodies (NDPBs), the Employment Service Agency (ES) and the Office for Standards in Education (OFSTED).

Currently 977 vehicles owned and 536 leased; 1,005 of which are petrol, 506 diesel and 2 LPG.

Engine cc	Petrol	Diesel	Petrol/Gas	Owned	Leased
Up to 1600	344	42	—	359	27
1600–1799	192	222	—	328	86
1800–2000	418	151	2	197	374
2001–2200	39	22	—	14	47
Over 2200	12	69	—	79	2
Total	1,005	506	2	977	536

DfEE does not use a replacement cycle as the basis for replacing vehicles. Vehicles are replaced only when a new business case from a user is approved. The DfEE and the Employment Service continue to be "on target" to reduce their fleet size.

In ES, there are now 284 vehicles less than in 1998 with the number continuing to fall. In DfEE, only 1 (one) replacement vehicle has been applied for under the Private User Scheme following the tightening of these rules.

Teachers (State Schools)

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers joined the profession in state schools in each of the last five years; how many left; and if he will make a statement. [92288]

Total	32,900	31,200	32,300	32,300	32,000

[1] The 'other' category includes those whose position is not known.

Notes:

1. The period 1995–96 is the latest for which full records of teacher movements are available.
2. The latest teacher retirement data shows that early retirements from the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector, England and Wales fell from 15,500 in financial year 1997–98 to 4,600 in 1998–99.
3. The full-time equivalent teachers in service in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector in England rose by 4,100 (1 per cent.) between January 1998 and 1999.

Parliamentary Studies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps his Department is taking to promote knowledge of, and interest in, parliamentary government through schools; and if he will make a statement. [92635]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment announced his proposals for the review of the National Curriculum in England in May 1999. This includes for the first time a proposed framework for citizenship in schools as a distinct statutory entitlement at Key Stages 3 and 4. Pupils will learn about key aspects of parliamentary government, elections and voting, and local and central government.

Nursery Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1999, Official Report, column 526, on nursery education, what is the number of three-year-olds in each of the relevant local education authorities that (a) currently have free full-time early education places and (b) will have free full-time early education places when the promised additional places are provided, defining full-time as five or more sessions of early education per week. [92218]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 22 July 1999]: The Government are committed to almost doubling the proportion of three-year-olds with free nursery education. As the first stage in that process, we are creating 48,000 places in 1999–2000. The available information is shown in the following table.

National Homework Guidelines

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent representations he has received regarding arrangements for children's homework. [93113]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Since my response to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean), 4 March 1999, Official Report, column 837, we have received a further 36 letters from schools and members of the public. These have raised no new issues.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the acceptance by job centres of advertisements for jobs paying less than the national minimum wage. [93124]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Allan Rogers, dated 27 July 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the acceptance by Jobcentres of advertisements for jobs paying less than the national minimum wage. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

In answer to your specific question, I am aware of one representation - to which I have replied - regarding whether Jobcentres would accept advertisements for jobs paying less than the national minimum wage.

It may be helpful if I explain our arrangements for dealing with this matter. All Jobcentres have detailed instructions explaining that they must only take job vacancies that meet the requirements of the National Minimum Wage Act. When taking details of a job vacancy, if no wage rate is stated, the Jobcentre will ask the employer for an assurance that they are meeting the requirements of the Act. If employers remain unsure of their responsibilities under the Act the Jobcentre will advise them to contact the National Minimum Wage Advice Line for more detailed help.

I hope this is helpful.

National Grid for Learning

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools (a) have produced and (b) are preparing development plans in connection with the National Grid for Learning. [93163]

Mr. Charles Clarke: All schools seeking grant in relation to the National Grid for Learning are expected to agree with their local education authority a development plan for the use of Information and Communications Technology. Information about the number of schools which have already done so is not held by the Department.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what part BT is playing in the establishment of the National Grid for Learning; and how it is otherwise providing information technology for schools. [93164]

Mr. Charles Clarke: BT, in common with other companies operating in the telecommunications and ICT industries, has a role to play in making a range of services available to schools and other organisations in order to enable those institutions to make optimum use of the Information Age.

The products and services that BT makes available to schools are a commercial decision and a matter for the company.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the sums allocated by each local authority in respect of the National Grid for Learning; and how much the sums amount to in each authority on (a) a per-pupil and (b) a per-school basis. [92746]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the NGfL funding devolved to each school is not held centrally by the Department. However, the total amount of grant allocated to each authority from the National Grid for Learning Standards Fund programme in 1998–99 and 1999–2000 is set out in the tables. LEAs are required to devolve 95 per cent. of their allocation to schools.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers have submitted comments to the Standards Site of the National Grid for Learning. [92742]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Feedback forms on the Standards Site have been available since March 1999. To date, 237 forms have been returned. The site also has a discussion forum, within which teachers can, from day to day, debate issues raised by the standards agenda.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many visits have been paid to (a) the Standards Site, (b) the Virtual Teacher Centre, (c) the Governor Centre, (d) the Parent Centre,

(e) the Special Educational Needs Centre, (f) the National Year of Reading, (g) the Northern Ireland Network for Education, (h) the Scottish Virtual Teachers Centre and (i) the VTC Cymru of the schools section of the National Grid for Learning; [92743]

(2) how many visits have been paid to (a) the further education section, (b) the higher education section, (c) the lifelong learning section, (d) the career development section, (e) the libraries section, (f) the museums and galleries section, (g) the community grids section, (h) the international networks section, (i) the Government and Agencies section and (j) the learning resource index of the National Grid for Learning. [92744]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Not all of this information is held centrally by the Department. Many of the sites are hosted remotely, by a wide range of public sector bodies and commercial companies, both in this country and internationally. Total hits between November 1998 and July 1999 on the NGfL server are 43,067,816. Around 13,000 pages are hosted locally, with about 240,000 pages being indexed as part of the NGfL across all of the sites.

Figures which are available are as follows:

Standards site	13,379,688
Virtual Teacher Centre	16,060,495
Governor Centre	89,366
Parents Centre	236,844

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many comments have been received from teachers via e-mail to the Web Keeper of the Virtual Teacher Centre. [92741]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Around 25 messages a week are received by the Virtual Teacher Centre (VTC) Web Keeper.

In addition to this, conferencing activity on the VTC sees around 80,000 hits per month, with an average of 1,000 contributions made.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools, (c) universities, (d) colleges and (e) libraries are connected to the National Grid for Learning; and how many he estimates will be connected by the end of 1999. [92739]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Latest estimates indicate that 51 per cent. of primary schools and 90 per cent. of secondary schools and 100 per cent. of universities are connected to the Internet. An April 1999 survey suggested that 100 per cent. of colleges of further education had internet access.

Statistics collected late in 1997 found that 5 per cent. of public library service points offered public Internet access. The Library and Information Commission is currently compiling updated statistics, as part of the development of the Public Library ICT Network which will link all public libraries, where practicable, to the NGfl by 2002.

While targets for connection by the end of 1999 have not been set, our aim is that all schools, colleges, universities, libraries and as many community centres as possible should be online and able to benefit from access the National Grid for Learning by 2002. To achieve this target we are supporting over £700 million of ICT-related expenditure in UK schools over this period.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact made by the National Grid for Learning on equipment purchasing by (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools. [93181]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This information is not yet available from this year's survey of ICT in schools. The Government anticipate that the impact of its £657 million Standards Fund programme for the NGfL up to 2002 will be substantial, as will arrangements which they have announced this month for the availability of higher quality managed ICT services to schools at competitive prices.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the views of teachers on the National Grid for Learning. [92740]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The overall implementation of the National Grid for Learning, including school's purchasing strategies, is subject to a rigorous programme of independent evaluation. This also focuses on the Grid's impact on classroom practice and on students' achievements. Interim findings form these studies should be available early in 2000.

The British Educational Communications and Technology agency, on behalf of the DfEE, is also carrying out evaluation of the classroom application of the Grid via the Multimedia Portables for Teachers project. Teachers are currently participating in curriculum groups, which provide feedback on the Grid's curriculum materials and identify any gaps in that provision.

These activities are in addition to Ofsted's evaluation of the impact of ICT on teaching and learning.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the cost of the National Grid for Learning; and what projections he has made of future costs. [92745]

Mr. Charles Clarke: A total figure encompassing investment by the Government, Local Authorities, commercial companies, education institutions, libraries, community and other NGfL-related projects is not held centrally by the Department. However, over £700 million will be allocated for schools' purchase of ICT networking and infrastructure by the year 2002. Additional funding for teacher and librarian training, content development and the equipping of libraries and related projects takes investment in this initiative to £1.6 billion. This funding will enable all schools to be connected to the Grid by 2002, and will provide them with online access to a wide range of educational and managerial resources.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the timetable for the development of the National Grid for Learning. [92738]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The timetable for the development of the National Grid for Learning is as follows:

Autumn 1998—opening of NGfL content framework, call for content and NGfL Challenge.

January 1999—deadline for initial expressions of interest in managed services.

Early 1999—major NGfL content upgrade for education and lifelong learning professionals.

April 1999—deadline for proposals for Managed Services.

Spring 1999—New Opportunities Fund support for teacher and librarian training begins.

Summer 1999—approval of managed services for schools, libraries and other bodies.

1999–2000—launch of interactive learning facilities for school age learners.

end 2002—achievement of targets as set out in the National Grid for Learning Challenge.

All targets to date have been fully met and on time.

Mathematics and Science Teachers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many graduates in (a) maths, (b) physics and (c) chemistry are expected to commence teacher training in the current year; and how many commenced teacher training in each of the preceding five years. [92750]

Ms Estelle Morris: The numbers of entrants to PGCE initial teacher training in maths and science in England and Wales for the five years 1994–95 to 1998–99 are given in the following table.

Intake to PGCE initial teacher training (ITT) in England and Wales to train in maths and science, 1994–95 to 1998–99

Year	Maths	Science
1994–95	1,651	2,714
1995–96	1,575	2,686
1996–97	1,443	2,705
1997–98	1,233	2,590
1998–99[1]	981	2,195

It is too early to predict recruitment to PGCE courses in 1999–2000. However, following the introduction of £5,000 incentives in maths and science, applications have gone up substantially, by 37 per cent. for maths to 1,306 and 24 per cent. for science to 2,784. Within the figure for science there have been increases of 33 per cent. for physics and 27 per cent. for chemistry. We are therefore confident that the decline in recruitment since 1995 will be reversed this year.The following table taken from the Higher Education Statistics Agency's Student Record Survey shows the percentage of those commencing PGCE teacher training who were graduates in maths, physics and chemistry in the years 1995–96 and 1997–98. These are the subjects of first degree and not necessarily the subjects or phase in which the student is undertaking teacher training. Information for the current year and 1998–99 is not yet available. There are a significant proportion of students for whom the first degree subject is unknown. The subjects of first degree do not include combined courses, or closely related courses such as engineering.

Percentage of those commencing PGCE initial teacher training (ITT) in England and Wales with first degrees in maths, physics or chemistry, 1995–96 to 1997–98

Higher Education Statistics Agency's Student Record Survey

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many trainees have been placed in schools or are to be placed in schools under his scheme to train 600 new maths and science teachers on the job; and how many of the trainees are graduates in (a) maths and (b) science. [92749]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Teacher Training Agency (TTA) awarded a contract for the administration of the Maths and Science Placement Scheme in April. Over the next year, the programme will recruit 600 mature graduates in maths and science and match them to suitable vacancies in schools on the Graduate Teacher Programme. Approximately 300 will train as maths teachers and 300 as science teachers. We are still at an early stage of the scheme, but the TTA have already received 436 applications.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of (a) maths and (b) science teachers returning to teaching following his initiative to encourage returners to teaching. [92751]

Ms Estelle Morris: We do not at present have figures in the form requested. Information on those returning to teaching after the package of measures announced in October 1998 will be produced in due course, but the latest data available now relate to 1996–97.

Information Technology

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the planned timetable for the issuing of an information technology needs assessment CD ROM to teachers by the Teacher Training Agency. [93179]

Mr. Charles Clarke: All schools have now been invited to apply for the ICT needs identification assessment CD-ROM. It is available free of charge to UK schools. The latest estimates indicate that over 30,000 packs have been distributed by the Teacher Training Agency. This is an overwhelming response, which fully endorses the decision to produce the CD-ROM.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to improve the teaching of information technology in schools following the annual report of the Chief Inspector of Schools; and if he will make a statement. [92748]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We are taking significant and unprecedented steps to improve the teaching of information technology in schools. We were appalled at the completely inadequate state of such preparation that had been made both in ITT and for serving teachers before May 1997.

We have made available through the New Opportunities Fund (NOF) £230 million to provide serving teachers and school library staff in the UK with training in the effective use of ICT in schools. There will be strong pedagogical content in the training to ensure that ICT is used effectively to enhance the learning experience. This will bring serving teachers up to the same standard as teachers emerging into the profession whose training will have followed, in part, the Initial Teacher Training Curriculum for ICT in Subject Teaching which was introduced in September 1998.

To underpin the training we are making available over £300 million to increase the number of computers in schools, so teachers can have access to them. The availability of computers must go hand in hand with the training. In addition we recently made £23 million available for the purchase of 9,500 multimedia portables for teachers so that they can learn about IT in their own time.

Finally, teachers will be able to access the virtual teachers centre (www.vtc.ngfl.gov.uk) being developed by the Government and schools will have the benefit of being able to get better value for the purchase of computers and equipment following our managed services programme launched on 21 July.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools have appointed National Lottery-approved training providers for IT training in each local authority area expressed as a proportion of schools in that area. [93182]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Training has already begun in 20 LEAs. The New Opportunities Fund is agreeing budget schedules with other LEAs and we expect training to begin nationally in September. This is the first time many serving teachers will have access to such training, which is being supported by £230 million.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of teachers in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools who have received information technology training through National Lottery-approved training providers; and how many he expects to receive such training in the academic year 1999–2000. [93180]

Mr. Charles Clarke: During the Summer Term 1999, training within the New Opportunities Fund (NOF) ICT teacher training programme has begun in approximately 20 education authorities. NOF is actively engaged in collecting data on this training from Approved Providers, and it is too early to give firm information on the number of teachers trained. These data will be available from NOF in September.

Training was initiated during this term to meet the needs of those schools which are particularly advanced in the provision of ICT hardware. However, the majority of the approved training providers are not proposing to start training teachers before the next school year (1999–2000). The NOF programme will last three years, and is integrated with Government initiatives to roll out the necessary hardware in schools, for example via the Standards Fund. NOF thus expects demand to build steadily during the next school year. The programme is designed to reach all serving teachers over its lifetime.

Bullying

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children are currently being educated at home as a result of bullying at school; and if he will make a statement. [93325]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This information is not collected centrally. The Department has recently issued guidance which will ensure that local authorities arrange education for children out of school for any reason, including post-traumatic stress as a result of bullying. It also sets out a legal duty on headteachers, from September of this year, to take measures to prevent all forms of bullying among pupils.

Student Funding

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many student loan accounts exist on which payments are suspended; what are the amounts involved; and what is the amount owing on each account. [93596]

Mr. Mudie: At 30 June 1999, 516,592 student loan accounts were in deferment with a value of £26.1 million. Listing amounts involved on each account would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many student loan accounts have been written off; what are the amounts involved on each account; and if he will make a statement. [93597]

Mr. Mudie: At 30 June 1999, 110,816 student loan accounts had been written off with a total value of £4.6 million. Listing the amounts written off on each of these accounts would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the competition to sell a third portfolio of student loan debt. [93824]

Mr. Mudie: We have successfully completed two sales of student loan debt in the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99.

A decision on the future timing of the third sale will be taken following the implementation of the new student support arrangements later this year, the 2000 Review and the outcome of the Review of Administration of Student Support, which is also due to report in 2000.

The postponement of the third sale will have no impact on borrowers. Sold loans will remain in the hands of the private sector owners and the remainder will stay in public ownership. The Student Loans Company continues to administer all loans as before.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received over the past 12 months from (a) vice-chancellors and (b) others concerning top-up fees. [93379]

Mr. Mudie: We have received a number of representations about tuition fees in higher education institutions. Prohibiting the charging of additional fees enables all students to have equal access to the courses on offer.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what evidence he has of delays among local authorities in the assessment process of means for student loans and tuition fees. [93380]

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many LEAs he estimates will meet his Department's timetable for having the student grant assessments completed; [92821]

(2) what assessment he has made of the reasons for delays in processing applications for student grants; [92866]

(3) for what reasons a greater amount of information is required by the Student Loans Company in respect of grant applications than was formerly required by LEAs; [92867]

(4) what the average period of time taken to assess grant applications and make payment (a) was under LEAs and (b) is currently under the Student Loans Company; and what reasons underlie any differences; [92868]

(5) how many LEAs have carried out grant assessments and passed information to the Student Loans Company; and how many of these were using their own computer systems; [92869]

Mr. Mudie: Under the new arrangements LEAs, and not the Student Loans Company (SLC), are responsible for assessing eligibility for, and financial entitlement to, student support. The SLC is responsible for making payments to students based on these assessments. The information applicants are required to provide to LEAs is set out in the Education (Student Support) Regulations 1999.

The Department is monitoring closely and regularly the progress being made by LEAs. This monitoring shows that they are currently at different stages in assessing applications. We expect virtually all applicants to be notified of their eligibility for support within the next fortnight. Also, a number of LEAs, including some with their own in-house software provision, are passing notifications of applicants' financial entitlement to support to the Student Loans Company. The position is changing daily and a significant number of other LEAs are expected to begin issuing financial notifications within the next couple of weeks. We expect that all LEAs will complete processing applications from students who submitted their forms by the required timetable, and that cheques will be issued to those students at the start of their courses.

School Computers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the expenditure on computers for schools by each local education authority on a per school basis in the last year. [92747]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on expenditure on ICT on a per school basis in each LEA is not held centrally by the Department. Figures on expenditure on ICT on a per school basis in England will be published later this year.

Teachers (Early Leavers)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers of (a) mathematics, (b) science and (c) other subjects with (i) up to two years' experience, (ii) between two and 10 years' experience and (iii) more than 10 years' experience have left the teaching profession before reaching the age of 50 years in each of the last 20 years. [93183]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information is not available.

Football Study Support Centres

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1999, Official Report, columns 523–25, regarding football study support centres, when he expects to be able to make an estimate of the number of pupils attending centres at (a) Birmingham City, (b) Bristol City, (c) Liverpool, (d) Manchester United, (e) Stockport County, (f) Southampton and (g) West Bromwich Albion clubs in the current year. [92752]

Mr. Charles Clarke: These seven clubs will open their "Playing for Success" study support centres during the 1999–2000 football season. The number of pupils to attend each centre will be agreed between the centre's manager, the local schools, and the Local Education Authority. Bristol City, Liverpool, Manchester United, Stockport County and Southampton have appointed centre managers to take up post in September of this year; their estimates of pupil numbers will be available in October 1999. Birmingham City and West Bromwich Albion expect to have centre managers in post in January 2000; estimates of their pupil numbers will be available in February 2000.

Class Sizes (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made since 1 May 1997 in reducing the size of infant classes in Gloucestershire. [93138]

Ms Estelle Morris: There are no figures available for May 1997.

The number of five, six and seven-year olds in infant classes of more than 30 pupils in Gloucestershire fell from 5,001 in January 1998 to 4,418 in 1999; a reduction from 26.7 per cent. to 23.2 per cent. The average class size at Key Stage 1 also fell from 26.8 to 26.6 during the same period.

A further substantial fall is expected in September 1999 following the allocation of £804,000 revenue funding and £629,000 capital investment in 1999–2000.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those Gloucestershire schools where infant classes contain more than 30 pupils. [93151]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on class sizes for individual schools is not published centrally.

Information for Gloucestershire local education authority as a whole is shown in the table.

Key stage 1 classes with 31 or more pupils taught by one teacher in maintained primary schools

	January 1998	January 1999[1]
Number of classes	154	136
Number of pupils	5,001	4,418

[1] Provisional

Departmental Expenditure (Leeds)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the programmes funded directly by his Department, relating to social exclusion, regeneration, community development, employment or education, currently operating in (a) the City of Leeds and (b) the Leeds, Central parliamentary constituency, listing for each programme the amount of such funding for each of the last three years and the amount planned to be spent in each of the next three financial years. [92909]

Mr. Mudie: The information requested is not held by the Department centrally. The Government Office for Yorkshire and the Humber (GOYH) have provided details which have been placed in the Library; separate figures for the Leeds, Central Parliamentary constituency are not available.

New Deal (Injuries)

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many injuries have been reported of New Deal clients, since 1 April 1998. [93439]

Mr. Andrew Smith: There have been 12 cases of fractures or an injury requiring a visit to a hospital. There have been 68 minor injuries not requiring any hospital treatment. This is in the context of 395,000 starts for young people and 25-plus in this period and is a much lower level of injury than the normal average level of industrial injuries in the work force.

Class Sizes

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many classes taught by one teacher in maintained secondary schools contained (a) 31 or more pupils and (b) 36 or more pupils in (i) May 1997 and (ii) of the most recent date for which figures are available broken down by (A) local education authority and (B) parliamentary constituency; [93239]

(2) how many classes taught by one teacher at Key Stage 2 contained (a) 31 or more pupils and (b) 36 or more pupils in (i) May 1997 and (ii) at the most recent date for which figures are available in each (A) local education authority and (B) parliamentary constituency; [93236]

(3) what was the average class size for classes taught by one teacher in (a) May 1997 and (b) at the most recent date for which figures are available for (i) pupils in Key Stage 1, (ii) pupils in Key Stage 2, (iii) primary schools and (iv) secondary schools in (A) England and Wales and (B) each parliamentary constituency. [93237]

Ms Estelle Morris: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average class size in maintained secondary schools in England in (a) January 1998 and (b) January 1999. [93238]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is as follows:

Average size of classes taught by one teacher in maintained secondary schools in England

Position as at January each year	Average size of classes
1998	21.7

The overall average class size in schools has fallen from 24.9 to 24.8 in the same period and the average primary class size has fallen from 27.7 to 27.5.

School Sixth Forms

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the process and timetable under which a decision on any application to set up a new sixth form in a school will be taken pending the outcome of the review of the funding of sixth forms in schools, indicating the differences in approach dependent on the arrangements for funding any capital works required. [93374]

Ms Estelle Morris: Under both current arrangements and those to be brought into force on 1 September, those proposing to set up a new sixth form at a school must consult in the area and then publish statutory proposals for the change. Under current arrangements, the proposals would fall to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to decide if there were any statutory objections. From September, proposals might fall to the local School Organisation Committee to decide or, if the Committee could not agree, to an Adjudicator. The current target for a decision is five months from the date of publication. No decisions have been made on changes in the system for funding capital work necessary in order to implement proposals, and it is not expected that any changes would affect the statutory proposal system.

Further Education

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will define the responsibilities for inspection in general further education colleges between the (i) Further Education Inspectorate and (ii) OFSTED, respectively, in connection with educational provision for persons aged 16 to 19 years in such colleges. [93377]

Mr. Mudie: Under current inspection arrangements, the Further Education and Funding Council are responsible for inspecting provision in further education colleges.

Under the proposals in our "Learning to Succeed" White Paper (Cm 4392), OFSTED will take responsibility for the inspection of 16–19 provision in schools and colleges. For post-19 provision in colleges, and for work-based provision for all age groups, there will be a new independent inspectorate.

Educational Bodies

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current number of (a) local education authorities, (b) TECs and (c) local lifelong learning partnerships; and how many local learning and skills councils are planned. [93378]

Mr. Mudie: There are currently 150 local education authorities, 72 Training and Enterprise Councils and 103 local learning partnerships in England. We have asked the Regional Development Agencies and the London Development Partnership for advice on the boundaries in their region for up to 50 local Learning and Skills Councils across England.

"Learning to Succeed"

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will provide a breakdown of the forecast administrative cost savings to be achieved under his proposals in "Learning to Succeed" (Cm 4392). [93381]

Mr. Mudie: We expect to secure at least £50 million in savings per annum in steady state as a result of the changes set out in the White Paper "Learning to Succeed". These will flow from cutting out unnecessary bureaucracy, simpler funding and administrative systems, and streamlining contracting arrangements. Detailed estimates of administrative cost savings to be achieved will be determined once we have considered, and taken decisions on, responses to the consultation, particularly on the precise functions to be carried out by the Learning and Skills Council at local and national levels.

Numeracy Strategy

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate of the number of primary school teachers was used to determine the print run of the numeracy strategy documents. [93373]

Ms Estelle Morris: The number of primary school teachers in England is estimated at 190,000. An initial print run of 300,000 copies of the Framework for teaching mathematics was commissioned for publication in March.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the criteria used in allocating the tender to print the numeracy strategy file for teachers to a company in Italy. [93376]

Ms Estelle Morris: We commissioned Cambridge University Press (CUP) to prepare the Framework for publication. CUP were selected because of its record in mathematical publications, its understanding of the pilot National Numeracy Project and the English National Curriculum. The selection of the printer was a matter entirely for CUP.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many copies of the numeracy strategy document for teachers were ordered from the printers; how many have been printed; how many schools have not received their full allocation to date; and when further copies will be made available. [93375]

Ms Estelle Morris: 300,000 copies of the National Numeracy Strategy Framework for teaching mathematics were ordered and printed. Arrangements were made for all schools to receive three copies of the strategy's Framework on 16 March with over 200,000 copies available on request. A reprint of 200,000 copies was commissioned and all schools requesting additional copies received them before the end of summer term.

Truancy and School Exclusions

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress there has been on tackling truancy and school exclusion since the Social Exclusion Unit's report on Truancy and School Exclusion was published in May 1998. [93825]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Ministerial Task Force on Truancy and School Exclusion, which I chair, has today sent its first annual report on truancy and school exclusion to the Prime Minister. The report sets out the action we have taken to implement the recommendations in the Social Exclusion Unit's report, including examples of good practice, and sets out our priorities for 1999–2000.

We are pleased to report that permanent exclusions have fallen by 3 per cent. (from 12,700 in the 1996–97 school year to 12,300 in 1997–98). This is particularly good news because it is the first time that permanent exclusions have fallen since my Department began collecting information on exclusions in 1994–95.

Since the "Truancy and School Exclusion" report was published, we have:

made available through the "Social Inclusion: Pupil Support" grant some £500 million over the next three years to tackle truancy and exclusion from school. As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that all pupils who are excluded for more than three weeks have access to a full-time and appropriate timetable by 2002, this includes £22 million made available to local education authorities in 1999–2000 to extend out of school provision; required local education authorities to set targets for reducing unauthorised absence and permanent exclusions within their Education Development Plans—in order to meet the national target of a one third reduction in levels of unauthorised absence and school exclusion by 2002; given the police, under the "Crime and Disorder Act 1998", a new power to pick up truants and return them to designated premises.

issued new guidance on "Social inclusion: Pupil Support", which brings together advice on attendance, discipline, the use of exclusion, education outside school and re-integration, with a focus on early intervention. The document emphasises the importance of multi-agency support.

Our priorities for 1999–2000 include:

new local education authority targets for reducing the level of fixed period exclusions;

continued work to secure more joined up working at local level to support pupils who are at risk of truancy or disaffection;

following recommendations in the Macpherson report, a consultation on how to increase the amount of exclusions information which is published down to school level, including information about the ethnicity of excluded pupils; generating more innovative ideas for tackling truancy and exclusion from school (from 2000–01);

as part of the "Excellence in Cities" initiative, the introduction of learning mentors and learning support units to tackle disaffection and barriers to learning.

Career Development Loans

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to (a) review and (b) evaluate the impact of the Career Development Loan Scheme on educational training. [93628]

Mr. Mudie: The effectiveness of the Career Development Loan (CDL) Scheme is subject to an annual review against targets and objectives. the Department has also started a fundamental review of the application processes and associated literature in partnership with the participating High Street banks.

In addition, there is a rolling programme of evaluation undertaken by external specialists. The most recent evaluations have been:

In 1997, research into the impact the loans had on individuals and their ability to undertake vocational training or continue in education had the loan not been available;

In 1998, research into the views of training providers, both those who actively promote CDLs and those who have not had any trainees use the scheme;

In 1999, research into the reasons why people do not take up a loan after showing initial interest and asking for the application pack.

The first two reports are available from the DfEE Publications Unit and copies have been placed in the Library. The third will also be available in due course.

Standards and Effectiveness Unit

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the increase in the (a) staff and (b) expenditure of the Standards and Effectiveness Unit since its inception; and what assessment he has made of the impact of this increase on (i) the bureaucratic burdens on schools and (ii) the number of circulars issued by his Department. [93312]

Ms Estelle Morris: At its inception in May 1997 the number of staff in the Unit was 44, this rose to 107 in May 1998 and at the end of June 1999 stood at 152. The budget for the Unit in 1997–98 was £2.4 million; for 1998–99, £4.8 million; and for 1999–2000 it is £5.9 million. The numbers of staff in the Unit must be viewed against the numbers of staff and budget for the Department as a whole, both of which have remained stable over the last two years. The increase of staff in the Unit, therefore, reflects a refocusing of resources towards our top priority of raising standards in schools.

The increased resources devoted to the Standards and Effectiveness Unit have led to a clearer focus on raising standards in schools, not to increased bureaucracy. The work of the Unit has not led to any significant increase in the number of circulars issued by the Department over the last three years. We draw a clear distinction between unnecessary bureaucratic activity, which hinders teachers' efforts to raise standards, and those activities that are integral to achieving higher standards. We have provided training and support materials as part of the strategies to improve standards in key areas such as literacy and numeracy and this has been welcomed by teachers.

Following a systematic review of bureaucracy, the Department has initiated firm action to reduce the burden on schools.

Employment Service

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the Employment Service's Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–99 will be laid before Parliament. [93823]

Mr. Blunkett: I have today laid before the House the Employment Service's Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–99 which gives full details of the Agency's performance and expenditure for that year.

The Annual Report notes the very significant achievements of the Employment Service in 1998–99. In particular, the Employment Service successfully launched the New Deals for 18–24-year-olds, for those aged 25 and over and for Lone Parents through ground-breaking local partnerships of private, voluntary and public sector organisations.

At the same time, the Report notes that during 1998–99 the Employment Service:

handled 2.5 million job vacancies;

placed directly into work over 1.2 million unemployed people including some 180,000 people who had been unemployed for more than six months and almost 100,000 people with disabilities; helped nearly a quarter of a million young people through the New Deal for 18–24-year-olds and directly placed 70,000 of them into jobs.

Although the Employment Service did not succeed in meeting its main targets for the number of unemployed people placed into jobs, its performance needs to be seen against the background of further falls in unemployment over the year with numbers of long-term unemployed people at their lowest level for 20 years, a continuing emphasis on ensuring that all job placings were properly and accurately recorded and validated and the successful delivery of a very substantial agenda of other major developments, including New Deal implementation, by and within the Agency.

I am particularly pleased that the Employment Service is changing rapidly. People are noticing the difference. I am particularly pleased that standards of customer service in Jobcentres exceeded the target set and reached their highest recorded level ever.

The Agency has also continued to play a key role in implementing our Modernising Government agenda including the introduction, on a pilot basis, of its new telephone job finding service, Employment Service Direct; the opening of its Peterlee Call Centre to improve services to employers throughout the Northern Region; and the introduction of Webvacs, its first internet jobs database.

As the Chief Executive points out in his Report, none of this would have been possible without the quite remarkable effort and commitment of people throughout the Employment Service. I, too, am very grateful to them and wish them every success in 1999–2000.

New Deal Leavers

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people who responded to the Survey of New Deal Leavers with Unknown Destinations stated that they had left for (a) unsubsidised work, (b) incapacity benefit, (c) income support and (d) another destination; and if he will list the other destinations. [93466]

Mr. Andrew Smith: A recently published survey of the destination of New Deal leavers with unknown destinations established that 43 per cent had left for paid employment. The other destinations are listed here:

gone abroad
claimed other benefit claimant deceased
Full-Time education (other than as a New Deal Option) approved training
starting non-New Deal Government Supported Training in prison/custody attending court on the witness protection programme partner working partner claiming signed off voluntarily due to a fraud investigation client signed off when a JSA disallowance applied the client is over the maximum savings limit on JSA but not on New Deal.

Equal Treatment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he has established a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [93457]

Ms Hodge: As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that their policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, my Department is working closely with the Women's Unit and the Home Office to develop good practices for ensuring that our policies meet the changing needs of all members of society.

"Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment guidelines", published by the Home Office, Women's Unit, and DfEE in November, has been circulated to all Departments to ensure that the effects of any policy changes on all sections of the population are considered at the earliest stage of policy development. My Department has underpinned the guidelines with more specific advice to all policy makers on how to consider the needs and requirements of different groups.

International Labour Organisation Conventions

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those International Labour Organisation conventions which the United Kingdom has stated it does not plan to ratify. [92826]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We have made no such statement. When I attended the ILO Conference on 8 June I delivered the instrument of ratification for ILO Convention 111 on discrimination in employment to the ILO's Director General. We are currently considering ratification of both Convention 138 on the minimum age for employment and the new ILO Convention 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labour. I will make an announcement on these Conventions shortly.

Asbestos

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will commission a study of the Norwegian experience in respect of the non-employment of smokers in asbestos-related work; and if he will make a statement. [93027]

Mr. Meale: I have been asked to reply.

As far as I am aware, there is no policy in Norway on the non-employment of smokers in asbestos-related work. Because smoking increases the absolute lung cancer risk from asbestos, UK Government policy is to discourage those who work with asbestos from smoking. The Government have no further plans to commission research in this area.

DEFENCE

Royal Hospital, Haslar

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates he has made of the costs of (a) building new military hospital facilities to replace Royal Hospital, Haslar and (b) implementing improved security arrangements in the new establishment. [70872]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reviews, task forces and advisory groups have been established by his Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71521]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the right hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 732, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71016]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 15 February 1999]: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 732, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71017]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 15 February 1999]: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Task Forces

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will publish a list of (1) task forces and (2) policy reviews established by his Department since May 1997 which (a) had external members recruited by way of public advertisement, and details of any person so appointed and (b) engaged in public consultation exercises, and the form that these took; [74457]

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will fund studies using radiological techniques proposed by Dundee and St. Andrew's Universities on the state of the health of UK nuclear veterans and their families. [74728]

Mr. Spellar: We are aware of the techniques that researchers at Dundee plan to use should their research proposals be adopted but we have serious doubts about their general applicability to nuclear test veterans. One of the techniques, the detection of chromosome aberrations, has already been the subject of a pilot study by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) involving test veterans and was found to lack resolution since the level of such aberrations is naturally elevated in people of this age group.

Of the other techniques, the magnitude of the dose required to produce long-term effects in the organs to be studied is very high. It is extremely unlikely that veterans could have received radiation doses sufficient to produce such effects 40 years after the alleged exposure. This is borne out by the fact that two robust epidemiological studies have shown no increase in leukaemia rates and no overall increase in mortality, either in cancer or non-cancer diagnoses. It would therefore be inappropriate to allocate public funds to this work.

Chiefs of Staff

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a list of items discussed at each of the meetings of the Chiefs of Staff since 21 December 1998. [84351]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 13 April 1999]: The Contractor shall not sub-let any or part of the Contract without the prior consent of the Project Manager. The Contractor is required to include in the sub-contractor's contract statutory obligations imposed on him by the Authority, relating, for example, to Corruption, Secrecy and any other provisions as may be necessary to enable the Contractor to fulfil his obligations under the Contract.

Within the MOD Works Services Manager (WSM) and Establishment Works Consultant (EWC) contracts, there is a requirement on the contractor to provide a list of Companies/Consultants whom they intend to invite to tender, for any works in excess of £5,000. If he intends to invite a subsidiary or associated firm then this must be in addition to three other companies. Acceptance and award of contract should be to the lowest compliant tender.

Kapton Insulation

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on the use of Kapton insulation in military aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [91574]

Mr. Spellar: Kapton is a trademarked material. It is one of a range of polyamide coverings used to insulate aircraft wires. The MOD has been aware of potential problems associated with polyamide insulated wires since they were first identified in 1985. Accordingly the use of polyamide insulated wires in MOD aircraft is reviewed regularly. Work has included a detailed assessment of each aircraft installation; a review of defence standards on aircraft wiring; and work with the British Standards Institute to develop standards that are suitable for all airborne electrical wires and cables. We have also developed clear procurement guidelines and improved inspection and husbandry techniques. Decisions about wiring installations on MOD aircraft are made by experienced engineers who are responsible for assessing the risks and benefits, and for making safety and value judgments accordingly.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use of animals in defence research. [93788]

Mr. Spellar: The independent Animal Welfare Advisory Committee, chaired by Dr. Jeremy Lucke, has recently published its third annual Report. The Committee was set up in 1996 specifically to keep under review the care and welfare arrangements of animals used in defence research. I am placing a copy of the Report in the Library of the House.

The use of animals in defence research is concerned with providing the Armed Forces with safe and effective protection against hazards encountered while conducting their duties, and is kept to the absolute minimum.

The Committee's Report highlights the work being done by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency to find alternatives to the use of animals. In particular, the increasing use of in-vitro studies will lead to a reduction in the number of animals used. For example, use of such technology means that experiments to test the effectiveness of decontaminant and barrier creams against a chemical warfare agent, which would otherwise have needed up to 90 animals, was achieved without using any animals at all.

There is still much to be done in developing technologies which allow the use of animals in experiments to be further reduced. We welcome continuing scrutiny by the Animal Welfare Advisory Committee and aim to minimise the use of animals as far as possible, against the continuing requirement to research effective measures to counter the hazards faced by the armed forces in the conduct of their duties.

2. Manpower charging rates

To set manpower chargeout rates for 2000–01 which reflect a reduction in DERA overheads compared with 1999–2000 budgeted levels.

3. New business

To increase new business income (from customers other than the MOD) to £140M in 1999–2000.

4. Professional standing

To increase the number of staff elected as Fellows of professional bodies by 10 per cent.

5. Progress on work

To achieve on time 90 per cent. of the agreed milestones on work for MOD customers.

6. Customer satisfaction

To increase the level of customer satisfaction, as measured by customer surveys.

7. Defence diversification

To establish at least six Defence Diversification Offices across the UK.

Three year rolling targets carried over from 1998–99:

Mr. George Robertson: The Technology Readiness and Risk Assessment Programme is a three year programme which was initiated following the Strategic Defence Review. It forms part of the Corporate Research Programme. Its purposes are (i) to monitor developments in the potential threat and the technologies available to counter it and (ii) to establish a position from which a national requirement for fielding an active ballistic missile defence system could be developed, should one become necessary. The programme focuses on the characteristics of ballistic missiles, the performance of radar and other sensors, the guidance of interceptors, and their potential to defeat ballistic missile warheads including those containing biological or chemical agents.

[93337]

Mr. George Robertson: In our report, "Defending Against the Threat from Biological and Chemical Weapons", we outlined plans resulting from the Strategic Defence Review and subsequent work to enhance our biological and chemical defence capability. The additional expenditure over the next three years is expected to be some £12 million in 1999–2000, £22 million in 2000–01 and £31 million in 2001–02.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the operating costs in the last financial year of the units involved in biological and chemical defence tasks. [93314]

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Welsh Colonels have served in the Royal Regiment of Wales during the past 10 years. [93324]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In the period between 1989 and 1999, there have been eight Commanding Officers in the Royal Regiment of Wales. It is not mandatory for serving personnel to provide details of their ethnic origin and when they do those details are given on a confidential basis. It would not therefore be appropriate to provide details on an individual basis, but I understand that four of the Commanding Officers in the period have classified themselves as Welsh.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Welsh Commanding Officers are serving in the Royal Regiment of Wales. [93323]

This clearly demonstrates our support for UN peacekeeping operations. The UN Mission has a vital role in upholding peace and democracy in Sierra Leone and we should play our part in that process.

Over and above our support for the UN, we already have in place an eight-man training team to advise on basic training for recruits to the new Sierra Leone army. This team will help to establish more professional and better-trained armed forces.

We also currently have a military officer and civilian adviser in Freetown. Their role is to assist the Government of Sierra Leone in undertaking a review of Sierra Leone's Defence Policy, the roles of the Ministry of Defence and Defence Headquarters, and the size and shape of a new Sierra Leone Armed Forces. The aim of this project is to ensure appropriate civilian control and accountability of the armed forces.

New Deal

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many New Deal candidates have taken up appointments in his Department; what percentage they are of his Department's civilian workforce; and what their appointments are. [65626]

Mr. Spellar: As at 1 July 1999, the MOD has employed 15 people on short-term and three people on permanent appointments from the New Deal initiative, representing less than 1 per cent. of the civilian workforce. There are currently 17 New Deal candidates in post, a further four awaiting pre-employment checks and the Employment Services are attempting to fill another 37 posts identified as suitable for New Deal candidates.

Departmental Pay

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his estimate of the proportion of the defence budget taken by (a) civilian and (b) armed forces salaries on (i) 31 March 2000, (ii) 31 March 1999, (iii) 31 March 1998 and (iv) 31 March 1997 and assuming future pay awards match the Government's inflation assumptions on (1) 31 March 2002 and (2) 31 March 2003; [71672]

(2) what estimate he has made of (a) the civilian and (b) the armed forces salary bills in the financial year 1999–2000. [71673]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Multiple Myeloma

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will commission a review study of the cancers reported in the early National Radiological Protection Board studies in cases involving multiple myeloma. [74730]

Mr. Spellar: Earlier studies by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) embraced all cancer related illnesses including multiple myeloma. The overall conclusion of these studies was that the total incidence of cancer among nuclear test veterans was less than among the general population and no higher than among the control group. I announced on 25 February 1999 that my Department would fund a further study to address the incidence of multiple myeloma among nuclear test veterans. This is because there was some uncertainty about the incidence of this particular illness following the first NRPB study; and we wish to assess whether or not there is any significance in the recently reported increased rates.

Landing Platform Docks Contract

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the Landing Platform Docks contract is (a) on schedule and (b) proceeding to budget; and if he will make a statement; [75127]

(2) what (a) detailed and (b) major changes his Department has sought to make to the design of the ships under the Landing Platform Docks contract; what was the cost to his Department of such changes; what measures have been taken to ensure that costs do not increase on the contract; and if he will make a statement; [75126]

(3) what stage the work on the Landing Platform Docks contract has reached for (a) the first and (b) second ship; and if he will make a statement. [75128]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Procurement Instructions

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Chief of Defence procurement instructions have been issued since 1 June 1998; and how many were unclassified. [82246]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 27 July 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about Chief of Defence Procurement Instructions. This matter falls to me for answer within my responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

Twenty-three Chief of Defence Procurement Instructions have been issued since 1st June 1998. All of them were unclassified, but a number contain information about the Defence Procurement Agency's procedures which could prejudice the effective conduct of the Agency and would, therefore, be withheld under exemption 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

No new Chief of Defence Procurement instructions have been issued since April. Although they remain extant they are being replaced by the Acquisition Management System which fulfils a similar function in respect of Smart Procurement procedures.

Young Soldiers

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British soldiers aged under 18 years are stationed in (a) Yugoslavia and (b) Kosovo. [89126]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 26 July 1999, Official Report, column 52, to my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon).

Aircraft Carriers

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which United Kingdom shipbuilders have facilities to build an aircraft carrier with a displacement in excess of 45,000 tons. [92400]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Croydon, South (Mr. Ottaway) on 16 July 1999, Official Report, column 352. The size of the new aircraft carriers is currently estimated to be up to 40,000 tonnes.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what options have been considered for aircraft types to operate from the two new aircraft carriers for the Royal Navy. [92420]

Mr. George Robertson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 27 July 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the aircraft options for the new aircraft carriers. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The combat aircraft to equip the two new aircraft carriers for the Royal Navy is known as the Future Carrier-Borne Aircraft (FCBA). A strong contender for FCBA is a variant of the US Joint Strike Fighter (JSF), and the UK is participating in the Concept Demonstration Phase of its development. We are also assessing a navalised version of the Eurofighter, the US F-18 Super Hornet, the French Rafale-M and an advanced version of the Harrier. No decision has yet been made on the choice of aircraft to meet the FCBA.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the proposed (a) displaced weight and (b) overall length of the two new aircraft carriers for the Royal Navy. [92421]

Mr. George Robertson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock dated 27 July 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the proposed displaced weight and overall length of the two new aircraft carriers for the Royal Navy. This matter falls to me to answer within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The current estimate is that the new aircraft carriers will displace up to 40,000 tonnes and have an overall length of approximately 300 metres. The final decision on their design, including their size, however, will be influenced by the selection of the Future Carrier-Borne Aircraft late next year.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities are used for the processing of plutonium removed from warheads for refurbishment. [92814]

Mr. George Robertson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 27 July 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence which asked what facilities are used for the processing of plutonium removed from warheads for refurbishment. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

I can confirm that all such work is carried out in specialised facilities at AWE Aldermaston.

Trident Warhead

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) for what reasons the British Trident Warhead requires refurbishing early in the next decade; [93273]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Government of the United States to prepare for the refurbishment of the Trident Warhead. [93272]

Mr. George Robertson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Alan Simpson, dated 27 July 1999:

I am replying to your questions to the Secretary of State for Defence asking for the reasons why British Trident Warhead requires refurbishing early in the next decade, and what discussions have taken place with the United States Government to prepare for the refurbishment of the warheads. This matter falls to me for answer within my responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

Chapter four, "Deterrence and Disarmament", of the Strategic Defence Review stated that the Government needed to ensure that Trident would remain an effective deterrent for up to 30 years. Whilst Trident remains in service the warheads will be refurbished as necessary to ensure that that undertaking is fulfilled and that they remain safe and serviceable at all times.

There are regular discussions and exchanges of information with the United States in regard to the Trident programme, made under the auspices of the 1958 Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of the United States of America for Co-operation on the Uses of Atomic Energy for Mutual Defence Purposes (Cmnd. 537 as amended). These discussions include refurbishment of the warhead.

Equal Treatment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has established a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [93465]

Mr. Spellar: As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that its policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, my Department is working with the Women's Unit, Home Office, and DfEE to develop good practices for ensuring that our policies meet the changing needs of all members of society.

"Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment", published by the Cabinet Office, Home Office, DfEE and the Women's Unit in November 1998, has been circulated to staff within my Department to ensure that the effects of any policy changes, on all sections of the population, are considered at the earliest stage of policy development.

My Department currently has no baseline for policy appraisal, but we will shortly be introducing new procedures for monitoring.

Training Group Defence Agency

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the Training Group Defence Agency for financial year 1999–2000. [86705]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Pursuant to my answer of 9 June 1999, Official Report, columns 331–32, I regret that the information given under Key Target 4 was incorrect. The target should have read:

"To provide an Information System to produce full output costings and associated unit cost and efficiency measures by April 2000".

Armed Forces (Youth Recruitment)

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people under the age of 18 years currently serve in the armed forces; in which services; and with what duties. [66225]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Depleted Uranium Weapons (Kosovo)

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what health monitoring of pregnant women and children is being undertaken in Kosovo in areas affected by the use of depleted uranium weapons. [93455]

Mr. George Robertson: There are currently no health monitoring programmes in place in Kosovo under the auspices of UK forces; however a joint task force has been set up by the UN Environment Programme and the UN Commission on Settlements to assess the environmental and health aspects of the conflict.

8. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a document outlining the responsibilities of his Department and the staffing structure. [91605]

Dr. Reid: The memorandum I recently presented to the Scottish Affairs Committee has, with the permission of the Committee, been placed in the Library in the House of Commons. The staffing structure will be published in due course.

9. Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the sectors of the Scottish economy which will be affected by the abolition of duty free within the European Union. [91606]

18. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact on the Scottish economy of the abolition of duty free within the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [91615]

Mr. Macdonald: The previous Government agreed to the abolition of duty free within the EU in 1991. We took steps to simplify the new regulations whenever possible to mitigate the impact on industry in Scotland, and elsewhere in the UK.

Assisted Areas

10. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Scottish Executive on revisions to the Assisted Areas Map in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [91607]

Dr. Reid: Revision of the Assisted Areas Map across Britain is a reserved matter for the UK Government. I have been in close touch with The First Minister throughout the final stages of the Review. The proposals for new assisted areas announced on 15 July represent overall a fair outcome for Scotland.

17. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to ministerial colleagues regarding the proposed boundaries of Assisted Areas in Scotland. [91614]

Dr. Reid: Scottish Office Ministers and officials were fully involved in discussions within Government on the Review of Assisted Areas.

Post Office

11. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact in Scotland of the Post Office White Paper. [91608]

Mr. Macdonald: The benefits that will arise from the measures in the White Paper are expected to apply throughout the United Kingdom. These include setting criteria to ensure that a truly national service is provided, including especially Post Office Counters' services and a universal service of postal delivery.

The Economy

12. Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to the Chancellor of the Exchequer regarding the state of the Scottish economy. [91609]

Dr. Reid: I will discuss the state of the Scottish economy with the Chancellor as necessary, to ensure that his outstanding management of the UK economy continues to benefit Scotland as it has done over the last two years.

Job Prospects

13. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer on increasing job prospects in areas of high unemployment. [91610]

Dr. Reid: I have been involved recently in a number of discussions with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer and other colleagues about the review of the Assisted Areas Map and the Objective 2 Map.

In redrawing the AA Map, the Government have been concerned to strike the right balance between areas of greatest need and areas offering the greatest potential for development. Given that coverage for the United Kingdom on both Maps had to be reduced, this has involved some difficult decisions. However I am satisfied that the outcome is a fair result for Scotland.

Departmental Internet Site

14. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the reasons for the discontinuation of his Department's internet site. [91611]

Mr. Macdonald: The work of the Department changed radically on 1 July. The new website will be fully operational soon.

Oil Industry

16. Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to the Chancellor of Exchequer on the concerns of those using single-person companies about the consequences of the proposals contained in Treasury press release IR35 for the future of the oil industry in Scotland. Food Safety

19. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals the Government have to encourage the co-ordination of policy on food safety matters between the Scottish Executive and the UK Government. [91616]

Mr. Macdonald: Co-ordination of food safety will be for the Food Standards Agency. Until it is established, policy will continue to be co-ordinated by means of close working relations between the Government and the Scottish Executive.

Referendum (Independence)

20. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had concerning his reserved powers to hold a referendum on Scottish independence. [91617]

22. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on utilising his powers to call a referendum on Scottish independence. [91619]

Mr. Macdonald: The Government have no intention of holding any referendum on Scottish independence. Scottish voters demonstrated their clear support for devolution on 11 September 1997, and again on 6 May this year.

Shipbuilding

21. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet the Scottish TUC to discuss UK Government assistance for the Scottish shipbuilding industry; and if he will make a statement. [91618]

Dr. Reid: The STUC have not so far requested a meeting with me to discuss the shipbuilding industry in Scotland. The Scottish Executive is in regular discussion with the STUC on issues affecting the shipbuilding industry. The Department of Trade and Industry, which retains overall responsibility for the shipbuilding industry in the UK, also has continuing discussions in its Shipbuilding Forum with all parties that have an interest in the competitiveness of the industry.

Fishing Industry

23. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation to discuss reserved matters relating to the catching sector of the fishing industry. [91620]

25. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans next to meet the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions to discuss the future of the coastguard service in Scotland. [91622]

Mr. Macdonald: The Secretary of State has regular discussions with the Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions on a range of issues, reflecting his continuing role of representing Scottish interests on matters reserved to the UK Parliament.

Official Engagements

26. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many official engagements he has attended since 1 July. [91623]

Dr. Reid: Twenty three. This does not include attendance at Cabinet and Cabinet Committee meetings, bilaterals with Cabinet colleagues and regular meetings with the Advocate General and Scotland Office Ministers.

Tuition Fees

27. Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what extent the costs of abolishing tuition fees in Scotland will be met by the UK Government; and if he will make a statement. [91625]

Mr. Macdonald: The Scottish Executive has set up an independent Committee of Inquiry to examine Scottish student finance. Until the Committee has reported the question does not arise. It is worth noting, however, that over 50 per cent. of Scottish students assessed this year paid no tuition fees.

One Parent Families Scotland

28. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet One Parent Families Scotland to discuss the funding of the work of that organisation in relation to reserved areas. [91626]

Concordat (EU Matters)

29. Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress with the concordat with the Scottish Parliament on EU matters. [91627]

Dr. Reid: Concordats will guide working relations between the UK Government and the Scottish Executive on a range of matters, including those relating to the EU. They will be published once they have been agreed with the Scottish Executive.

Anti-drugs Strategy

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator to discuss the implementation of Her Majesty's Government's anti-drugs strategy in Scotland. [91612]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend has not met formally with the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator. Responsibility for implementing drugs strategy in Scotland rests with the Scottish Executive.

Disabled People

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what practical arrangements he has put in place to provide help to disabled people to seek and retain jobs through (a) financial support, (b) transport and (c) individual physical help. [91235]

Ms Hodge: I have been asked to reply.

In Scotland, as elsewhere, most disabled people are helped into work through the mainstream services offered by the Employment Service with additional support for those who require more help. The Disability Service Teams offer specialist employment measures tailored to the needs of individual disabled people. The six Disability Service Teams in Scotland plan to spend around £10 million 1999–2000 on specialist programmes for people with disabilities in Scotland, including Access to Work, the Job Introduction Scheme, Work Preparation and Supported Employment Opportunities.

The Access to Work programme provides both financial and technical support to remove barriers to work created by disability. Support can take many forms, including help with getting to work; the cost of aids and adaptations to equipment, computers or the work place; and of communicators for people with a hearing or visual impairment.

In addition, the New Deal for Disabled People is piloting a range of initiatives, to help disabled people and those with long-term illness on incapacity benefits into work and training at a cost of £195 million over the lifetime of this Parliament. The Personal Adviser service is being piloted in Lanarkshire, and there are three Innovative Schemes operating in Scotland.

The Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations came into force on 1 November 1998 and apply to all new rail vehicles entering service from 1 January 1999. These regulations, which are the first regulations to be made under Part V of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, will considerably improve access for disabled passengers, including wheelchair users, to new rail vehicles. Similar regulations for buses, coaches and taxis are also proposed and consultation on the draft regulations covering these vehicles is expected this year.

River Tweed

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Board of Scottish Natural Heritage has considered the River Tweed as a candidate Special Area of Conservation under the European Council Directive 92/43/EEC on the conservation of natural habitats and wild flora; and what was their decision. [88787]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 28 June 1999]: The Board of Scottish Natural Heritage considered the case for recommending the River Tweed as a candidate Special Area of Conservation (SAC) and concluded that it should be recommended as one.

It is, however, for the Government to decide what sites should be proposed to the European Commission as candidate Special Areas of Conservation. The Government decided, in the light of their own appraisal of the scientific case for this site, that the River Tweed should not be proposed as a candidate SAC.

The implementation of the Habitats Directive in Scotland is now a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the scientific advice received from Scottish Natural Heritage concerning the notification of the River Tweed as a candidate Special Area of Conservation under the European Council Directive 92/ 43/ EEC on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild flora. [88788]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 28 June 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 5860.

The implementation of the Habitats Directive in Scotland is now a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has received from Scottish Natural Heritage concerning the notification of the River Tweed as a candidate Special Area of Conservation under the European Council Directive 92/43/EEC on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild flora. [88786]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 28 June 1999]: Scottish Natural Heritage advised The Scottish Office that they considered there was a strong case for proposing the River Tweed as a candidate Special Area of Conservation (SAC).

However, further scientific advice from Scottish Office specialist advisers and from the Freshwater Fisheries Laboratory indicated that there were reasons why, when applying the criteria for site selection specified in the Habitats Directive, the Tweed was not an outstanding candidate for SAC status for Atlantic salmon. Those reasons included the relatively poor state of the spawning salmon stock, the very substantial modification by man of the watercourse and discharges into the river environment. The Government have proposed five other rivers to the European Commission as candidate SACs for Atlantic salmon which we believe better meet the selection criteria of the Habitats Directive.

The implementation of the Habitats Directive in Scotland is now a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Research

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure that research in Scottish institutions funded by research councils is properly integrated with research funded by the Scottish Executive to ensure the best use of resources. [90778]

Dr. Reid: Appropriate integration of the two streams of the research funding has been recognised for some time as an important matter. The Science and Engineering Base Co-ordinating Committee—which draws its members from the senior officials of the Research Councils, the Funding Councils (including SHEFC), the UK and devolved departments with responsibility for Higher Education and the Office of Science and Technology—aims to co-ordinate science and engineering base research activity across the UK and to ensure that it is consistent with, and targeted on, Government objectives.

Research in Scottish Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) is funded both by the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council (SHEFC) and the UK Research Councils Policy relating to the former is devolved and therefore a matter for the Scottish Executive and the Scottish Parliament similarly, the UK Research Council are the responsibility of my noble Friend, Lord Sainsbury.

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, indicating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91998]

Dr. Reid: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for copies of my reply to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Quangos

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many appointments to quangos he made between (a) 1 June 1997 and 31 May 1998 and (b) 1 June 1998 and 31 May 1999; and in each case of those how many were members of Britain's (i) Asian and (ii) ethnic minority communities. [92145]

Dr. Reid: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for copies of my reply to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Official Documents

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of all those official documents of the last Administration which have been seen by (a) him, (b) other Ministers in his Department, (c) special advisers in his Department and (d) non-career civil servants appointed since May 1997 in his Department. [92172]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 20 July 1999]: A large number of official documents were generated during the period of the previous Administration, many of which were published or put in the public domain. Since May 1997, the Scottish Office was guided by the convention governing access to papers of a previous Administration, as set out in the then Prime Minister's reply to a written question on 24 January 1980, Official Report, columns 305–07.

Adjacent Waters Boundary Order

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Scottish Executive about the Scottish Adjacent Waters Boundary Order; and if he will make a statement. [93269]

Mr. Macdonald: Following the debate in the Scottish Parliament about the Scottish Adjacent Waters Boundary Order on 3 June, the Scottish Executive Minister for Rural Affairs, Mr. Ross Finnie, wrote to the Secretary of State. His letter conveyed fishermen's concerns about the Order. The Secretary of State met with representatives of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation on 24 June.

Concordats

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to publish the concordats covering administrative arrangements relating to co-operation between Whitehall departments and departments of the Scottish Executive. [93278]

Shellfish

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his continuing responsibilities relating to research on matters pertaining to shellfish farming. [92278]

Dr. Reid: Ministerial responsibility for research on matters pertaining to shellfish farming, and fish generally, lies with the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and, in Scotland, with the Scottish Executive.

CS Gas

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what his responsibilities are in relation to the use by police of (a) MIBK and (b) CS gas spray. [92320]

Dr. Reid: None. From 1 July this became a matter for the Scottish Executive.

Biological and Chemical Weapons

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by how much he has agreed to increase the Scottish block grant in each of the next three years to meet the new burdens on Scottish (a) health authorities, (b) ambulance authorities, (c) police authorities, (d) fire authorities and (e) local authorities laid out in paragraph 7 of Chapter 5 of the Ministry of Defence paper entitled, "Defending Against the Threat from Biological and Chemical Weapons". [93094]

Dr. Reid: No additional provision has been made. Any additional costs for the authorities mentioned are likely to be very small in relation to the overall provision.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his Department's policy in respect of transferring oral questions to other departments; and in what ways it has changed since 1 July. [93243]

Dr. Reid: The policy on transferring oral questions has not changed since 1 July.

Fur Farms

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many mink and fox factory farms there are, by county, in Scotland. [93617]

Dr. Reid: This is now a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

36. Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what recent representations he has received regarding the closure of magistrates courts in shire counties. [91634]

Mr. Vaz: So far this year my Department has received 139 representations regarding the closure of magistrates courts in shire counties.

Under section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997, the Lord Chancellor has a role in magistrates courthouse closures only where an appeal has been lodged. All representations received are carefully considered before any final decisions are made.

Police Authority-Magistrates Court Committee Chairmen

37. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1999, Official Report, column 556, on police authority and magistrates court committee chairmen, if he will take steps to avoid the appointment of the same individual to both chairmanships where the areas of operation are approximately the same; and if he will make a statement. [91635]

Mr. Vaz: The chairman of a police authority and a magistrates court committee are both appointed by the members of their respective bodies. Neither the Home Secretary nor the Lord Chancellor, has any involvement in these appointments. The Lord Chancellor has however taken powers in the Access to Justice Bill for the preparation of a code of conduct to be observed by magistrates court committee members and the panels that select them.

Judges (Discourteous Remarks)

38. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what advice and guidance he is issuing to judges concerning comments made by them from the bench which may be perceived as being sexist, racist or otherwise disparaging and discourteous. [91636]

Mr. Vaz: The Judicial Studies Board, which is an independent body controlled by a Board whose members are appointed by the Lord Chancellor, is responsible for providing high-quality training to full and part-time judges. All JSB courses and seminars include modules on equal treatment issues. The JSB's Equal Treatment Advisory Committee is chaired by Mr. Justice Keene and will be publishing the second edition of its guidance to full and part-time judges on ethnic minority issues in the autumn. Further material relating to disability, gender and sexual orientation, litigants in person and children will be issued in the following months.

Community Legal Service

39. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how he intends that experience of the pilot and associate pilot schemes will inform the process of establishing a national community legal service. [91638]

Mr. Vaz: The Pioneers and Associates were chosen for two reasons. First, they are all committed to developing high quality, responsive services to meet the needs of local communities. And second, they represent a range of areas with different characteristics. Some are urban, some rural and some semi-rural. This means that, in one way or another, the various models of best practice which emerge will be capable of transfer onto a national basis.

There will be a careful rolling out, so that the lessons from the Pioneers and Associates can be tailored in a detailed way to meet specific local needs in the rest of the country.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how the Pioneer Partnerships for the community legal service have sought to improve access to legal advice and representation by socially excluded groups; and if he will make a statement. [91637]

Mr. Vaz: The Pioneer Partnerships are working to establish best practice in joined up planning of the advice provision. This will ensure we have the right services of the right quality at the right price to allow the disadvantaged to resolve disputes, enforce their rights or seek the protection of the courts.

Judiciary (Communication)

40. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the Lord Chancellor's role as an intermediary between Government and the judiciary. [91640]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Guildford (Mr. St. Aubyn), Official Report, column 116, and also to the Lord Chancellor's speech to the Third Worldwide Common Law Judiciary Conference on 5 July 1999, in which he restated the role of his office. I have placed a copy of his speech in the Library.

Magistrates and County Courts (Lichfield)

41. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement concerning the future of the magistrates and county courts in Lichfield. [91641]

Mr. Vaz: Under section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997, decisions concerning the future of a magistrates' court are for the relevant magistrates' courts committee to determine, after consultation with the paying authority or authorities. The local authorities that contribute financially to the running of the service may appeal to the Lord Chancellor against a proposed closure. Staffordshire Magistrates' Courts Committee expect to make their final determination concerning the future of Lichfield Magistrates' Court at their meeting on 28 July.

With regard to Lichfield County Court, last September the Lord Chancellor gave permission to begin a public consultation exercise on the proposal to close the court. This has now concluded. I have yet to make a decision on the closure of the county court. As the hon. Member knows, I visited Lichfield Magistrates' Court and County Court at his invitation on 23 July.

Judiciary (Independence)

42. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the Lord Chancellor's role as guarantor of the political independence of the judiciary. [91642]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave today to the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet (Sir S. Chapman), Official Report, columns 117–18.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current backlog of adjudication appeals in immigration cases. [92895]

Mr. Vaz: When a case is received from the Home Office, a first hearing usually takes place within six weeks of receipt, and notice of this is sent out to the parties within five working days. If the appeal cannot be dealt with at the first hearing, it is adjourned and directions given for its progress to a second hearing, which usually takes place within a further six weeks. 1,303 appeals are currently at various stages of progress but there is no backlog, as the Immigration Appellate Authority is currently meeting all its targets.

Legal Aid

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will reconsider the level of property value taken into account in the awarding of legal aid, with particular reference to London. [92962]

Mr. Vaz: I have no plans to do so. It is important to note that the actual market value of the home does not determine eligibility for legal aid. The means test instead takes account of the equity value of the home—that is, the difference between its current market value and the amount required to redeem any mortgage secured on it. This amount depends on the personal circumstances of the applicant and not on where they live. The present amount of equity disregarded for the purposes of determining legal aid eligibility is £100,000. This level was set in the Civil Legal Aid (Assessment of Resources) (Amendment) Regulations 1996. The Lord Chancellor consulted widely on those regulations, which were introduced to deal with the problem of apparently wealthy applicants receiving legal aid, and there was broad agreement that exempting a universal amount of equity was the correct way to proceed. The amount is the same as the maximum value up to which mortgage interest is paid for people receiving Income Support. Since eligibility for legal aid is related to movements in benefit levels, it would not be appropriate to make any changes independent of the benefit system.

Immigration Appellate Authority

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what targets he has set for the maximum reasonable period for the Immigration Appellate Authority to wait, after an appeal has been lodged for a child refused entry clearance under paragraph 297(e) of the Immigration Rules, before it receives the explanatory statement for the case. [93332]

Mr. Vaz: The main component of this type of appeal is the explanatory statement itself, which is currently issued by the IAA within five days of receipt from the Home Office.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the Lord Chancellor intends to do to satisfy himself that appointments to the professional judiciary and as Queen's Counsel are made fairly and on merit and that there are safeguards in the appointments procedures against discrimination on the grounds of race or gender. [93793]

Mr. Vaz: The Lord Chancellor has appointed Sir Leonard Peach, until recently Commissioner for Public Appointments and currently Commissioner for Public Appointments for Northern Ireland and a Civil Service Commissioner, to provide a report to him on the operation of the appointments procedures in relation to all Judicial and Queen's Counsel appointments and in particular to advise on:

The appropriateness and effectiveness of a) the criteria and b) the procedures for selecting the best candidates;

The extent to which candidates are assessed objectively against the criteria for appointment; and

The existence of safeguards in the procedures against discrimination on the grounds of race or gender.

Sir Leonard Peach will also make recommendations, as appropriate, to the Lord Chancellor for further developments in the selection procedures for Judicial and Queen's Counsel appointments.

In preparing his report, Sir Leonard Peach will have full access to all aspects of the appointments process and members of the legal profession and judges will be among those he will consult.

Corporate Bodies

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to make an announcement on Law Commission report No. 253, "The Execution of Deeds and Documents By or on Behalf of Bodies Corporate". [93791]

Mr. Vaz: The Government accept the Law Commission's recommendations in Report No. 253: "The Execution of Deeds and Documents By or on Behalf of Bodies Corporate" and will legislate when Parliamentary time allows.

Solicitors (Complaints)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action has been taken to address the problems faced by the Law Society and the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors about the handling of complaints. [93792]

Mr. Vaz: The performance in the handling of complaints by the Law Society has been deteriorating to an unacceptable level. The Government have therefore amended the Access to Justice Bill to allow for a Legal Services Complaints Commissioner to be appointed. The Commissioner would oversee the handling of complaints by the legal professional bodies. The Lord Chancellor hopes not to have to appoint a Commissioner, but will do so if the situation does not improve significantly.

The Lord Chancellor has written to Robert Sayer, the President of the Law Society, to set down the improvements in performance by the Law Society and the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors that could persuade the Government that it was unnecessary to introduce a Commissioner. Copies of this letter have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Children

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the merger of the children's work of the Official Solicitor, the Guardian ad Litem and Reporting Officer Service and Family Court Welfare Service will be finalised and the decision communicated to the relevant parties. [93786]

Mr. Vaz: I am pleased to announce that the Lord Chancellor, the Home Secretary, the Secretary of State for Health and the First Secretary for Wales have agreed to set up a new service, when legislative time permits, which will combine the present Family Court Welfare function provided by the Probation Service, the Children's Branch of the Official Solicitor's Department and the Guardian ad Litem and Reporting Officer Service which local authorities currently provide. The Lord Chancellor will take responsibility for the new service, which will be set up as a non-departmental public body. The service will cover England and Wales and will serve the High Court of the Family Division, County Courts, including Care Centres, and Family Proceedings Courts.

An inter-departmental project team to set up the new service has been established, which the Lord Chancellor's Department will lead. The project management framework to be adopted will ensure close liaison with the relevant services in creating the new organisation.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by her Department since June 1997, indicating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [92002]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There is no current requirement to consult on or publish gender impact assessments in Northern Ireland. The Policy Appraisal and Fair Treatment (PAFT) administrative guidelines recommend assessments of the equality and discrimination implications when new policies and services are proposed or existing ones are reviewed. Such assessments cover a broad range of issues where there is potential for discriminatory impact—region and political opinion; gender; race; disability; age; marital status; dependants, sexual orientation. Under the Northern Ireland Act 1998, the PAFT administrative guidelines will be superseded by a statutory duty on public authority in relation to equality of opportunity. This will require equality schemes to be drawn up by public authorities, including arrangements for impact assessments with consultation and publication.

Occupational Therapists

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were awaiting assessments by occupational therapists for disabled facilities in the (i) Down Lisburn Trust, (ii) Newry and Mourne Trust and (iii) Banbridge and Craigavon Trust (a) in 1997, (b) in 1998 and (c) at the latest available date. [92011]

Mr. McFall: Information is not available in the form requested, as occupational therapy activity is not analysed by reason for referral. The table shows the total numbers of people awaiting commencement of assessment at the end of the relevant quarter.

Education

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she is taking to increase the levels of educational attainment, with particular reference to the standards required for the jobs being created through the Industrial Development Board. [93033]

Mr. McFall: The Government have taken a number of steps to seek to ensure that the education system in Northern Ireland develops the range of skills which are likely to be required by employers now and in the future. A major schools improvement programme which will be supported by new investment in the school system for the period up to 2002 is underway. That, together with a new educational technology strategy and a review of the curriculum, will seek to ensure higher and more relevant educational attainment and prepare young people for future vocational development. In addition, I have published a set of proposals on lifelong learning, "A new Learning Culture for All", in which I set out Government policy for improving general skill levels and for meeting the skill needs of Northern Ireland for the future. Included in the proposals are initiatives to widen and increase access to education and training provision, put in place a skills identification and monitoring system and significantly increase the number of higher and further education places available. I have established a Northern Ireland Skills task Force to advise the Department of Education and the Training and Employment Agency on issues related to skills identification and responses to labour market and skill needs. The Industrial Development Board will play a significant role in that task Force ensuring that its focus includes the target sectors for inward investment and company expansion.

The information and advice from the Skills Task Force and from our labour market research will enable us to focus the education and training provision in Northern Ireland, at all levels, on the future needs of the local economy. This is an issue addressed in the recently published Economic Development Strategy, "Strategy 2010".

Residents Groups (Funding)

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what public funding has been provided to the (a) Lower Ormeau Concerned Community, (b) Bogside Residents Group and (c) Garvaghy Road Residents Coalition in each year since 1995. [92959]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 26 July 1999]: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is as follows:

(a) £3,000 in 1997

(b) £3,000 in 1997

(c) Reimbursement of travel expenses for meetings with the Prime Minister in London in 1999.

Drumcree Protest

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many weapons were seized in the vicinity of the Drumcree protest in July 1998; how many of these were returned to their owners; how many were legally registered weapons; how many have subsequently been destroyed; who verified this process; and where the remaining weapons are stored. [92737]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 26 July 1999]: One home-made firearm was seized in the vicinity of the Drumcree protest in July 1998 and is currently held in Portadown RUC station pending a disposal order.

Note:

In light of the reference to legally registered weapons this phrase has been interpreted as referring to firearms and the question has been answered using that interpretation. A number of other items were seized during the period.

Western Health and Social Services Board

Mr. Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much is to be spent on cancer services in the Western Health and Social Services Board in the financial year 1999–2000; and how much was spent in financial year 1998–99. [93049]

Mr. McFall [holding answer 26 July 1999]: The total planned expenditure on cancer services in the Western Health and Social Services Board in the financial year 1999–2000 is £3.95 million and the total spent on cancer services by the Board in the financial year 1998–99 was £2.94 million.

Mr. Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will provide a breakdown of the use of the increase in the money received for the 1999–2000 financial year over the previous year by the Western Health and Social Services Board on the basis of expenditure to each programme of care for each trust; and how much of this funding allocated within each programme and trust is on a (i) recurring and (ii) non-recurring basis. [93050]

Mr. McFall [holding answer 26 July 1999]: The proposed breakdown of the use of the increase in the money received for the 1999–2000 financial year over the previous year by the Western Health and Social Services Board, on the basis of expenditure to each programme of care for each trust and the amount of this funding the Board proposes to allocate on a recurring basis, is shown in the table. Community care recurring funding extends over 1999–2000 to 2001–02 and £2.1 million is available for use non-recurrently in 1999–2000.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Child Support Agency's 1998–99 annual report and accounts will be published. [93787]

Mr. McFall: The Northern Ireland Child Support Agency published its 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts on Friday 23 July. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

The Agency has met five of the six Ministerial targets and all Milestone targets. An outturn of £14.7 million was achieved for the Maintenance Collected target of £15.8 million and, although this target was not achieved, the maintenance collected is an increase of 16 per cent. on 1997–98 and a 51 per cent. increase on 1996–97.

The Agency has placed a strong emphasis on improving the quality of service to customers and it is gratifying to see that an outturn of 71 per cent. has been achieved for the processing of maintenance assessments against a 65 per cent. target Improvements in quality are also evident with an outturn of 85 per cent. for the accuracy of assessment target of 75 per cent. The Report included details of the contribution which the Northern Ireland Agency makes to the overall performance of the Great Britain Agency through its partnership contract to deliver services to the people of Eastern England.

The Agency recognises that customers have a right to good service provided by skilled staff and the foundations for continuing improvements are in place. Major changes in service delivery, including additional hours of contact with customers and more use of the telephone, will improve customer contact and the service provided. However, the Agency has a long way to go in improving the quality of its work, particularly in the accuracy of maintenance assessments which it makes.

In the longer term, the Government's recently published proposals for a thorough reform of the child support system represent the best opportunity to radically improve services to customers especially, and most importantly, by putting children first.

Fair Employment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) for an employing firm situated in the council districts of (i) Londonderry, (ii) Strabane, (iii) Limavady, (iv) Coleraine and (v) Magherafelt, what geographical area the Fair Employment Commission takes into account in order to determine the percentage of (a) Roman Catholic, (b) Protestant and (c) other which should be employed so as to reflect the percentage balance of the area; [93633]

(2) what percentage of the economically active population aged 16 to 64 years in the council districts of (i) Londonderry, (ii) Strabane, (iii) Limavady, (iv) Coleraine and (v) Magherafelt are deemed by the Fair Employment Commission to be (a) Roman Catholic, (b) Protestant and (c) other; and what percentage in each council district are (1) male, (2) female and (3) self-employed; [93631]

(3) by whom the progress of the Fair Employment Commission towards a pattern of fair employment is monitored and reviewed; what is the timescale for the achievement of fair employment by the Commission; and what was the timescale determined to achieve fair percentages of Roman Catholics and Protestants in 1994; [93634]

(4) what percentage of the economically active population aged 16 to 64 years resident in (a) that part of Londonderry council area which lies on the West side of the River Foyle and (b) the remainder of that council area are deemed by the Fair Employment Commission to be (i) Roman Catholic, (ii) Protestant and (iii) other; [93632]

(5) what geographical area the Fair Employment Commission takes into account when determining the percentage of (a) Roman Catholic and (b) Protestant staff it employs; and what is the percentage of (i) Roman Catholic, (ii) Protestant and (iii) others, economically active in that geographical area. [93636]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Foyle Fisheries

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the number of (i) salmon and grilse, (ii) sea trout and (iii) brown trout taken by anglers in each river in the Foyle Fisheries Commission area in each of the last 15 years. [93635]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The number of salmon and grilse and sea trout taken by anglers in each of the rivers in the Foyle Fisheries Commission area is shown in the table. These figures are compiled from returns made by anglers. The figures are incomplete as a varying percentage of anglers make returns each year. No figures are available for brown trout catches.

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information requested is not available.

Traffic Offences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) on which roads, and on how many occasions on each such road, radar traps were operated by the Royal Ulster Constabulary in the council areas of (i) Londonderry, (ii) Limavady, (iii) Strabane and (iv) Coleraine during the last three months for which such information is available; [93629]

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 25 June 1999, Official Report, column 480, on United States visits by his Policy Unit, how many meetings each member held with members and officials of the United States Government on each visit, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Policy Unit members involved and the names of the United States Ministers and officials at each meeting. [92302]

The Prime Minister: Details of the three occasions on which members of the Policy Unit have travelled to the United States of America on official business since 1 January 1998 when not accompanying me or other Ministers are as follows:

Dates	Unit member
6–9 December 1998	Robert Hill
29–31 January 1999	David Miliband
21–28 March 1999	Sharon White

All visits were to attend a series of meetings with US public officials. All visits were undertaken in line with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code.

Special Envoys

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the oral answer by the right hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham of 20 July 1999, Official Report, column 962, if he will list the occasions on which special envoys have been used by his Government, and the names of the envoys concerned. [93178]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 July 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the Answer given today to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples), Official Report, column 373, by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

UK Delegations

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Prime Minister if there are any changes in the composition of the United Kingdom Delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of the Western European Union. [93655]

The Prime Minister: Baroness Knight of Collingtree DBE replaces the right hon. Sir Alastair Goodlad KCMG as a full representative of the Delegation. Following the resignation of Lord Grenfell from the Delegation, the right hon. Lord Clinton-Davis has been appointed as a substitute representative from the Government benches.

Parliamentary Questions (Good English)

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister if he will inform all members of his administration that, when giving written or oral replies to parliamentary questions, they should not use the locutions relocate, meet with and consult with, and that they should use good English. [93214]

The Prime Minister: What matters most is that Ministers give accurate and truthful information to Parliament, as required by the Ministerial Code. The use of clear and concise English can be the best way of achieving this. However, I do not think it necessary to proscribe the use of any particular phrase.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister when he intends to visit (a) the Czech Republic, (b) Hungary, (c) Slovenia and (d) Estonia. [92691]

The Prime Minister: I recognise the importance of these countries but have no plans to visit at present.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister (1) when he intends to visit Poland; [92692]

(2) on how many occasions dates have been identified with the UK Embassy in Poland for the Prime Minister to visit Poland and have subsequently been abandoned. [92802]

The Prime Minister: I regret that I have had to postpone my visit to Poland on two occasions due to pressure of other duties, mainly talks on Northern Ireland. I hope to reinstate a visit as soon as the opportunity arises.

Petitions

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a list of the public petitions submitted to the Government in each of the last two years. [93469]

The Prime Minister: There is no operational requirement to maintain these details and no central list is therefore collated. However, in respect of my office, 101 petitions have been received this year, of which 14 contained more than 10,000 signatures. In line with the practice adopted by previous Governments, petitions delivered to my Office are acknowledged wherever possible and the relevant Government Department informed. Where appropriate, the views expressed are reflected in advice to Ministers about what the public response is to an issue.

Cancer Services

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to meet the National Cancer Forum to assess progress on implementing the Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer Services; and if he will make a statement. [93625]

The Prime Minister: The aim of the Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer Services is to improve the quality and consistency of cancer services across the country. The National Cancer Forum has been established to advise on the on-going implementation of the Policy Framework.

I met members of the National Cancer Forum in May when I hosted a meeting in Downing Street to review progress and to identify where further action is needed to improve cancer prevention and care.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Population Control Agencies

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of her Department's health budget is paid to (a) IPPF, (b) UNFPA and (c) other population control agencies which provide abortion services as well as contraceptives. [93431]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) works with national governments, multilateral agencies and civil society groups in over 150 countries to enable more poor people to benefit from good quality reproductive health care, including voluntary family counselling and services; HIV/AIDS/STD prevention, treatment and care; essential obstetric care, including treatment for the consequences of unsafe abortion and, where legal, elective termination of pregnancy. Around 7.5 per cent. and 2.5 per cent. of DFID's 1998–99 health expenditure of £200 million was invested via UNFPA and IPPF respectively in order to enable poor people to exercise their basic right to reproductive choice and reproductive health.

Abortion and Sterilisation Programmes

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if the British Government funds compulsory abortion and sterilisation programmes. [93432]

Clare Short: All UK Government assistance for sexual and reproductive health is contingent on respect for the human rights principles and standards of privacy and free and informed choice upheld at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development. Coercion and control have no place in UN supported family planning.

Health Services (Young People)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the British Government's policy in respect of health services for young people. [93495]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development's policies in respect of health services for young people seek to implement the Key Actions recently adopted by the UN General Assembly further to implement the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development and are consistent with the UK Government's recent White Paper "Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation".

People Living in Extreme Poverty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what targets have been set by her Department to increase the income of those people who are living on less than one US dollar a day. [92855]

Clare Short: Our aim is to mobilise the international system to achieve the internationally agreed target of reducing by half the proportion of people living in extreme poverty by 2015. In the Comprehensive Spending Review published in July 1998, we set out key targets to be achieved by the end of this Parliament, including annual growth of 1.5 per cent. in Gross Domestic Product per capita, and quantified measures for progress in health and education, strategies for sustainable development, improvements in the effectiveness of the international system and increased effectiveness of the United Kingdom's bilateral aid programme. Progress against these targets, which closely reflect the International Development Goals, will be rigorously monitored in the Department's annual Output and Performance Analysis which will be made publicly available.

Public Attitudes (Monitoring)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has for monitoring public attitudes on international development issues. [93699]

Clare Short: The Government are committed to working to increase public awareness and understanding of international development issues and to monitoring the effectiveness of this work. We are therefore conducting a baseline survey this month through the Office for National Statistics' Omnibus Survey, and will make the results publicly available. Further surveys will be undertaken periodically, in order to measure progress against our objectives.

Bangladesh

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what funding her Department is providing for intensive shrimp production in Bangladesh. [93703]

Clare Short: We have recently agreed to provide £9.76 million to support the Government of Bangladesh's Fourth Fisheries Project. The project will engage government, non-governmental and community based organisations in improving aquatic resource management of inland waters and coastal polders. Fourteen per cent. of the funding will support a component for improving the shrimp production system. Our contribution is 25 per cent. of the total project requirements, which will be parallel financed with the World bank and the Bangladesh Government over five years.

As a major supporter of sustainable fisheries development in Bangladesh for many years, we share local concerns about the environmental and social impact of past development of the shrimp industry. We have been able to influence development partners in this sector, using our expertise to provide strong environmental and social analyses in the design of the new project. This helped to put poverty elimination and environmental sustainability objectives at the centre of project design. For the shrimp component, we also helped to modify the focus of the project to the creation of more diverse and stable livelihoods in areas where shrimp are produced.

The project plans to promote the production of shrimp by smallholders, but this is conditional on the outcome of a feasibility study in the first year which will fully consider social and environmental dimensions in consultation with the communities concerned and NGOs. The project will also support a regional initiative to develop a Code of Conduct for responsible shrimp culture.

Montserrat

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many Montserratians have been admitted to the United Kingdom as evacuees; how many still remain in the United Kingdom; and how many have returned to Montserrat. [93627]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

I will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

HEALTH

Asbestos

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of extent of the multiplied risk which occurs when smokers are exposed to asbestos in relation to contraction of (a) lung cancer and (b) asbestosis; and if he will make a statement. [93024]

Mr. Meale: I have been asked to reply.

Workers exposed to asbestos have been found to have up to ten times the risk of lung cancer compared with other workers. A typical smoker, not exposed to asbestos, has about fifteen times the risk of contracting lung cancer compared with non-smokers. When both exposures are present the risks can be—approximately—multiplied together. The total risk of lung cancer faced by smokers exposed to asbestos will depend on the type of fibre to which they are exposed, on the amount to which they are exposed and for how long, but it will be much higher than for non-smokers. The development of asbestosis is unaffected by smoking.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which existing private finance initiative contracts in the National Health Service provide for the automatic transfer of assets back to his Department after the expiry of the contract or for his Department to have first right of refusal to buy back the units after the expiry of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [89873]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 5 July 1999]: For all the first wave of prioritised major private finance initiative schemes any leasehold interest held by the private sector partner will either "fall away" at the end of the contract period or the National Health Service trust can exercise an option to take back the leasehold interest, in both cases returning full ownership of the asset to the NHS trust. This principle is set out in NHS Executive guidance on the PFI and will be followed by all subsequent schemes.

Acute NHS Trusts

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sums have been appropriated from the Primary Care Modernisation Fund to support acute NHS trusts in London. [91724]

Mr. Denham: In 1999–2000, London health authorities received modernisation funds of £13.1 million for improving primary care as part of their unified allocations. It is for health authorities, in partnership with National Health Service trusts, primary care groups, local authorities and local stakeholders to determine how best to use their funds to meet national and local priorities for improving health and modernisation services. In doing so they must however deliver at least the guaranteed floor level of expenditure on general practitioner practice infrastructure costs.

Eye Tests

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pensioners living in the Tooting parliamentary constituency are able to obtain free eye tests; and if he will make a statement. [92238]

Mr. Denham: From 1 April, everyone aged 60 or over became eligible for free National Health Service sight tests. We made access to eye care easier for older people because they are most at risk of sight threatening disease.

Barnet Health Authority

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) since May 1997, how much money has been allocated to Barnet Health Authority to tackle (a) waiting lists and (b) winter pressures; [92369]

(2) since May 1997, how much funding in addition to original expenditure plans has been allocated to Barnet Health Authority for additional cancer treatments; and on what the money has been (a) spent and (b) allocated; [92415]

(3) how much funding in addition to original expenditure plans has been allocated to Barnet Health Authority since May 1997 for its core work; [92417]

(4) how much funding in addition to original expenditure plans has been allocated to mental health services in the Barnet Health Authority area since May 1997; and on what the money has been (a) spent and (b) allocated; [92418]

(5) how much has been allocated to Barnet Health Authority from the modernisation fund; and on what the money has been spent; [92366]

(6) how much funding, in addition to original expenditure plans, has been given to (a) Barnet Health Authority and (b) Barnet Council to improve continuing and community care since May 1997; and for what purposes the money has been allocated. [92419]

Mr. Denham: The information available is provided in the following tables. Table 1 shows the additional resources allocated to Barnet Health Authority since May 1997. Nurse Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of male and female nurses in training. [92435]

Mr. Hutton: Data from the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting are that at 31 March 1999 there were 6,319 male and 44,740 female nurses and midwives in training in England.

Arachnoiditis

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were given myelography with Myodil between 1971 and 1987; and of those how many subsequently developed arachnoiditis. [92472]

Mr. Hutton: Available information does not separately identify patients undergoing myelography with Myodil or the occurrence of arachnoiditis associated with myelography.

Acute Care

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute care hospitals in the NHS have (a) dual sex wards and (b) shared toilet facilities. [92370]

Mr. Denham: The data collected by the National Health Service Executive on mixed sex hospital accommodation are at health authority level and do not at present contain detailed information about the position in NHS trusts. We are, however, looking to collect trust level information from health authorities in collections from September 1999 onwards.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the health implications of the siting of mobile phone transmitter masts. [92361]

Ms Jowell: The Government obtain advice from the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) on the risks to health from exposure to electromagnetic fields (EMFs), including those emitted by mobile phone masts. At locations accessible to the public the exposure to EMFs emitted by mobile phone transmitters are well below the maximum exposure levels recommended by NRPB in their guidelines. (Restrictions on human exposure to static and time varying electromagnetic fields and radiation. Documents of the NRPB, 4, No 5,7–63 (1993)). These guidelines are intended to prevent acute adverse responses to increased heat load and elevated body temperature. Copies of the guidelines have been placed in the Library.

Concerns have been expressed that there may be other, non-established, health effects of exposure to EMFs, particularly cancer. The question of possible long-term health effects, and specifically cancer-related issues, associated with exposures to electromagnetic fields and radiation has been addressed by the NRPB Advisory Group on Non-Ionising Radiation (chaired by Professor Sir Richard Doll). The Group has concluded that there is no firm evidence for the existence of a carcinogenic hazard from exposure to electromagnetic fields but there is a need for further good quality research to be carried out. This view is supported by international bodies, including the World Health Organisation.

Research into the possible long term health effects of electromagnetic fields in general is being undertaken on a worldwide basis. The Department is currently contributing to the World Health Organisation International Electromagnetic Fields Project which includes health effects of electromagnetic fields and is funding studies investigating possible biological effects from EMF generally. A three year study in the UK of occupational exposure to radiofrequency fields, including those from TV and radio transmitters, was launched in November 1998. The Department is supporting this study.

We recently announced a working group, chaired by Sir William Stewart FRS FRSE, to assess the current state of research into the health implications of mobile telephones usage. Further details of the group will be announced shortly.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92661]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 23 July 1999]: In accordance with the terms of the Ministerial code, Ministers are required always to make efficient and cost effective travel arrangements. Trips in and around London, which account for the majority of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's working week, will normally be made by Government car. The last time he used a train in the course of his official duties was on 23 July 1999 when visiting the National Health Service Executive Headquarters in Leeds.

Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women were detained in psychiatric hospitals in England and Wales on 1 July. [92921]

Mr. Hutton: The information available is contained in the Department of Health's Statistical Bulletin "In-patients formally detained in hospitals under the Mental Health Act 1983 and other legislation, England: 1987–88 and 1992–93 to 1997–98". My hon. Friend may wish to refer to this Bulletin, copies of which are available in the Library.

Sexual and Reproductive Health

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a national strategy on sexual and reproductive health; and if he will make a statement. [93441]

Ms Jowell: I announced on 23 March that the Department will, over the coming year, be developing an integrated strategy on sexual health. Professor Michael Adler will, be joining the Department in September to lead work on the strategy and ensure that it is co-ordinated with work on the HIV/AIDS strategy and teenage pregnancy. We will be in a position to announce the membership of the External Reference Group to assist him in this work shortly.

Medical Devices Agency

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will report the findings of the Quinquennial Review of the Medical Devices Agency, which the Minister for Public Health announced on 2 May; and if he will make a statement about the future status of the Medical Devices Agency and the Medicines Control Agency. [93798]

Mr. Denham: We are publishing today the report of the Medical Devices Agency quinquennial review. Copies have been placed in the Library. The review concludes that the Agency is well respected in the medical device field both in the United Kingdom and Europe and has performed consistently well against its key targets. It finds that Executive Agency status has been beneficial and recommends that the MDA should remain as an Agency.

In light of the recommendation of the report we announced on 9 December 1998 and the more recent conclusions of the quinquennial reviews respectively of the MDA and the Medicines Control Agency, we have decided that the two Agencies should not be merged and that both should retain their status as separate Agencies for the time being.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the 12 Annual report of the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship. [93820]

Mr. Dobson: I have today published the 12 Annual Report of the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship. Copies have been placed in the Library.

NHS Estates Agency

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of the NHS Estates Agency. [93888]

Mr. Denham: A quinquennial review of the Agency falls to be completed by the end of this year. This will address the performance of the Agency and will re-examine all the options ("Prior Options") which were considered before the Agency was launched.

Equal Treatment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has established a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [93459]

Mr. Denham: I will write to the hon. Member.

Dementia Research

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much in each of the last three years his Department has spent on dementia research; and how much is allocated in the Comprehensive Spending Review for the next two years. [93309]

Mr. Hutton: With regard to the Department's spending on dementia research in the last three years I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Mid Sussex (Mr. Soames) on 21 June 1999, Official Report, column 289.

Comprehensive Spending Review settlements are given to Government Departments and do not include allocations to particular research programmes. Ministers are currently reviewing planned expenditure for 2000–01.

IVF Treatment

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities in the United Kingdom provide IVF treatment to women whose spouses have children by a previous marriage; and what was the cost of such provision to each authority in the last two financial years. [92581]

Ms Jowell: Information is not currently available in the form requested. However, a College of Health survey of health authorities (commissioned by the National Infertility Awareness Campaign in 1998) lists 70 health authorities which had formal eligibility criteria for assisted conception. Details can be found in the survey report, copies of which are available in the Library.

Information on the cost of providing National Health Service infertility treatment to individuals with existing children is not collected.

The Department is currently conducting a survey of health authority provision of infertility services in England. This should provide information on eligibility criteria used by all health authorities. The results of the survey are likely to be available later in the year.

Pharmacy Strategy

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the planned date for publication of the Government's pharmacy strategy review document; and when he expects it to be published. [92966]

Mr. Denham: I will write to the hon. Member.

Continence Services

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish updated guidance on continence services following the Review of Continence Services published on 2 September 1988. [93557]

(2) how many children over the age of two years have not received MMR immunisation; [93221]

(3) how many children at school entry age have not received (a) full DTP immunisation, (b) polio vaccine and (c) MUR immunisation. [93218]

Ms Jowell: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children over the age of 14 years have not received BCG immunisation. [93220]

Ms Jowell: Information is not held centrally in the form requested. The latest figures on number of BCG immunisations given are published in the Statistical Bulletin National Health Service Immunisation Statistical, England: 1997–98, copies of which are available in the Library.

Councillors

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 December 1998, Official Report, column 257, on councillors, if he will list the percentage of (a) men and (b) women councillors in each local authority at the latest available date. [93520]

Ms Jowell: The Women's Unit collated and analysed information on the gender breakdown of councillors during 1998. This information was made public on 10 December 1998 (copies placed in the Library). The tables break down the results by region and by local authority. This information is not routinely collected by any department.

Medicines (Advertising Regulations)

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the legal advice pertaining to the Medicines (Advertising and Monitoring of Advertising) Amendment Regulations 1999 (S.I., 1999, No. 267) referred to by the Minister for Public Health on 28 April 1999, Official Report, Ninth Standing Committee on Delegated Legislation, column 23. [93447]

Ms Jowell: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will deposit in the Library all data used in the assessment of cost-effectiveness of the new meningitis C vaccine. [93341]

Ms Jowell: I will write to the hon. Member.

IT Procurement

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the review of procurement processes mentioned in the Information for Health document has been carried out. [92582]

Mr. Denham: The purpose of the review into National Health Service information management and technology procurement in England is to improve the procurement and implementation of "fit for purpose" clinical systems. The review is in two phases, with the first phase reporting to Ministers at the end of March 1999. The second Phase is due for completion shortly. Relevant information from the review will be published on the IM and T investment website at www.open.gov.uk/doh/itinvest.htm.

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are for the NHS Information Authority to implement a standard PFI contract for IT services. [92583]

Mr. Denham: The desirability and feasibility of a standard Private Finance Initiative contract for Information Technology services is being considered as part of the National Health Service IT Procurement Review. In addition, Her Majesty's Treasury's Task Force are developing standard contract clauses for IT services. The NHS Executive will take this work into account before considering whether to implement standard contracts for IT services, whether funded through the Private Finance Initiative or public capital.

Genetic Modification

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department will take to introduce guidance to health authorities concerning compulsory labelling of ingredients produced as a result of genetic modification in meals served to hospital patients. [93363]

Ms Jowell: The Government have recently produced guidance on labelling of food containing genetically modified ingredients which includes meals served to hospital patients.

Biological and Chemical Weapons

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what additional funding he will provide to enhance ambulance and accident and emergency services' ability to protect staff and to improve decontamination facilities, as announced in the Government paper on 21 July, "Defending Against the Threat from Biological and Chemical Weapons"; and if he will make a statement; [93096]

(2) what additional resources he will make available to (a) health authorities and (b) ambulance trusts in England and Wales for the preparation, provision and annual funding needed to meet the new tasks announced in the Government paper on 21 July, "Defending Against the Threat from Biological and Chemical Weapons"; and if he will make a statement; [93098]

(3) in what ways, and at what cost, his Department will co-ordinate the emergency provision of healthcare services in response to a release of biological or chemical material, as announced on 21 July in the Government paper, "Defending Against the Threat from Biological and Chemical Weapons"; and if he will make a statement. [93097]

Ms Jowell: The Department and the National Health Service have already begun to enhance the capacity of the health service to deal with a possible threat from chemical or biological weapons. Measures being taken as part of this enhancement programme include the further strengthening of protection for ambulance service and hospital staff, and the improvement of decontamination facilities.

Improvements to facilities for decontamination are included in the Government's £115 million accident and emergency modernisation programme, which was announced earlier this year. We are making resources available to ensure the success of the enhancement programme to strengthen further the response capacity of the health service.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the link between the level of prescription charges payable by a patient and a capital disregard was introduced; and if he will make a statement. [93382]

Mr. Denham: I will write to the hon. Member.

Paper, "Saving Lives–Our Healthier Nation", of the effect on diabetics of changes in the prescribing of insulin and insulin pen needles. [93288]

Ms Jowell: The White Paper, "Saving Lives—Our Healthier Nation", was published on 6 July. We are still considering representations from organisations on separate proposals to allow insulin pen needles to be prescribed by NHS general practitioners.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations were considered from the British Diabetics Association and diabetes sufferers before producing his White Paper, "Saving Lives—Our Healthier Nation". [93289]

Mr. Hutton: The Department of Health received and considered 34 responses about diabetes from organisations, including the British Diabetic Association, and a further 63 from individuals.

Community Health Councils

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the spending of public funds by community health councils is audited and scrutinised. [93211]

Mr. Denham: Community health councils are subject to internal audit by the National Health Service Executive. They also produce an annual financial report.

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the arrangements for the accountability of community health councils; and to whom they are accountable. [93209]

Mr. Denham: Community health councils (CHCs) are subject to the regulations under which they were established. They are accountable to the public, the establishing body, Parliament and the courts. National Health Service Executive Regional Offices maintain strategic links with CHCs.

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the occasions in the past five years when the actions of community health councils have been subject to judicial review. [93212]

Mr. Denham: As far as we are aware, there have been no occasions in the past five years when the actions of community health councils have been subject to judicial review

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the funding of community health councils is determined. [93210]

Mr. Denham: Community health councils are funded centrally at a level judged appropriate to cover the expenditure they reasonably incur in the course of performing their functions.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the value of tourism to the economies of (a) the east midlands and (b) Leicestershire in (i) 1997 and (ii) 1998. [83169]

Janet Anderson: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall therefore write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact on the United Kingdom tourist industry of electronic commerce. [93142]

Janet Anderson: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall therefore write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of the materials used in the construction of the Millennium Dome originated from East Midlands companies. [90500]

Janet Anderson: New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) does not keep detailed records of the regional origin of materials used for the construction of the Dome. Contracts totalling over £4 million have been let to companies in the Midlands—Keller Ground Engineering; Euro Air; and Terrapin.

Ministerial Meetings (USA)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what meetings the previous Under-Secretary, the right hon. Member for Coatbridge and Chryston (Mr. Clarke), held with officials of the United States Government during his visit in January 1998 to Los Angeles; and if he will list the date of, location of, and names of departments of the US officials who took part in each meeting. [92267]

Janet Anderson: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall therefore write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Shooting Events

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the ban on handguns will prevent shooting events being staged during any international games held in the United Kingdom. [92760]

Mr. Banks: Prohibited weapons may not be possessed without the express authority of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. During the passage of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 through Parliament, it was agreed that provision could be made for competitors in pistol events in major competitions such as the Olympics or Commonwealth Games to be granted temporary authority to allow them to bring their pistols into the country for the duration of the event. Indeed, the European Police Pistol Championships were held in this country shortly after the prohibition on handguns took effect, and I understand the arrangements worked smoothly and no problems were experienced by any of the competitors.

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what provisions have been made to allow sportsmen and women who have previously represented the United Kingdom in events using handguns of a calibre now banned to continue to compete in future Olympic and Commonwealth Games. [92759]

Mr. Banks: The Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 prohibited handguns of the type used in competition shooting, but it applies only in Great Britain. There is no bar to British pistol shooters practising and competing abroad in whatever disciplines or events they wish. I understand that some competition shooters have chosen to practice and compete in this way.

World Cup

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the authorities in Botswana over the hosting of the Football World Cup in 2006. [93143]

Mr. Banks: During my visit to Botswana from 26–30 April with the Football Association I met the hon. Lt. Gen. Mompati S. Merafhe MP, Botswanan Minister for Foreign Affairs, the hon. B. K. Temane MP, Minister for Labour and Home Affairs, the Chairman and representatives of the Botswanan Football Association. I discussed a number of sports issues including UEFA's Meridian Project which links the English FA with Botswana, the significance of sport in national development and the forthcoming Botswanan White Paper on Sports Policy. I also took the opportunity to outline the merits of the FA's bid for the 2006 World Cup. The meetings were extremely useful and productive, and built upon the excellent bi-lateral relations which already exist between our two countries.

Trafalgar Square

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which organisations applied to hold meetings in Trafalgar Square, London on 18 July; in what order the applications were received; which organisation held a meeting on 18 July at Trafalgar Square; and if he will make a statement. [92939]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 26 July 1999]: The Turkish Cypriot Network (TCN) and the National Federation of Greek Cypriots (NFGC) made requests by telephone some time ago to use Trafalgar Square on 18 July and the NFGC by letter on 4 January. Both organisations were advised that the normal practice is to consider applications no more than 3 months in advance and that they should re-apply at that time.

The TCN applied to hold a party and were invited on 20 April to submit details of their intentions: these were submitted on 30 April and permission was refused on 7 May since the proposed celebrations were inappropriate to and out of scale with Trafalgar Square. On 3 May the NFGC sent by facsimile a copy of a letter dated 18 April seeking approval to hold a rally in Trafalgar Square with speeches; similar rallies have been held in Trafalgar Square by this group for a number of years.

The TCN submitted a revised proposal on 12 May. Two other requests to use Trafalgar Square on 18 July were made during this period, but no details were given and no reply received to the Department's request for further information.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's judgment was that the proposal from the NFGC of 7 May was the first which constituted an application for an event suitable for Trafalgar Square and he noted that such an event had taken place in previous years: this application therefore received consent. The TCN were invited to consider alternative venues for their event. A march from Marble Arch to Belgrave Square, which we understand TCN attended, was held by the British Council of Turkish Cypriot Associations on 18 July.

Millennium Experience (North-West)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement about employment opportunities in the north west resulting from the celebrations connected with the Millennium Experience. [72123]

Janet Anderson: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall therefore write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Equal Treatment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he has established a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [93463]

Mr. Chris Smith: As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that their policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, my Department is working with the Women's Unit, Home Office and DfEE to develop good practices for ensuring that our policies meet the changing needs of all members of society.

"Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment", published by the Cabinet Office, Home Office, DfEE and the Women's Unit in November 1998, has been circulated to staff within my Department to ensure that the effects of any policy changes on all sections of the population are considered at the earliest stage of policy development.

My Department has set targets for measuring progress on equal treatment in its own employment policies and in appointments to its sponsored bodies. It requires those sponsored bodies to set targets for equal treatment in their areas of interest.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Baton Rounds

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes are to be made to the guidelines on the police use of baton rounds. [93894]

Mr. Straw: I have approved new operational guidelines on the use of baton rounds, which will be issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers, replacing current Home Office guidance. These will come into force on 1 August 1999. With the agreement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, the guidelines will apply in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The new guidelines will clarify that baton rounds may be used where other methods of policing to restore order have been tried and failed or are likely to fail; and there is a risk of loss of life or serious injury arising from serious public disorder; or a risk of serious and substantial damage to property which gives rise to a risk of loss of life or serious injury. The new guidelines clarify that, in assessing the risk of loss of life or serious injury occurring, account should be taken of the risk to police officers and members of the emergency services as well as to members of the public and others. The revised guidelines place the use of baton rounds within the current command and control structure for dealing with serious public disorder and other critical incidents.

A copy has been placed in the Library.

Government Information

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the 1988 report on the operation of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. [93895]

Mr. Straw: I have published this report today and copies have been placed in the Library.

Child Protection

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by the Interdepartmental Working Group on Preventing Unsuitable People from Working with Children and Abuse of Trust on the details of their scheme to protect children following their report on 25 January; and if he will make a statement. [93896]

Mr. Straw: Following its report on 25 January, we asked the Interdepartmental Working Group to work up the details of the scheme. It has now completed this work. I will be placing a short summary in the Library on 29 July.

Immigration

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the Immigration (Places of Detention) Direction 1996; and if he will make a statement. [93897]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration (Places of Detention) Direction 1996 has been amended and copies have been placed in the Library.

It was necessary to amend the Direction in order to:

enable detention, where facilities have been specially provided, at immigration offices which are not at ports of entry. This will allow our proposals for a new reporting centre at Becket House to be implemented in October of this year when it is expected to be ready for operation;

delete the 'out of date' reference to Meadvale detention centre, which is no longer in operation; and amend reference to a 'place of safety' in a Northern Ireland context to take account of the observations of the Legislative Counsel in Northern Ireland.

Ethnic Minority Staff

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his race equality employment targets for ethnic minority staff in the Home Office and its service areas. [93898]

Mr. Straw: I will tomorrow place a copy of "Race Equality—The Home Secretary's Employment Targets" in the Library. The paper sets out recruitment, retention and career progression targets for ethnic minority staff in the Home Office, the prison, the police, the fire and the probation services.

Travel Documents

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on charging for Home Office travel documents. [93899]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office has issued travel documents to refugees, stateless persons and some other third country nationals for many years. This service has always been subject to the payment of a fee. These travel documents are issued under the Royal Prerogative, but there is no specific legal power for the taking of fees in connection with such documents. The Home Office first received legal advice raising questions about the legal basis for charges and advising that specific powers should be taken to charge for these documents on 9 February 1999. I have, therefore, decided that it would be right for applications outstanding on that date to be processed free of charge, as will applications received between that date and the date on which new fees regulations are made. These applicants need take no action. Refunds, where appropriate, will be offered automatically by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, although it is likely to be some months before all applicants receive their refunds.

Until 31 December 1993, refunds were made to all applicants whose applications for a travel document were refused. Since then, the practice has been to charge for processing applications, whether or not a document is issued. It is not proposed to offer refunds to applicants whose cases were completed before 9 February 1999, who were charged in good faith and who received the document for which they applied. But there are an estimated 1,500 applicants who received neither a travel document, because their application was refused, nor a refund, because their application was determined after 31 December 1993. It is proposed to offer refunds to such applicants provided they apply before 30 November 1999. It is, however, not possible to identify such applications from Home Office records and we are inviting those immigration advisers who are members of the Immigration and Nationality User Panel to help to trace those who may be eligible for a refund.

An information line has been established which gives more detail about eligibility for refunds, how to apply if necessary, and how refunds will be made. The number of the information line is 020 8681 5615. Information is also being placed on the Immigration and Nationality internet website—www.homeoffice.gov.uk./ind/hpg.htm.

In the light of the legal advice which has been received, I have decided that it would be right to put beyond doubt the power to levy fees in connection with Home Office travel documents. A new clause to this effect will accordingly be brought forward to the Immigration and Asylum Bill, which is currently before the House of Lords. The clause will be retrospective—it will have the effect of making charges imposed by the Home Office in the past, in connection with travel documents, lawful.

In the meantime, there is an enabling power in the Finance Act 1973 to charge for services provided by the Government pursuant to any international treaty to which the United Kingdom is a party. This would cover documents issued to refugees and stateless persons in accordance with the relevant United Nations Conventions, although not other types of travel document. I have decided to exercise these powers pending the enactment of wider powers in the Immigration and Asylum Bill. When the Bill has received Royal Assent, regulations will be made covering fees for the full range of travel documents.

National Lottery

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the fourth report on the impact of the National Lottery on the horserace betting levy. [93900]

Mr. George Howarth: An update on the impact of the National Lottery on the horserace betting levy has been published today and copies have been placed in the Library. This fulfils an undertaking made during the passage of the National Lottery Bill.

The paper, which has been prepared by the Economics and Resource Analysis Unit of the Home Office, examines continuing trends in off-course betting expenditure, on which the levy is closely dependent.

The statistical analysis suggests that, in 1998, approximately £1.1 billion was diverted from off-course betting expenditure as a direct result of the National Lottery. This equates to off-course betting expenditure being about 13.2 per cent. below the level it would have reached in the absence of the Lottery. Horserace betting accounts for about 69 per cent. of off-course betting expenditure and, therefore, the levy yield is likely to have been similarly affected. This can be only an approximate figure, and the effect of the Lottery may vary over time.

Motorcycle Gatherings

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the occasions over the past three years when the police have recommended to organisers of motorcycle gatherings that the event be cancelled; for what reason the recommendation in each case was made; what was the response of the organisers; on the occasions when the event subsequently went ahead, if there were any arrests; and if he will make a statement. [92755]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not collated centrally. The decision to recommend cancellation of an event on public order or public safety grounds is an operational matter for the local chief officer of police.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requirement is placed upon the police to take account of losses likely to be incurred when they recommend to organisers of motorcycle gatherings that the event be cancelled; and if he will make a statement. [92756]

Mr. Boateng: None. This is a matter for event organisers and the local police.

Young Offenders

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what actions he has taken to improve the management of Her Majesty's Young Offenders Institution and Remand Centre, Feltham following the report by the steering group set up by the Director General of the Prison Service in response to the recommendations made by the Chief Inspector of Prisons. [92629]

Mr. George Howarth: The steering group set up by the Director General of the Prison Service for Feltham Young Offenders Institution, following the Chief Inspector of Prisons' report, endorsed the recommendations contained in the four reports submitted to it by the task force which went into Feltham to address the immediate problems. The recommendations will form part of an action plan detailing improvements to be taken forward and will build on the six month improvement plan charted at the time of the inspection. This action plan is expected to be finalised shortly.

Many improvements have already been taken forward at Feltham. The task force identified 39 issues for immediate action, 33 of these have now been implemented and work on the remaining six is well in hand. The significant achievements include:

making significant in-roads into the 'transit-camp' problem by ending the use of Kestrel unit as a daily discharge unit and the use of Osprey unit for allocation purposes;

reducing the capacity of Feltham by 72 thereby reducing the overcrowding and allowing the refurbishment of two units to begin;

increasing the quality of health care by moving into a fully refurbished health care unit and through the provision of eight officers on detached duty from other establishments to offset the staff shortages; discussions have begun with the local health authority about future service delivery; increasing the amount of physical education from two to five classes in both the morning and afternoon sessions; increasing the numbers attending education by 30;

securing additional £2 million funding to develop a separate regime for under 18 year olds which will include 12 hours out of cell each day and 30 hours purposeful activity each week, for which a further £3.4 million capital investment is being made to provide separate reception and education facilities for the under 18s.

an assessment centre has been held to recruit more officers. Consultation on proposals for revised staff attendance and shift patterns commenced this month;

nearly 600 mattresses have been replaced and general cleanliness and hygiene have been improved with new cleaning schedules and inspection arrangements; and funds have been made available to undertake a backlog of small repairs.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if a court can order a secure remand for a young defendant when no place is available; and if he will make a statement; [92917]

(2) what was the total availability of local authority secure accommodation for juvenile and young offenders on the last date for which figures are available and in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [92916]

(3) what has been the demand for secure accommodation for juvenile and young offenders in each of the last 12 months; on how many occasions a place was not found when requested; and if he will make a statement; [92915]

(4) what representations he has received about the operation of the national clearing system for secure accommodation for juvenile and young offenders; and if he will make a statement; [92918]

Mr. Straw: The local authority secure estate is used both to accommodate any child who is being looked after by the local authority under the Children Act 1989, and to hold those who are sentenced under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969, those sentenced to a secure training order under section 1 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 and those who are held on secure remand. Since 1994, the number of approved secure places, those children accommodated and the occupancy rate of secure units available[1] in England and Wales[2] (as at 31 March) is given in the table:

Year	Approved places	Children accommodated	Occupancy rate (per cent.)
1994	289	244	84
1995	266	233	88
1996	274	246	90
1997	348	290	83
1998	456	334	73

[2] Welsh information has only been available since 1997 (previously Wales had two small units providing two places each)

A Government funded building programme was put in place to expand the local authority secure estate by 170 places specifically to allow for the implementation of the provisions in relation to court-ordered secure remands. These places are now available and the total number of approved places in local authority secure accommodation is 460.

Section 97 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, which came into force on 1 June 1999, allows courts, where certain criteria are met, to remand direct to local authority secure accommodation 12 to 14 year old boys and girls and 15 and 16 year old girls. Where a court remands a child or young person to local authority secure accommodation, it must designate a relevant local authority. Under section 23(4) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969, there is a requirement on the court to consult the designated local authority before it imposes a security requirement. The purpose of such consultation is to allow the local authority to provide the court with information so that the court is best placed to make an appropriate decision depending on the circumstances of the case. Such information should include the nature and availability of local provision to support a remand in the community, and the nature and availability of secure and non-secure local authority accommodation. Where the court then remands a child or young person to local authority secure accommodation, the designated local authority is under a duty under section 61 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to comply with the security requirement.

Section 98 of the 1998 Crime and Disorder Act, which also came into force on 1 June 1999, allows courts, where certain criteria are met, to remand direct to local authority secure accommodation 15 and 16 year old boys whom, by reason of their physical or emotional immaturity or a propensity to harm themselves, the courts consider it would be undesirable to remand to Prison Service accommodation. Before reaching such an opinion the court must consult a probation officer, a local authority social worker or a member of a youth offending team and before ordering a remand to local authority secure accommodation in such a case, the court must be notified that such accommodation is available.

In providing advice to the courts about the availability of local authority secure accommodation and in complying with security requirements imposed by the courts, local authorities may use information held by the national bedbank service, set up and funded by the Department of Health and operated by Leeds Social Services Department. This is not a clearing house facility and is designed only to provide information to local authorities on the availability of secure places. We have received one written representation on the operation of the national bedbank service.

Information is not recorded centrally on the demand for local authority secure accommodation or the number of occasions a place has not been found when requested.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department, announced in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) on 22 July 1999, Official Report, columns 622–23, that the Youth Justice Board for England and Wales will, from April 2000, become the commissioning and purchasing body for all forms of secure accommodation for children and young people on remand or under sentence. A copy of the Board's advice on how this should operate has been placed in the Library. One element is the establishment of a clearing house facility to manage the placement of children and young people in secure accommodation, including the local authority secure estate. The Board is now consulting local authorities and other bodies on its proposals.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the size of young offender institutions in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [92883]

Mr. George Howarth: The size of Young Offender Institutions in England and Wales was considered as part of the design for the Prison Service's new distinct juvenile estate, and I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 27 April 1999, Official Report, column 109, about the composition of the estate.

Since then, Aylesbury has been withdrawn from the estate as the need for the role originally envisaged for the establishment has changed. Aylesbury will continue to take a small number of difficult/longer-term juveniles where that offers the most appropriate way of meeting their individual needs.

There are no proposals to vary the size of Young Offender Institutions for 18–20 year old offenders.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review staff training in young offender institutions in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [92884]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service is in the process of developing its 'Nature of Adolescence' training for staff who work with young people in custody. This work is being carried out in collaboration with the Trust for the Study of Adolescence. Separately, the Youth Justice Board has begun tendering for the provision of training for all staff who work in the youth justice system, which will make with special provision for those who work in secure facilities. This is to support the implementation of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, and the delivery of the principal aim of the youth justice system which is to prevent offending by children and young people.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it is currently taking the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to respond to correspondence; what progress has been made in reducing the time taken; and if he will make a statement. [92714]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The latest position is that 60 per cent. of correspondence is responded to within 20 working days, excluding correspondence related to applications and casework. Additional staff are being recruited and overtime exercises are being brought into operation in order to achieve significant improvements in response times.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made in respect of each month in the current year of the average daily number of (a) callers trying to make a call to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, (b) calls made to that Directorate and (c) calls answered by the Telephone Caller Unit. [92843]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 23 July 1999]: The figures relating to telephone calls to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate are provided each month by British Telecom and are actuals rather than estimates. Daily averages, by month, are set out in the table:

	Number of callers	Number of calls	Calls answered
January	n/a	60,043	2,109
February	5,281	50,217	1,669
March	5,432	46,334	1,781
April	4,112	42,601	1,495
May	4,610	48,301	1,535
June	5,617	56,223	1,707

Staff in the Immigration and Nationality Enquiry Bureau (INEB) are being hampered in their ability to deal with calls quickly because of delays in other parts of the Integrated Casework Directorate (ICD), arising from the transition to Team Based Caseworking. Measures are in place to improve the situation, including recruitment of around 300 staff to fill vacancies in ICD. INEB staff are being given more in-depth training in call handling and new staff are being recruited and trained. Much of the increase in calls in June has been connected with passport inquiries.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average daily number of personal callers to each public inquiry office of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in each month since the beginning of 1999. [92894]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The average daily number of callers to each public inquiry office during 1999 is set out in the table:

	January	February	March	April	May	June
Public Caller Unit, Croydon	723	627	723	661	663	862
Asylum Screening Unit, Croydon	325	297	175	226	202	239
Liverpool Public Enquiry Office	44	40	32	26	40	34
Midlands Public Enquiry Office	92	97	86	81	81	117
Glasgow Public Enquiry Office	40	33	43	32	32	54
Belfast Public Enquiry Office	17	14	10	11	14	23

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average waiting time in each month in 1999 and for the most recent date for which information is available for consideration of applications to each of the divisions of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [92893]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The average waiting times in each month of 1999 for nationality cases are set out in the table:

	Average waiting times (Months)
Month	Naturalisation	Registration	Overall
January	20.5	9	19.4
February	20.3	7.7	18.9
March	20.6	6.8	19.1
April	20.8	6.4	18.7
May	20.7	7.2	18.9
June	20.5.	6.6	18.2

Average waiting times for immigration and asylum cases are not recorded as Integrated Casework Directorate caseworking procedures give priority to types of application rather than dealing with cases in chronological order. All applications are sifted in the Initial Consideration Unit. Straightforward cases (about 40 per cent.) are dealt with under a fast track procedure within about four weeks of receipt. More complex cases are allocated to Case Management Units for detailed consideration. The length of time between receipt and decision will depend on the complexity of the case. Delays in dealing with cases may be due to a variety of factors, including legal interventions by applicants and court cases.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the backlog of cases for each of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's divisions at the end of each month in 1999 and at the latest date for which information is available. [92896]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Integrated Casework Directorate, which was set up at the beginning of 1999, handles all nationality, immigration and asylum casework previously dealt with in five separate Immigration and Nationality Directorate divisions. The backlog of immigration and asylum cases, and separately nationality cases, at the end of each month is set out in the table:

Month	Number of cases
Immigration and Asylum
January	63,622
February	69,388
March	84,404
April	93,943
May	122,102
June	145,991
Nationality
January	101,600
February	101,100
March	101,700
April	101,700
June	95,200

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the countries for whose nationals the fast-track service operated by the Public Caller Unit at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate for the quick determination of certain types of immigration applications is not available. [93304]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The availability of the fast-track service operated by the Public Caller Unit (PCU) at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) is normally determined by the category of application rather than the nationality of the applicant, as well as by the individual facts of each case. The only exception to general policy is in respect of North Korean and Libyan nationals. However, in the light of the recent resumption of diplomatic relations with Libya, we are in the process of reviewing our policy towards Libyan nationals. In recent months, because of pressures resulting from the major changes which have taken place in IND, the PCU fast-track service has had to be restricted and occasionally suspended altogether.

Immigration and Asylum

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration and asylum cases his Department has had outstanding for over one year; if he will provide a breakdown of the years in which the cases commenced and indicate the progress being made in eliminating the backlog; and if he will make a statement. [92713]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are approximately 80,935 immigration and asylum cases that have been outstanding for over one year. The breakdown is:

	Number
1998	36,081
1997	15,964
1996	8,134
1995	9,438
1994	4,820
1993	1,327
1992	343
1991	245
1990	109
Pre 1990	133
Undated	4,3[illegible]

A number of measures have already been identified to tackle the general backlog which has built up because of the difficulties encountered in setting up the Integrated Casework Directorate (ICD). These include the setting up of an After Entry Clearance Team and a Correspondence Backlog Team. Steps already taken include special exercises to target priority cases such as work permit applications, changes in procedures that will result in increased productivity and increased staffing.

Additionally, immediate and long term plans are in hand to tackle the more substantive backlogs in the areas of asylum, enforcement and nationality.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is towards (a) the proposed mutual recognition of member states of the European Union and each other's decisions on asylum applications and (b) the proposed harmonisation within the European Union of criteria for the recognition of refugees. [92783]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 23 July 1999]: It is a requirement of The Treaty of Amsterdam for measures that determine minimum standards applicable to the handling of asylum applications be introduced. The United Kingdom has the choice to opt in to such measures. There has been no proposal as yet regarding minimum standards for the criteria in recognising refugees. There has been no proposal to effect the mutual recognition of other member states' asylum decisions and such a proposal is not a requirement of the Treaty of Amsterdam.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications for asylum have been made in each month since the beginning of 1999 (a) by persons arriving at ports of entry and (b) by persons already in the United Kingdom; [92777]

(2) how many asylum seekers entered the United Kingdom in each month since March 1999; and of these how many were (a) granted asylum, (b) granted leave to remain and (c) refused the right to remain; [92778]

(3) what was the backlog of asylum casework in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate at the last date for which information is available; [92841]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 23 July 1999]: The information requested was made available on the Home Office Internet site at http//www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/index/htm, as part of the monthly reporting of asylum figures, on 26 July 1999.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum decisions were made in each month from January 1997 to the latest month for which information is available. [92790]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 23 July 1999]: The requested information is given in the table:

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications were received from Sri Lanka nationals in each of the last 10 years; how many of the applications have been (a) granted, (b) refused but subject to appeal, (c) refused and exhausted appeal, (d) awaiting initial decision, (e) deported and (f) left the country; and if he will make a statement. [93549]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what strategies he is planning to ensure that the Immigration and Nationality Directorate is able to cope with the forecast increase in applications for naturalisation expected 12 months after the granting of indefinite leave to remain to refugees and those affected by the backlog clearance programme, without lengthening current waiting periods. [93336]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No increase in applications for naturalisation resulting from output elsewhere in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate is expected imminently. By the time these applications start to reach the Integrated Casework Directorate's Liverpool office (which has superseded the Nationality Directorate), various initiatives to speed up output will have taken effect.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Ministerial Group on the Family will consider the effect of the immigration rules and the nationality legislation on families with members abroad. [93454]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In "Supporting Families: summary of responses to the consultation document", published on 8 June 1999, we said that the Ministerial Group on the Family is working on five new initiatives; support for boys, young men and fathers; supporting stepfamilies; adoption policy and practice; the support available to families at different crisis points; and ensuring that Government funding for families fits together well. Given the existing priorities of the group, it has no plans to look into the effect of immigration rules and nationality legislation on families with members abroad at present.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the funding of immigration advice under section 23 of the Immigration Act 1971. [93452]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Subject to the approval of Parliament, funding for advice, assistance and representation will be available through legal aid from January 2000. In due course, when we have had the opportunity to assess the true level of need for immigration advice, we will consider whether funding under section 23 should be transferred from the Home Office to the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to curtail the use of prison accommodation for those detained solely under Immigration Act powers; and by what date he expects to cease to use prison accommodation. [93516]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government are committed, as resources become available, to the pursuit of a strategy of detaining those detained soley under Immigration Act 1971 powers in dedicated detention centres and holding centres, not prisons. Key to this strategy is the replacement of the Harmondsworth centre and the use of Her Majesty's Prison Rochester by two larger, purpose designed centres at Heathrow and Aldington. These facilities are expected to be available by the spring of 2002 and will offer an increase of some 250 beds. There are more immediate plans to provide a dedicated centre in the North of England for about 150 detainees within the next six to nine months. This will reduce the ad hoc use of prisons. In order that this can be delivered quickly, it is likely to be provided and managed by the Prison Service. It will however be a self contained, discrete unit solely for the use of Immigration Act detainees.

This strategy will ensure a net gain of about 300–350 detention places by 2002 and will greatly reduce the use of prison accommodation. However the Government accept that there will always be a need to use prisons for a minority of detainees, due to their special requirements, and this practice will continue. The number of such detainees detained in prison accommodation by 2002 is expected to be minimal.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what grounds Immigration Service staff refuse to accept those who are themselves asylum seekers, with permission to work, as interpreters or representatives of other asylum seekers at interviews. [93514]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 16 June 1998, Official Report, column 178.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many warnings have been given to employers concerning liability to prosecution under section 8 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 for the hiring of persons who do not have authority to work in the United Kingdom in the last year. [93450]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am afraid there is no central record of the number of section 8 warning letters that have been issued to employers.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) breaches of airport security have been occasioned by and (b) immigration offences have been committed by the solicitors or other representatives of persons attending interviews with the Immigration Service at airports. [93335]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Aviation security is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR). I am, however, advised that the Transport Security (Aviation) section of the DETR maintains a voluntary reporting system of aviation security incidents at airports, but the information does not categorise incidents of this kind. Similarly, the Immigration Service does not hold information about immigration offences in the form requested.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been paid out in repatriation expenses under section 29 of the Immigration Act 1971 in each of the past five years. [93453]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The International Social Services of the United Kingdom is funded to administer the Voluntary Return Scheme on behalf of the Government.

The financial returns indicate the following expenditure for the last five years:

Year	Assistance	Administration	Total
1998–99	48,610	63,500	112,110
1997–98	59,113	54,713	113,826
1996–97	50,464	57,221	107,685
1995–96	38,819	88,128	126,947

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many decisions to deport, pursuant to section 3(5)(a) Immigration Act 1971 have been taken, in the past 12 months for (i) failure to report to a medical officer, (ii) failure to support and accommodate without recourse to public funds, (iii) obtaining leave to enter by deception, (iv) obtaining leave to remain by deception, (v) assisting the entry of another person an illegal entrant and (vi) assisting the entry of another person as an asylum claimant. [93334]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: 3,930 decisions to deport were taken under section 3(5)(a) of the Immigration Act 1971 in 1998. 210 of these were for breach of conditions but the records do not show the nature of the conditions which had not been compiled with. It is, therefore, not possible to identify whether any of this latter group of decisions were taken for either of the first two reasons listed in the question other than by examining the individual case files.

Someone who obtains leave to enter by deception is an illegal entrant and would not be subject to deportation action under section 3(5)(a). Someone who obtains leave to remain by deception is currently liable to deportation under section 3(5)(aa) of the Act. No more than five decisions to deport were taken under that section in 1998.

It is extremely unlikely that someone who had assisted the entry of an illegal entrant or an asylum claimant contrary to section 25(1) of the Act would be subject to deportation under section 3(5)(a). In those circumstances, deportation action under either section 3(5)(b) or, where applicable, section 3(6) of the 1971 Act would be more appropriate. 120 decisions to deport were taken under section 3(5)(b) in 1998 and 340 people were recommended for deportation by a court in that year, but again records are not sufficiently detailed to show whether or not the decision was taken for one or other of the last two reasons listed in the question and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by examining each individual case file.

Apart from the number of decisions to deport under section 3(5)(aa), the figures in this reply have been rounded to the nearest 10.

Departmental Expenditure (Leeds)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the programmes funded directly by his Department, relating to social exclusion, regeneration, community development, employment or education, currently operating in (a) the City of Leeds and (b) the Leeds Central parliamentary constituency, listing for each programme the amount of such funding for each of the last three years and the amount planned to be spent in each of the next three financial years. [92913]

Mr. Boateng: The projects shown in the table have been separately funded by the Home Office in the last three years or are to be funded within the next three years. Future funding decisions remain to be announced.

In addition, the new Home Office Family Support Grants programme was set up to fund family and parenting support across the country. Grants awarded this year will not go to any projects operating in Leeds alone, but £2,611,813 has been allocated this year to national charities for projects supporting parents and families across the country. This includes, for example, Parentline, a national helpline for parents, and funding for Fathers Direct, a new national charity, which will map the support available for fathers in every town or region. Some of this funding for national organisations will, therefore, directly benefit Leeds.

Since April 1994, four Home Office spending programmes have been included in the Single Regeneration Budget (SRB), some funding of which has gone and is going to projects in Leeds.

Drug Seizures

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug seizures occurred in each of the last three years per region; and what was the estimated value of the drugs. [92888]

Mr. Boateng: Regional data relating to drug seizure numbers and value are not available because relevant information from the Regional Crime Squads, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and British Transport Police cannot be disaggregated into regions. These three authorities contributed nearly three-quarters of total seizures by weight, and therefore value in the United Kingdom in 1997.

Neighbourhood Wardens

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood patrol or warden schemes are currently in operation in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [92886]

Mr. Boateng: No central record is kept of the number of neighbourhood warden-type schemes that are operating in England and Wales.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports were made by action teams led by his Department on the issue of neighbourhood wardens before April. [93048]

Mr. Boateng: The draft report of the Policy Action Team on Neighbourhood Wardens, which was chaired by a senior civil servant from the Home Office, was submitted to the Social Exclusion Unit in April. The report is to be consulted upon and then will be published in due course.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report of the Policy Action Team relating to neighbourhood wardens; and if he will make a statement. [93383]

Mr. Boateng: The draft report of the Policy Action team on Neighbourhood Wardens, which was chaired by a senior civil servant from the Home Office, was submitted to the Social Exclusion Unit in April. The report is to be consulted upon and then will be published in due course.

Private Security Industry

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on his policy in relation to the use of the private security industry for policing functions including police patrol; [93046]

(2) what discussions Ministers in his Department have had with (a) chief police officers and their representatives, (b) Police Federation Representatives and (c) representatives of private security companies, since May 1997 concerning the future of police patrolling; and if he will make a statement; [92887]

(3) which (a) ministerial committees and (b) working groups are assessing policy in relation to the private security industry and policing functions including police patrol; and if he will make a statement. [93047]

Mr. Boateng: I have no plans for police patrol or any other police functions to be carried out by the private security industry, except that we have proposed that the escorting of certain abnormal loads should, in future, be carried out by the private sector. Representatives of the police and other bodies have raised many matters in discussions, but neither I nor my Ministerial colleagues have proposed any changes to responsibility for police patrolling. No Ministerial committees or Working Groups are currently examining any such proposals.

Criminals (Age Profile)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the last year for which figures are available, what was the average age of people who committed a (a) violent offence, (b) property offence and (c) sex offence; and if he will make a statement. [92890]

Mr. Boateng: Information as to the age of offenders is available only for those cautioned or convicted. The average age cannot be calculated exactly from data on the Home Office Cautions and Court Proceedings databases, but the median age in 1997 for violent offence was 23 years, for property offences it was 22 years; and for sex offences it was 33 years. The table shows the number of persons cautioned or convicted from which the median age has been derived.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Private Finance Initiatives

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will present to Parliament a report on the operation of all private finance initiative contracts made by his Department; and if he will make a statement. [93025]

Mr. Straw: I have no present plans to present a report to Parliament on the operation of all private finance initiative contracts made by my Department, but the current status of my Department's private finance initiative (PFI) contracts is summarised as follows:

Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) Casework Programme

Development of the Information Technology system was delayed, but is now with IND for testing. The IND's reorganised caseworking operation was introduced prior to delivery of the Information Technology system. After an initial deterioration in service to the public, Siemens Business Services (SBS) and IND have co-operated to restore output broadly to previous levels.

Secure Training Centres (STC)

Medway STC opened in April 1998. There were problems in the early months, which were outlined in the Social Services Inspectorate (SSI) Report published in January. A further inspection by SSI in April 1999 found that considerable improvements had been made to provide a more positive regime.

Rainsbrook STC opened on 1 July 1999 and there have been no problems to date. Hassockfield STC is due to open in September 1999.

United Kingdom Passport Agency (UKPA)

There are two PFI contracts in operation in the UKPA. SBS are responsible for data capture, and Security Printing and Systems (SP&S) are responsible for the manufacture of passports.

Roll out of services for all six Passport Agency offices was planned for early 1999. Because of difficulties encountered at the first two offices (Liverpool and Newport) to change over to the new system, further roll out has been postponed. Productivity on the new system has been less than that needed to meet demand; backlogs have built up; customer inquiries have increased; and the Agency's performance against a backdrop of high seasonal demand for passports has seriously declined.

Service credits have been levied on both companies. The UKPA is working closely with SBS to improve productivity, which continues to rise as further system improvements are made. Both SBS and the UKPA have recruited additional staff to deal with backlogs.

Gatwick Detention Facilities (Tinsley House)

Under this project, accommodation is provided by the British Airports Authority and the operation is run by Wackenhut (UK) Ltd. No reductions in payment have been made on either contract and there have been no operational difficulties.

Prisons

There are currently three Design, Construct, Manage and Finance (DCMF) prisons operating: Her Majesty's Prison Altcourse, Her Majesty's Prison Parc, and Her Majesty's Prison Lowdham Grange.

Despite some early teething troubles, in particular at Her Majesty's Prison Parc where an action plan to improve performance was implemented, all three prisons are now operating satisfactorily and provide much needed accommodation for the Prison Service. A Prison Service appointed controller provides permanent on site contract monitoring at each prison with contract management and performance audits being administered by Prison Service Headquarters centrally. Where performance does not meet the standards specified in the contracts, contractors incur financial penalties. Following performance improvements, the level of penalties imposed on contractors has decreased substantially.

Contracts for three further DCMF prisons, Forest Bank, Ashfield and Onley have been signed, but they have not yet opened (Onley was signed on 22 July 1999).

The contract for Coldingley prison industries workshop was terminated on 31 January 1999.

Prison PABX System

Delays were experienced during the installation phase of the contract, and this resulted in a reduction in payment. Since completion of the installations in October 1997, the systems have performed well and are providing a good service. The Prison Service holds regular meetings with the supplier to ensure that the quality of service is maintained.

Prison Shops

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison service establishments have contracted out their shops (a) following competitive tendering, (b) without competitive tendering and (c) in total; if he will list the companies which operate each of the shops; what is the expected saving to the Prison Service from contracting out prison shops; and if he will make a statement. [92904]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is given in the table. I will write to the right hon. Member in respect of the four prisons for which information on the savings made is not immediately to hand.

Stop and Search

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the accuracy of police stop and search statistics; and if he will make a statement. [92889]

Mr. Boateng: Police forces submit statistics on the number of recorded stops and searches under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 (PACE) annually to the Home Office. These are published in 'Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System', a copy of which is available in the Library.

The Government accept that there is likely to be a disparity between the number of stops and searches made by the police under the PACE and the number of stops and searches recorded by police officers. Home Office research 'Ethnic Monitoring in police forces: A beginning' (FitzGerald and Sibbitt 1997) noted variations in the recorded use of stop and search under PACE in different police areas, with the possibility that under-recording is higher in the provincial forces than in the Metropolitan Police Service.

There is also likely to be a higher public perception of stops given that most people do not distinguish between voluntary non-recorded stops, and stops carried out under PACE which should be recorded.

The Stephen Lawrence report recommended that a record be made of all stops and stops and searches, including "voluntary" stops. The Home Office is considering further this recommendation and has commissioned research to gather information on current practices within forces with a view to testing the practical implications of the Inquiry's recommendations. The Metropolitan Police Service has been running its own pilot projects to help develop a plan to manage the tactic fairly and effectively. The Home Office will work with the Metropolitan Police Service in testing the Stephen Lawrence Report's recommendations.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of stop and search have been recorded in (a) the constituency of Edmonton and (b) the borough of Enfield in each of the past five years; what proportion of those stopped and searched were (i) black and (ii) subsequently arrested. [93606]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police has provided the following summary of information on stop and search for the years 1994–1998 for Edmonton and Enfield Police Divisions. The Divisions make up an area which equates to the London Borough of Enfield plus Cheshunt (Hertfordshire) to the North.

Edmonton Police Division stop and search, 1994–98

	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998

Kosovo

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many United Kingdom police officers he is intending to send to Kosovo. [93034]

Mr. Boateng: We currently have a British Forensic Team of 16 persons already in Kosovo assisting in the investigation of war crimes. Seven British officers have transferred from the International Police Task Force in Bosnia to Kosovo. We are currently training a party of 12 officers to go and assist with the recruitment and training of a Kosovan police force and a further 27 officers are on standby to act as trainers.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency plans he has to assist police forces whose police officers are being deployed in Kosovo. [93035]

Mr. Boateng: Officers going to Kosovo have been selected from various forces around the country with the agreement of the relevant chief constables to ensure that no one force has the burden of supplying a large contingent of officers. The full costs of seconding officers are currently being met by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

EU Fire Safety Provisions

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the letter issued in 1998 by Commissioner Flynn under Article 169 of the Treaty of Rome concerning the United Kingdom's implementation of the general fire safety provisions of the European Framework Directive together with his response to that letter. [92891]

Mr. George Howarth: Correspondence between the European Commission and member states, including the United Kingdom, on Article 226 (formerly 169) cases is regarded by both parties as confidential between them. The broad content of Commissioner Flynn's letter was set out in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Heppell) on 8 April 1998, Official Report, column 255. The Fire Precautions (Workplace) (Amendment) Regulations 1999 reflect the Government's response to the letter in that they amend the Fire Precautions (Workplace) Regulations 1997 to the necessary extent to address the Commission's concerns about our implementation of the general fire safety provisions of the directive.

Passport Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many telephone calls were made to the Passport Agency by members of the public; and how many of those calls received a courtesy message at (a) each office of the United Kingdom Passport Agency and (b) in total, in the weeks ended (i) 4 July and (ii) 11 July. [92774]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 23 July 1999]: The information requested is given in the form of calls received on the United Kingdom Passport Agency's (UKPA) published telephone number (0870 5210410); and calls received by the new emergency call centre (0845 6004646), for customers who have already submitted an application and are travelling within one week.

A breakdown of the telephone calls received on the 0870 5210410 number is as follows:

week ending Friday, 2 July 1999—total of 225,297 calls received of which 135,877 received an explanatory message; and week ending Friday, 9 July 1999—total of 106,949 calls received of which 54,474 received an explanatory message.

The UKPAs management information is recorded weekly from Saturday to the following Friday. These figures are collated centrally and cannot be broken down to an estimate for each office in any accurate way.

The total number of telephone calls received on the 0845 6004646 emergency number, which became operational on Friday, 2 July 1999, was:

week ending Sunday, 4 July 1999–66,189; and week ending Sunday, 11 July 1999–69,709.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time for processing straightforward applications by the UK Passport Agency (a) per office and (b) in total, (i) on the last available date and (ii) in each of the last six months; and if he will make a statement. [92965]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested in the form of the average maximum processing time in working days for non-urgent applications is shown in the table:

1999	Belfast	London	Newport	Liverpool	Peterborough	Glasgow
January	8	2	12	16	5	11
February	14	4	20	20	11	10
March	16	6	28	25	12	16
April	21	6	36	33	15	18
May	31	5	33	46	27	26
June	36	6	39	38	35	36

[1] Up to week ending 18 July 1999

These figures need to be treated with caution because processing is often done in declared travel date order rather than the date received. The processing times reflect the Agency's priority to meet passport applicants' declared travel dates. July travel dates, apart from applications being made now, have been cleared, and the Agency is making considerable progress with August travellers. Applications in process represent less than three weeks work at current output levels, and with intake declining, processing times for non-urgent work should begin to fall over the next few weeks.

Immigration, Frontiers and Asylum Committee

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates when the Strategic Committee on Immigration, Frontiers and Asylum is due to meet during 1999; and if he will make a statement on the programme of work of that committee. [92784]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 23 July 1999]: Meetings of the Strategic Committee on Immigration, Frontiers and Asylum (SCIFA) were held on 15 June, under the German Presidency, and on 26 July, under the Finnish Presidency. The Presidency has not notified dates of future meetings although none is scheduled for September, the latest month for which a calendar is available. The Presidency has, however, indicated its intention to make such dates available on its Presidency website.

The programme of work of the SCIFA is to prepare dossiers, after initial consideration by the working groups, for discussion by the Justice and Home Affairs (JHA) Council. Copies of the Finnish Presidency Work Programme in the area of JHA will be placed in the Library.

I very much welcome the Finnish Presidency's pragmatic approach to its work programme and their aim to continue discussions on issues raised under previous Presidencies. I am also pleased to note the high priority being given to combating illegal immigration and to improving the effective operation of the Dublin Convention, both issues which are of considerable concern to the Government.

Immigration Detainees

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people are currently detained under Immigration Act powers in (a) detention centres, (b) Prison Service establishments and (c) other accommodation; [92892]

(2) how many people are currently detained solely under Immigration Act powers who have been detained continuously for longer than three months. [92897]

Mr. George Howarth: The latest available information, relating to the snapshot of all persons detained solely under Immigration Act 1971 powers, by location, as at 31 May, is given in the table. The figures exclude persons detained under dual Immigration Act 1971 and other powers, for whom comprehensive data are not recorded centrally.

Data relating to length of detention are not recorded centrally for all persons detained solely under Immigration Act 1971 powers. The information requested on the number of persons who had been detained continuously for longer than three months is, therefore, only available at disproportionate cost.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the past 12 months for which records are available the recommended period, in respect of persons held under Immigration Act powers, of five days in policy custody was exceeded by (a) extending, (b) renewing and (c) transferring a detainee from one station to another. [93517]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration (Places of Detention) Direction 1996 specifies that an individual may be detained in a police station for a maximum of five nights with an additional two nights only where Removal Directions have been set. However, current policy is to detain an individual in a police station for no more than two nights with the provision of an extension with the authority of an Immigration Inspector. Data on those detained in police cells for more than five nights, ie where Removal Directions are in place, cannot be obtained without incurring disproportionate costs. However, the number is believed to be very small.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of immigration detention in the past 12 months; how much of this is represented by (a) designated prisons, (b) other prisons, (c) police stations, (d) Immigration Service detention facilities and (e) airport holding facilities; and what proportion of the cost is represented by ex-convicts awaiting deportation, beyond the date on which they would otherwise have been released, under section 3(5) or (6). [93515]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The total cost of immigration detention in the last financial year is estimated to be £40,228,000, including overheads, of which £15,135,000 is for designated prisons, (a) costs for Immigration Act 1971 detainees in other prisons, (b) can only be provided at disproportionate cost; £1,360,000 is for detention in police stations, (c) £18,151,000 for Immigration Service detention facilities at Harmondsworth, Tinsley House and Campsfield House, (d) £5,582,000 for other detention facilities at ports and airports, and (e) the costs of detaining ex-convicts awaiting deportation, beyond the date on which they would normally be released cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Police Commissioner regarding the circumstances in which a picture of armed police officers making an arrest appeared on the front page of the Daily Mail on 22 July; and what charges have arisen from the incident. [93267]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that he understands that a member of the public took the photograph and passed it to the Daily Mail. No charges have yet arisen from the incident which was photographed.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the draft Freedom of Information Bill proposing the (a) repeal and (b) amendment of Clause 28(7) of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. [93281]

Mr. Straw: I have received one representation referring to section 28(7) of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 in the course of the consultation on the draft Freedom of Information Bill. This response, from the Health and Safety Commission, recorded their desire for the removal of the restriction in section 28 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974, subject to certain minimum safeguards against prejudice to their enforcement and regulatory functions.

It is intended that the Freedom of Information Bill will be used to repeal or amend many existing statutory prohibitions on disclosure, where appropriate.

All statutory prohibitions are currently being reviewed to see if they would be suitable candidates for repeal or amendment. Section 28 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 has been considered as part of this review and the statutory prohibition on disclosure contained in it is a strong candidate for repeal or amendment under the draft Freedom of Information Bill.

Extradition

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on how many occasions his Department has issued consent certificates to remove the rule of specialty in respect of extradition proceedings where consent was granted to (a) the Irish Republic and (b) other countries which have extradition treaties with the United Kingdom; [92949]

(2) if he will list the legal causes upon which consent certificates were granted in extradition proceedings on account of (a) the extradited person making known an outstanding offence not known to the requesting authority, (b) the requesting authority discovering an offence which was not known to them at the time of the initial extradition request and (c) any other reason. [92950]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 26 July 1999]: It is very rare to depart from the rule of specialty in respect of extradition proceedings. Formal certification to waive the rule is only required in relation to our extradition arrangements with Ireland, where in recent years just two such certificates have been issued.

In one of these cases, the offence for which specialty was waived related to a suspected murder. In this case, the Irish authorities knew of the offence at the time of the request, but had insufficient information to include it with other lesser offences listed in the request for the individual's return. In the other case, the waiver certificate is currently subject to court proceedings, and so I cannot comment as the matter is sub judice.

Figures relating to other countries are not recorded. Officials estimate that there have been three or four specialty waivers in the past three years, but exact numbers, and the reasons for them, could only be obtained with disproportionate cost.

Cab Licences (St. George's Flag)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy to advise cab-drivers and owners in the metropolitan area when re-applying for their licence of the possibility of refusal of licence in cases where the cab displays the St George's Flag. [93271]

Kate Hoey: The issuing of licences for London taxis is a matter for the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police. He informs me that the Public Carriage Office advise cab-drivers and owners, when they first apply for a licence, that their vehicle must comply with the Metropolitan Conditions of Fitness. The Conditions of Fitness prohibit the display of national emblems. Licences must be renewed annually and the application form carries a reminder that Conditions of Fitness must be met.

CS Gas

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the safety of (a) CS gas spray and (b) MIBK from the Chief Constable of Northamptonshire. [92318]

Mr. Boateng: The Chief Constable of Northamptonshire has decided not to issue CS spray to officers in his force. He has corresponded with my officials about this decision and submitted a report to the relevant sub-committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers in 1998 setting out his concerns.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the length of time for which research on CS gas spray and MIBK should have continued before they were judged safe; and what timescales were suggested. [92319]

Mr. Boateng: A wide range of research has been conducted into the safety of CS which has not raised concerns in respect of its effects on human health. MIBK is an industrial solvent and has also been extensively researched for adverse health effects. I am not aware of any specific representations concerning the length of time for which particular research programmes should be conducted.

Citizenship

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the British Nationality Act 1981 to restore the principle of ius soli for the acquisition of citizenship. [93654]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No. It is our policy to restrict the acquisition of citizenship by birth in this country to children whose parents have real and substantial connections with the United Kingdom. Children born here with non-British citizen or non-settled parents can become British either through residence or when a parent becomes a British citizen or settled here.

Public Footpaths (Crimes)

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statistics or other information have been evaluated by (a) the Home Office and (b) police forces regarding (i) assaults or other crimes committed on public footpaths and (ii) cases where public footpaths have been used as a means of access to property where a burglary or other crime has been committed. [93809]

Mr. Boateng: The information is not collected centrally by the Home Office. The British Crime Survey collects information on offences against individuals by location, but does not hold the information specifically for public footpaths. Information collected by the police is a matter for the respective Chief Officers, although those forces with geographical information systems are more likely to have information at this level of detail.

Equal Treatment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has established a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [93458]

Mr. Straw: Yes. Targets are being set for the recruitment, promotion, and retention of ethnic minority staff directly employed by my Department, and in respect of services for which my Department has oversight, including the police, prison service, fire service, and probation service.

'Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment', published by the Cabinet Office, the Home Office, the Department for Education and Employment and the Women's Unit in November 1998, has been circulated to all senior managers at Grade seven level and above within my Department to ensure that the effects of any policy changes on all sections of the population are considered at the earliest stage of policy development.

Community Police Officers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that the number of community police officers in the Sutton and Cheam constituency is maintained and that those officers continue to be dedicated to their main duties. [93308]

Kate Hoey: This is an operational matter for the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police. He advises me that the number of community officers in Sutton and Cheam will be maintained and that redeployment of them under mutual aid arrangements is being kept to a minimum.

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Metropolitan Police to supply new Kat neighbourhood watch reflective street signs and window stickers showing the meerkat logo to neighbourhood watch members in the constituency of Sutton and Cheam. [93310]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that the new Meerkat neighbourhood watch window stickers have been distributed to all divisions.

Since the launch of the sponsorship agreement between the Metropolitan Police and Yellow Pages in June 1999, 1,700 street signs have been erected in London, and a further 3,500 signs will be erected between now and the end of the year. It seems that Sutton's request for street signs was not received by the contractors. But arrangements to supply signs there are now in hand.

Refugee Allocation Project

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many allocations have been made under the Refugee Allocation Project to (a) Camrex House, Sunderland and (b) the Balmoral Hotel Newcastle; what was the total cost of such allocations; and what was the average weekly cost of such allocations in each location. [93610]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Over the last 12 months, the Refugee Arrivals Project (RAP) has assisted 114 adults and eight families to secure accommodation in Camrex House, Sunderland, all of whom are in receipt of social security benefits, RAP do not assist placements in the Balmoral Hotel, Newcastle. Information on the cost of such allocations is not separately available.

Road Traffic Offences

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what proportion of prosecutions for road traffic offences have involved people with non-United Kingdom driving licences in each of the last five years. [93339]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not available.

The statistics collected on motoring offences by the Home Office do not enable people with non-United Kingdom driving licences to be identified. Records kept by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Authority relate only to non-United Kingdom licence holders who are disqualified.

Police Dogs

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give instructions to the police that, when called on to deal with demonstrations by supporters of hunting accompanied by dogs, they should be accompanied by police dogs. [93215]

Mr. Boateng: No. The use of police dogs is an operational matter for chief officers of police.

Biological and Chemical Weapons

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources he will make available to (a) police authorities, (b) fire authorities and (c) local authority emergency planning offices in England and Wales for the preparation, provision and annual funding needed to meet the new tasks announced in the Government paper of 21 July, Defending Against the Threat from Biological and Chemical Weapons; and if he will make a statement. [93095]

Mr. George Howarth: No new tasks for the police, fire or local authorities were announced in the Government paper "Defending Against the Threat from Biological and Chemical Weapons".

EC-Russian Partnership and Co-operation Agreement

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures have been taken to implement in domestic law and practice the right of Russian companies to send key personnel to the United Kingdom as provided for in Articles 28 to 30 of the EC/Russian Partnership and Co-operation Agreement. [93302]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It has not been necessary to introduce specific measures and Russian companies wishing to take advantage of these provisions are expected to apply under the existing well-established work permit procedures.

The European Community/Russian Partnership and Co-operation Agreement specifically allows the parties to continue to apply immigration and work permit controls. Under the provisions of the Agreement, key personnel are still required to obtain work permits and Russian nationals still require visas to enter the United Kingdom. The Agreement specifically provides by means of a joint declaration by the parties that the requirement of a visa does not nullify or impair its benefits.

Chinese Nationals

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the regime of checks for Chinese nationals who wish (a) to extend their leave in the United Kingdom and (b) to obtain indefinite leave to remain. [93303]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The process by which the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) considers applications for further leave to remain or indefinite leave to remain varies by category rather than by nationality. The criteria to be applied by IND caseworkers are set out in the Immigration Rules.

Police Force (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government are taking to recruit more black and minority ethnic people into the police force; and if he will make a statement. [93608]

Mr. Boateng: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz), on 23 March 1999, Official Report, column 174 and to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Crausby), on 26 April 1999, Official Report, columns 17–18.

Metropolitan Police (Complaints)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints have been made against the Metropolitan Police in each of the last five years; what proportion of those complaints either wholly or in part concerned accusations of police racism; and if he will make a statement. [93607]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police has provided the following summary of information on the total number of complaints made against the Metropolitan Police and the proportion of those complaints that were of racially discriminatory behaviour, within the last five years:

	Total complaints [1]	Percentage police racism complaints
1994–95	9,658	2.97
1995–96	10,128	2.98
1996–97	9,919	3.11
1997–98	8,881	2.88
1998–99	7,087	3.47

[1] Total complaints include all allegations, not only the main allegation

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many public interest immunity certificates or equivalent documents have been provided by Ministers or officials in his Department since 3 May 1997; and at what level each such document has been signed. [93534]

Mr. Straw: Since 3 May 1997, I have signed 13 public interest immunity certificates. In addition, one certificate has been signed by a Minister of State at the Home Office.

These figures do not include certificates which may, exceptionally, have been issued and considered by the Court without notice of their existence being given to the other parties in the case.

Hunting

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the costs to the Metropolitan Police, in each of the last five years, of policing demonstrations about hunting. [93471]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner has provided the following information on costs to the Metropolitan Police for policing demonstrations about hunting:

Year	Cost
1994	46,408
1995	Nil
1996	8,808
1997	97,786
1998	267,810
Total	420,812

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) pro-hunting and (b) anti-hunting demonstrations have been held in London since May 1997. [93472]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police tells me that between 1 May 1997 and 25 July 1999 there were ten major hunt demonstrations—seven were anti-hunting and three were pro-hunting.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the fund raising activity of local hunts and their contribution to local charities. [93478]

Mr. George Howarth: Information about fund raising activities of hunts is not held centrally.

Immigration Act Breaches (Prosecutions)

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought, in the last 12 months for which records are available, for each of the following breaches of the Immigration Acts (i) failure to report to a medical officer (section 24(1)(d) Immigration Act 1971), (ii) failure to support and accommodate without recourse to pubic funds (section 78 Social Security Act 1986, with section 106 Social Security Administration Act 1992), (iii) obtaining leave to enter by deception (section 24(1)(aa) Immigration Act 1971), (iv) obtaining leave to remain by deception (section 24(1)(aa) Immigration Act 1971), (v) assisting the entry of another person as an illegal entrant (section 25(1)(a) Immigration Act 1971) and (vi) assisting the entry of another person as an asylum claimant (section 25(1)(b) Immigration Act 1971). [93333]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Available information, taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings database for 1998, is given in the table. Information on the number of defendants who fail to support and accommodate without recourse to public funds cannot be identified separately from other similar offences.

Number of defendants proceeded against in magistrates courts for a variety of offences under the Immigration Act 1971 in England and Wales, 1998 [1]

Offence description	Number of defendants

Immigration Rules

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will repeal paragraph 297(e) and (f) of the Immigration rules. [93519]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are no plans to do so.

Carer Policy BDI 2/95

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has reviewed the carer policy BDI 2/95. [93451]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Yes. Details of the revised policy are set out in the Immigration Directorates' Instructions, a copy of which is in the Library, and is also available on the internet.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 427, on what criteria decisions to waive fines under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 are made. [93449]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The criteria for waiving charges are contained in Appendix A of the publication entitled "Charging Procedures. A Guide for Carriers", commonly known as the "Green Guide", a copy of which is in the Library. In addition, charges are normally waived in respect of passengers arriving without documents from stations with Approved Gate Check (AGC) Status. The criteria for AGC status are contained in section 7 of the "Green Guide". Charges are also waived in respect of inadequately documented passengers who are granted full refugee status in accordance with the 1951 United Nations Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the status of refugees, as described in section 5 of the "Green Guide". Charges are also not imposed where a false document is produced unless the falsity of the document is reasonably apparent nor where a carrier is able to show that the required documents were produced to them when the passenger embarked for the United Kingdom.

Elections (Ballot Papers)

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many tendered ballot papers were issued in (a) the 1997 General Election, (b) the 1999 European Election and (c) the 1999 and 1998 local elections. [93216]

Mr. George Howarth: In Great Britain, lists of tendered votes issued at general elections are retained by the Clerk of the Crown and, unless ordered by the House of Commons or the High Court, are destroyed after 12 months. Lists compiled at the European Parliamentary elections are retained by the local returning officer for 12 months and lists compiled at local elections are retained by the proper officer of the authority for six months and then, unless directed by order, respectively, of the High Court, or a county court or election court, are destroyed. The lists of tendered votes for the 1997 and 1998 elections are thus no longer available but those for the 1999 elections are available locally for inspection.

In Northern Ireland, where figures are kept centrally, 77 tendered votes were issued at the 1997 general election and 40 at the 1999 European Parliamentary election. No ordinary local elections were held there in 1998 or 1999.

Hunting Ban

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussion he (a) has had (b) intends to have with animal welfare groups about the disposal of hounds used for hunting, following the introduction of a ban on hunting; [93488]

(2) what discussions he (a) has had and (b) intends to have with associations representing those whose livelihoods depend on hunting; [93473]

(4) what representations he has received since May 1997 about hunting. [93470]

No meetings have taken place between Home Office Ministers and either representative associations or animal welfare groups concerning the disposal of hounds. There are currently no plans for such meetings to be staged, nor have there been any such approaches for meetings.

(8) if he plans to establish a close season for fox control, following the introduction of a ban on hunting; [93482]

(9) what measures he intends to take to deal with the problem of mange in foxes, following the introduction of a ban on hunting; [93477]

(10) what measures he intends to take to encourage landowners to maintain the conservation activities currently undertaken by local hunts; [93467]

(11) what measures he will take to ensure that there is sufficient support available to farmers for the control of pest populations following the introduction of a ban on hunting. [93486]

Mr. George Howarth: We are actively considering ways of taking forward the issue of hunting and assessing the effects of any ban. The right of peaceful assembly will be taken into account, along with any exceptions and wider implications.

Various estimates of the number of horses and hounds used for hunting have been provided by organisations which support or oppose hunting.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if staff at the Benefits Agency aged 60 years or over are allowed to continue in employment on a year-to-year basis until the age of 65. [92203]

Angela Eagle: Employment within the Benefits Agency is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Mohammed Sarwar, dated 26 July 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent question asking if staff in the Benefits Agency aged 60 or over are allowed to continue in employment on a year to year basis until the age of 65.

Retirement age in the Department of Social Security was restored to age 60 for all staff with effect from 31 July 1998. However, the policy provides for retention of staff for business reasons for periods of 12 months at a time until the age of 65 for administrative grades and until 62 for junior managers. Middle managers and above are required to retire at age 60.

The availability of the facility for retention beyond age 60 is reviewed annually and is dependent upon the projected staffing requirements; staff are currently able to be retained until 31 July 2000.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Pensioners

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 442, on pensioners and income support, if he will make a statement on the progress which has been made to date in increasing take-up of income support by pensioners, and on the timetable for implementation of further measures. [92537]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Member to my written answer of 19 July 1999, Official Report, columns 442–43. We will bring forward our plans as soon as possible.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage and number of (a) single pensioners, (b) pensioner couples and (c) all pensioner households were dependent on state benefits for at least 75 per cent. of their income in the latest year for which figures are available. [93499]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Single pensioners	56	2,450
Pensioner couples	36	980
All pensioner units	49	3,430

Notes:

1. Estimates are rounded to the nearest 10,000 pensioners, although they are not necessarily accurate to that degree.
2. A pensioner couple is defined as a couple where the man is over State pension age. A Pensioner Unit is defined as a single person over State pension age or a pensioner couple.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what date he expects the first individuals to receive the annual pensions statement proposed in the Green Paper on Pensions. [93065]

Mr. Timms: We will implement the Green Paper commitment to introduce combined pension forecasts in 2002. We intend to conduct pilot exercises before that date.

On 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 573, I announced the membership of a Pension Forecasting Advisory Group to consider how our proposals for introducing combined forecasts might best be implemented. The group will also advise on what supporting information and facilities need to be provided to ensure that individuals make best use of the new information.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to prevent members of defined benefit occupational pension schemes from transferring into stakeholder pension schemes. [93066]

Mr. Timms: We would expect information provided to members or potential members of stakeholder pension schemes to indicate clearly that they should seek financial advice before making such a transfer.

Housing Benefit

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the costs of (a) extending entitlement to Housing Benefit to cover the first (i) 12 weeks and (ii) 24 weeks of work and (b) placing Housing Benefit entitlement on the same time basis as Working Families Tax Credit. [93069]

Angela Eagle: It is not possible to estimate the cost of extending entitlement to Housing Benefit for everyone starting work to cover the first 12–24 weeks of work, owing to insufficient information.

However, if it is assumed that the eligibility conditions for a Housing Benefit extended payment are applied, (eg receipt of Income Support or Jobseeker's Allowance for at least 26 weeks before starting work) the cost of increasing the extended payment to cover the first (i) 12 weeks in work is £50 million and (ii) 24 weeks in work is £125 million, at 1999–2000 prices. Estimates assume that there are no behavioural changes.

It is not possible to estimate the cost of placing Housing Benefit entitlement on the same time basis as Working Families Tax Credit due to insufficient information.

Departmental Funding (Leeds)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the programmes funded directly by his Department, relating to social exclusion, regeneration, community development, employment or education, currently operating in (a) the City of Leeds and (b) the Leeds Central parliamentary constituency, listing for each programme the amount of such funding for each of the last three years and the amount planned to be spent in each of the next three financial years. [92911]

Angela Eagle: Information is not collected locally or centrally on the proportion of funding related to social exclusion. The vast majority of the Department's programme spending is dedicated to tackling poverty and social exclusion.

Benefits Agency (Scotland)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the procedural steps for assessing eligibility, reviewing, appealing and making payment of (a) severe disablement allowance, (b) maternity allowance, (c) industrial injuries disablement allowance, (d) reduced earnings allowance/retirement allowance, (e) attendance allowance and (f) disability working allowance; indicating which of the offices of his Department and his agencies in Scotland would handle each of these steps. [92356]

Mr. Timms: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Alex Salmond, dated 26 July 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent question asking if he will list the procedural steps for assessing eligibility, reviewing, appealing and making payment of (a) Severe Disablement Allowance, (b) Maternity Allowance, (c) Industrial Injuries Disablement Allowance, (d) Reduced Earnings Allowance/ Retirement Allowance, (e) Attendance Allowance and (f) Disability Working Allowance; indicating which of the offices of his Department and his agencies in Scotland would handle each of these steps.

Claims are assessed in the Disability Benefit Centres in Glasgow and Edinburgh which also issue payments, carry out reviews and process appeals although these functions may be carried out at the Disability Benefit Unit (DBU) in Blackpool. Any overpaid benefit is recovered by the DBU.

The Area Contributory Benefits Appeals Units in Motherwell and Glasgow prepare appeal submissions for Scotland. All aspects of appeals are handled by the Independent Tribunal Service.

I hope this is helpful.

[92351]

Mr. Timms: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Andrew Welsh, dated 26 July 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent questions asking which Benefit Agency (BA) offices would handle the (a) provision of advice and information, (b) assessment of eligibility to claim, (c) review of the claim, (d) appeal of the claim, (e) payment of the benefit and (f) recovery of over-paid benefits.

For Incapacity Benefit, four BA districts cover Glasgow, these are Glasgow North, Glasgow South, Glasgow East and Argyle and West. One district covers Tayside. All offices in these districts provide benefits advice and information, and handle assessments, review, payment of benefit and recovery of overpayments. They also accept appeals, which are sent to the Area Centralised Contributory Benefits Appeals Units in Motherwell and Glasgow, where all appeals for Scotland are prepared.

For Family Credit (FC), East Edinburgh and Borders and Lothian West districts cover Edinburgh and Tayside district covers Dundee and Arbroath. Advice information and claim packs can be obtained from all offices in these districts, which also accept appeals for onward transmission to the Family Credit Unit (FCU) in Preston. The FCU deals with all aspects of FC claims for the whole of Great Britain.

For Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA), advice and information can be obtained from Employment Service Jobcentres (ESJ) and local BA offices. Assessment of benefit, review and payment of JSA, appeals and recovery of overpaid benefits are processed within the Employment Services and BA district network (see appendix).

For Disability Living Allowance (DLA), information and advice can be obtained from the BA offices in Tayside (Dundee & Arbroath) and Clyde Coast and Renfrew districts (Greenock).

Claims are assessed in the Disability Benefit Centres in Glasgow and Edinburgh, which also issue payments, carry out reviews and process appeals, although these functions may be carried out at the Disability Benefit Unit (DBU) in Blackpool. Any overpaid benefit is recovered by the DBU.

After the initial preparation by the BA, all aspects of benefit appeals are handled by the Independent Tribunal Service.

I hope this is helpful.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the procedure for determining industrial deafness; and if he will make a statement. [93206]

Mr. Bayley: We are advised on matters relating to the Industrial Injuries Benefit Scheme, which includes provision for occupational deafness, by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council. The Council's sub-group, the Occupational Deafness Working Group is currently examining all the criteria for awarding benefit and when their work is concluded the Council will report to us. The timing of the Council's report is a matter for them.

Cold Weather Payments (Scotland)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of cold weather payments paid in Scotland in 1998–99. [93502]

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Eddie O'Hara, dated 27 July 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent question asking if he will provide a breakdown of cold weather payments paid in Scotland in 1998–99.

During the 1998–99 winter in Scotland there were 11 occasions when cold weather payments were triggered. This resulted in the issue of 11,293 payments, totalling £95,990.50. Details are provided in the attached table.

State Earnings-Related Pension Scheme

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate has been made of the cost of not implementing the proposed change to SERPS from April 2000 in each of the next three years. [93286]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Mr. Timms: I refer my hon. Friend to the Written answer the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Hitchen (Mr. Denham) gave to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 8 December 1998, Official Report, columns 174–75.

Benefits (Capital Limits)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the upper and lower capital limit would be for (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) council tax benefit if they had been uprated by (i) prices since introduction, (ii) prices since 1990, (iii) the higher of prices or earnings since introduction and (iv) the higher of prices and earnings since 1990. War Pensions

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current position in relation to the war pensions case of Mr. Kenneth Winter of Langford, Ref YX953640C; and if he will make a statement. [93545]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of the War Pensions Agency is a matter for its Chief Executive, Mr. Gordon Hextall. I have asked him to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Gordon Hextall to Sir Nicholas Lyell, dated 26 July 1999.

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the current position in relation to the war pension case of Mr. Kenneth Winter of 98 Church Street, Langford.

Mr. Winter has an outstanding appeal against our 50 per cent assessment of his service related disablement for the period 22 December 1994 to 5 August 1996. All relevant papers are now with the independent Pensions Appeal Tribunal (PAT) office. The PAT is completely separate from the WPA and is administered by the Lord Chancellor's Department. The PAT office has been unable to give us a specific date for the hearing but anticipates that the appeal will be heard during September 1999. They will send full details to Mr. Winter within the next two weeks.

If Mr. Winter has any further queries about the appeal hearing date, he may wish to contact the PAT office direct. Their telephone number is 0171 936 7033.

I hope this is helpful and if you need any further information, I will be happy to assist.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average time taken to process appeals in respect of claims for war disablement pension; [92967]

(2) what action he has taken in response to the findings and recommendations of the Final report of the Review of the Decision Making and Appeals Process in the War Pensions Agency; [92960]

(3) what is the average time taken to process a claim for war disablement pension. [92961]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of the War Pensions Agency is a matter for its Chief Executive, Mr. Gordon Hextall. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Gordon Hextall to Mr. Christopher Chope, dated 26 July 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions relating to war pensions. You asked about the average time taken to process War Disablement

Pension (WDP) claims and appeals and what action was being taken in response to the findings and recommendations of the Final Report of the Review of the Decision Making and Appeals Process in the War Pensions Agency (WPA).

The latest annual figures available (April 1998 to March 1999) show that the average time taken to process a claim to WDP was 111 days, whilst the average time taken to process an appeal was 278 days.

The WPA is committee to reducing the processing times and this was why I commissioned the review of the Decision Making and Appeals Process. Once the report as received, I appointed a Programme Manager and established a programme team, working under PRINCE project management discipline in line with the recommendations about implementation. The team is testing the feasibility, implications, timing and costs of implementing the recommendations. They are specifying and proposing in greater detail what is required to take forward the changes necessary to improve the service we provide. As the Senior Accountable Official, I am chairing a Steering Group which includes the DSS Policy Manager and the Chief Medical Adviser. A meeting has also been arranged with the Presidents of the Pensions Appeal Tribunal (PAT) in August at which the recommendations, particularly those which involve the Lord Chancellors Department, will be discussed.

Although it is necessary to test their feasibility, it is clear that some of the recommendations are relatively straightforward and there are some "quick wins" which can be achieved. For example, improvements to the process involving more telephone contact can be made quickly and easily. These improvements are to be pilcted in Autumn this year. Some changes, which are IT related, will need more careful consideration, including the funding and business case aspects. Others, in particular those involving matters of policy, will need much wider consultation with stakeholders and interested parties to assess the impact and to canvass opinion.

I hope this is helpful and if you need any further information, I will be happy to assist.

Benefits (New Year)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking to ensure that vulnerable people will receive their benefits over the New Year, with particular reference to people with disabilities and those receiving direct and manual payments; and if he will make a statement. [93483]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Tim Boswell, dated 27 July 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent question asking what action he is taking to ensure that vulnerable people will receive their benefits over the New Year with particular reference to people with disabilities and those receiving direct and manual payments.

Each year the Benefit Agency (BA) brings forward the production of order books, Girocheques and Automated Credit Transfers (payment directly to bank accounts) so that people receiving direct and manual payments of benefits can have their money in advance for holiday periods when Banks and Post Offices are closed. These arrangements will again be made for people in receipt of all BA benefits, including disability benefits, for the forthcoming Christmas and New Year period.

Throughout the year, the BA has continuity planning arrangements in place which could involve manual payments being implemented where problems such as postal disruption are anticipated. In the most vulnerable cases, such payments could be issued to the customer in the office the same day. The BA will also consider sending a visiting officer to those who are unable to attend the office.

Over the Christmas and New Year period BA local offices will be open on 24, 29 and 30 December, and 4 January (except in Scotland, where offices return to normal working hours on 5 January). Working hours will be advertised in the local office.

The BA also provides an out of hours service (OOHS) to help customers who find themselves in particular need outside normal office hours. On weekdays this service operates until at least 20.00 hours. At weekends and on statutory holidays, it will operate for at least six hours daily, normally between 9.00 and 20.00 hours. Contact with the OOHS is normally made through the social services or police who liaise with a central emergency officer through a telephone message service. The officer then considers the individual person's needs in consultation with outside agencies.

In addition, the BA has been aware for some time of the issues which my arise as a result of the Year 2000 date change. A full programme of work was established in 1996. Most of the major mainframe systems (the benefit payment computer systems) hold their dates in a way which is largely unaffected by the Year 2000 problem. Nevertheless, a full regime of checking has taken place and all benefit payment systems are now full year 2000 compliant.

Interfaces with external computer systems, including the systems which pay benefits directly to bank accounts (BACS), have been rigorously tested, or plans are in place to do so. An intensive testing process is also under way on our major benefit paying systems to provide additional assurances. For example, BA has recently concluded a business confidence review of Job Seekers Allowance and Income Support that did not identify any risks of material disruption to payment of benefits.

I hope this is helpful.

Notes:

1. Numbers are rounded to the nearest hundred and displayed as thousands. Percentages are rounded to the nearest whole number.
2. Estimates are based on a 5 per cent. sample of all Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance claimants and will therefore be subject to a degree of sampling error eg the true population value for an estimate of 2,000 could lie within the range of approximately 1,500 to 2,500.
3. Children are defined as dependants aged 15 years old and less.
4. Adults refer to all adult beneficiaries of Income Support or Jobseeker's Allowance i.e. Claimants, partners and dependants aged 16 years old and over.
5. Cases are allocated to the Local Authority Districts by matching postcodes against the 1999 version 1 of the Postcode Directory.
6. Cases were allocated to Edmonton Constituency by matching postcodes against the 1999 version 1 of the Postcode Directory and as such represent Constituency boundaries as at May 1997.
7. Estimates for Jobseeker's Allowance include income-based, contribution-based Jobseeker's Allowance and cases where nil benefit is in payment.
8. Population estimates used in the percentage calculation were taken from the Office for National Statistics mid year estimates for 1997.
9. It has not been possible to provide an estimate of the percentage of the population in the Edmonton constituency area who are beneficiaries of either Income Support or Jobseeker's Allowance. Instead, data has been provided for Enfield Local Authority.
10. Estimates for the United Kingdom can not be provided as requested, as social security in Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, but Great Britain totals have been supplied.

Lone Parents

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to introduce the benefit run-on for lone parents starting work; what effect this will have on the housing benefit and council tax benefit extended payments scheme; and if he will make a statement. [93901]

Angela Eagle: The lone parent's benefit run-on will give extra help, and financial security, to lone parents during the transition from welfare to work. It will allow lone parents who have been getting Income Support (IS) or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance for at least six months to be paid IS for their first two weeks in work, provided that work is expected to last at least five weeks. We expect more than 100,000 lone parents to benefit from the run-on in a full year (about 5,000 at a point in time), at a cost of between £15 million and £25 million.

We also intend to make consequential changes to the Housing Benefit (HB) and Council Tax Benefit (CTB) extended payment schemes. At present, these schemes give four extra weeks HB and/or CTB to a number of groups—including lone parents—moving from income-related benefits to work, provided they claim it. Lone parents getting the IS benefit run-on will automatically retain entitlement to maximum HB/CTB during the run-on period, and will then receive extended payments for the next two weeks without the need for a separate claim. This should ensure that they continue to receive maximum HB/CTB for the first four weeks of work.

The benefit run-on complements other aspects of welfare-to-work policies, in particular the New Deal for lone parents. It is a positive response to concerns that the abrupt withdrawal of what has been a regular income, the gap between starting work and receiving wages and the wait for in-work benefits can combine to form a barrier to making the move into work. These concerns can be particularly acute for lone parents, who often have to meet child care costs in advance.

We are also taking this opportunity to broaden the scope of the HB/CTB extended payments scheme to include sick and disabled people moving from income-related benefits into work. This will benefit an estimated 22,000 people a year at an annual cost of £3 million.

Draft regulations have been referred to the Social Security Advisory Committee and consultation with representatives of Local Authority Associations is under way. Following this, we plan to lay the regulations during September to bring the scheme into place in October to coincide with the introduction of Working Families Tax Credit.

Benefit Fraud Inspectorate

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate report on Tower Hamlets. [93448]

Mr. Timms: I published the report of the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate's inspection of the London Borough of Tower Hamlets on Thursday 22 July 1999.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the local authorities for which Benefit Fraud Inspectorate inspections have been completed and reports remain to be published. [93315]

Mr. Timms: The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate is currently undertaking 27 inspections. These inspections are all at different stages. Of these, 15 have been completed to at least draft report stage.

These inspections are in the following local authorities:

Oxford
Bournemouth
Lichfield
Sandwell
Swansea
West Wiltshire
Powys
Wigan
Shrewsbury and Atcham
Norwich York
Carlisle
Calderdale
Rotherham
Ellesmere Port.

NIRS2

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints and representations have been received by (a) his office and (b) the Benefits Agency arising from the new NIRS2 computer system; and if he will make a statement. [93196]

Mr. Timms: To date there have been 110 parliamentary questions arising from the implementation of the new National Insurance Recording System (NIRS2). Between 1 June 1998 and 31 March 1999 the Secretary of State for Social Security received 87 parliamentary questions. Since 1 April 1999 a further 23 have been received of which 11 were transferred to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

There have been 240 letters specifically relating to NIRS2 of which 85 were received by Ministers, 73 by the Benefits Agency and 82 by the former Contributions Agency.

Between 1 April 1998 and 31 March 1999 752 letters were received with queries about the rates of Retirement Pension, 366 were addressed to Ministers and 386 to the Benefits Agency. Some of these will relate to the implementation of NIRS2.

Information about the numbers of complaints, received at local benefit offices, arising from the NIRS2 computer system, is not available. However, the Benefits Agency has completed over 13,600 clerical calculations of Retirement Pension and Widows Benefits.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have not received their full pension at retirement date due to failure of the new NIRS2 computer system; and if he will make a statement. [93197]

Mr. Timms: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 22 July 1999, Official Report, columns 575–76.

It is estimated that there were up to 285,000 pensioners affected by the NIRS2 problems who therefore potentially may have been underpaid at retirement date.

Contingency arrangements were put in place to minimise the effect on customers claiming Incapacity Benefit, Maternity Benefit, Jobseeker's Allowance, Retirement Pension and Widows Benefit. These arrangements included making emergency payments to people claiming Retirement Pension and Widows Benefits where information was not available, interim payments of Jobseeker's Allowance and payment of some Incapacity Benefit claims based on information provided by the customer. Parliament was kept informed of the arrangements.

In order to provide adequate protection for the public purse, those who receive payments under emergency procedures are required to sign an undertaking to repay benefit where subsequent inquiries show that the amount due was less than the amount paid. This procedure has been followed in the case of the payments made as a result of the NIRS2 problems and recovery of any overpayments will be pursued in accordance with laid down procedures. Early figures from the Benefits Agency's work on reviewing affected cases indicates that overpayments have occurred in only a very small proportion of those examined. In addition, I have instructed the Benefits Agency to ensure that cases are dealt with as sensitively as possible and with full regard to the individual's circumstances.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in receipt of any disability benefit are (a) HIV positive and (b) AIDS patients in the current year; and what were the equivalent figures for the each of the past three years. [93542]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

The number of people of working age in receipt of one or more of Incapacity Benefit, Severe Disablement Benefit or Disability Living Allowance, with either HIV or AIDS recorded as the main disabling condition

Date	Number
August 1995	5,300
August 1996	6,000
August 1997	6,500
August 1998	6,700

Notes:
1. Figures exclude a small number of cases not recorded on the computer system.
2. The statistics do not include cases where a diagnosis of HIV/AIDS is not recorded as the main disabling condition.
3. Information on people either below working age or over retirement age is not included.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are made to take account of ME sufferers in estimating capacity to work in the All Work Test for invalidity benefit; what changes will be made on the introduction of the new test; and if he will make a statement. [93550]

Mr. Bayley: The All Work Test is an objective test of the effects of illness or disability on functional capacity, which assesses whether a person reaches the level of incapacity at which they are not required to work, or seek work, as a condition for receiving social security benefits.

Full account is taken of factors such as pain, fatigue and the ability to repeat an activity reliably and safely. Doctors and decision makers are required to look at what a person is able to do over a period of time, not just at the time of a medical examination.

ME, also known as Chronic Fatigue Syndrome or post viral fatigue disease, is a complex and widely variable condition and each case needs to be assessed on individual findings. The Department's Chief Medical Adviser issues guidance to examining doctors and ensures that guidance and training is reviewed in the light of the latest developments in the understanding of ME.

The Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill replaces the All Work Test with the Personal Capability Assessment. The criteria for entitlement to benefit, and the way in which entitlement decisions are reached, will not change but the new assessment will also provide information on what individuals are able to do despite their illness or disability and medical advice on practical measures which might help them return to work. For conditions such as ME, this will include information about, for example, the ability to sustain activities and the effects of stress and of fluctuation in the condition.

European Commission

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the nature of the cases of alleged misconduct which led to investigation by the European Commission, listed in his letter to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) of 29 April, indicating the nature of the delays in those cases pending action. [91839]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place copies of the letter in the Libraries of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Advantage West Midlands

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the Chairman of Advantage West Midlands; and what matters were discussed. [92542]

Mr. Wills: RDA Chairs including Alex Stephenson, Chairman of Advantage West Midlands, met with my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), in his former capacity as Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in November 1998 when they discussed the Competitiveness White Paper, "Inward Investment, Innovation and Business Support".

European Structural Funds

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what population figure is being used for the purpose of assessing post-1999 European funding for the West Midlands; and how the basis for this figure differs from that submitted by the Development Agency. [92545]

Mr. Wills: The UK's overall population coverage under Objective 2 is defined by the safety net at 13.7 million. This figure is for the whole UK, there are no pre-determined population figures for the regions. No decisions have been made yet on which areas will be eligible for Objective 2 funding for 2000 to 2006.

The basis for assessing the West Midlands will be the relevant population figures required to conform with Article 4 of the European Structural Funds Regulations.

All areas will be considered for inclusion on the basis of need against the criteria under Article 4 of the Structural Funds Regulations published on 26 June 1999.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what formula is used to calculate the relevant population figures for post-1999 European structural funding; [92544]

(2) what basis is used for establishing population figures relevant to post-1999 European structural funding. [92546]

Mr. Wills: The populations ceilings for Objective 1 and 2 are governed by Article 3 and 4 in the European Structural Funds Regulations. It is the responsibility of the European Commission to calculate the population ceilings at member state level.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list (a) the actual population and (b) the notional population figures used for the purpose of allocating European structural funds for each region in England. [92543]

Mr. Wills: The UK's overall population coverage under Objective 2 is defined by the safety net which limits the reduction in coverage to one third of existing Objective 2 and 5b population. This amounts to 13.7 million total population based on figures provided by the European Commission.

This population total is for the whole UK. There is no pre-set population figure for regions.

Type Approval Certificates

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if Type Approval certificates for (a) MPT 1305 and (b) MPT 1383 are still valid. [93187]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 26 July 1999]: Type approval certificates issued under MPT 1305 are valid. However, there have been no Type Approval certificates issued under MPT 1383.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what Non-technical Variant Approval certificates have been issued citing necessary compliance with MPT 1383. [93190]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 26 July 1999]: There have been no Type Approval certificates issued citing compliance with MPT 1383 and hence no Non-technical Variant Approval certificates have been issued to this Standard by the Radiocommunications Agency.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Radiocommunications Agency has issued Type Approval certificates with a specification of MPT 1383; and if this is a recognised standard in (a) the European Union and (b) elsewhere. [93188]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 26 July 1999]: The Radiocommunications Agency has not issued any Type Approval certificates under specification MPT 1383. MPT 1383 was written with the intention that it was to become a UK specific Type Approval specification for Short Range Business Radio equipment. However, when it became clear that efforts were being made to harmonise a similar European service (subsequently launched as Private Mobile Radio 446) work ceased on the necessary notification procedure for MPT 1383 to be adopted as a recognised national standard. It was, therefore, never adopted as a Type Approval standard and remains uncompleted. MPT 1383 would only be used for national approvals if it was to be adopted.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Radiocommunications Agency library issues copies of Type Approval certificate MPT 1318 for inspection. [93189]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 26 July 1999]: The Radiocommunications Agency only issues Type Approval certificates to the applicant and a copy is sent to the respective test house that carried out the technical analysis.

However, the Agency can inform third parties whether a particular product has been type approved. It is at the discretion of the applicant to provide copies of the type approval certificate to interested parties.

Safeguards Office

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many staff are employed in the UK Safeguards Office; what are the qualifications of each staff member; and what staff have been seconded to the Safeguards Office from (a) other Government Departments and (b) outside bodies. [93282]

Dr. Howells: There are five technical posts and three administrative/support posts within the UK Safeguards Office. One technical post is currently vacant. Of the 4 technical staff members currently in post, two have first class honours degrees in Chemistry, one has a 2:1 class honours degree in Chemistry and a D.Phil. and one a 2:1 class honours degree in Applied Chemistry and a PhD. No staff have been seconded to the Safeguards Office from other Government Departments or outside bodies.

ECGD

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for a review of ECGD's status. [93796]

Mr. Byers: ECGD will shortly be commencing a Review of its Status in accordance with "Next Steps" principles. This will allow us to take a fundamental look at ECGD's functions in order to establish a clear Mission Statement to define ECGD's role over the next few years.

The Terms of Reference for the Mission and Status Review are:

> "To review the aims and objectives, role and status of ECGD and to make recommendations to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry."

The Review should take account of the relationship of ECGD's activities to HMG's wider objectives and of the need to balance the benefits of ECGD's support for UK exporters and investors against the risks to the taxpayer. The Review should consider international practice in the provision of export credit and investment insurance both in the public and private sectors.

It should also take into account the results of other concurrent reviews which may have a bearing on ECGD's future activities, namely the Export Finance Review, announced on 11 February 1998, Official Report, columns 218–19, the Reinsurance Scheme Review, announced 27 April 1999, Official Report, column 84 and the Risk Management Review, announced 26 May 1999, Official Report, columns 198–99.

The Review should also include a period of public consultation to seek the views of exporters, investors, lenders, private sector credit insurers and their representative bodies and other interested parties.

The Status element of the Review should be conducted in accordance with established principles for "Next Steps" reviews, taking account of any proposed change to ECGD's Mission Statement, to consider how its services can best be delivered and whether any change in the Status of ECGD would be required.

ECGD will be writing to all customers seeking their views and I very much look forward to receiving ideas and suggestions from all sections of the exporting community and, indeed, from others who have an interest in developing the role of ECGD and strengthening the partnership between Government and industry.

Utility Regulation

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement setting out the significant changes in the Government's proposals for the reform of utility regulation made since publication of the White Paper in July 1998. [93797]

Mr. Battle: Since July 1998, the Government have been working on the detail of its proposals for the reform of utility regulation. This further work has resulted in the modification of some of the proposals.

First, the Government originally concluded that, for the energy and telecommunications sectors, individual regulators should be replaced with full-time executive boards composed of a chairman and two others. In the light of further analysis, the Government have decided that Ministers should be able to appoint any number of board members, who may be full or part-time, and executive or non-executive, so that the size and composition of each regulatory board meets the requirements of each office, and can change, over time, in response to developments. For the water sector, where the demands and pressures on the regulator are somewhat different from the other sectors, the Government now intend to retain the existing provision for an individual regulator. However, the Government intend to introduce a provision requiring the individual regulator to be supported by an advisory panel appointed by Ministers.

Second, the Government originally concluded that they would introduce legislation to extend to all regulators powers of the type held by the gas regulator to impose monetary penalties for breach of overall and individual service standards. Those powers related only to current and likely future breaches of licence conditions and other relevant requirements. They would not, as currently drafted, allow the imposition of penalties in relation to breaches, however serious, which were discontinued by the company when an enforcement notice was issued, or which ceased before enforcement action could be taken. This significantly weakens the effectiveness of monetary penalties as an enforcement mechanism. The Government now intend, therefore, to give regulators powers to impose penalties for past as well as for continuing breaches of licence conditions and other statutory requirements (but not including breaches committed before the legislation to introduce the powers is enacted). These powers will not extend to likely future breaches. Similar powers have recently been proposed for the Strategic Rail Authority.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decision on Scottish Power plc's application to build a new combined heat and power gas-fired power station at the Sappi paper mill. [93795]

Mr. Battle: I have today granted consent under Section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 to Scottish Power plc for construction of a 60 MW gas-fired Combined Heat and Power station at the Sappi paper mill at Feniscowles, near Blackburn, Lancashire. The station has also today been given clearance as a gas-fired station under Section 14 of the Energy Act 1976 and planning permission has been deemed to be granted, subject to 52 planning conditions agreed with the Blackburn with Darwen Borough Council and Lancashire County Council. The decisions have been taken in accordance with the policy set out in the White Paper entitled "Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government response to fourth and fifth Reports of the Trade and Industry Committee" (Cm 4071).

Copies of the Press Notice and decision letters are being placed in the Library of the House.

Limited Liability Partnerships

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made on the introduction of Limited Liability Partnerships legislation. [93794]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are fully committed to introduction of the Limited Liability Partnerships Bill as soon as possible. I am aware that the professional business community are keen to see progress on this, and I can assure them that the Bill will be introduced as soon as the Parliamentary timetable permits. To assist business, and to enable them to see the Bill as we expect it to come before the House, we will publish it in draft for a second time shortly, alongside revised draft regulations, which are being published to show changes made as a result of consultation last September.

Riot Control Equipment

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply on 19 April 1999, Official Report, column 456, what measures have been instigated by his Department to ensure that they provide accurate information about the export of tear gas and other riot control equipment. [93522]

Dr. Howells: As noted in my earlier answer, the export of tear gas is controlled under a variety of entries in the legislation, depending whether it is bulk tear gas or tear gas incorporated in any of a range of possible devices. The term riot control equipment could describe a wide range of items and, as noted in the answer of 23 March 1998, Official Report, column 76, to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett), several of the entries in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order (the so-called Military List) might be capable of playing some role in riot control.

In her answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) explained that, because of the problems that had been identified with the Export Control Organisation's databases, all information relying on data derived from those databases and given in response to Parliamentary Questions or in correspondence should be read in conjunction with a caveat set out in her answer.

However, the information on export licensing decisions between 2 May and 31 December 1997 set out in the Government's Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls, which includes a summary description of all military equipment licensed for export during this period as well as the ratings of the goods concerned, is not subject to the caveat set out in my hon. Friend's answer of 30 October 1997, notwithstanding that it relied on data obtained from the Export Control Organisation's databases. On the contrary, as stated in the Annual Report, the information > "may be treated as definitive subject to the constraint that there is always a risk of human error in the compilation of such a large body of data".

Furthermore, as noted in my hon. Friend's answer of 30 October 1997, among the steps taken to improve the situation she described was the decision to develop a new database for recording information about standard individual export licences. This database became operational on 1 March 1999 and will be used to supply information for future Reports. Because the database allows for information to be accepted and transferred electronically, it will be easier for exporters to submit their licence applications and it will greatly enhance the integrity of the data, although human error can never be eliminated altogether.

Finally, I should note that the information on physical exports of military equipment from the UK included in the Annual Report was in part supplied by HM Customs and Excise and in part based on information provided for the UK's contribution to the UN Arms Register; the Export Control Organisation does not compile records of licensed exports.

Handcuffs

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if export licences are required for handcuffs. [93523]

Dr. Howells: The export to any destination of leg-irons, gangchains and shackles, specially designed for restraining human beings, excluding handcuffs the maximum overall dimension of which when locked does not exceed 240mm, are controlled under entry PL5001 in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended.

In accordance with their policy requirements, as determined by them, applications for a licence to export handcuffs controlled under this entry are circulated to the Ministry of Defence and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for advice in light of the Foreign Secretary's announcement on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 65–66.

Overseas Arms Production Agreements

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions his Department has with UK arms companies prior to the establishment of licensed production agreements between UK companies and arms manufacturers overseas. [93521]

Dr. Howells: Production equipment and technology, components and sub-assemblies whose export from the UK is subject to control are set out under a range of headings in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended, and the Dual-Use and Related Goods (Export Control) Regulations 1996, as amended, and Council Decision 94/942/CFSP, as amended (which has effect through Council Regulation (EC) 3381/94). While a valid export licence is needed for the export of controlled goods or technology, exporters are not required to obtain one before they conclude an agreement for production overseas.

I also refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) by the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry on 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 150.

North-West (Assistance)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his policy is regarding regional selective assistance in the areas of highest unemployment in the North-West. [92861]

Mr. Wills: Regional selective assistance is available for eligible projects in both the development and intermediate areas of the North-West region. Support for projects will in future reflect the priorities in RDA regional economic strategies.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the members of the North West Industrial Development Advisory Committee in January 1992 and the dates of their appointment. [92860]

Mr. Wills: The members of the North West Development Board in January 1992 and the dates of their appointment are as follows:

Members	Date of appointment
Mr. J. Dwek	1 January 1983
Mr. J. B. Ashworth	23 January 1988
Mr. A. Manning	15 September 1987
Mr. D. Weir	1 January 1988
Mr. I. W. Wooley	1 January 1988
Mr. E. Baxendale	16 March 1988
Mr. B. Lawson	1 January 1989
Mr. E. J. Billington	1 January 1990
Mr. D. L. Davies	1 January 1990
Mr. G. N. Elliott	1 January 1990
Mr. E. P. Foden	1 January 1992
Mr. I. C. Sellars	1 January 1992

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the members of the North West Regional Industrial Development Board. [92859]

Mr. Wills: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave previously on 14 July 1999, Official Report, columns 211–12.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review the workings of the Industrial Development Act 1982 in relation to the management by civil servants and the treatment by regional development advisory committees of applications for regional selective assistance. [92807]

Mr. Wills: I have no plans to review the workings of the Industrial Development Act 1982 in this respect.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 14 July 1999, Official Report, columns 212–13, what the circumstances were on the occasion when a decision taken by the North West Industrial Development Board was amended by the Secretary of State under the Industrial Development Act 1982. [92862]

Mr. Wills: In the case in question, the Board gave their support to a recommendation from officials regarding the amount of grant that should be offered. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State subsequently decided a higher offer was necessary to secure the project.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 14 July 1999, Official Report, column 212–13, if he will make it his Department's practice to continue contacts and routinely record data and subsequent developments in the case of companies where rejection of applications for regional selective assistance have led to the cancellation of proposed investment projects. [92806]

Mr. Wills: I have no such plans. This is not always practicable and would increase the costs of administering the scheme.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if members of industrial development advisory committees are permitted to speak to hon. Members prior to the consideration of applications for regional selective assistance. [92858]

Mr. Wills: There are no restrictions on members of the Industrial Development Advisory Board and the Regional Industrial Development Boards which would prohibit them from speaking to hon. Members. As an application for regional selective assistance is a commercially confidential matter, it would be inappropriate for board members to comment on particular company applications.

Road Fuel Taxes

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his oral statement of 22 July 1999, Official Report, columns 1342–44, if he will give details of the arrangements which the European Commission has for publishing international comparisons of pump prices for diesel and petrol and the means by which UK consumers can access such information. [93475]

Mr. Battle: Prices of motor spirits and diesel are published by the European Commission in their weekly Oil Bulletin. "The Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics", to be published by the Department of Trade and Industry on 29 July 1999, will also provide this information for the first time. A copy will be available in the Library of the House.

International Price Comparisons

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the 100 products which will be the subject of international price comparison, and the date upon which such comparisons will commence. [93370]

Dr. Howells: The list of products which the DTI's research into international price differences will examine will be finalised with the successful contractor. A draft list of the types of product that will be included is as follows.

The commissioning process for the research will have to comply with EC procurement regulations, and we are therefore unable to contract the research until the middle of October 1999 at the earliest. Results will be made available at the end of January 2000.

Helplines

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when and where he expects the pilot telephone helplines for consumers to be established; what is the estimated cost; and what restrictions will be placed upon national access to it. [93342]

Dr. Howells: We are discussing these issues with our partners in Trading Standards, Citizen Advice and others, and expect to take decisions on these matters later this year.

Arms Exports (Indonesia)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current ECGD exposure on (a) exports to Indonesia and (b) defence-related exports. [93292]

Mr. Wilson: ECGD's estimate of its exposure on Indonesia currently stands at £1,642 million of which £691 million is in respect of defence-related business.

Of ECGD's total future amounts at risk of £16,897 million, defence-related business accounts for £3,857 million.

Market Research

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the funding which his Department has given to (a) the Defence Manufacturers Association, (b) the Association of Police and Public Security Suppliers and (c) other defence, police and security industry bodies to produce market research reports. [93504]

Mr. Battle: Since 1997 the Department has paid the Defence Manufacturers Association £49,631 under the Sector Challenge scheme towards the costs of setting up the Export Opportunities (Defence and Security) Service, which includes provision of market reports. It runs this service jointly with its sister trade association, the Association of Police and Public Security Suppliers. Since 1997 the Department has also paid around £43,000 towards the Society of British Aerospace Companies for their Business Winning Service, which includes market research work for the civil and defence aerospace industry.

Solar Energy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what practical research projects he has commissioned into solar energy; what discussions he has had with his counterparts in (i) Japan and (ii) Germany on this subject; and if he will make a statement. [92277]

Mr. Battle: My Department has had a solar energy R&D programme for a number of years, as part of the New and Renewable Energy Programme. The budget for the photovoltaics (PV) element has doubled from £0.5 million to £1 million over the past 2 years.

The Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council (EPSRC) has also run a significant photovoltaics R&D programme, with a budget of £1 million per annum for the past four years. PV is now included in the EPSRC's new £3.5 million per annum programme on Renewable and New Energy Technologies.

In addition, the Foresight Scolar Programme, which aims to put PV systems onto 100 schools and colleges across the country by 2000, is receiving funding from Government for £1 million of the total £2.5 million costs.

In my speech at the Manchester DTI/EPSRC PV Conference on 17 February, I announced three major new PV initiatives:

a) a call for proposals for the development of PV components and systems, with the aim of enhancing the competitiveness of UK companies;

b) a field trial for at least 100 homes across the country to test a variety of actual PV installations under UK conditions;

c) development of a scheme to demonstrate the use of PV in large-scale commercial building applications.

The total value of these three initiatives is expected to be £15 million, with £5 million coming from the DTI. In the case of the demonstration scheme the final go-ahead will have to await the outcome of the Renewables Review.

The subject of solar energy has not arisen in recent discussions with my counterparts in Japan and Germany, but our embassies in those and other countries keep my officials regularly updated on their programmes in this area.

Consumer White Paper

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has had with Yellow Pages over the proposals in the Consumer White Paper. [93366]

Dr. Howells: Officials met with Yellow Pages as part of the consultations that led to the White Paper.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if The Times industrial correspondent was briefed by Government sources on the Consumer White Paper prior to his oral statement on 22 July 1999, Official Report, columns 1342–44; [93326]

(2) which newspapers were briefed prior to his oral statement on 22 July 1999, Official Report, columns 1342–44, on the publication of the Consumer White Paper. [93235]

Dr. Howells: Members of the press were invited to a briefing at 12.00 pm Tuesday 22 July. As is normal practice, they were locked in until my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State spoke in the House.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the codes of practice which he regards as unsatisfactory and which his Consumer White Paper refer to as little more than sales devices. [93369]

Dr. Howells: No. There is currently a wide spectrum of codes ranging from the comprehensive and effective, through those which are well intentioned but do not work as well as they could, to those which exist as adjuncts to seemingly legitimate logos but have no practical effect. The Director General of Fair Trading has no power to disapprove codes at present, merely to encourage the preparation and dissemination of consumer codes. The Consumer White Paper "Modern Markets: Confident Consumers" (Cm 4410) proposes to give the OFT a power to give a seal of approval to codes that put the core principles into effect so that consumers, including those with poor literacy skills or who do not speak English, can see at a glance which codes are satisfactory; and that OFT will publicise decisions to approve or reject codes.

Consumer Legislation

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the consumer legislation he intends to review. [93368]

Dr. Howells: The Government intend to mount a rolling programme to review all consumer protection legislation. This process began with the publication of a consultation document on weights and measures law on 22 July 1999.

Street Lighting

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what increase or decrease in the amount of energy used per annum in providing street lighting nationally has occurred since (a) 1980, (b) 1985, (c) 1990 and (d) 1995. [93347]

Mr. Battle: Total electricity supplied for use in public lighting in the United Kingdom and the percentage changes in the quantity used are shown in the following table:

Year	Consumption GWh	Percentage change
1980	2,252	1980 to 1997: +19
1985	2,335	1985 to 1997: +15
1990	2,588	1990 to 1997: +4
1995	2,443	1995 to 1997: +10
1997	2,679	—

Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics 1998

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much energy in kilowatts was consumed in the provision of street lighting in the past financial year in (a) built-up areas and (b) outside built-up areas. [93348]

Mr. Battle: In 1997 total electricity supplied for use in public lighting in the United Kingdom amounted to 2,679 GW hours. Figures are not available for built up areas separately.

Arms Exports

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what export licences his Department has issued for HMX explosives since September 1998; and how many applications are pending; [93425]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 26 May 1999, Official Report, column 200, what is the stated end use as indicated on Form A, part 1: Export Licence Application Section D7 of each of the licences, granted or pending, for the export of RDX to (a) China, and (b) the USA. [93317]

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list the export licences granted for the export of armoured vehicles, spare parts, components and weapons to Singapore since 1988, where the end use destination was (a) Indonesia and (b) another country; [93509]

(2) if he will list the export licences granted for the export of armoured vehicles, spare parts, components and weapons to Singapore and Malaysia since 1988; [93508]

(3) if he will list the export licences granted for the export of armoured vehicles, spare parts, components or weapons to Sierra Leone since 1988; [93507]

(4) if he will list the export licences granted for the export of armoured vehicles, spare parts, components or weapons to Malaysia since 1988, where the end use destination was for Indonesia. [93506]

Dr. Howells: I will write to the hon. Members as soon as possible, and place a copy of that Letter in the Library of the House.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the countries visited by himself and his predecessors since 1 May 1997. [92803]

Mr. Byers: The countries visited are listed as follows:

Australia
Belgium
China
France
Hong Kong SAR
India
Italy
Japan
Pakistan
Russia
Singapore
South Africa
Spain
Switzerland
USA.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to visit (a) Poland, (b) Hungary, (c) the Czech Republic, (d) Slovenia and (e) Estonia. [92689]

Mr. Byers: I recognise the importance of these countries and hope to visit them as soon as possible.

Milk Marque

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the former MMC's conclusion that the reform of the milk selling system could not produce a competitive market for milk. [93331]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear in his statement on 6 July 1999, Official Report, column 455–56 that reform of the milk sales system was essential if the raw milk market was to function as effectively and fairly as possible. Both Milk Marque and the processors have indicated that they are in favour of reform of the selling system. Both sides have a common interest in devising a system which enjoys the confidence of all.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of Milk Marque's application to extend its operations into processing. [93329]

Dr. Howells: The MMC concluded that Milk Marque's planned increase in its milk processing capacity may be expected to operate against the public interest, by enhancing its ability to exploit its monopoly power. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State concluded that, while Milk Marque remained a monopoly supplier of raw milk to the processing sector, it should not be allowed to extend its milk processing activities in this way. The Secretary of State therefore asked the Director General of Fair Trading to seek undertakings from Milk Marque that it would not take any further steps towards making or carrying out any agreement to acquire or build a processing plant without the prior agreement of the Director General, as the MMC recommended.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the effect of the Competition Act 1998 on his proposals for Milk Marque. [93249]

Dr. Howells: Milk Marque will be subject to the Competition Act 1998 when it comes fully into force on 1 March 2000. It will continue to be under an obligation to comply with any remedies resulting from the monopoly investigation into milk.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what period, following the rejection of the former MMC's recommendation that Milk Marque be broken up, the Government plans that the interim measures will apply. [93330]

Dr. Howells: The interim measures will apply until a satisfactory long term solution has been agreed to the adverse effects of the existing way milk is sold by Milk Marque.

Oftel Inquiry Lines

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers he has to ensure that members of the public are able to reach Oftel on their inquiry lines. [93057]

Mr. Wills: As is the case for any organisation, public or private, it is for Oftel itself to ensure that it can be reached by members of the public. In recent months there has been a large increase in the number of consumers telephoning Oftel with complaints and queries. Five additional staff were recruited in June and an action plan has been put in place to improve the service.

Temporary Employment

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about conditions of employment for workers on temporary employment contracts; what measures he proposes to introduce to improve the legal rights for workers on temporary employment contracts; and if he will make a statement. [93200]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Department receives frequent correspondence from members of the public regarding different aspects of conditions of employment for temporary workers.

The Employment Relations Bill, currently before Parliament, will abolish provisions which currently allow employees working under specified fixed term contracts to waive their right to claim unfair dismissal at the end of the term. The Government will implement the recently adopted European Directive on Fixed-Term Work, which will ensure decent conditions for most classes of temporary worker. The deadline for implementing this Directive is July 2001.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what improvements in conditions his Department has introduced for workers on temporary employment contracts since May 1997. [93199]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Temporary workers will benefit in the same way as those on indefinite contracts from the range of improved employment conditions we have introduced. The Working Time Regulations 1998 provide protection for workers from long working hours and the right to rest and paid leave; the qualifying period for general unfair dismissal claims has recently been reduced from two years to one; and the National Minimum Wage Act 1998, which took effect on 1 April, sets minimum wage rates for workers aged 18 or over. We are also consulting on updated regulations to protect the interests of those finding work through employment agencies. Proposals in the Employment Relations Bill, now in Parliament, will ensure that employees working under fixed term contracts cannot waive their right to claim unfair dismissal at the end of the term.

CARAD Programme

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further extension he proposes to the CARAD programme. [93198]

Mr. Battle: The DTI Expenditure Plans Report (March 1999) confirmed CARAD funding for 1999–2000 at £20 million. A similar amount was also indicated for the following two years although the Secretary of State will continue to review the balance of funding across the whole range of DTI programmes.

Indonesia

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of exports and imports in respect of defence and security equipment and services between the UK and Indonesia in each year since 1995; and if he will classify such exports and imports under the headings of the International Trade statistics classification. [92232]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 23 July 1999]: Information on exports of military equipment during 1997 was included in the Government's Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls published by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 25 March 1999. A survey of the relevant Tariff Codes was given in Appendix C of the Report. Information for 1998 will be included in the Government's next Annual Report which is currently being prepared.

Figures for UK imports and exports of services prior to 1997 could only be provided at disproportionate cost, and the international trade classification does not cover services.

Long-term Illness (Vale of Glamorgan)

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the percentage of the population experiencing limiting long-term illness in the Peterston Super Ely, Dinas Powys and Wenvoe Wards in the Vale of Glamorgan. [92791]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 23 July 1999]: This is a devolved matter for the Welsh Assembly.

Power Stations (Blyth)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on National Power's plans to close its power stations at Blyth in Northumberland. [93247]

Mr. Battle: This is a matter for the company and the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of the closure of National Power's power stations at Blyth, on the continued need for new power lines running south through Yorkshire. [93246]

Mr. Battle: Development consents were granted for these lines in 1998 following exhaustive public inquiries and there is no statutory basis for now reviewing those consents. No reassessment of the situation has therefore been made by my Department.

Power Lines (Vale of York)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many trees will be felled in the Vale of York in order to facilitate construction of the Lackenby to Shipton power lines; [93245]

(2) if he will make a statement on the requirements placed on the National Grid Company to disclose information on the number of trees to be felled in order to construct pylons in the Vale of York. [93244]

Mr. Battle: There are a number of planning conditions which the National Grid Company has to fulfil before it can commence work on the Lackenby to Picton to Shipton overhead line. Implementation of these is a matter for discussion between the company and the local planning authorities. In the event of disagreement it falls to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to determine if the company has complied with the particular condition.

Mergers

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are being considered to ensure that, under proposals to transfer decisions on mergers from Ministers to independent competition authorities, those responsible will be accountable to Parliament and the electorate. [93362]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry intends to publish a consultation document shortly to initiate a fundamental debate on the regulation of mergers, inviting views on all sides.

Multi-fibre Agreement

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy on the Multi-fibre Agreement; and if he will make a statement. [93367]

Mr. Wilson: The Government's policy is that, in accordance with the commitments that the Community entered into in the GATT Uruguay Round, quota restrictions maintained by members of the World Trade Organisation (WTO) on imports of textile and clothing products originating in other members of the WTO shall be phased out over a 10-year period ending on 31 December 2004.

Internet Consumer Gateway

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which companies or organisations will be providing and updating the proposed Internet Consumer Gateway; and what is the estimated annual running cost. [93365]

Dr. Howells: The Consumer Gateway was launched at the same time as the "Modern Markets: Confident Consumers" White Paper. It links sources of consumer advice and information, and as such the estimated running costs of maintaining and operating the current site are minimal. My officials will be updating and improving the Gateway, taking note of any feedback we receive from users.

US Imports (Tariffs)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take into account tariffs on imports from the United States of America when determining the reasons for higher prices in the United Kingdom. [93364]

Dr. Howells: There are many reasons why prices differ between the UK and the USA, including tariffs on goods entering the UK. If the results of our research suggest that prices in the UK reflect anti-competitive behaviour, I shall refer the matter to the Director General of Fair Trading.

EU Car Sales

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many motor cars were purchased from countries of the European Union other than the United Kingdom by citizens of the UK for their personal use in 1998. [92006]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Rover-BMW

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department first submitted the proposal for Government financing of Rover-BMW to the Competition Commissioner. [89970]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 July 1999]: I will write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, indicating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91997]

Mr. Byers: I will write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Belize (Banking Regulations)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what occasions since 1993 his Department has received written or oral approaches from the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) on matters relating to banking regulations in Belize. [92073]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 20 July 1999]: I will write to my hon. Friend shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Departmental Expenditure (Leeds)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the programmes funded directly by his Department, relating to social exclusion, regeneration, community development, employment or education, currently operating in (a) the City of Leeds and (b) the Leeds Central parliamentary constituency, listing for each programme the amount of such funding for each of the last three years and the amount planned to be spent in each of the next three financial years. [92910]

Mr. Wills: The information requested is not held by my Department centrally. The Government Office for Yorkshire and the Humber (GOYH) has provided the following details. Information at a constituency level is not available.

Funding for core services of the Business Link in Leeds and the Local Competitiveness Challenge amounted to:

Year	£
1997–98	947,810
1998–99	985,627

National budgets for 2000–01 will not be known until late 1999 and therefore negotiation for Business Link budgets will not begin before January-March 2000.

Pump priming funding of £97,500 has been awarded to Business Link Leeds under the Information Society Initiative (ISI) programme for Business Local Support Centres, designed to encourage and support SMEs in the use of IT. BL Leeds has had a number of successful ERDF bids for projects to increase provision, cohesion and quality of service to the micro and small business and start up client groups, £445,575 has been awarded in the last three years.

SMART awards totalling £448,337 were given to Leeds based companies between 1997 and the present and it is projected that at least the same amount will be awarded for 1999–02.

There are 17 "IT for All" Centres in Leeds. IT for All is a DTI funded national programme designed to promote the wider use of IT among the general public.

There is no direct funding by DTI to individual centres.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the results of the Business Link network's ComplY2K scheme offering computer millennium compliance tests to small businesses; and if he will make a statement. [92907]

Mr. Wills: ComplY2K is a risk assessment diagnostic tool offered by the National Computing Centre to enable businesses to address their millennium bug problems. It is one of a number of tools available for this task and some BLs are using it as part of their response to addressing Y2K issues with their client base. My Department has not made any specific assessment of the use of this particular package. However, Business Links continue to work closely with Action 2000 to ensure that they are providing appropriate Y2K support services. Action 2000 continue to monitor the national picture of the state of readiness of UK companies.

ComplY2K and other tools like it, when applied to an individual company, deliver a report which identifies areas of high risk and offers an action plan for addressing them. Some Business Links have developed their own packages and all have some structured approach or toolkit to engage their client base. These have been offered along with the DfEE's highly successful Bug Buster training programme. Business Links will assist with some action areas identified by these tools, perhaps project manage the process, and signpost to local suppliers who can address other specific items identified in the report.

Inward Investment (North-East)

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate has been made of the value of inward investment projects into the area covered by the Government Office for the North-East in the last year for which figures are available. [93434]

Mr. Wills: The figure given is based on information provided by companies at the time of the announcement of their decision to invest in the UK. It is based on the companies' best estimate, at the time, of the capital expenditure involved.

There is no requirement to notify the Department of inward investments, so the figure includes only those projects where the Department's Invest in Britain Bureau and its regional partners were involved or which have come to their notice.

Estimated value of investment: £646,824,000.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs have been (a) created and (b) safeguarded by new inward investment projects in the area covered by the Government Office for the North East in the last year for which figures are available. [93433]

Mr. Wills: The figures given below are based on information provided by companies at the time of the announcement of their decision to invest in the UK. It is based on the companies' best estimate, at the time, of the capital expenditure involved.

There is no requirement to notify the Department of inward investments, so the figure includes only those projects where the Department's Invest in Britain Bureau and its regional partners were involved or which have come to their notice.

Year	Number of projects	Number of new jobs	Number of safeguarded jobs
April 1998–March 1999	35	2,304	6,953

Genetically Modified Cotton

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure importers of cotton are able to determine whether cotton has been genetically modified. [93150]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 26 July 1999]: Under the "gmo" Directive (Directive 90/220/EEC) and the "novel foods" Regulation (Regulation (EC) 258–97), genetically modified cotton plants may not be cultivated in the EU, and products derived from such plants that enter the human or animal food chains may not be imported into the EU.

Raw cotton, cotton textiles and made-up cotton textiles derived from genetically modified cotton plants fall outside the scope of that legislation. In these circumstances it is for importers wishing to establish whether or not such products are derived from genetically modified cotton plants to do so in the course of their commercial dealings with the exporter.

Civil Servants' Expenses

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library a list of the travel and subsistence expenses rates payable to senior civil servants in his Department. [92857]

Mr. Byers: I will write to my hon. Friend shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Defence Export Credits

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will extend the commitment not to provide defence-related export credits to poor highly indebted countries to cover those (a) at risk of conflict and (b) engaged in post-conflict reconstruction. [93294]

Mr. Wilson: In 1997 the Chancellor announced a five-point plan to resolve the debt problems of poor countries and set them on a path to sustainable growth. This included an undertaking that export credits for poor, highly indebted countries would support only productive expenditure. This policy does not extend beyond the, so called, Highly Indebted Poor Countries (HIPCs).

Spanish Spent Reactor Fuel

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the (a) outstanding contracts and (b) contracts under negotiation for the import of irradiated spent research reactor fuel from Spanish reactors. [93613]

Mr. Battle: I understand that BNFL have no contracts either outstanding or under negotiation for reprocessing Spanish research reactor fuel. On 5 June 1998, Official Report, column 385, I announced that UKAEA would not accept any new contracts for reprocessing spent nuclear fuel at Dounreay, so there are no contracts under negotiation with Spain or any other country. Nor does UKAEA have any outstanding contracts with Spain.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many public interest immunity certificates or equivalent documents have been provided by Ministers or officials in his Department since 3 May 1997; and at what level each such certificate or other document has been signed. [93532]

Mr. Byers: I will write to the right hon. and learned Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Domestic Animal Skins

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) domestic dog and (b) domestic cat skins have been (i) imported to and (ii) exported from the United Kingdom in each of the last five years. [93618]

Mr. Wilson: The information requested is not available because the system of classification used to record trade does not separately identify domestic dog and cat skins.

Textphones

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer on 20 July 1999, Official Report, column 470, concerning textphones, what assessment he has made of the signage and accessibility of the public textphone network. [93313]

Mr. Wills: The signage and accessibility of BT public textphones is a matter for the company itself and Oftel. Many of the public textphones currently installed are at sites owned by organisations such as Railtrack or the British Airports Authority, who control signage.

Generally, BT use a recognised, distinct, yellow and black textphone sign on public textphones themselves, which marks them out among a bank of conventional payphones. BT has also produced leaflets, available from the RNID and other interested bodies, giving public textphone locations.

Multinationals

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the definition of a multinational corporation used by his Department. [92557]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 26 July 1999]: I will write to my hon. Friend shortly and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Appointments

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many appointments to public bodies were made by his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 by (i) gender and (ii) ethnicity; and if he will make a statement. [92564]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 26 July 1999]: I will write to my hon. Friend shortly and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

National Air Traffic Services Ltd.

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he intends to proceed with the proposed public private partnership for National Air Traffic Services Ltd.; and if he will make a statement. [93540]

Mr. Prescott: The Government issued a consultation paper in October 1998 outlining our preferred option for a public private partnership (PPP) for NATS as set out in our White Paper on the future of transport. We are grateful to those organisations and individuals who responded to our consultation. Their views have been taken into consideration as part of the policy development process for this PPP.

NATS' operational strengths, and their safety record, are among the best in the world but they need a wider range of management skills, and access to capital, to meet the challenges of the future, in particular the ever-increasing rise in traffic. The Government want to build on NATS' strengths, bring in new management skills such as project management expertise, improve aviation safety, secure long-term investment of £1 billion over 10 years, including completion of Swanwick and the New Scottish Centre, and retain public accountability in a strategic industry.

We have a number of principal objectives for the PPP. These are:

to maintain and build upon the excellent record of aviation safety in the UK, which was reflected in the Select Committee's recent report; to ensure that NATS has adequate funding for investment and to provide it with the commercial freedom to develop its business within a robust framework of economic regulation; and to maintain effective civil/military joint working of the national air traffic system for the benefit of all users and to accommodate national needs in crisis, war and emergency.

The Government are also keen to ensure that best value is obtained for the taxpayer, that NATS' employees should have the opportunity to acquire an interest in the undertaking in which they are employed and to which they have contributed so much, and to preserve the pension rights of both existing and retired employees.

The Government have concluded that NATS should be separated from the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA), which will then become the independent, separate safety regulator of air traffic services. This separation will ensure that safety regulation and service provision are undertaken in separate organisations, as the Select Committee has recommended over many years. This will help to maintain and build on some of the most stringent safety standards in the world.

We intend to effect this new and innovative PPP through the introduction of a strategic partner who will acquire a controlling interest in NATS. The company will then become a New Partnership Company, structured to create a genuine partnership between the public and private sectors and involve the employees, airlines, and other stakeholders in a new Stakeholder Council. Subject to legislation, the PPP could be put in place by the end of the year 2000. Full details of our conclusions thus far are contained in the Government's report on the response to the public consultation, a copy of which has today been placed in the Library of the House.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the controls on the marketing of genetically modified crops provided for in Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 are applied in the absence of a marketing consent issued thereunder. [85951]

Mr. Meacher: The commercial growing of genetically modified (GM) crops requires specific consents to be issued at the Community level under Directive 90/220/EEC. All member states have an input into this decision-making process. Once an approval has been issued, it may be used throughout the Community, provided any specific conditions on use, or on types of environment and geographical areas for release are complied with.

The controls on the marketing of GM crops in the UK provided for in Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 would apply to a consent issued by another member state in the same way as they would to a consent issued by the UK Competent Authority.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the RSPB's recommendations on the plantation of genetically modified crops. [87937]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 1 July 1999]: My Department takes very seriously the concerns of The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds regarding the commercial planing of genetically modified crops and has actively sought the advice and involvement of RSPB scientists to take forward recent initiatives to address biodiversity issues.

The RSPB have raised the concern that herbicide tolerant crops will lead to a rise in the use of broad-spectrum herbicides on fields, and that this in turn could decrease biodiversity in the fields and reduce food available to birds. My Department is spending £3.3 million on the 'farm-scale evaluation' research programme to study the effect of the management of GM crops on the abundance and diversity of farmland wildlife. This research programme began earlier this year and will last at least until 2002. The research is being overseen by a scientific steering committee that will ensure the research is scientifically robust. A scientist from the RSPB is present on this committee.

The RSPB have also raised the concern that the introduction of insect resistant crops could have an unacceptable impact on biodiversity. Again my Department takes these concerns very seriously. In October last year I announced that the industry had agreed not to introduce insect resistant GM crops into commercial agriculture in Britain for three years. Research is in place to ensure that risks posed by these crops to the environment are thoroughly investigated.

The RSPB note the possibility of GM crops cross-pollinating with wild relatives. Each application for the release of genetically modified crop is supported by a risk assessment, which is evaluated by Government experts and independent scientists on the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE). ACRE consider in detail the potential for each GM crop to cross-pollinate with wild relatives and a GM crop will be granted consent only if ACRE are satisfied that the risks presented are negligible.

The RSPB hold a wider concern that the introduction of genetically modified crops could lead to landscape changes and/or changes in crop rotations. This potential wider impact of the commercial use of GM crops has been discussed in the recently published paper "The Commercial use of GM crops in the UK: the potential wider impact on farmland wildlife", published by the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE). Following publication of this report the remit of ACRE has been widened with the setting up of a sub-group to discuss and advise on the issues raised. This includes representatives of English Nature and the RSPB. The sub-group will review the risk assessment of GMOs to include a greater consideration of the wider biodiversity impacts which have been made possible via the revision of directive 90/220/EEC on the release to the environment of genetically modified organisms.

We agree with concerns expressed about the wider impacts on wildlife of the large scale introduction of GM crops. Until GM crops are planted on a larger scale, it is difficult to assess accurately all the effects which they may have on biodiversity. This process must be managed carefully. The Government have therefore reached agreement with the industry on a voluntary code of practice which will strictly limit the first farm-scale plantings and ensure that we are able to monitor any effects on the environment and, in particular, on populations of farmland wildlife and only if no damage has been found to the environment. Full-scale commercial planting will not take place until the results have been carefully assessed. If these results show that particular genetically modified crops harm the environment, we have the powers to withdraw their approvals for commercial planting and we will use them.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 5 July 1999, Official Report, column 367, (1) if he will ensure that no further consents are issued which allow the products of a genetically modified crop trial to enter the food chain; and if he will take steps to establish the fate of the products of genetically modified crop trials where consents were given for them to enter the food chain; [91251]

(2) which company or companies were given consents to use the products of genetically modified crop trials as animal feed in (a) August 1994 and March 1997 in respect of genetically modified oil seed rape and (b) April 1996 in respect of genetically modified maize; what were the locations of these trials; and what information concerning these trials and the consents given to use their products as animal feed was made available to hon. Members and the public, prior to the crops being grown. [91252]

Mr. Meacher: No genetically modified (GM) crops are currently being grown for food, feed or processing in the United Kingdom. Any future applications for material of a GM Crop trial to be used as food or feed would be subject to a scientific assessment of risk carried out on a case-by-case basis.

The two consents in respect of GM oil seed rape mentioned in my earlier reply had approval for the meal from the trial crop to be used as feed, but the material was not in fact used in this way and did not therefore enter the feed chain. Both consents were issued to Plant Genetic Systems NV and the trials took place at NIAB, Cambridge in 1994–95 and at Inkwell, Bedfordshire in 1997–98.

The GM maize referred to in my earlier answer has Europe-wide approval under Part C of Council Directive 90/220/EEC for agricultural use leading to animal consumption. The consent for the trial was issued to Sharpes International Seeds Ltd. covering six sites: Boothby Graffoe, Lincolnshire; NIAB, Cambridgeshire, Dartington, Devon; CWS/Gainseed, Cheshire; NIAB, Winchester, Hampshire; and Great Dunmow, Essex. Of these, only material from the site in Cheshire was ensiled to use as animal feed.

All information on releases of GM crops, apart from that considered commercially confidential as set out in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 390, is available to the public on request.

Roadworks Management

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to consult on proposals to improve roadworks management standards. [91498]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In last year's Integrated Transport White Paper a commitment was made to consult on options for an incentive system, with penalties, to minimise disruption to road users, and to encourage improved co-ordination of street works. This commitment was re-affirmed by the then Minister for Transport, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton, North and Bellshill (Dr. Reid), during the debate on roads policy on 18 March 1999, Official Report, column 1333, and the Government will be going to consultation soon.

Gender Impact Assessment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, stating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [91684]

Mr. Meale: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health on 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 636.

As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that their policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, my Department is working closely with the Women's Unit to develop good practices for carrying out gender impact appraisal.

In May 1998, my Department relaunched its policy appraisal for equal treatment initiative. We are continuing to make use of consultations, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy on women.

In parallel, we are developing a gender audit checklist to help transport operators and planners better understand and meet women's public transport requirements. The checklist is currently being finalised. Similarly, in housing, the Department (in association with the Women's Unit and the Department of Health) have commissioned a comprehensive package of research on 'Accommodation and Support for Households Experiencing Domestic Violence'. This study will examine a range of women's experiences of the accommodation and support provided in response to their needs, including those women who are assisted under the homeless legislation.

River Thames (Commuters and Freight)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the more effective use of the River Thames for commuters and freight. [92474]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are committed to realising the potential of the River Thames as a transport artery. Our Thames 2000 initiative aims to revitalise passenger transport on the River through a programme of new piers and services and the establishment of London River Services Ltd. as the River arm of London Transport. We are also looking to maintain and increase use of the River for transporting freight, including through planning policies and the award of freight facilities grants.

In connection with these and other initiatives, my Department is in regular contact with a wide range of people and organisations who wish to see fuller use of the Thames for passenger and freight transport.

Hastings

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on the Access to Hastings Study announced by his Department in July 1998; what the terms of reference are for (a) the study and (b) the steering group for the study; if the proposed steering group will have an agreed constitution or rules of operation; if the steering group will have autonomy in controlling the study, and what reserve powers his Department will have; if his Department will have a power of veto over the steering group's decisions; and what timetable is envisaged for completion of the report and his Department's decision upon it. [92294]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Progress is being made on the "Access to Hastings Multi Modal Study". There have now been two Steering Group meetings and there will be a third meeting in August.

Draft terms of reference for the Study have not yet been formally agreed, the main aims of the terms of reference are to develop a sustainable and integrated strategy for the Hastings area to promote competitiveness and the achievement of regeneration objectives. The Study should recommend a plan and measures to address problems associated with the A21 and the A259 trunk roads. A multi modal approach will inform all stages of the Study to provide a strategy promoting a safe, efficient, accessible and sustainable transport system and to protect both the built and natural environment.

The Steering Group will operate in a manner that is consistent with the multi modal studies methodology. The Steering Group owns the multi modal Study and will steer and oversee the development, progress and satisfactory completion of the Access to Hastings Study. The Steering group will advise on consultants' recommendations which, subject to views of SERPLAN, will then be submitted to Ministers. We anticipate that the Study will be let to consultants in the Autumn of this year and will take 12–15 months to complete.

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what legal obstacles there are to visits by himself or his ministerial colleagues to Hastings to examine the adequacy of its roads infrastructure; [92293]

(2) if he or one of his ministerial colleagues responsible for roads will visit Hastings to examine the adequacy of its road infrastructure. [92292]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Pending the taking of final statutory decisions on the three A259 schemes near Hastings, that were the subject of the 1995–96 public inquiry, Ministers have to maintain a position of impartiality. In the circumstances it would not be appropriate for myself or any ministerial colleagues to visit Hastings.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 24 June 1999, Official Report, column 440, on what dates special advisers from his Department travelled to the United States of America on official business; and how many meetings each special adviser held with members and officials of the United States Government during each visit to the United States of America, indicating (a) the date and location of each meeting, (b) the names of the special advisers and members and officials of the United States Government at each meeting and (c) the name of the United States departments to which they belong. [92252]

Mr. Prescott: Special advisers accompanied Ministers to the USA on official business on four occasions between 2 May 1997 and 31 March 1999. All Ministerial travel was accounted for in the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on 17 June 1999, Official Report, columns 196–97.

Council House Sales

Mr. Heseltine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the total cash value of council house sales has been since the date of the enactment of the Housing Act 1980. [92920]

Ms Armstrong: Between April 1980 and December 1998, total capital receipts to local authorities in England arising from the sale of council homes for owner-occupation were estimated at £24.0 billion. The majority of the 1.560 million sales in this period were under the Right-to-Buy provisions of the Housing Act 1980, which came into effect in October 1980.

In the same period, it is estimated that local authorities had capital receipts of some £3 billion from over 310,000 other dwellings sales and transfers, including Large Scale Voluntary Transfers of housing stock, principally to Registered Social Landlords.

Croydon Tramlink

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the proposed fare structure for Croydon Tramlink; and what is the proposed fare for a single journey from New Addington to Croydon Town Centre. [93185]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter for London Transport and Tramtrack Croydon Ltd. I understand that the fare structure for Croydon Tramlink has not yet been decided.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the passenger projections for Croydon Tramlink for the years 2000–02. [93184]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a commercial matter for Tramtrack Croydon Ltd., the private sector consortium which holds the concession to build, operate and maintain Croydon Tramlink.

Air Pollution

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list, in respect of processes regulated under the Integrated Pollution Control Regulations, the number of (a) substantial air pollution incidents, (b) prosecutions resulting from air pollution incidents, (c) prohibition notices and (d) enforcement notices issued to prevent the risk of air pollution incidents in each Environment Agency region in (i) 1996–97 and (ii) 1997–98. [92922]

Mr. Meale: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter, together with any attachments, in the Library.

Transport Initiative Bids

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many bids were received for each transport initiative launched since 1 May 1997 under which specific grants were allocated; and if he will list for each initiative, by financial year, those applications which were (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful, giving in each case the amount applied for and the amount allocated. [93147]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 July 1999]: The information is not available in the form requested. The table gives details, where available, of numbers of applications for specific grants and the grant allocation for successful bids in the year in question.

DVLA

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions under what circumstances DVLA release information concerning the ownership of vehicles to persons other than those with specific authorisation in law. [93077]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 July 1999]: DVLA records vehicle keeper information, not vehicle ownership. The Secretary of State has powers, which are delegated to DVLA, to disclose vehicle keeper information to the police, local authorities, and to anyone who can demonstrate "reasonable cause". The term is not defined in law and each request is considered on merit.

Most requests originate from insurance companies to investigate claims or, for example, to trace a driver who has failed to stop following an accident.

Memorials

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations he has held with the Confederation of Burial Authorities concerning the future of memorials; and if he will make a statement. [93270]

Mr. Meale: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 26 May 1999, Official Report, column 171.

Government Office for the North East

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many staff are currently employed by the Government Office for the North East. [93436]

Mr. Meale: Government Office for the North East (GO-NE) has a complement of 257 staff in the current year. As at 1 July 1999, there are 250.7 staff in post employed by GO-NE.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the administrative costs of the Government Office for the North East in 1998–99. [93435]

Mr. Meale: The Administrative Costs of the Government Office for the North East in 1998–99 were £8.651 million.

New Deal (Injuries)

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many injuries to participants on the New Deal programme have been reported to the HSE, broken down by categories, under the reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995. [93440]

Mr. Meale: The Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 do not require employers to differentiate between participants on the New Deal programme and other employees when making a report to the HSE under these regulations. The information is therefore not available.

Motorway Noise

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to assist residents who suffer from excessive noise from motorways; and if he will make a statement. [93277]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the responsibility for the measuring and monitoring of noise levels at properties where motorways have been built. [93203]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There is no requirement for noise levels to be monitored after a road has been built. But within six months of the final offers of noise insulation under the legislation applying to new or substantially altered roads, residents living within 300 metres of such a road who had not been offered insulation have an opportunity to appeal for the assessment to be reviewed. In such cases, it is not general practice to undertake noise measurements, but to calculate the statistical level of noise required by the Regulations from the flow of traffic and other relevant factors.

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies his Department has carried out to identify high and unreasonable noise levels in properties where motorways were built before 1988; and if he will make a statement. [93276]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Following our announcement on 22 March 1999, Official Report, columns 50–51, of a ring-fenced budget for the Highways Agency to undertake noise mitigation measures in the most serious and pressing cases on existing roads, a large number of locations where concern has been expressed about noise have been assessed against the stated criteria. Detailed studies are now required to determine the feasibility of providing measures at locations meeting the criteria where there are no plans to provide a quieter road surface as part of routine maintenance operations.

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to assist people living near motorways on which there has been a significant increase in the volume of traffic above that forecast when the motorway was built. [93207]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government announced its proposals for dealing with the problem of noise arising from those roads for which the Secretary of State has responsibility, which include the majority of motorways, in "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England". We announced the annual budget which was being ring-fenced for the provision of noise mitigation measures on 22 March 1999, Official Report, columns 50–51, together with the criteria which would target the most serious and pressing cases, including locations affected by unexpectedly high levels of traffic growth.

Genetically Modified Seeds

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what measures are in place to prevent the escape into the environment of GM seeds while in transit; [93148]

(2) what assessment he has made of the environmental impact resulting from the escape into the environment while in transit of GM seeds. [93177]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 26 July 1999]: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Health and Safety Executive, Basingstoke

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons improvement and prohibition notices or other material has been placed in the public viewing room of the HSE offices in Basingstoke since 1993. [93274]

Mr. Meale: Under the requirements of the Environment and Safety Information Act 1988 HSE maintains at its field offices, including the one at Basingstoke, public registers of information on improvement and prohibition notices having public safety or environmental implications. These registers have been kept since 1 April 1989 and notices remain on the public register for at least three years. Information on other notices is available on request.

HSE offices also keep public registers of hazardous sites such as sites licensed under the Explosives Act 1875 or those subject to the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984, the Dangerous Substances in Harbour Areas Regulations 1987, the Fire Certificate Special Premises Regulations 1976.

Public access to other information held by HSE is made on request under the requirements of the "Code of Practice on Access to Government Information" or the Environmental Information Regulations 1992.

EU Landfill Directive

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made on implementing the EU Landfill Directive; and when he plans to inform the waste industry of the terms of the legislation to implement the Directive. [93619]

Mr. Meale: The EC Landfill Directive entered into force on 16 July 1999, and member states have two years to introduce the provisions necessary to comply with the Directive.

Work on implementation is progressing well; a consultation paper on the formal mechanisms for implementing the biodegradable municipal waste targets in Article 5 of the Directive will be published later in the summer, with the results being reflected in the final version of the Waste Strategy. The Government's proposals for implementing the other requirements of the Directive will be the subject of further consultations early next year.

Final decisions relating to the legislation required to implement the Directive will be made in light of these consultation exercises.

Pollution Prevention and Control Regulations

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the fourth consultation paper on the Pollution Prevention and Control Regulations will be issued. [93620]

Mr. Meale: We expect to issue this consultation paper during the week beginning 9 August with a deadline for comment of 8 October.

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Pollution Prevention and Control Regulations will come into force; and what period industry will have to prepare for the new regime. [93621]

Mr. Meale: The regulations are needed to transpose Directive 96/61 on Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control, which must be achieved by 31 October. Industry has been extensively consulted already and existing plant will have up to eight years before it is brought within the new regime.

Injurious Substances Regulations

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Environment Protection (Destruction of Polychlorinated Biphenyls and other Injurious Substances) Regulations will be published. [93638]

Mr. Meale: We are about to consult the Injurious or Hazardous Substances Advisory Committee, set up under section 140 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. When we have received and considered the advice of that committee, we shall publish the necessary notice in the London Gazette under section 140(6) of that Act, and make the regulations publicly available.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy not to grant approval for any GM plant under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992 as amended, where such plants contain antibiotic marker genes. [93208]

Mr. Meacher: Any application to release a genetically modified (GM) plant containing an antibiotic marker gene would be subject to a scientific assessment of risk carried out case-by-case on the basis of an environmental risk assessment. No consent would be given if the antibiotic marker gene in question would be harmful to human health or the environment.

The UK was instrumental in ensuring that the political agreement reached at the June Environment Council provided for the identification and phasing out of antibiotic marker genes which are harmful to human health and the environment.

National Countryside Access Forum

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those who attended the first meeting of the National Countryside Access Forum; and what arrangements are being made for industry and the trade unions to be represented in the forum. [93297]

Mr. Meacher: The National Countryside Access Forum has been established, at the Government's request, by the Countryside Agency. Those attending the first meeting on 21 July, as members of the Forum, were:

Professor Ian Mercer, Secretary General of the Association of National Park Authorities;

Mr. Hywel Davies, Chief Executive of the British Horse Society;

Mr. Iain McMorrin, Chair of the Access and Conservation Committee of the British Mountaineering Council;

Ms Kate Parminter, Director of the Council for the Protection of Rural England;

Sir Edward Greenwell, Vice Chair of the Executive Committee of the Country Landowners' Association;

Ms Pam Ashton, Chair of Campaigns and Policy Committee of the Cyclists Touring Club;

Mr. Peter Davidson, of Hertfordshire County Council representing the Local Government Association;

Air Commodore Simon Bostock, Moorland Association;

Mr. Tim Bennett, Deputy President of the National Farmers' Union;

Mr. Jo Burgon, Coast and Countryside Adviser for the National Trust;

Mr. Jerry Pearlman, Honorary Solicitor for the Ramblers' Association;

Mr. Gwyn Williams, Head of Species and Habitat Policy for the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds;

Ms Pamela Warhurst, Deputy Chair of the Countryside Agency, chaired the meeting.

Business and trade union interests will be represented on the Forum by independent members who will be appointed by the Countryside Agency in August.

M4 Bus Lane

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contingency plans exist under which the M4 bus lane restriction may be lifted in the event of an accident causing a blockage to one or both of the other lanes of the eastbound carriageway. [93588]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The design of the M4 bus lane included the formulation of contingency plans for dealing with accidents and incidents on the section of motorway including the bus lane. These were agreed with and are operated by the police. The police opened the bus lane to all vehicles for a short time on the morning of 23 July, following an accident that closed the two other lanes.

London Underground

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the extra expenditure for London Underground in 2000. [93539]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The additional resources announced on 15 July 1999, Official Report, columns 600–11, for London Transport in 2000–01 will mean that investment in the core Underground network should be in excess of £500 million, including investment under the PFI. London Transport announced details of this investment programme that the additional resources would help deliver on 22 July. I am arranging for London Transport's detailed breakdown to be placed in the Library of the House. This investment will lead to improvements across the network.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the membership of the task force set up to monitor improvements to London Underground; when it will first meet and how often; how long it has been established; what penalties the task force will be able to impose for performance failures by London Transport; and if he will publish the terms of reference for the task force. [93541]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As already announced the task force will be led by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport and its terms of reference are to monitor improvements to London Underground. Its membership will include representation from DETR, the Government Office for London, the Treasury, and London Transport. The first meeting will take place later in the summer, and the task force will meet regularly thereafter.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish details of the planned maintenance programme for London Underground per line over the next 12 months and details of line closures over the next 12 months. [93536]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Details of the planned Underground maintenance programme are a matter for London Underground.

For details of the temporary line closures London Underground are planning over the next 12 months, I refer to my reply of 2 July 1999, Official Report, column 291, to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood).

Aviation

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the daughter document on aviation. [93537]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In last year's integrated transport White Paper (Cm 3950) we announced that we would prepare a White Paper on UK airports policy, and that we would commission a series of preparatory studies in Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland, the North of England, the Midlands and South West England. The then Minister of Transport, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton, North and Bellshill (Dr. Reid), announced on 11 March 1999, Official Report, columns 360–61, a wide-ranging study of airport issues in the South East and East of England. He stated that we expect the studies to take around two years, and that the Government envisages that the results will be incorporated in the airports White Paper. We intend to make a further announcement about this in due course.

London Air Traffic Control Centre

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish overload statistics for LATCC for each of the last 36 months. [93538]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The details as recorded by the Civil Aviation Authorities Safety Regulation Group are:

Date	1996	1997	1998	1999
January	—	0	4	1
February	—	1	3	5
March	—	0	8	4
April	—	0	3	3
May	—	3	5	8
June	—	3	2	5
July	1	1	9	[1]8
August	3	1	3	—
September	0	3	8	—
October	2	2	6	—
November	2	0	3	—
December	2	0	2	—

[1] To 25 June

Overload reports record that more aircraft, in the controller's subjective opinion, are entering a sector than expected. There is rarely a loss of separation between aircraft during a reported overload, with only four occasions where a loss of separation was associated with an overload event since 1996.

Despite a reduction in the number of airproxes recorded in 1998, there was a noticeable increase in the number of overloads reported by controllers at London Air Traffic Control Centre. This was partly due to management encouraging staff to report such incidents so remedial action can be taken. All reports of overload incidents are investigated thoroughly by the Civil Aviation Authority and, wherever possible, action is taken to ensure that the lessons learned are implemented.

VDU Users (Eye Tests)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's estimate of the total number of employees that are entitled to an eye test provided by their employer under the Health and Safety (Display Screens Equipment) Regulations 1992. [93311]

Mr. Meale: A survey was conducted in 1995 on behalf of the Health and Safety Executive to evaluate the Health and Safety (Display Screen Equipment) Regulations 1992. The researchers estimated that about 5.5 million employees in Great Britain were entitled under the Regulations to an eye and eyesight test, to be provided by their employer at the employee's request.

Government Offices Transfers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) to what extent changes in costs of mileage allowances arising from the transfer of Government offices are treated as a factor in the taking of decisions on such transfers; [93230]

(2) what powers he has to ensure full evaluations take place of the cost implications of the movement of offices by the North West Regional Development Agency. [93231]

Mr. Meale: Under the terms of their Financial Memorandum the Regional Development Agencies are responsible for decisions about their location.

They are required to carry out a full evaluation of the costs and benefits of any material changes in their accommodation requirements. That evaluation should take account of any significant effect on mileage allowances paid to staff alongside other factors.

North West Regional Development Agency

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the experience and qualifications of Dr. Joan Firth are to carry out the role of independent assessor in the appointment of the Board of the North West Regional Development Agency. [93232]

Mr. Meale: Dr. Joan Firth, a former Grade 3, Deputy Director of Finance, in the Department of Health, was acting chair of Bradford NHS Trust at the time she acted as independent assessor in the appointment of the Board of the North West Regional Development Agency. She had had recent experience of appointing NHS Board Members in the North East.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if officers of the North West Regional Development Agency have discussed with board member the merit of projects and bids supported by that Agency where a board member has had what subsequently turned out to be a conflict of interest. [93446]

Mr. Meale: There is no record of any such discussions taking place.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many premises are owned by the North West Regional Development Agency on the Lakeland Business Park at Cockermouth; what is the total rent received per annum; and what is the total square footage. [93224]

Mr. Meale: There are seven premises (blocks) which are sub-divided into units and let to the list of tenants which is given in another answer to my hon. Friend today at columns 342–44.

	Area (sq. ft.)	Rent (principal) (£)
Block 1	5,135	NWDA
Block 2	4,459	20,025
Block 3	5,630	22,750
Block 4	4,816	19,521
Block 5	4,769	20,111
Block 6	4,885	9,616
Block 7	7,946	51,451
Total	37,640	143,474

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if, in the consideration of business by the North West Regional Development Agency, members of the board decided for themselves whether a conflict of interest exists. [93444]

Mr. Meale: In accordance with the North West Development Regional Agency Standing Orders, Board Members determine if they have an interest in any particular matter and declare it accordingly.

[93442]

Mr. John Dunning is the member with business interest linked to this project.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if, in the consideration of the SRB bids, any members of the board of the North West Regional Development Agency were required or offered to stand aside on the basis of conflict of interest. [93443]

Mr. Meale: When the North West Regional Development Board was discussing the proposed SRB bids, Members with an interest in any particular bid left the meeting prior to it being discussed. Each Board meeting agenda contains a reminder to this effect.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the register of interests applicable in the case of the North West Regional Development Agency. [93228]

Mr. Meale: The Register of Members Interests is available for inspection at the Headquarters in Warrington and will be published in the North West Regional Development Agency's Annual Report.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many visits overseas have been made by officers of the North West Regional Development Agency since the establishment of the Agency; to which countries; and at what cost to the taxpayer. [93227]

Mr. Meale: Since 1 April 1999 there have been 10 overseas visits made by officers of the North West Regional Development Agency. The countries visited were: Belgium, Japan, Ireland, Austria, Germany, France, U.S.A. The cost of these visits totals £4,381.50.

(2) if he will list the persons Dr. Joan Firth interviewed for possible appointment to the Board of the North West Regional Development Agency. [93233]

Mr. Meale: Details of the appointees to the North West Regional Development Agency were made public in the press notice at the time of their appointment, in line with the Office for the Commissioner for Public Appointments', in line with the Office for the Commissioner for Public Appointments' guidelines. However, under exemption 8b (Public Employments,

Mr. Meale: The Chairman of the Board has made two overseas visits. They were to Japan (cost £3,573) and Brussels (£639).

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what dates since the appointment of officers to the Shadow North West Regional Development Agency and since the formal establishment of the North West Regional Development Agency, officers of the Agency have met members of Cumbria Tourist Board. Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand that the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) tabled one written Parliamentary Question on shipping, in September 1993.

Ms Glenda Jackson: A Scottish representative will be appointed as member of the Strategic Rail Authority.

[93544]

Mr. Meale: I understand that, in response to pressure, Thames Water have today announced a change of policy on this issue. They will no longer impose meters in these circumstances.

Street Lighting

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of the budget of the Energy, Environment and Waste Directorate is allocated specifically to the promotion of energy-efficient street lighting on main trunk roads and motorways. [93359]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Energy, Environment and Waste Directorate funds a number of programmes aimed at improving energy efficiency, including the efficiency of lighting. In particular the Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme has supported a research and development project aimed at developing new energy control equipment for street lighting.

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how much has been spent by local authorities on the maintenance of existing street lighting outside built-up areas in the past financial year; [93349]

(2) how much has been spent by local authorities on the maintenance of existing street lighting in built-up areas in the past financial year; [93350]

(3) how much has been spent by local authorities in providing new and additional street lighting outside built-up areas in the past financial year; [93353]

(4) what statistics his Department collects on the (a) installation and (b) maintenance of street lighting carried out by local authorities each year. [93343]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is not available centrally.

(2) if he will list the manufacturers who have supplied street lighting equipment to his Department and local authorities in the past financial year. [93345]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Highways Agency, the executive agency responsible for trunk roads in England, does not award contracts directly to manufacturers of lighting equipment.

On new schemes, street lighting is installed by sub contracts working to a main contractor.

On existing roads, street lighting is installed and maintained by our managing agents. We do not keep, centrally, records of their expenditure.

Information on local authorities contracts is not kept centrally.

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how much his Department has spent on the new and additional street lighting outside built-up areas in the past financial year; [93354]

(2) how much his Department has spent on the maintenance of existing street lighting outside built-up areas in the past financial year; [93351]

(3) how much his Department has spent on the maintenance of existing street lighting in built-up areas in the past financial year; [93352]

(4) how much his Department has spent on new and additional lighting of motorways outside built-up areas in the past financial year. [93355]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list Government initiatives currently underway to correct existing poorly designed and installed street lighting in rural and urban streets. [93356]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Highways Agency are to issue advice on the renovation of street lighting schemes and although written for trunk roads and motorways it will be equally applicable to local authority roads. Some central Government funding is available to local authorities, for new street lighting schemes under the Private Finance Initiative. Where local authorities apply for this funding, proposals should be appraised in line with the Department's "New Approach to Appraisal" to ensure that the benefits and costs (including the environmental and safety benefits) are presented in a consistent way.

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has to promote the use of energy-efficient street lighting to local authorities. [93346]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department funds a number of programmes aimed at improving energy efficiency, including the efficiency of lighting. In particular the Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme has supported a research and development project aimed at developing new energy efficient control equipment for street lighting. Some central Government funding is also available, to local authorities, for new street lighting schemes under the Private Finance Initiative. Where local authorities apply for this funding, proposals should be appraised in line with the Department's "New Approach to Appraisal" to ensure that the benefits and costs (including running costs) are presented in a consistent way.

Lighting Guidelines

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what evidence he has that local planning authorities, lighting professionals and members of the public follow the guidelines published in 1997 by his Department and the Countryside Commission in the report, Lighting in the Countryside: Towards Good Practice. [93357]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has not undertaken specific research on this subject. The Department receives correspondence on the general issue of the effects of lighting but is not aware of concerns that the guidance is not being followed.

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the report Lighting in the Countryside: Towards Good Practice, jointly published by his Department and the Countryside Commission in 1997, is made accessible to local authorities, professionals and members of the general public. [93358]

Mr. Raynsford: On publication, copies were sent to a wide range of bodies, including local planning authorities in England, relevant local authority organisations and other professional bodies including RICS and the RTPI. Local authorities may make copies available to people in their area. The report continues to be available for purchase from the Stationery Office.

Non-UK Driving Licences

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the rules and restrictions governing the use of non-UK driving licences in the United Kingdom. [93338]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Licences issued by members of the European Economic Area (the EU plus Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway), other than those restricted to use within the member state issuing them, are subject to indefinite mutual recognition. The holder may use such a licence in the UK subject to the driving licence regulations but otherwise without restriction. There is no requirement to exchange the licence, except where there is a material change in entitlement.

Licences to drive vehicles up to 3.5 tonnes (cars and small vans) issued by the countries or territories which have been designated by order for recognition may be used for up to one year. After that the holder must exchange the licence for a British equivalent in order to continue driving. Countries designated for this purpose are: Australia, Barbados, British Virgin Islands, Canada, Republic of Cyprus, Gibraltar, Guernsey, Hong Kong, Isle of Man, Japan, Jersey, Kenya, Malta, New Zealand, Singapore, Republic of South Africa, Switzerland, Zimbabwe.

Holders of licences to drive larger vehicles from designated countries may only use such licences to drive vehicles which have been temporarily imported, but they must pass a British driving test for the category of licence if they wish to drive such vehicles permanently in the UK. This restriction on the driving of larger vehicles (whether lorry or passenger carrying) also applies to licences issued by non-designated countries.

Licences to drive vehicles up to 3.5 tonnes issued by non-designated countries may be used in the UK for up to one year continuously. The holder of such a licence who has been driving in the UK continuously for one year must obtain a British licence by taking a driving test in order to continue driving beyond that period.

Urban Task Force

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce his decisions on implementing the recommendations contained in the Urban Task Force report; and if he will make a statement. [93300]

Mr. Meale: The Urban Task Force's recommendations, set out in its report "Towards an Urban Renaissance", published on 29 June 1999, are currently being considered by Government. The Urban White Paper will provide the main vehicle for the Government's response.

It may be appropriate to address some individual recommendations on a different timescale. On 30 June 1999, Liverpool Vision was launched as a pilot for the Task Force's recommendation on the creation of Urban Regeneration Companies. East Manchester have been invited to submit a proposal to be a further pilot for the recommendation.

Capital Receipts (Property)

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of capital receipts have been spent on (a) building new properties and (b) renovating existing properties since the capital receipts initiative was introduced. [93299]

Mr. Raynsford: The latest information is for 1997–98 and in that year local authorities spent 7.2 per cent. of their allocation of the Capital Receipts Initiative on building new dwellings and 92.1 per cent. on renovating or repairing existing dwellings. The small balance of expenditure was spent on non-housing items.

Urban and Rural White Papers

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish White Papers on urban and rural policy; and if he will make a statement. [93306]

Mr. Meale: My right hon. Friend will publish the Urban and Rural White Papers when work has been completed. We expect this will be within the next 12 months.

Housing Policy

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the Green Paper on housing policy announced in the last Budget; and if he will make a statement. [93307]

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the Green Paper on Housing Policy; and if he will make a statement. [93546]

Mr. Raynsford: We intend to publish a Housing Policy Green Paper later this year. The Green Paper will set out our policy options for delivering our objectives in housing to ensure that everyone is offered the opportunity of a decent home and to promote social cohesion, well-being and self-dependence.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many responses he has received to the consultation paper, "Licensing Houses in Multiple Occupation-England";

when he expects to announce his decisions on the proposed new licensing scheme; whether those decisions will be included in the Green Paper on housing policy; when he plans to consult on the standards applicable to the licensing scheme; and if he will make a statement. [93305]

Mr. Raynsford: 475 consultation responses have been received to date. We are carefully analysing them and will announce our conclusions as soon as we are able to do so. The Government are currently considering the issues which should be included for consultation in the Green Paper. I cannot yet say when we will be in a position to consult on HMO standards.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much has been spent from the Single Regeneration Budget on (a) building new social housing, (b) renovating existing social housing and (c) private sector renovation schemes; and how much matching funding from other sources has been put into SRB schemes to be spent on (i) building new social housing, (ii) renovating existing social housing and (iii) private sector renovation schemes in each Regional Development Agency area for each year since the SRB was introduced. [93298]

Mr. Meale: The Single Regeneration Budget (SRB) currently funds over 500 (Rounds 1–4) regeneration schemes managed by local partnerships. A large number of these are likely to have multiple objectives, and cover a wide range of activities depending on local regeneration needs and priorities. It is not possible to break down expenditure to say how much has benefited one objective, therefore no information is available on the amount spent on building new social housing or on renovating social or private sector housing.

There is no specific matching funding requirement for SRB bids but partnerships are encouraged to maximise the leverage of private sector investment and funding from other public spending programmes. In the four Rounds to 31 March 1999, it is estimated that the total lifetime SRB allocation of £3.4 billion will lever in around £7.6 million of private sector investment over the same period.

Sussex Downs

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what meetings he has had with elected representatives, council officials and community groups from within the Brighton and Hove Unitary Authority area on the future management of the Sussex Downs. [93252]

Mr. Meacher: Ministers in this Department have met with a number of individuals and groups about the future management of the Sussex Downs. Those we have met include my hon. Friends the Members for Brighton, Kemptown (Dr. Turner) and for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Lepper); the Leader and Chief Whip of Brighton and Hove Council; and groups which are members of the South Downs Campaign, such as Friends of the Earth, which have a presence in Brighton and Hove.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors underlie the delay in announcing proposals for the future of the Sussex Downs Conservation Board. [93256]

Mr. Meacher: Ministers are considering as a whole the various issues dealt with in the former Countryside Commission's advice on the future management of our areas of protected countryside. There are a number of considerations, including those relating to the planning system, financial provision, local government responsibilities and the possibility of legislation. We want to ensure the right solutions for the South Downs, for the New Forest and for AONBs generally.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will be in a position to make a firm announcement on the future of the Sussex Downs Conservation Board. [93251]

Mr. Meacher: I expect an announcement to be made later this year, as part of the Government's response to the advice on the future management of protected countryside which was produced by the former Countryside Commission. In the meantime, the Sussex Downs Conservation Board has a clear commitment of Government funding until March 2001.

Government Office of the South East

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions following the inauguration of the South Eastern Development Agency, what the role of the Government Office of the South East will be. [93253]

Mr. Meale: In common with the other regional Government Offices, GOSE manages programmes on behalf of DFEE, DTI and DETR, supports and facilitates effective linkages between partners and programmes, and informs the development of Departments' policies from a regional perspective. GOSE will work closely with SEEDA, as it does with other regional partners.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people are currently employed by the Government Office of the South East; and how many were employed in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1997. [93255]

Mr. Meale: There are currently 247.1 full-time equivalent funded posts in the Government Office for the South East. In 1998 there were 235.1 full-time equivalent funded posts, and in 1997 there were 227 full-time equivalent funded posts.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the estimated out-turn is of the Government Office of the South East for the current financial year. [93254]

Mr. Meale: At this stage of the Financial Year there is no reason to believe that the out-turn will not be the same as the budget of £501,861,000.

English Partnerships

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the expenditure of English Partnerships in Greater London in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [93590]

Mr. Meale: Expenditure by English Partnerships within Greater London over the last five years is set out in the following table. The vast majority of this has been targeted at designated assisted areas.

Total expenditure	£000
1994–95	13,582
1995–96	20,888
1996–97[1]	43,331
1997–98[1]	65,162
1998–99[2]	127,113
Total	270,076

[1] Includes expenditure on the Greenwich Peninsula.
[2] Includes expenditure on the Royal Docks inherited from the London Docklands Development Corporation on 1 April 1998.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the expenditure of English Partnerships in (a) the Objective 2 Area in Lee Valley, (b) Park Royal and (c) other assisted areas in Greater London in each year since their inception; and if he will make a statement. [93591]

Mr. Meale: I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Child Safety (Cars)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that children are carried safely in cars. [93600]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The surveys of seat belt/child restraint wearing carried out by the Transport Research Laboratory on my Department's behalf, show that wearing rates by all passengers in the front are as high as 94 per cent. Since the Department's rear seat belt wearing advertising campaign in the Summer of 1998, which was repeated at Easter 1999, seat belt wearing rates have been climbing and for children in the rear of vehicles now stands at 91 per cent. as at April 1999. The campaign is continuing with a version of the advert presently running in cinemas and on local radio stations. We also promote the use of child restraints in my Department's leaflet "Seat Belts and Child Restraints", copies of which were placed in the Library of the House.

Trans-Pennine Rail Communications

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further steps he is taking to improve trans-Pennine rail communications. [93599]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the terms of their franchise agreement Northern Spirit, which operates Trans-Pennine services, are planning to increase services on the route from May 2000 to at least four trains per hour for twelve hours a day Mondays to Saturdays. This commitment is subject to Railtrack approval.

The Shadow Strategic Rail Authority (SSRA) has been established to bring strategic focus to the railways and will be placed on a statutory basis if the Railways Bill attains Royal Assent.

The SSRA will be given the power to penalise train operators financially for poor performance much faster than at present and we have also announced that we are willing to re-negotiate some franchises in return for guarantees of better services for passengers.

Remand Provisions (Housing Act 1996)

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the proposed timetable for bringing into force the commencement order for the remand provisions associated with section 155(2)(b) of and Schedule 15 to the Housing Act 1996. [91639]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 5 July 1999, Official Report, column 381. My Department is discussing with the Lord Chancellor's Department the best way forward on these provisions, and I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as we have reached our decision.

Narrowboats

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy on the charging of council tax on residential moorings for narrowboats; what estimate he has made of the number of such individual moorings in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [92524]

Mr. Meale: A mooring occupied by a boat which is somebody's sole or main residence is deemed to be a "dwelling" for council tax purposes and will therefore attract a council tax liability in the same way as other domestic types of property. The amount of council tax payable in respect of a mooring occupied by a boat will depend primarily on the valuation band to which the dwelling is assigned. We do not hold information on the number of moorings occupied by boats which are somebody's sole or main residence.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to receive the report from Lord Donaldson on the review of future proposals of the Coastguard Service; and if he will make a statement. [93340]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has now received Lord Donaldson's advice and is considering it.

Fox Control

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what alternative methods of fox control he recommends to replace that provided by hunting. [93489]

Mr. Meacher: The fox is not a protected species and may be killed or taken by owners and occupiers of land using any method, for example, shooting or trapping, which is not prohibited by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Planning Inspectorate's Report

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the Planning Inspectorate's Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–99. [93697]

Mr. Caborn: The Planning Inspectorate's Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–99 was published yesterday. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Overall, the Inspectorate met seven out of 10 targets set for its work in England. Handling times for hearing and inquiry cases, although much improved, missed the target. For inquiries, this is partly due to an increase in refusals by parties of dates offered by the Inspectorate. It is important that all parties co-operate and observe the deadlines set to enable the Inspectorate to deliver further improvements in performance.

The unit cost for written representation cases has increased. This is mainly due to a programme of investment in IT—upgrading PCs, and developing systems to improve performance and customer service. The Inspectorate continues to meet its efficiency target.

The Inspectorate has also maintained the programme of development plan inquiries to a high standard, helping to create greater certainty for all involved in the planning process as more areas are covered by up to date development plans.

The Inspectorate's quality target was met and exceeded, with reduced numbers of justified complaints against decisions issued. Surveys continued to show that its decisions are widely respected. It has also produced an outstanding financial performance during the year. The Inspectorate is very much involved in initiatives to develop the Government's proposals for the modernisation of the planning system. In the climate of a rapidly changing environment it is always ready to take on new areas of work in dispute resolution.

Regional Chambers

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made in designating regional chambers. [93698]

Mr. Caborn: I am pleased to announce that we have today issued a direction to Yorkshire Forward—the development agency for the Yorkshire and the Humber region—designating the Regional Chamber for Yorkshire and Humberside as its regional chamber.

Regional chambers provide a mechanism through which the Regional Development Agencies can take account of regional views and account for their activities. We expect that each RDA will have regard to the chamber's view in preparing its strategy, consult the chamber on its corporate plan and give an account of its performance to the chamber. Working together through the regional chambers local authorities, business and other partners can provide a focused voice for their region.

There is now a designated regional chamber in each of the English regions outside London. This marks the completion of another stage of the Government's regional agenda. The full list of regional chambers (some of which call themselves regional assemblies) and development agencies is as follows:

Regional chamber	Regional Development Agency
North West Regional Assembly	North West Development Agency
North East Regional Assembly	One North East
Regional Chamber for Yorkshire and Humberside	Yorkshire Forward
West Midlands Regional Chamber	Advantage West Midlands
East Midlands Regional Assembly	East Midlands Development Agency
East of England Regional Assembly	East of England Development Agency
South West Regional Chamber Agency	South West of England Regional Development
South East England Regional Assembly	South East England Development Agency

Shipping Industry

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish his response to the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee's Twelfth report of Session 1998–99 into the Future of the UK Shipping Industry (HC 172); and if he will make a statement. [93700]

Mr. Prescott: We welcome the Committee's report which generally supported our policy paper "British Shipping: Charting a new course" which is designed to initiate the action required to reverse the decline in the UK's shipping industry. We are today publishing our formal response which has been laid before the House.

Greater London Assembly

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 13 July 1999, Official Report, column 130, what progress has been made with preparations for the London Mayor and Assembly since that answer. [93702]

Mr. Raynsford: Good progress continues to be made. The Head of Transition, Dr. Robert Chilton, is assembling a team of people with backgrounds in local government, the civil service, other parts of the public sector, and the private sector. They are developing plans to ensure that the Mayor and Assembly can get off to a good start, with suitable administrative and financial support in place. The team moved into their temporary accommodation in Romney House, Westminster last week. I hope to issue shortly a consultation document about the initial organisation of the Greater London Authority.

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for a publicity campaign leading up to the elections for the Mayor and Assembly in London. [93799]

Mr. Raynsford: At the proposed elections on 4 May 2000, for the first Mayor and Assembly for London, the people of London will be facing a different and more complicated ballot than normal. For the first time, they will have a first and second choice when voting for the Mayor. They will also vote for a constituency Assembly Member and for a party in the pan-London ballot which is the basis for electing the 'top-up' Assembly Members. The Government have decided therefore to run an information campaign to ensure that eligible Londoners know how the voting system will work at these very important elections for the future of their city.

As the Greater London Authority is a new form of governance, there will also be information available about the duties and responsibilities of the new Mayor and Assembly. This will be an information campaign and will in no way compete with any political campaigns candidates may run.

No expenditure will be committed on the campaign until the Greater London Authority Bill receives Royal Assent.

Trans-European Transport Networks

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what will be the United Kingdom's share of the funds available in 1999 for priority projects and other schemes under the European Community's Financing Programme for Trans-European Transport Networks. [93704]

Mrs. Liddell: Two priority projects in the United Kingdom will receive some £27.8 million. £19.3 million will go towards the Channel Tunnel Rail Link and £8.5 million towards the West Coast Main Line. The UK will also receive over £4 million for other schemes, including £2.16 million for four projects to improve ground transport access to Birmingham, Manchester, London Luton and London City airports, and £1.6 million for a development study of satellite-based aviation and marine navigation systems.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the agreement between the Secretary of State and London and Continental Railways to build the Channel Tunnel Rail Link, known as the Development Agreement, will be made publicly available. [93800]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Development Agreement between the Secretary of State and London and Continental Railways as signed in 1996 was revised this year by two supplemental agreements known as the 2nd and 3rd Supplemental Agreements to the Development Agreement. Annexed to the 2nd Supplemental Agreement is a print of the entire revised text. I have arranged for both Supplemental Agreements to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Airport Transport Forums

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the final guidance on the setting up of airport transport forums, announced in the New Deal for Transport White Paper, will be published; and if he will make a statement. [93801]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Guidance on the setting up of Airport Transport Forums and the preparation of Airport Surface Access Strategies was published today, and copies have been placed in the House Libraries.

The Government's White Paper on the Future of Transport "A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone" (Cm 3950) stated that all airports in England with scheduled services should establish Airport Transport Forums and prepare Airport Surface Access Strategies to feed into Local Transport Plans.

On 31 March, we published draft guidance on what was required, and invited a wide range of interested parties, including airports, local authorities, planning bodies, transport providers etc. to comment. Responses to the consultation draft of this guidance were overwhelming supportive of the setting up of Airport Transport Forums and the preparation of Airport Surface Access Strategies. The guidance requires those airports which have 1,000 or more scheduled and charter passenger air transport movements per annum to set up Forums. It has been agreed that the requirement to set up Forums, and the guidance, will apply to Wales as well as to England. Separate guidance will be published in respect of Scotland.

A separate good practice guide, with illustrations of surface access improvements which meet the principles set out in the guidance and have already been implemented successfully at airports, is being prepared jointly with the Airport Operators Association and will be published later this Summer.

Electoral Review

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will confirm the arrangements he intends to follow to implement the periodic electoral review recommendations of the Local government Commission for England; and if he will make a statement. [93804]

Ms Armstrong: We have now considered the responses to the consultation, which I announced on 10 March 1999, Official Report, column 244, on proposals for implementing periodic electoral reviews (PERs).

Our intention remains to implement the recommendations of the Local Government Commission for England as soon as practicable on a normal election date for councils. Our consultation has shown that there is no consensus on holding additional elections to implement PERs, and we have concluded that it would not be desirable to do so.

Accordingly, we intend to implement the Commission's recommendations as follows. For district councils that hold whole council elections and where final recommendations are received by July 2002, implementation is to be on the normal election day in May 2003. For district councils that elect by thirds, where final recommendations have already been received, implementation is to be on the normal election day in May 2000; where final recommendations are received between August 1999 and 2001, implementation is to be on the normal election day in May 2002; and where final recommendations are received no later than July 2002 on the normal election day in May 2003.

The Commission's recommendations for a county council are to be implemented only after recommendations have been made and implemented for all the district councils in a county area. Subject to this, where final recommendations for county councils are received no later than July 2000, they are to be implemented on the normal election day in May 2001; subsequent final recommendations are to be implemented on the normal election day in 2005.

I am asking the Local Government Commission to consider their programme of PERs having regard to our intended approach to implementation and with a view to ensuring that all councils in England will have updated electoral arrangements in place by 2005.

Galvanised Steel Wall Ties

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he is now in a position to report on the further research his Department commissioned on galvanised steel wall ties. [93805]

Mr. Raynsford: The then Energy Efficiency Minister announced on 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 374, that as part of my Department's ongoing programme of research into rain penetration of cavity walls, she had asked for precautionary checks to be carried out on the condition of galvanised steel wire wall ties in a sample of houses with cavity walls filled with insulation. This followed the preliminary results of research at the BRE which indicated that there was a possibility that the life expectancy of green coloured galvanised steel wire wall ties might be shortened when used in conjunction with urea formaldehyde from cavity fill.

These checks have now been completed along with further experimental research and an independent review of the findings.

In the houses examined, there was no premature deterioration of galvanised ties with or without the green identification film in contact with urea formaldehyde foam cavity insulation.

The further experimental research was carried out on galvanised ties with and without the green identification film. The research comprised accelerated corrosion tests and chemical interactive tests with urea formaldehyde foam. Neither of these experiments indicated any discernible loss of galvanising.

With these results to hand and with the benefit of an independent review undertaken by consultants WS Atkins, BRE re-examined their earlier experimental findings. They have concluded that the accelerated corrosion observed under the experimental conditions could have been caused by vapour from the urea formaldehyde which under certain conditions of very high humidity can lead to very high rates of corrosion of galvanising. The conditions under which this could happen were present in the preliminary experimental research, but were unlikely to occur in houses.

The work concludes that there is no evidence that urea formaldehyde foam cavity wall insulation shortens the lifetime of galvanised wall ties.

Copies of these results have been placed in the House Library.

Recycling (Packaging)

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further advice he has had from the Advisory Committee on Packaging on progress towards meeting targets for increased recycling and recovery of packaging. [93821]

Mr. Meacher: I am grateful to the Committee for further advice, which among other things, seeks a more rigorous approach to implementation through introduction of quarterly compliance reporting and forward planning for increasing recycling and recovery of packaging waste. I shall be including these proposals in the consultation paper on inter sectoral share out and other matters which I hope to publish very shortly. Copies of both documents will be placed in the Library.

Green Ministers' Report

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the Green Ministers' Report. [93822]

Mr. Meacher: "Greening Government: the first annual report of Green Minsters" will be published tomorrow. The report provides a comprehensive account of what Green Ministers have been doing—and will do in future—to promote sustainable development, to integrate the environment into policies and to green their Departments' operations. The Report introduces targets, action plans and strategies across the wide range of activities of Green Ministers: waste, energy, water, transport, training and awareness raising, integrating the environment into policy and involving associate bodies. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Housing Stock (Debts)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is his policy on resolving problems relating to overhanging debt and early debt repayment premiums relating to the Housing Stock Transfer Programme; [93093]

(2) when he expects to publish the consultation paper on overhanging debt and early debt repayment premiums affecting the Housing Stock Transfer Programme; [93092]

(3) what the Chancellor of the Exchequer's policy is on the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Region's proposal for dealing with the problem of overhanging debt and early debt repayment premiums relating to the transfer of housing stock by Burnley Borough Council. [93091]

Mr. Raynsford: We aim to issue shortly a consultation paper setting out options for tackling the problem of overhanging debt which arises where the receipt from a housing transfer is insufficient to cover the authority's attributable housing debt.

London Transport

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the Government's performance targets for (a) London Underground and (b) London Buses have been met in the last two years. [91528]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This level of performance reflects an investment backlog of around £1.2 billion on the Underground, and increased traffic congestion on the roads. This is one of the reasons we have decided to allocate an additional £517 million of resources to London Transport, in addition to the £365 million of extra resources announced last year. This will enable them to deliver real improvements to passengers over the next two years.

Equal Treatment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has established a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [93461]

Mr. Meale: As part of the Government's commitment to ensuring that their policies are relevant to the lives that people live today, my Department is working with the Women's Unit, Home Office and DfEE to develop good practices for ensuring that our policies meet the changing needs of all members of society.

"Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment", published by the Cabinet Office, Home Office, DfEE and the Women's Unit in November 1998 has been circulated to staff within my Department to ensure that the effects of any policy changes on all sections of the population are considered at the earliest stage of policy development.

Road Lane Experiments

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many experiments the Highways Agency plans to undertake with (a) high-occupancy vehicle lanes, (b) bus and taxi lanes and (c) no-car lanes. [93372]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Four priority lane pilot schemes have been implemented to date. All are bus lanes. The Highways Agency is investigating where giving priority to certain types of traffic would be beneficial in tackling congestion in the context of the integrated transport policy. All such proposals will be monitored to ensure that the scheme objectives are realised.

Monitoring of the M4 bus lane and its associated speed limits have shown increased traffic capacity of the elevated section and improved journey times for all road users. Average savings to buses, coaches and taxis in the morning and evening periods are over 3 minutes. Other vehicles benefiting by average savings of 1 minute and 2½ in the morning and evening peaks respectively.

Rail Operators (Pricing Policy)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will carry out an investigation into the pricing policies of rail operators in respect of (a) the solar eclipse and (b) the millennium holiday. [93701]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Plans for the millennium holiday have not yet been finalised but for the solar eclipse First Great Western (FGW) and other operators are planning to run more services to Cornwall. There are capacity constraints which limit the number of additional services which can be accommodated. Wales and West are planning to strengthen the services they run normally by adding extra vehicles.

Demand for transport to see the eclipse and over the millennium holiday may be such that there will not be spare capacity. Train operators may therefore feel themselves unable to offer discounted tickets that are normally used to fill otherwise empty seats. Regulated tickets, including Saver tickets, will be available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Genetically Modified Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1999, Official Report, columns 192–93, on genetically modified foods, if the feeding studies on animals over the period 1994 to 1996 used crops treated with Round-up; and if he will make a statement. [92106]

Mr. Rooker: Following an extensive compositional analysis of Monsanto's genetically modified soya beans, the ACNFP concluded that treatment with glyphosate did not alter the composition of the soya beans themselves. The only difference seen when the GM soya beans are treated with glyphosate is a slightly greater level of the metabolite aminomethylphosphonic acid. The toxicity of glyphosate and its metabolites have been studied as part of the approval process for glyphosate and shown to be of low toxicity to humans. The ACNFP was thus satisfied that the safety of Monsanto's GM soya beans had been fully characterised and that the sacrifice of further animals in additional feeding studies using glyphosate treated soya beans was therefore unnecessary.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the effects of broad-spectrum herbicides applied to growing genetically modified crops; and how many research projects commissioned in the United Kingdom by his Department are currently under way to investigate the potential risks of genetically modified organisms. [92706]

Mr. Rooker: MAFF has received numerous representations from individuals and organisations concerning the use of broad-spectrum herbicides in the cultivation of genetically modified crops. Views have varied from those who support the technology for the potential benefits it can bring to those who express concern over the possible environmental or human health effects of the use of pesticides on such crops.

At present there are 29 MAFF-Commissioned projects (costing £1.7 million in 1999–2000) investigating food safety issues and possible risks to the environment arising from the introduction of genetically modified organisms.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent reports he has received from the United States Department of Agriculture on (a) the yields of genetically modified crops grown in the United States and (b) the number of cases of spray drift damage to adjoining non-genetically modified crops. [92633]

Mr. Rooker: I have received no such reports from the US Department of Agriculture.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans SCIMAC has to review their guidelines for separation distances between GM and non-GM crops; and if he will make a statement. [92395]

Mr. Rooker: I understand that SCIMAC expect to review all the documentation describing their stewardship programme for the introduction of GM crops, including separation distances, at least once a year. Changes to the guidelines could also be made at any other time if information becomes available which would significantly affect the advice given.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the non-departmental public bodies in existence on 1 May 1997 that (a) have been disbanded, indicating when they were disbanded, (b) will be disbanded in the next 12 months, (c) have had their functions transferred to (i) another non-departmental public body and (ii) a democratically elected body, (d) have been renamed but continue to perform a similar role and (e) have been unchanged; if he will indicate in (c)(ii) the relevant successor body; what new non-departmental public bodies have been established since 1 May 1997; and how many non-departmental public bodies his Department currently is responsible for. [90673]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 July 1999]: (a) The following non-departmental public bodies have been disbanded since 1 May 1997:

Body	Date disbanded
Nine advisory Regional Panels	28 May 1997
Consultative panel on Badgers and Bovine Tuberculosis	17 August 1998
Sugar Beet Research and Education Committee	30 March 1999

(b) None

(c) Nine of the MAFF non-departmental public bodies have had their functions transferred to:

(i) another non-departmental public body

(ii) a democratically elected body

(d) None of the MAFF non-departmental public bodies have been renamed but continue to perform a similar role.

(e) Details of all other non-departmental public bodies in existence on 1 May 1997 are listed in "Public Bodies 1997", which is available to Members in the Libraries of the House.

The Potato Industry Development Council (known as the British Potato Council) was established on 1 July 1997. The Council is funded by a levy on the industry.

The Advisory Committee on Animal Feeding Stuffs was set up, and the full list of members announced by my hon. Friend the Minister of State on 13 July 1999, Official Report, column 176. The first meeting will be held in September.

My right hon. Friend is currently responsible for 33 non-departmental public bodies, of which three are multiple bodies.

The Government are committed to keeping the number of non-departmental public bodies to a minimum and to ensuring that those which remain are open, accountable and effective. Many of the new non-departmental public bodies established since 1 May 1997 are essential in helping the Government deliver their Manifesto commitments.

Agricultural Attaché

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that each British embassy in each EU member country has an agricultural attaché. [92433]

Mr. Rooker: All British Embassies in EU countries have Officers responsible for Agricultural matters. In four of these, Bonn, Paris, Rome and Madrid, the Officers are seconded from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. In the other 10, the Officers are members of Her Majesty's Diplomatic Service, covering other EU issues as well as agriculture. The UK Permanent Representative to the European Union in Brussels also has five MAFF officers covering agriculture.

Officials in my Department, in liaison with the territorial departments, ensure that Officers are kept up to date on all aspects of UK agricultural policy, through day-to-day contact and regular briefing meetings in London.

Agricultural Exports

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the EU Commission to allow the export of (a) breeding cattle, (b) bovine semen, (c) bovine embryos and (d) breeding sheep. [92399]

Mr. Rooker: The export of bovine semen and breeding sheep from the UK is permitted.

We have not yet made any formal proposals to the Commission on lifting the export ban on embryos and breeding cattle. Up to now we have been concentrating our efforts on the Date-based Export Scheme which enables the resumption of British beef exports. Further relaxations in the export ban covering live cattle and embryos are steps foreseen in the Florence agreement. We need now to consider carefully, in the light of the views of the Government's scientific advisers, and in consultation with interested parties when to open negotiations on these.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions his Department has had with the Treasury regarding an exemption for protected horticulture from the proposed climate change levy. [92299]

Mr. Rooker: MAFF officials have discussed the Climate Change Levy with the Treasury. MAFF and Treasury Ministers are aware of the concerns being expressed by the horticultural industry about the impact the Climate Change Levy might have on sectoral competitiveness.

Quarantine

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he plans to end the system of quarantine for animals arriving in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement; [91995]

(2) if he will make a statement on the means by which he will introduce pet passports. [91996]

Mr. Rooker [holding answers 21 July 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Minister announced the Government's plans to reform the rabies quarantine rules on 26 March 1999, Official Report, columns 649–60. The new arrangements will be brought into operation by April 2001, with a pilot scheme as soon as possible (and in any event by April 2000). We will give more details in the near future.

Pigmeat Industry

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to promote the use of United Kingdom produced pigmeat products by Government Departments, local authorities and other related agencies. [92625]

Mr. Rooker: To promote the benefits of British pig production practices, my right hon. Friend the Minister has written to his Cabinet colleagues in Departments with public procurement responsibilities. In these letters, the guarantees that British pigmeat can offer were underlined and attention was also drawn to the good story which the industry has to tell in respect of its efforts on quality assured and welfare friendly production practices. The responses received indicate that quality assured and welfare friendly production practices play a full part in the tender specifications laid down by public procurement bodies.

We believe that the most effective way to achieve change in the practices of reluctant authorities is for contact to be made at the local level, both by the industry and by local MPs. On those occasions where contact has been made, it seems to have had an effect and we hope this will continue. Indeed, to help it along, my right hon. Friend has decided to write to all MPs actively encouraging them to make contact with public authorities in their constituencies and discuss the procurement policies in respect of pork and pork products.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current state of the British pig industry. [92705]

Mr. Rooker: Although market prices in the UK were static for a period in the late spring/early summer, there has been a recent modest price increase and I hope this continues. None the less, the Government are fully aware of the difficulties still facing the pig industry and will continue to do all they can to help while recognising that pigs are traded in a relatively free market with limited opportunity for direct Government involvement. I believe that the new MLC British Pig Executive and the imminent formation of the National Pig Association are important steps in bringing the industry together and will help it build a bright future.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from representatives of the pigmeat industry on the cost to individual producers of offal disposal; and if he will make a statement. [92541]

Mr. Rooker: We have received a number of representations from the pig industry on the cost of offal disposal, both from individuals and from representative organisations. Also, this issue has been raised with my right hon. Friend the Minister by the Chairman of the MLC.

Beef

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if cattle which meet the requirements for export can also be sold on the domestic market. [92343]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 22 July 1999]: Yes.

Dairy Industry

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy firms went out of business in the last year; and what assessment he has made of the causes of those firms ceasing to trade. [92624]

Mr. Rooker: Information in the form requested is not available. The information available relates to the number of main holdings in the United Kingdom with dairy cows at the June agriculture census, which were estimated to be 36,300 at June 1997 and 35,300 at June 1998. Results from the June 1999 census are not yet available. Holdings can continue with the same activities even though they change ownership and conversely can change their activities while continuing in the same farming business.

Farmers

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers there were in business (a) 10 years ago and (b) at the latest available date. [92717]

Mr. Rooker: The information available relates to agriculture holdings rather than farm businesses; some businesses operate more than one holding. The 1988 June agriculture census recorded 247,300 agriculture holdings in the United Kingdom. The equivalent figure for 1998, the latest available, was 237,900.

Fish-eating Birds

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the results of his research studies into the effect of fish-eating birds on fisheries will be published. [92626]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 29 June 1999, Official Report, column 92.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92655]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 23 July 1999]: In accordance with the terms of the Ministerial Code, Ministers are required always to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements. The last time I used a train in the course of my official duties was on 23 July when visiting Pig Farmers in Yorkshire.

Pet Travel Scheme

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what vaccines will be used in the new pet travel scheme and what laboratories will be able to undertake testing; and if he will make a statement on the progress of the arrangements that are being put in place for the introduction of the pilot schemes next year. [93042]

Mr. Rooker: Pet cats and dogs taking part in the forthcoming Pet Travel Scheme must be vaccinated against rabies using an inactivated vaccine approved for the purpose by the authorities of the country in which the animal has been resident. There are two such vaccines currently authorised for use in the UK: Nobivac and Rabisin.

Details of the laboratories that may carry out blood tests for the Pet Travel Scheme will be announced shortly.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on managing the changeover from the present quarantine regulations to the new pet travel scheme. [93043]

Mr. Rooker: I have received representations from a number of individuals and from organisations representing pet owners and the owners of quarantine premises. A Pet Travel Scheme Advisory Group has been set up. This includes representatives from the quarantine industry and others with a direct interest in the Pet Travel Scheme. The Group provides the Government with advice on the Pet Travel Scheme, including managing the changeover from the present arrangements.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to introduce the new arrangements under which (a) he will nominate the certifying local veterinary inspectors to individual consignments of live farm animals destined for export and (b) he will pay the inspectors and recover the costs for this service through charges on the exporter; and if he will make a statement. [93041]

Mr. Rooker: We are currently considering the responses to the consultation exercise. We will announce our decision in due course.

Veterinary Surgeons

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish details of the performance assessments of official veterinary surgeons and their inspection teams. [88281]

Mr. Rooker: Performance appraisals are conducted for all Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) staff, whilst contract appraisals are carried out for those Official Veterinary Surgeons (OVSs) and inspection staff contracted to the MHS.

Both types of appraisal are considered confidential and may contain commercial information relating to the workings of a particular plant. It would therefore be inappropriate for details of these assessments to be published.

GM Foods

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the (a) volume and (b) value of (i) GM soya and (ii) GM maize imported into the United Kingdom from the United States for each of the last three years. [93076]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 July 1999]: Total imports of maize and soya beans from the USA for each of the past three years were as follows:

	Maize (unmilled)		Soya beans
	Tonnes	Value (£ million)	Tonnes	Value (£ million)
1996	12,971	3.5	409,762	77.9
1997	7,206	2.9	474,226	86.2
1998	7,634	2.5	459,804	71.0

Trade statistics do not enable us to differentiate between GM and non-GM material.

Genetically Free Products

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions (a) he has had with European Environment Ministers, and (b) his officials have had with Commission officials on the definition of genetically free products for labelling purposes. [93192]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 July 1999]: No such discussions have taken place with European Environment Ministers on this subject but European Commission officials have recently informed officials here that a Commission proposal on the labelling of GM free claims is planned for the autumn. This proposal will be widely circulated for comment when it is received.

Regulatory Capture

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the allegations of regulatory capture of US Food and Drugs Administration and the implication thereof for the forthcoming WTO discussions in Seattle. [93071]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 July 1999]: None.

Mouse-breeding Facilities

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department's mouse-breeding facilities conform to the requirements of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. [93074]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 July 1999]: Yes. The Department's mouse-breeding facilities do comply with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons his Department has mouse-breeding facilities. [93075]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 July 1999]: My Department has mouse-breeding facilities to generate mice for use in research projects approved under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Milk Marque

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of his proposals for Milk Marque on the access of Milk Marque's members to CAP support measures. [93248]

Mr. Rooker: I would not expect there to be a significant impact in the foreseeable future on access to CAP support measures resulting from the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Belize

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on which occasions since 1993 his Department has received written or oral approaches from the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) on matters relating to fruit production in Belize since 1993. [93240]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested needs to be researched. I will write to my hon. Friend during the first week of August.

Bees (Genetically Modified Crops)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will issues guidance to bee-keepers about protection from contact with genetically modified material in cases where they wish to label their produce as organic and non-genetically modified; and if he will make a statement. [93201]

Mr. Rooker: Existing UK rules on organic honey production require that hives are not placed within four miles of conventionally farmed land, private gardens, or areas subject to inorganic pollution. Following the recent agreement on Community livestock standards, including rules on honey production, the United Kingdom Register of Organic Food Standards (UKROFS) will be re-examining existing UK standards to determine the changes that will need to be made. This is likely to include the issue of controls on possible GM contamination.

In the meantime, beekeepers are advised to contact the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions for details and location of experimental GM sites so that they may relocate their hives should they so wish.

Hunting

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provision he will make for veterinary supervision and carcase disposal in accordance with European directives, following the introduction of a ban on hunting. [93487]

Mr. Rooker: European Community legislation on the disposal of animal carcases is already implemented in Great Britain by the Animal By-Products Order 1999, which is primarily enforced by local authorities. There are no plans to amend the Order in connection with a ban on hunting.

Rabies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of a ban on hunting on the risk of an outbreak of rabies in this country; and what arrangements he has made to review quarantine regulations governing the importation of animals. [93484]

Mr. Rooker: A ban on hunting would have no impact on the risk of an outbreak of rabies occurring in this country.

On 26 March 1999, Official Report, columns 649–60, my right hon. Friend the Minister announced that he is going to change the law to allow dogs, cats and some other species coming from European Union and certain other qualifying countries to enter the UK without quarantine, provided that they meet certain conditions. The new arrangements will be brought into operation by April 2001, with a pilot scheme as soon as possible, and in any event by April 2000.

Beef Imports (Specified Risk Materials)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there have been any recent cases of spinal cord discovered in imported beef. [93826]

Mr. Nick Brown: Since the beginning of June, a number of imported beef forequarters containing small sections of spinal cord have been discovered by Meat Hygiene Service and State Veterinary Service staff at a cutting plant in Great Britain. These forequarters all originated from slaughterhouses in the Republic of Ireland and have been destroyed.

In response to the Chief Veterinary Officer's request for urgent action by the authorities in the Republic of Ireland, the veterinary authorities there have undertaken to penalise the veterinary inspectors responsible for certifying the beef. They have also told the Irish Meat Association that any failure by a member company to implement the specified risk material (SRM) controls will result in the withdrawal of the Supplementary certification for export to the UK. Their unannounced inspections will also be stepped up. Meat Hygiene Service staff at licensed cutting plants and local authorities are being asked to pay particular attention to beef carcases imported from the Republic of Ireland.

Since March 1996, the State Veterinary Service's audit has found no spinal cord specified risk material in beef derived from animals slaughtered in Great Britain. The results of these audits are published in the monthly BSE Enforcement Bulletin.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the countries visited by himself and his predecessor since 1 May 1997; [92804]

(2) when he intends to visit (a) Poland, (b) Hungary, (c) the Czech Republic, (d) Slovenia and (e) Estonia. [92690]

Mr. Nick Brown: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 17 June 1999, Official Report, columns 196–97.

I plan to visit a number of the candidate countries this autumn.

Cattle Health Scheme

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Waveney of 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 193, on the Cattle Health Scheme, if he will provide an update on the future of the Cattle Health Scheme. [93926]

Mr. Rooker: Under new animal health trade rules agreed during the last UK Presidency of the EU Council, a case requesting designation of Great Britain as officially EBL-Free was submitted to the EU Commission in May. The Standing Veterinary Committee voted in favour of a Commission Decision granting the status to Great Britain on 2 July. It came into effect on 1 July. The Decision also retained EBL-Free status for Northern Ireland. From 1 July 1999 all herds in GB are to be regarded as officially EBL-Free unless the presence of the disease is suspected in a particular herd.

The Cattle Health Scheme attests herds as being individually free of EBL, so may not be needed now that GB freedom is achieved. Officials are writing to all members of the Scheme and to the cattle industry to consult them on the future of the Scheme. The formal acknowledgement of our EBL-Free status from the EU is good news for farmers and will reduce bureaucracy. We will of course maintain controls on cattle imports in accordance with EU rules.

"Commitment to Service"

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress his Department has made in meeting the service delivery targets set out in the paper, "Commitment to Service". [93892]

Mr. Nick Brown: The table sets out the performance achieved by the Regional Service Centres during 1998–99 against the targets published in the Charter document "Commitment to Service", second edition.

Wildlife and Countryside Act	Licence applications	98
Correspondence	Answered within 10 working days	97
Complaints	Numbers receiving response within 10 working days	87

[1] Unless otherwise specified

Notes:

1. The relatively high failure rate for the FWPS Applications was due to the diversion of staff resources in two of the RSCs to higher priority work.
2. The relatively poor performance for the ESA Schemes was primarily caused by uneven workloads, staff turnover and the introduction of a new computer system.
3. The 87 per cent. response rate to complaints to the RSCs is explained by the fact that often cases require referral to HQ or the National Scheme Management Centres and thus take some time to resolve. It must be stressed however that in all cases where the 10 day target was not met a holding letter was issued to the complainant.

General Notes:

(i) The total percentage has been calculated by setting the entire number of applications or claims cleared within the target time, against the total number received. Applications and claims not cleared due to reasons beyond our control (incorrect information supplied by applicant, etc.) are not included as failures to meet target.

(ii) The Farm Conservation Grant Schemes 1989 and 1991 Applications and Claims and Pilot NSA Claims have been omitted from the table since these schemes are now closed.

(iii) During the year 16 formal complaints were made to MAFF's central Complaints Adjudicator, of which two were referred elsewhere and three are still outstanding. Of the cases dealt with, six were determined in the complainants favour and five were not upheld.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will be consulting the farming industry on his proposals to implement the discretionary aspects of the reformed Common Agricultural Policy. [93602]

Mr. Nick Brown: The reform of the CAP decided at the Berlin European Council introduced a number of policy areas where member states were given discretion as to whether and/or how they would be applied. In the information notes I circulated to the farming industry and other interested parties following that agreement I undertook to consult widely on the Government's plans would be set in the context of an overall strategy for agriculture which takes into account the need for a competitive, flexible and environmentally friendly industry, which is responsive to consumer wishes and which contributes to the social and economic strengths of rural areas.

I intend accordingly to write to interested parties including farming industry representatives in the coming weeks setting out my ideas for such a strategy and how the discretionary aspects of the reformed CAP should be applied in this country to help set a new direction for the industry. My Department will also be conducting a series of regional consultants. Members of Parliament will be sent a copy of the consultation documents individually. We will consider responses carefully and announce final decisions during the Autumn.

Comparable action is being taken in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Veterinary Medicines

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive a report from the Veterinary Products Committee on the safety of veterinary medicines other than sheep dips which have an organophosphorus compound as the active ingredient; and if he will make a statement. [93893]

Mr. Rooker: I have now received a report from the Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) and I have placed a copy in the Library of the House.

The Government have accepted the VPC's advice that, although there is no evidence that the products concerned are harmful if used in accordance with recommended precautions, marketing authorisation holders should provide additional data to demonstrate the safety of their products. If they are able to provide such date, the Government will take further advice from the VPC on appropriate regulatory action.

Compliance Costs

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reductions were achieved in the compliance costs of regulation administered by his Department and its public bodies for the last year for which data is available; what mechanisms exist for monitoring the post-implementation cost of such regulation; and if he has established targets for reduction in the compliance costs of regulation administered by his Department and its public bodies. [92315]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 July 1999]: Details of regulations which imposed compliance costs on, or achieved compliance savings to, business are published in the Department's regulatory impact assessments and laid in both Houses. Summaries are published in the six monthly Command Paper, and are available on a monthly basis on the Cabinet Office Regulatory Impact Unit's web site.

Regulations are regularly reviewed.

We have not set an arbitrary target for reducing the compliance costs of regulations. However, in line with Cabinet Office guidance, we assess the risks, costs and benefits of any regulatory proposal which has an impact on business before taking it forward. We always try to keep the burden imposed on business to the minimum necessary.

The Department published details on the quality and quantity of its regulatory activity in the departmental annual Report.

(b) to supply a copy of the codes adopted by the Commission to determine whether such permission should be given and (c) to indicate at what administrative level such decisions have been made. [92033]

Ms Quin: For reasons of personal confidentiality, the Commission does not publish information about the secondary employment of officials below the level of Commissioner. Decisions on secondary employment are normally made by Director-Generals (or, if a Director-General is seeking permission, by the appropriate Commissioner) on the basis of the staff regulations mentioned in my answer on 21 June 1999, Official Report, column 276. These state that permission to take secondary employment should be refused if the nature of the work would impair the official's independence or be detrimental to the work of the Communities.

Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor) of 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 429, what plans his Department has to make a submission to the current MOX consultation. [93283]

Mr. Hoon: We have no plans to make a submission.

Exports (Licensed Goods)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the measures his Department takes to ensure that licensed goods are exported to the correct end-use destinations. [93511]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 26 July 1999]: In accordance with our national export licensing criteria and those in the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports, when assessing relevant export licence applications we consider carefully whether there is a risk that the goods might be diverted or re-exported to an undesirable end-user.

All applications for Standard Individual Export Licences to export goods controlled for strategic reasons must be supported by appropriate End-User Undertakings, or, if the consignee is a Government body, a copy of the relevant part of the official purchase order or contract. We ask our overseas posts to carry out checks in cases where we wish to confirm the accuracy of the information contained in end-user documentation.

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which post will be used as a trial for the tape recording of entry clearance interviews, as recommended in the Fourth report on the Foreign Affairs Committee of Session 1997–98 (HC 515). [93806]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The entry clearance section at the British Deputy High Commission in Bombay will undertake this trial. The trial will run for a three month period from August until October this year. A further three months will be set aside to allow applicants time to register any observations arising from the trial. An evaluation of the trial should therefore be completed in February 2000.

Gracko

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the killing of 14 Serbs at Gracko, Kosovo, on 23 July. [93808]

UK members of KFOR are taking the lead in the investigation and we will do all we can to assist KFOR, UNMIK and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in their investigations.

With our partners in KFOR and UNMIK, we are committed to a democratic, multi-ethnic and peaceful Kosovo. Our aim is for Kosovo Serbs to stay in Kosovo, and for those who have left to return.

Iraq (Sanctions)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the United Kingdom sponsored draft UN resolution on possible criteria for suspension of sanctions against Iraq. [93512]

Mr. Hoon: The UK draft Security Council resolution provides for the suspension of the restrictions on exports from Iraq, if Iraq co-operates with a new disarmament mechanism for a sustained period and if Iraq completes key remaining disarmament tasks, to be identified by UNSCOM's successor. Suspension would end immediately if Iraq ceased co-operation, or was found to be reconstituting its weapons of mass destruction programmes. Discussions are continuing within the Council on the draft resolution.

Saddam Hussein

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will propose the establishment of a Commission of Inquiry at the General Assembly of the United Nations to investigate the crimes of Saddam Hussein. [93513]

Mr. Hoon: The Government support those who are working to bring Saddam Hussein and members of his regime to justice for the crimes they have committed. We applaud the work of the organisation INDICT in this regard.

Iraq

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to seek the extradition of a responsible member of the Iraqi regime from a third country to face charges under the Genocide Act 1969 for persecution of the Kurds of Northern Iraq and the Marsh Arabs of Southern Iraq. [93510]

Mr. Hoon: While the Government would wish to see members of the Iraqi regime brought to justice for the appalling crimes they have committed, under the Genocide Act 1969, the Government do not have the right to prosecute individuals for crimes committed beyond the limits of national territory.

Arms Export Licences

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many arms export licences were issued between (a) 1 May 1997 and 10 May 1998 and (b) 10 May 1998 and 10 May 1999 to areas of high intensity conflict; and how many licence applications relating to such areas were refused in the same period. [93293]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Details of the Government's export licensing decisions, broken down by country and type of equipment, were given in the Government's Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls for 1997 and will be given in the Report for 1998 which we intend to publish as soon as possible.

We do not break down our export licensing statistics on the basis of "areas of high intensity conflict" as we do not categorise specific countries or regions in this way.

Arms Control

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the international agreements on arms control signed by Her Majesty's Government which include (a) the requirement to take into account the human rights record of the recipient states and (b) the potential which the equipment has to be used for internal repression. [93290]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The UK Government are party to two sets of internationally agreed criteria governing the export of arms and defence equipment which include requirements to take into account the human rights record of the recipient states and the risk that the proposed export might be used for internal repression. These are the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports, adopted by EU member states in June 1998, and the principles governing arms transfers agreed by OSCE participating states in 1993.

Criteria Two of the EU Code states that member states will:

(a) not issue an export licence if there is clear risk that the proposed export might be used for internal repression; and

(b) exercise special caution and vigilance in issuing licences, on a case-by-case basis and taking account of the nature of the equipment, to countries where serious violations of human rights have been established by the component bodies of the UN, the Council of Europe or by the EU.

The OSCE principles provide that each participating State will, in considering proposed transfers, take into account the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in the recipient country, and will avoid transfers which would be likely to be used for the violation or suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms or for the purpose of repression.

Conflict Prevention

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will establish a conflict prevention council to include representatives of other departments to report on countries of high conflict potential. [93295]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government's work on conflict prevention is carefully co-ordinated. The Joint Intelligence Committee brings together all the relevant Departments and agencies to assess situations and issues of current concern. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Ministry of Defence and Department for International Development (and other Departments as appropriate) work closely together on conflict prevention policies both overall and in relation to individual regions and countries at risk.

Strategic Exports

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the next annual report on strategic export controls will contain details of (a) the amounts of weapons and equipment contained in each category, (b) the end-users for which the export licence was granted and (c) strategic exports supported by (i) the Disposal Sales Agency and (ii) the Crown Agents. [93480]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are considering the format and contents of future annual reports on strategic export controls in the light of responses to the first.

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the next annual report on strategic exports will be published; and if it will be made available through the Stationery Office. [93481]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We will publish the second Annual Report as soon as possible.

We have not yet decided whether to make the annual report available through the Stationery Office. Copies of the first Annual Report have been placed in the Library of the House and are also available free of charge from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The first Annual Report has also been published on the FCO website.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many public interest immunity certificates or equivalent documents have been provided by Ministers or officials in his Department since 3 May 1997; and at what level each such certificate or other document has been signed. [93533]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I shall reply to the right hon. and learned Member shortly and place copies of the letter in the Libraries of the House.

Entry Clearance (Children)

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many children by nationality, have been refused entry clearance for settlement because their parent in the United Kingdom has not had the sole responsibility for their upbringing, under paragraph 297(e) of the Immigration Rules, in each year since May 1997. [93327]

Mr. Hoon: The information requested is not recorded centrally or at overseas posts and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Belarus

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom will continue to recognise Mr. Lukashenko as President of Belarus after the expiry of his constitutional term on 27 July; and if he will make a statement. [92805]

Ms Quin: We recognise states rather than Governments. Therefore the question of recognition of President Lukashenko does not arise. In its declaration of 20 July, the EU made clear its view that President Lukashenko's mandate under the 1994 Constitution expired on that day.

Overseas Documents

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications by the Crown Prosecution Service for assistance in securing documents from overseas, pursuant to an investigation in the UK, he has (a) supported by making representations to foreign Governments and (b) declined to support in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [93556]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I shall reply to the hon. Member shortly and place copies of the letter in the Libraries of the House.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply regarding his letter of 29 June concerning a constituent. (ref. GV100/51886). [93250]

Mr. Hoon: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Baroness Symons, replied to my hon. Friend on 26 July.

Visa Fees

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (i) the total receipts from fees for (a) visa, (b) settlement and (c) other immigration applications and (ii) the total cost of entry clearance operations, for 1998–99. [92906]

Mr. Hoon: Visa fee income is broken down into two categories only: settlement and non-settlement applications. The total receipts for the Financial Year 1998–99 were:

	£ million
Applications
Non-settlement applications	55.7
Settlement applications	11.3
Total fee income	67.0

The provisional cost of the entry clearance operation for 1998–99 is £65.2 million. The final 1998–99 costs figure will not be available until the end of August.

Belize

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions since 1993 his Department received written or oral approaches from the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) on matters relating to banking regulations in Belize. [92069]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: No Minister in this Department has received oral or written representations from the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) on this subject since the change of Government in May 1997.

Ordtech Ltd.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he, his Ministers, advisers or officials last met or had contact with any director of Ordtech Ltd. [92732]

Mr. Robin Cook: Neither myself nor other FCO Ministers nor FCO Special Advisers have had any official meetings with Mr. Paul or John Grecian of Ordtech Ltd. In the time available we have not been able to make an extensive check with regard to officials, but to the best of my knowledge there have not been any meetings with officials.

I understand that Mr. Grecian had access to the FCO in 1997 as he was employed by a contractor working here. While working in the FCO, he approached one of my advisers in the corridor and in the course of his work may have approached other officials.

TREASURY

Departmental Staff

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff are employed in Scotland (a) by his Department and (b) by executive agencies responsible to his Department; where these staff are located; and how many staff are employed in (i) England, (ii) London and the South East, (iii) Wales, (iv) Northern Ireland and (v) United Kingdom in total. [90562]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 13 July 1999]: The statistics for the Chancellor's Departments and Agencies comprise:

HM Customs and Excise (HMC&E)
Inland Revenue (IR) including Contributions Agency (CA)
HM Treasury (HMT)
Debt Management Office (DMO)
Valuation Office (VO)
National Savings (NS)
Office for National Statistics (ONS)
Royal Mint (RM)
Government Actuary's Department (GAD).

The following tables summarise by Department and Agency the latest headcount figures available and include part-time staff and those employed on casual contracts. Changes following the recent merger of the Contributions Agency with Inland Revenue and the outsourcing of National Savings work have been reflected. Local Authority area groupings have been used to summarise the location of staff in Scotland except that figures are not yet available for Contributions Agency staff.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he is undertaking to gauge the effectiveness of individual savings accounts in encouraging saving among those on low incomes. [93316]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) on 8 July 1999, Official Report, column 609.

Departmental Travel

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many kilometres have been travelled on his Department's business in each of the last three years broken down by (a) foot, (b) bike, (c) bus, (d) train, (e) tram, (f) light-rail, (g) plane, (h) motorbike, (i) car, (j) taxi, (k) river-taxi and (l) other modes of transport; what plans and targets his Department has to reduce the kilometres travelled by private transport by his Department's employees; and if he will make a statement. [91025]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 13 July 1999]: The information on business travel is not collected in the form requested. As published in the Integrated Transport White Paper in July 1998, the Government have set a target that all Government Department headquarters buildings and main buildings occupied by Executive Agencies and Government Offices for the Regions should have green transport plans by March 1999 and all other key buildings by March 2000.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer's departments have already made some significant progress, for example:

The Inland Revenue have put in place Green Transport Plans at six of their sites and are now working on the roll-out of a further 300 plans by 31 March 2000, in line with the White Paper target. The plans include measures to reduce both business and commuter travel and promote alternative travel arrangements. Environmental considerations are also being addressed by adopting a number of initiatives, including:

downsizing the cc of the Pool and Private Use Scheme car fleet; piloting and promoting the use of bi-fuelled vehicles (LPG/Petrol); with DSS, a joint tender programme to supply and install bunkered Liquid Petroleum Gas (LPG) taken on sites throughout the UK to encourage and support the use of this alternative fuel;

an appraisal of the use of electric cars;

providing defensive driver training which has a strong emphasis on better environmental driving techniques for 450 (50 per cent.) of our PUS drivers.

Customs and Excise have established Local Transport Plans in its headquarters sites. All other key sites will have established plans by the end of March 2000. Each plan forms the basis of a continuing programme of improvement to meet both the Government's commitments and to obtain the maximum benefits from local knowledge and experience, and covers:

strategic issues;

commuting;

business travel;

commercial/suppliers;

fleet.

The plans include measures to promote car sharing, public transport use, cycling and other solutions to reduce business travel (such as video conferencing) and raise awareness of the environmental and business issues associated with travel. Suppliers and contractors are required to support these plans.

HM Treasury introduced a Green Transport Plan in March 1999 covering its two buildings. The plans include, among other things, measures to:

set up a Bicycle User Group (BUG);

review travel and subsistence policy;

ensure all cars supplied under the Government Car and Despatch Agency contract are converted to run on alternative fuels by February 2000; reduce car parking spaces to the standards laid down by Strategic Guidance for London Planning Authorities for Central London.

The National Savings Agency has completed a Green Transport Plan. The plan includes measures to minimise the environmental impact of travel on official business as well as facilitating employee use of public transport.

The Royal Mint has completed Green Transport Plans covering all key buildings in line with the targets set out in the White Paper. The plans include measures to reduce single-occupancy car use by employees.

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) has completed Green Transport Plans covering all its main buildings, both in London and nationwide, in line with targets set out in the White Paper. The plans include measures to positively encourage the use of public transport and to reduce single occupancy car use by employees for business.

Endowment Policies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate (a) the number of endowment policies that are surrendered each year and (b) the lapse rate for new endowment policies; and if he will list those aspects of the surrender of endowment policies to which the Financial Services Act 1986 regulatory regime applies. [92463]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 26 July 1999]: There are no published figures available for the number of endowment policies discontinued each year.

In October 1998, the Personal Investment Authority (PIA) estimated that, for regular premium endowment policies sold in 1996, the most recent figures available, the percentage of policies discontinued during the first year is as follows.

Percentage

Sales channel	Discontinued in year one
Company representative	6.5
Independent financial adviser	4.5
Direct offer advertisement	4.5
Home service	13.0

Persistency generally improves during the lifetime of endowment policies. It is inaccurate to extrapolate these figures to subsequent years. Policies discontinued in early years are generally worthless on the traded endowment policy (TEP) market.

The surrender of endowment policies is not regulated under the Financial Services Act (1986).

Benefits Payments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what level of weekly income for a family of two adults with two children aged 10 and four-years-old he has set as the level which must be exceeded for that family to be lifted out of poverty if the main earner is (a) in work and receiving no benefits and (b) out of work and receiving income support, after receipt of housing and council tax benefits; [93318]

(2) what level of income for a couple with the woman pregnant for the first time he has set as the level which must be exceeded for that family to be lifted out of poverty if the main earner is (a) in work and receiving no benefits and (b) out of work and receiving income support, after receipt of housing and council tax benefits. [93319]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government's welfare reform programme aims to tackle the root causes of poverty, help people to earn a decent income through work, and provide security for those unable to work. We have announced an ambitious programme of support for families including increases in child benefit, a new Children's Tax Credit, increase in the Working Families Tax Credit and Income Support, and a new Sure Start Maternity Grant of £200. By the end of this Parliament, we will be spending an extra £6 billion a year on children. The Working Families Tax Credit will benefit 1.5 million families who will receive an average of £24 a week more than Family Credit. It will provide a guaranteed minimum income of £200 a week for a family with someone in full-time work on the national minimum wage, and more for families with more than one child.

Families with children will, on average, be £740 a year better off as a result of measures in the last two Budgets. We estimate that 800,000 children will be lifted out of poverty as a result. The definition of poverty which underpins this statement was explained in the written answer which the Economic Secretary gave to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 244.

Arms Control

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will hypothecate the revenue received from defence export levies in order to fund arms control initiatives. [93296]

Mr. Milburn: No.

Inland Revenue (Bournemouth)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason the Inland Revenue offices in Bournemouth are not within the area of responsibility of the Director of the Inland Revenue South West Region Executive Office. [93361]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue offices in Bournemouth have been in the area of responsibility of the Director of the Inland Revenue South East Regional Executive Office since the Department was reorganised on a Regional basis in the mid-1970s.

Tobacco Smuggling

Dr. Fox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate the Government have made of the amount of tobacco smuggling into the United Kingdom, broken down by country, in the last year for which figures are available. [93219]

Dawn Primarolo: The provisional assessment of HM Customs and Excise based on their work in progress to monitor the scale of such smuggling (chiefly of cigarettes and hand-rolling tobacco) is that the total amount of revenue (excise duty and VAT) evaded through all forms of smuggling of tobacco products in 1998 was around £1.7 billion.

There are insufficient data on which to base a robust quantitative analysis of the amounts smuggled from individual countries.

VAT

Ms Oona King: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to implement the recommendation of the urban Task Force to harmonise VAT rates at (a) zero and (b) 5 per cent. for new building and conversions and refurbishments; and if he will make a statement. [93301]

Dawn Primarolo: EC agreements mean that we cannot introduce any new zero rates or a reduced rate for work to existing buildings.

The Government share the urban Task Force's desire for an urban renaissance and is giving careful consideration to the report's recommendations. We will give our detailed response to the report in the forthcoming Urban White Paper.

Income Tax

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the annual average income of wage earners and the proportion of that income taken in direct tax on the basis of the single person's rate each year since 1986. [92683]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 July 1999]: The information requested is as set out.

	Annual average earnings [1]	Percentage of income taken in tax for a single person with average earnings [1]
1986–87	8,811	21.3
1987–88	9,516	20.1
1988–89	10,405	18.7
1989–90	11,406	18.9
1990–91	12,384	19.8
1991–92	13,299	18.8
1992–93	13,985	18.1
1993–94	14,435	18.2
1994–95	14,877	18.2
1995–96	15,376	18.2
1996–97	16,016	17.4
1997–98	16,679	16.7
1998–99	17,372	16.7
1999–2000	[2]18,129	16.4

[1] Average earnings are median earnings for all full-time employees where pay was unaffected by absence, from the New Earnings Survey

[2] Based on the 1998 New Earnings Survey uprated in line with the 1999 Budget forecast.

World Trade

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the United Kingdom share of world trade (a) as a whole and (b) in manufactured goods in each year since 1970; and what was the value of (i) UK and (ii) world trade in each of those years. [92560]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 26 July 1999]: Data for world and UK merchandise trade since 1970, both expressed in US dollars, can be found in the IMF's quarterly Direction of Trade Statistics publication.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the levels of investment in manufacturing industry since 1979. [92681]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 26 July 1999]: The Government have clearly recognised that the UK has a long history of under-performance in investment. That is why they have put in place a comprehensive range of measures designed to tackle this weakness, including macroeconomic reforms to provide a stable environment and a tax framework to encourage investment, such as reducing the rate of corporation tax to its lowest level ever.

Interest Rates

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the nominal and real level of interest rates for each year since 1979. [92559]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 26 July 1999]: Data on short and long-term interest rates, both in the UK and other OECD countries, are available in the publication 'OECD Economic Outlook' in Annexe tables 36 and 37 respectively. An estimate of the real level of interest rates can be calculated using the inflation data contained in table 16 of the same publication.

Tax Law Rewrite Project

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further developments there have been in the Tax Law Rewrite project. [93812]

Dawn Primarolo: I am pleased to be able to tell the House that the Tax Law Rewrite project is continuing to make good progress. The Inland Revenue will shortly publish the project's seventh Exposure Draft, which contains draft clauses on capital allowances for agricultural buildings, scientific research, mineral extraction and plant and machinery. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

This Exposure Draft is the third instalment in a series that will completely rewrite the capital allowances code. The rewritten legislation in this publication will form part of the first rewrite Bill next year.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how fuel used in chemical reactions will be treated under the climate change levy. [93817]

Ms Hewitt: As indicated in the consultation document published by Customs and Excise on Budget day, coal and gas used in chemical reactions will not be subject to the levy. Officials at Customs are having useful discussions with industry about how to apply the exemption to fuels used both for chemical reaction and for heating, such as in the steel industry. In the light of the representations received on the treatment of electrolysis, we propose to extend this to electricity. We propose that electricity used for electrolysis, either for the production of chloralkalis or the primary smelting of aluminium, will be exempt from the levy to the extent that it is used in chemical reactions. Again, Customs will discuss precisely how this will work with the industries involved with a view to the revised treatment being included in the draft clauses to be published in the autumn.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in relation to the potential of the proposed climate change levy on certain fuels to increase carbon dioxide emissions. [92152]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 20 July 1999]: The Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a number of representations in the course of the consultation on the climate change levy. These will be considered very carefully in determining the final design of the levy.

Civil Registration

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made regarding the review of civil registration in England and Wales announced on 7 December 1998. [93818]

Ms Hewitt: The first stage of the review is complete. A consultation paper will be published in early September which seeks the public's views on the future development of the registration service in England and Wales. A full three months will be allowed for responses.

Construction Industry (Tax)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) Construction Tax Certificates and (b) Subcontractors Tax Certificates under the new construction industry scheme have been issued; how many are awaiting processing; and how many approved applications will not be issued before 1 August. [92410]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1999]: The Inland Revenue keep statistics of the numbers of applications received on a monthly basis for both registration cards and tax certificates. The latest figures show that 120,000 applications have been received for certificates and that 14,155 Construction Tax Certificates have been issued and 82,978 Subcontractor Tax Certificates have been issued. In addition, the Inland Revenue has issued 391,630 registration cards to those who do not qualify for a certificate.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many applications have been received for (a) Construction Tax Certificates and (b) Subcontractors Tax Certificates under the new construction industry scheme; how many have been approved; how many have been rejected; and how many are still being considered. [92409]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1999]: The Inland Revenue only keep details of the total number of certificate applications received; they do not keep details of how many of those applications are for either a CIS6 or a CIS5. The latest figures show that 120,000 applications have been received for certificates in total. The Inland Revenue have issued 97,133 certificates in total. Around 15 per cent. of applications fail to meet the criteria so the Inland Revenue currently anticipate issuing no more than 103,000 certificates. The Inland Revenue have also issued 391,630 registration cards to those who do not qualify for a certificate.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons no telephone number is available to enable callers to check with the processing centre in Liverpool about when construction tax certificates will be issued. [92412]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1999]: Tax offices are able to advise a subcontractor, from the computer records which are updated daily, whether their application has been authorised and, if so, whether their certificate has been issued or if their application is ready for processing. There is no need for any taxpayer to contact the processing office about their application form as the tax office will be able to give them all the available information. Subcontractors can also obtain some information from the subcontractors helpline which has been set up to provide general information about the scheme.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many construction industry application forms for (a) construction tax certificates and (b) subcontractors tax certificates have been rejected by the Inland Revenue on the basis that part of the signature was outside the white box on page 2; and if he will make a statement. [92408]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1999]: The Inland Revenue do not keep details of the reasons why any particular application form may be rejected. All application forms are issued with guidance notes for completion but where a subcontractor has not completed the form correctly Inland Revenue staff will try to identify this when the application form is handed in to them. If the error is not immediately identified but is discovered, the applicant will be called back as soon as possible so that they can complete another form correctly.

EU Expenditure

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, (1) pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1999, Official Report, columns 132–34, what were the amounts involved in each of the budget lines (a) blocked initially, (b) now unblocked and (c) still frozen; and what are the implications for the UK Government's budget and financial planning of the European Court of Justice ruling of 12 May 1998; [92729]

(2) what legal implications for the UK arise from the European Court of Justice's judgment of 12 May 1998; and, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1999, Official Report, columns 132–34, what were the legal bases found for each of the budget lines unblocked. [92730]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 23 July 1999]: The budget lines initially suspended by the Commission following the European Court of Justice ruling of 12 May 1998 were listed in my previous answer of 29 June 1999, Official Report, columns 132–34. The amounts contained on each of these lines in the 1998 adopted budget can be found in the Official Journal of the European Communities, L44, Volume 41, published on 16 February 1998, which is available in the Library of the House.

The guidelines clarifying the funding of measures through the EU budget are set out in the Inter Institutional Agreement on legal bases and implementation of the budget, on which an explanatory memorandum (10893/98) was submitted in October 1998.

The Government welcomed the European Court of Justice ruling of 12 May 1998, which supports budget discipline. The ruling related specifically to expenditure by the Commission in the EU budget, and has no other legal implications for the UK.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [92656]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 23 July 1999]: In accordance with the terms of the Ministerial Code, Ministers are required always to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements. Journeys in and around London, which account for the majority of the Chancellor's working week, will normally be made by Government car.

The Chancellor last used a train in the course of his official duties on 5 July 1999, when he travelled to Bournemouth for the TGWU conference.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent to which the statement of jobseeker's allowance paid on Form 604 enables accurate deduction of income tax for the year in question. [92310]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1999]: Neither the Inland Revenue nor the Benefits Agency issue a Form 604 in connection with the jobseeker's allowance.

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many contracts of a value greater than £10,000 his Department has with companies in (a) London, (b) South East England, (c) England, (d) Scotland, (e) Wales and (f) Northern Ireland; and what is the total value of such contracts for each area. [90835]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 July 1999]: Since 1 April to date, the Treasury had or has contracts of a value of greater than £10,000 in the following areas:

Area	Number of contracts	Value (£)
London	111	10,800,000
South East England	162	7,500,000
England	148	7,900,000
Scotland	2	49,000
Wales	2	311,000
Northern Ireland	0	—

DEL Scheme

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the entitlements for 1999–2000 resulting from the carry forward of underspends allowed under the DEL end year flexibility scheme. [93819]

Mr. Milburn: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, individual departmental DELs, running costs limits and external finance limits will be increased when entitlement is taken up.

The increase in DEL resulting from the take up of end year flexibility will be charged to the DEL Reserve and £700 million, representing the underspend in 1998–99 on programmes within DEL, is being carried forward into the 1999–2000 DEL Reserve for this purpose. A list of entitlements will be placed in the Library.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times Ministers in his Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 January 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved, and the names of the Irish Ministers and officials at each meeting. [90404]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor of the Exchequer has met his Irish counterpart, Charlie McCreevy, on a number of occasions in the margins of meetings of European Finance Ministers. In addition they had a meeting on 12 March 1998 in London.

Tax Credits

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if those categories of income excluded from taxation with effect from 6 April by the Finance Bill 1999 will be similarly excluded in the calculation of income for the purposes of the Working Families Tax Credit with effect from October 1999. [91835]

Dawn Primarolo: The rules for the categories of income which are to be excluded from the calculation of the Working Families Tax Credit build on those for Family Credit. They can be found in the Family Credit (General) Regulations 1987, and the draft Tax Credits (Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulation 1999 published on 5 July.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what date staff in the Inland Revenue inquiry offices will be trained to make better-off calculations for inquirers considering taking up employment; and if the Inland Revenue will advise Family Credit claimants whether they would be better off waiting to claim Working Families Tax Credit rather than renewing or making a claim for Family Credit for the first time. [91833]

Dawn Primarolo: Advice on Family Credit and transition to WFTC will continue to be available from the Family Credit Unit Helpline. The training to enable existing IR staff, including those in IR inquiry offices, to tell potential applicants how much WFTC might be due if they made a claim will begin on 31 August.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Inland Revenue will first accept and begin to examine claims for the Working Families Tax Credit and the Disabled Person's Tax Credit. [91831]

Dawn Primarolo: Working Families Tax Credit and Disabled Person's Tax Credit awards will begin from 5 October. The Inland Revenue will accept applications and have procedures in place in advance of this date to ensure that payments are made as soon as possible after 5 October.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to ensure that before employers are involved in the administration of the Working Families Tax Credit and Disabled Person's Tax Credit in April 2000, the lessons learned from the practical experience with the new forms and procedures for those credits in Autumn 1999 will be taken into account. [91834]

Dawn Primarolo: The joint Inland Revenue/Benefits Agency Project Team will be drawing on the practical experience of the October 1999 changes in finalising the arrangements for April 2000. Inland Revenue officials will continue to consult employer representatives on the details of the scheme.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what date training for staff will be completed in the Inland Revenue inquiry offices on the working families tax credit and the disabled person's tax credit. [91832]

Dawn Primarolo: Help and advice will continue as now, to be available in Benefits Agency and Employment Service offices. The initial training of all Inland Revenue staff who may expect to deal with inquiries about working families tax credit and disabled person's tax credit will take place in September and October 1999 so as to ensure that sufficient numbers of trained staff are in position to deal effectively with such inquiries.

Own Resources

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Commission proposal on own resources at ECOFIN on 12 July. [92830]

Ms Hewitt: The Berlin European Council agreed that a new Own Resources Decision should be introduced under which the UK abatement will remain; the ceiling on EU own resources is kept at 1.27 per cent. of EU GNP; and contributions related to VAT and "traditional" own resources are reduced in favour of fairer payments linked to member states' GNPs. At ECOFIN on 12 July the Commission made a short presentation of their draft of that Decision. I shall shortly be submitting an Explanatory Memorandum on it to the Scrutiny Committee.

European Anti-fraud Office

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the presidency reports on the implementation of the European anti-fraud office approved at ECOFIN on 12 July. [92829]

Ms Hewitt: The Presidency made an oral report on progress on the implementation of the European anti-fraud office and tabled two documents. The first concerned the appointment of the Members of the Supervisory Committee and was deposited for scrutiny on 21 July. The second was a draft Council decision concerning implementation. I will send this to the Chairman of the Scrutiny Committee for information when I receive a copy of the final decision which was approved.

EIB Loans

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the ECOFIN Council of 12 July endorsed increased commitments to EIB loans to third countries. [92871]

Ms Hewitt: The ECOFIN Council of 12 July agreed to renew the Community guarantee for EIB lending in third countries for a further seven years from 1 February 2000. The guarantee will cover average annual lending of up to euro 2,630 million during this period. This is an increase on the volume of lending under the existing guarantee which covers an average of approximately euro 2,450 million a year (over a three year period).

Income Statistics

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each county in England and for the relevant areas in Wales and Scotland the number and percentage of taxpayers with taxable incomes over (a) £50,000, (b) £60,000, (c) £70,000, (d) £100,000 and (e) £150,000. [93120]

Dawn Primarolo: The table shows approximate estimates of the number and percentage of taxpayers with taxable incomes above the levels requested in 1996–97, the latest year for which there is information available. These estimates are based on a sample survey and the sample size is not large enough to allow estimates to be made for the majority of unitary authorities in Wales and Scotland.

1996–97 Survey of Personal Incomes, Inland Revenue

Pensioners

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the rate of income tax paid by pensioners who undertake part-time employment. [92547]

Dawn Primarolo: Treasury Ministers have received a number of representations on income tax matters, including matters relating to pensioners.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 12 July 1999, Official Report, column 83, if he will estimate the number of pensioners with effective rates of deduction from gross income of (a) between 50 and 60 per cent., (b) between 60 and 70 per cent., (c) between 70 and 80 per cent., (d) between 90 and 100 per cent. and (e) above 100 per cent., taking into account the effects of tax rates and benefit withdrawal rates, and the rules regarding deemed income from capital. [91659]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 July 1999]: I shall write to my right hon. Friend shortly and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Duty Free

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact on (a) revenues and (b) jobs caused by the duty differential between the United Kingdom and the rest of the European Community. [93140]

Ms Hewitt: Duty differentials are not the only factor involved in the legal and illegal cross-border trade in excise goods between the UK and other EU member states. Other factors involved include pre-tax price, manufacturers' and retailers' margins, and transportation costs. It is not possible to isolate the effect of duty differentials alone.

HM Customs and Excise estimates of revenue lost through cross-border shopping and smuggling are set out in their technical paper deposited in the House of Commons Library on 19 November 1998. HM Customs and Excise does not have any assessment of the impact of such activities on UK employment.

Statistics

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to ask the Office of National Statistics to increase the size of the samples it uses, in order to provide more reliable statistics for Scotland and Wales. [93268]

Ms Hewitt: Officials in the Office for National Statistics are holding discussions with their counterparts in Scotland and Wales to consider their requirements for enhanced samples. As a result of these discussions it has been established that samples in many cases are sufficient, while some other samples have already been enhanced, particularly in the area of business statistics. I expect these discussions to continue.

Gold Sales

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations have been received from overseas Governments with regard to the sale of part of Britain's gold reserves; and if he will make a statement. [93622]

Ms Hewitt: We have received representations from South Africa, the Southern African Development Community (also representing Angola, Botswana, DRCongo, Lesotho, Malawi, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Seychelles, Swaziland, Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe), Ghana and Peru.

Inheritance Tax

Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much inheritance tax is raised from non-UK domiciled persons (a) in total and (b) who invest in unit trusts and open-ended investment companies. [93587]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that the information is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the increased take-up of the working families tax credit resulting from the Government's advertising campaign; and if he will make a statement. [93609]

Dawn Primarolo: The Working Families Tax Credit is central to the Government's aim of making work pay. It will benefit nearly 1.5 million families, providing a minimum guaranteed income for a family with a full time worker of £200 per week. Together with the national minimum wage, increases to child benefit, and reform of tax and national insurance, it will lift around 800,000 children out of poverty.

It is vital that the right people get the information they need to apply for the tax credits they are entitled to. The Government are, therefore, launching a major advertising campaign to provide clear, targeted and comprehensive information. The Government's aim for the campaign is to encourage all those who are eligible for WFTC to apply.

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many households he estimates will be removed from housing benefit (a) totally and (b) in part in each region in England and Wales following the introduction of the working families tax credit; and if he will estimate the average loss of housing benefit per household. [93067]

Dawn Primarolo: I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Russia (Debt)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of (a) Soviet era debt and (b) subsequent debt which the Russian Federation has defaulted upon to date; what is the amount of that country's current debt awaiting service; and if he will make a statement. [91761]

Ms Hewitt: There are no publicly available official estimates of Russia's total debts or of its arrears. At the Koln Summit G8 Heads welcomed the outline agreements recently reached by Russia with the IMF and the World Bank and looked forward to their speedy implementation as a further important step in Russia's reform program. They also encouraged the Paris Club to act expeditiously to negotiate a debt rescheduling agreement with Russia once an IMF agreement was in place.

Savings

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the tax benefits for pensions and retirement savings currently goes to families earning (a) more than £100,000, (b) between £50,000 and £100,000, (c) between £25,000 and £50,000 and (d) less than £25,000 per year. [93430]

Dawn Primarolo: The distribution of tax relief for contributions to occupational and personal pension schemes by household earnings is not available.

Credit Unions

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to publish the final report of the Task Force on Credit Union Development; and if he will make a statement. [93543]

Ms Hewitt: I received it a few days ago and am studying it with interest. I will decide how best to take it forward in due course.

Betting Duty

Mr. Roy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the rate of General Betting Duty. [93656]

Mrs. Roche: The Government keep the revenue yield from General Betting Duty under constant review.

Mr. Roy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much General Betting Duty (a) was raised in 1998–99 and (b) is forecast to be raised in (i) 1999–2000 and (ii) 2000–2001. [93657]

Mrs. Roche: In 1998–99, revenue raised from General Betting Duty was £479.8 million. The forecast for total betting and gaming receipts (including General Betting Duty, Pools Betting Duty, Gaming Duty Amusement Machine Licence Duty, Bingo Duty and Lottery Duty) in 1999–2000, published in the March 1999 Financial Statement and Budget Report, is £1.5 billion. No forecast has been published for 2000–2001.

Treasury Building

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on the proposal to refurbish the Treasury building under the private finance initiative. [92529]

Mr. Milburn: Ministers have now approved plans for the refurbishment of the Treasury building under the terms of an innovative PFI deal with Exchequer Partnership plc (EP), the Treasury's Private Sector Partner. This flagship PFI project at the heart of Whitehall confirms the Government's commitment to PFI in the accommodation sector. On completion, the project will bring together the whole Department in one modern, efficient office building fit for the 21st century. It is the first to follow the recently published Treasury Task Force PFI Standard Contract Guidance. It is also the first project where the service provider, in partnership with the Treasury, will put debt financing out to competition.

This will be the first, major refurbishment of a building nearly a century old. While it needs some remedial work, the building's services also require major updating, and more flexible and efficient use needs to be made of the space within it to meet business needs. The project will achieve both, as well as providing very good value for money for the taxpayer. Work on site is expected to commence in the spring of 2000 and take two years to complete. The Department will remain at the eastern (Whitehall) end of the building while its new accommodation at the western (St. James's Park) end is refurbished. The move is scheduled to take place in Spring 2002, and the Treasury will then be occupying just under half of the building. The Treasury will pay as and when its accommodation needs are delivered to specified standards.

Under the terms of the PFI deal, EP are responsible for securing town planning permission and listed building consent. It is also for EP to let the non-Treasury space to another public sector tenant.

Debt Management Office

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the UK Debt Management Office's annual administrative accounts. [93816]

Ms Hewitt: The DMO's accounts for 1998–99, its first year of operation, are being published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Pooled Pension Investment

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the pooled pension investment will be available; and what investments will be eligible for inclusion. [93814]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have decided to introduce pooled pension investments (ppis) in April 2001, to coincide with the introduction of stakeholder pensions.

The joint Treasury and DSS consultation paper "Helping to deliver stakeholder pensions: flexibility in pension investment" suggested that ppis could help the successful launch of stakeholder pensions. Most responses to the paper agreed, and many pressed for a joint introduction. Also, financial services firms are still dealing with year 2000 compliance, and many will be introducing change freezes around the millennium period. It therefore makes good practical sense to introduce the two reforms together.

The Government will allow ppis to hold units in authorised unit trusts,

open-ended investment companies, investment trusts with separate custodians and gearing at or below 50 per cent., and single gilts.

These investments offer appropriate security and risk spreading for savers. They also give the flexibility required to match investments with the length of time from retirement. Again this is consistent with the responses from consultation, and strikes the right balance between minimising investment risk and allowing choice and innovation.

Office for National Statistics

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the Office for National Statistics performed against its key targets in 1998–99. [93815]

Ms Hewitt: The Office for National Statistics' performance is described in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts which is being laid before the House and published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

ONS's performance against its key targets was good and in the case of the compliance plan and efficiency savings both targets were exceeded. In a few cases the target was missed marginally. Targets for 1999–2000 are set out in the ONS Business Plan 1999–2002, which was published in March. Copies of the Business Plan are in the Library.

Simon de Danser

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement in connection with the independent inquiry, announced on 11 February, by Sir Gerald Hosker KCB QC, into the actions of HM Customs and Excise officials in relation to the seizure of the Simon de Danser vessel. [93813]

Dawn Primarolo: Sir Gerald has completed his independent inquiry and has submitted his report. My commitment was to make available to the House a summary of the report and its recommendations but I have decided to go further and to place a copy of Sir Gerald's full report in the Library of the House.

The Chairman of Customs has accepted his conclusions and recommendations in full. The Commissioners are taking action as a matter of priority to implement the report's recommendations in order to remedy the failings identified.

Land Settlement Association

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many former tenants of the Land Settlement Association are still being pursued for tax by the Inland Revenue in respect of their settlement of litigation with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in 1982. [93535]

Dawn Primarolo: I shall write to the right hon. and learned Gentleman shortly and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Annual Incomes

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the relationship between the annual incomes of the top decile and those of the bottom decile, and between the top quartile and the bottom quartile in each year since 1986; and if he will give the same figures for (a) Germany, (b) France, (c) the United States of America, (d) Australia and (e) New Zealand over the same period. [92558]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 26 July 1999]: I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Belize

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what occasions since 1993 his Department received written or oral approaches from the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) on matters relating to banking regulations in Belize. [92068]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 20 July 1999]: I shall write to the my hon. Friend shortly and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Shipping Taxation

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive Lord Alexander's report on Shipping Taxation; and if he will publish it. [91563]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Data are compiled by the DETR on behalf of the eight Rent Registration Areas in Wales which are largely based on the former county council areas. The latest published figures from that source are for quarter ended September 1998.

The following data have been compiled as at 1 April by direct reference to the eight Rent Offices in Wales and have been provided as a guide only. The information is not collected in the way it has been requested.

Information for flats is not separately available, therefore the details provided relate to all two room accommodation (ie one bedroom and one living room).

The Local Reference Rent is specific to an individual property and is meant to reflect the general level of rent for properties of the same size in the locality. In order to arrive at a single figure, an average has been calculated.

Rent Officers are required to determine rents based on the size and type of accommodation in a locality which may be different to a local authority area and localities could also cross local authority boundaries. The information has, therefore, been estimated to cover local authority boundaries.

Council Tax Benefit Subsidy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect on the finances of the National Assembly for Wales, and on council taxes in Wales, of his proposals included in the Statement on Funding Policy for the National Assembly for Wales, that adjustments in respect of council tax benefit subsidy for Wales should be based on relative percentage changes in council tax; and by what means the Barnett Formula will provide the necessary additional funding for Wales for these purposes. [82879]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 30 April 1999]: In future years, local authorities in Wales and the National Assembly will determine the level of local authority self-financed expenditure, including council tax.

The precise effect of council tax benefit subsidy on the finances of the National Assembly will depend on individual local authorities' budgeting decisions and the Assembly's decisions on how and whether to use its reserve powers to control council tax increases. The detailed rules have yet to be finalised, but it is currently estimated that each percentage point difference between the relative change of council tax in Wales and that in England will require a balancing adjustment to the Assembly's Departmental Expenditure Limit of approximately £1 million. Any adjustment to the Assembly's funding in respect of council tax benefit subsidy will not directly effect council tax.

1995–96	7,949,000
1996–97	1,859,000
1997–98	3,292,000
1998–99	2,107,000

There are no figures prior to 1992–93 as NHS Trusts have been operational only since 1 April 1992. The 1998–99 figures are taken from unaudited accounts and are provisional.

Following the Transfer of Functions on 1 July 1999, these are now matters for the National Assembly for Wales.

Local Government Pensions

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he issued to local authorities concerning the management of their pension funds prior to April. [93131]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: None. This is a matter for the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

District Nurses and Health Visitors

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) district nurses and (b) health visitors there were in each health authority in Wales in each of the last five years. [93114]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy in the House Library.

Dental Fillings

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dental fillings per child were made in each trust area in Wales, in each month in (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998. [93118]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July quarterly report to the House. [93567]

Mr. Spellar: My Department's Year 2000 programme is nearing completion. As reported in September, work on critical systems is almost complete and front-line systems are ready for the Millennium. Contingency plans have been developed and tested.

The Meteorological Office, which provides services to the public, reports that all of its systems are now compliant and contingency plans have been developed.

Details of MOD progress in tackling the Millennium problem are set out in our quarterly reports. These are available in the Libraries of the House and are published on the Internet. The overall MOD programme completion dates have not changed since the July report to the House.

Within this programme, two critical systems showed some slippage in their completion dates, but both of these have now been certified as compliant. A small slippage has been reported in one non-critical system.

The results of the October monthly review of progress of Government Departments and Agencies in tackling the Millennium problem are due to be announced shortly by the President of the Council.

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the assessment of damage inflicted on Serbian military vehicles in Kosovo by air power will be completed. [94138]

Mr. Hoon: General Clark, the Supreme Allied Commander Europe (SACEUR), gave his battle damage assessment to the North Atlantic Council on 15 September. This was made public at a NATO press conference on 16 September. A copy of the transcript has been placed in the Library of the House and can also be obtained from the NATO website at http://www.nato.int/kosovo/press/p990916a.htm.

But, as my predecessor made clear in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 30 June 1999, Official Report, column 160, the measure of the campaign's success lies in the fact that it resulted in withdrawal of Milosevic's troops from Kosovo, the entry of KFOR and the return of refugees.

Menwith Hill

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reviews the United States National Security Agency has carried out of security practices and breaches of security at RAF Menwith Hill since 1993; and on what dates his Department received copies of the reports arising out of each review. [93939]

Mr. Spellar: Two reviews of security have been conducted by the National Security Agency at RAF Menwith Hill since 1993. As the then Minister for the Armed Forces stated in his answer of 11 March 1998, Official Report, columns 196–97, a review was conducted in April 1997. The second review was undertaken on site in January 1998 and was finalised by the US authorities at the end of March that year. My Department was made aware of the contents of both reports at the time.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of his Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the past five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. [93851]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Information is not available in the form requested, not least because of the number of changes in the organisation of my Department since 1995. However, the main corporate in-house journals currently published, and their frequency, are set out below:

	Frequency	Subject Matter
MOD-wide
Focus	Monthly	Main Corporate Journal
MOD 'OnLine'	Daily	Electronic news service
Money Matters	Quarterly	Financial Management
Paper Clips	Monthly	Civilian Personnel Policy
PM World	Monthly	Civilian Personnel Management Issues
Capital	AD hoc	Resource Accounting and Budgeting
Royal Navy
Navy News	Monthly	Main RN Corporate Journal
Broadsheet	Annual	RN Annual Review
People Matters	2 a year	RN Personnel Policy
Army
Soldier	Monthly	Main Army Corporate Journal
British Army Review	3 a year	General Army Matters
Sixth Sense	Weekly	Newspaper for all Forces serving in Germany
RAF
RAF News	Fortnightly	Main RAF Corporate Journal
Air Power Review	Quarterly	Air Safety and Air Power

All titles are unclassified. In addition, there are many newsletters and other internal publications on specific subjects, such as the redevelopment of MOD's Whitehall HQ, or specific to individual management areas. The vast majority of military units also produce newsletters or magazines of their own for their personnel and for the benefit of Service families.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list his Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93687]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The costs of production of MOD's principal official publications are borne by the Stationery Office, as with all Command Papers, House of Commons papers and Statutory Instruments.

Married Quarters

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average annual expenditure per Defence Housing Executive administered married quarters on repairs and maintenance for the year 1997–98. [94064]

Mr. Kilfoyle: In the Defence Housing Executive (DHE) 1999 Corporate Plan, the action plan sets out a key target relating to the unit cost of housing and aims to achieve a figure of less than £5,400 per property. A figure for 1998–99 was given on 26 July 1999, Official Report, column 56. For 1997–98, the calculation is similar—i.e. by dividing the total cost of the DHE (£343,429 million including some £100 million rental payment to Annington Homes Ltd) by the average number of properties occupied (including those which are Substitute Services Families Accommodation—52,832). The equivalent figure for FY 97–98, uprated for inflation, is £5,473.10 per property. The cost of the upgrade programme is not included as this is outside the routine cost of housing provision.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the suitability for making nuclear weapons of the material currently being transported to Japan by BNFL. [93828]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has made an assessment of the suitability for making nuclear weapons of the material currently being transported to Japan by BNFL. The assessment was that the risk of this material being so used is very low.

Anti-Personnel Mines

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to review current and future stocks of munitions to ensure that they do not have the capacity to act as anti-personnel mines; and if he will make a statement. [94642]

Mr. Spellar: All UK weapons systems and munitions have been checked for compliance with the provisions of the Ottawa Convention. There are no weapons or munitions in the UK inventory which fall under the Ottawa definition of an anti-personnel mine. The UK is fully committed to a complete global ban on anti-personnel mines and will never again use these weapons.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many mines have been retained for training purposes; and which anti-personnel types have been retained. [94668]

Mr. Spellar: The UK is permitted to retain the minimum necessary amount of anti-personnel mines for training and testing in de-mining techniques, as permitted under Article 3 of the Ottawa Convention. As of 1 August 1999, these comprised 2088 Ranger mines, 1056 C3 Elsie mines, and 434 HB 876 sub-munitions to the JP233 weapon system. As of 1 August 1999, the UK also held 859 anti-personnel mines of foreign manufacture for the development of and training in mine detection, mine clearance, or mine destruction techniques, as provided for in Article 3 of the Convention.

Asbestos

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress made on the review of compensation arrangements for service and ex-service personnel suffering from asbestos-related illnesses caused by exposure to asbestos prior to 1987. [94427]

Mr. Spellar: The review to which my hon. Friend refers is nearing completion. I hope to be able to meet him and other interested colleagues soon to discuss the findings.

Regimental Insignia

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1999, Official Report, column 263, on what date this year the Daily Mail sought permission to use the insignia of the Parachute Regiment; and what royalties or fees have so far been received. [93827]

Mr. Spellar: The Daily Mail has not, this year, sought permission from the Ministry of Defence to reproduce the insignia of the Parachute Regiment, and no royalties or fees have been received. Dispensation from royalties and fees is generally given for the publication of Crown Copyright material in newspapers and magazines, in the interest of good public relations.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if existing intellectual property rights will be transferred with the assets of DERA on privatisation; and if he will make a statement. [93662]

Mr. Kilfoyle: No decisions have been made on the nature of a Public Private Partnership (PPP) for DERA, and it is too early to speculate on the precise form it will take, or how intellectual property rights will be treated.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he will take to ensure the continued availability of informed independent advice to Ministers after the privatisation of DERA. [93667]

Mr. Kilfoyle: No decisions have been made on the nature of a Public Private Partnership (PPP) for DERA. The need for continued access to informed and impartial scientific services and advice is a key tenet of the MOD's consideration of the future of DERA and is defined in the "MOD Customer Needs Statement" and laid down in Figure 1 of the DERA PPP Consultation Document, a copy of which was placed in the Library on 5 May 1999. Ministers will want to ensure each of these customer requirements is addressed when making a decision on the final PPP solution for DERA.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis collaboration with allied powers by DERA will continue after privatisation. [93668]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The detailed mechanisms under which DERA would collaborate with allies will not be known until we have decided upon the precise PPP solution to be adopted. However, DERA's participation in collaborative activities with allied powers, following the adoption of a PPP solution, would be governed by the government to government arrangements agreed with our allies.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if liabilities arising from the exposure of staff to hazardous working conditions will be transferred to the purchaser following the privatisation of DERA; and if he will make a statement. [93664]

Mr. Kilfoyle: No decision has been made on the nature of a Public Private Partnership (PPP) for DERA, and it is too early to speculate both on the precise form it would take and how commercial and legal issues, including liabilities, will be handled. The MOD study team, which is taking forward the work on the DERA PPP, is supported by legal experts who will provide advice during the implementation stage on the future treatment of liabilities.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision will be made to fund the transfer of DERA employee pension entitlements from the Civil Service Pension Scheme into a private scheme following his proposals for privatisation; and if he will make a statement. [93669]

Mr. Kilfoyle: No decisions have been taken on the form of a PPP for DERA, and it is therefore too early to be specific about pension arrangements for staff or how they will be funded.

Sandhurst (Staff College)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the former Staff College at Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst, was vacated; what proposals there are for its future use; and if he will make a statement. [94453]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The former Staff College at the Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst, was vacated in September 1997. Options for the future of the former Staff College Buildings at Camberley are being investigated by the Army. No proposals have yet been put to Ministers.

Defence Research Programme (Technology Audit)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature and purpose of the technology audit of the defence research programme which was discussed at the Defence Research Committee on 31 March 1998; when this audit was started and ended; what were the conclusions of this audit; and if he will place a copy of the report arising out of this audit in the Library. [93863]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Since about 1991, the Defence Scientific Staff, in providing support for the work of the Defence Research Committee, have undertaken an ongoing review of technology aspects of the defence research programme. The paper entitled "technology audit", discussed at the Committee on the 31 March 1998, dealt with the internal processes by which this ongoing review is carried out. I am withholding this document in accordance with exemption 2 of the "Code of Practice on Access to Government Information".

Ministerial Meetings (United States)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings he held with members and officials of the United States Government during his visit to the United States on 2–3 June 1997; and if he will list the date and location of each meeting, and the names of the members and officials of the United States Government at each meeting. [93949]

Mr. Hoon: During his visit to the US from 2 to 3 June 1997, my predecessor's only formal meeting was with Mr. William Cohen, the US Secretary for Defense. General John Shalikashvili, the then Chairman of the US Joint Chiefs of Staff, was present during part of the discussions. This meeting took place in the Pentagon on Tuesday 3 June 1997.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department started discussions with the United States Government on the decision to invest in the US National Ignition Facility; with which US Departments these discussions have been held; to which United States Department, and on what date, his Department notified the decision to invest in this facility; whether the decision to invest in this facility will be covered by a memorandum of understanding; when his Department expects to formalise the decision in a contract with the US; and with which United States Department this contract will be signed. [93932]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Discussions between officials of my Department and the US Department of Energy on the possibility of optimising National Ignition Facility (NIF) technology began in September 1998. Written confirmation of the United Kingdom's decision to invest in the NIF was conveyed to the US Department of Energy on 9 June 1999. The US Department of Defense was also made aware of out intentions. The arrangements, which are being made under the aegis of the 1958 UK-US Mutual Defence Agreement, will be formalised in a number of contracts covering the procurement process between my Department and the US Department of Energy.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United States personnel have visited the Atomic Weapons Establishment (Aldermaston) since 1 January; and from which United States Departments and establishments these visitors have come. [93944]

Mr. Kilfoyle: A total of 381 United States personnel have visited AWE Aldermaston between 1 January and 30 September 1999. The visitors represented the following:

Department of Energy

Department of Defense

Defense Threat Reduction Agency

Los Alamos, Lawrence Livermore and Sandia National Laboratories

Kaiser-Hill

Mason & Hanger, Pantex

Westinghouse Savannah River

Chew & Associates Inc

Allied Signal, Kansas City Division

Lockheed Martin, Y-12 Plant

Lockheed Martin Missiles Systems

ITT SSC

Lovelace Respiratory Research Institute

University of California

McCrone Associates

Battelle Pacific Northwest Laboratories

Applied Research Associates Inc.

Electronic Test Facility

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations his Department has received from the Irish Government with regard to the Ministry of Defence's Electronic Test Facility formerly sited at the British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. site at Capenhurst, Cheshire, since 1 July; when these representations were received; and from which Irish Departments. [93856]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence has not received any representations from the Irish Government with regard to the Electronic Test Facility.

Anthrax Vaccine

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the companies from which his Department has procured anthrax vaccine since 1 January 1995. [93840]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Department's only supplier of anthrax vaccine is the Centre for Applied Microbiological and Research, which is the executive arm of the Microbiological Research Authority, a Special Health Authority sponsored by the Department of Health.

Operational Requirements

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of operational requirements which are issued by his Department; which section of his Department is responsible for issuing operational requirements; how many operational requirements have been issued since 31 December 1998; and how many of these operational requirements are currently unclassified. [93933]

Mr. Kilfoyle: "Operational requirement" is a generic term used to describe the detailed documentation setting out a military requirement for equipment, in preparation for possible procurement action. It is prepared by staff reporting to the Deputy Chief of the Defence Staff (Equipment Capability), in consultation with others in my Department, and may, when appropriate, be made available to industry during the procurement process. Since 31 December 1998, work has been initiated on some 196 new operational requirements. There is no central record of the numbers of operational requirements issued to industry. Since such documents give details of our planned future military capability, they are almost invariably classified.

Bombs

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the size of the existing surplus of 500lb bombs in this country; and what the cost (a) has been to manufacture and (b) will be to destroy this surplus. [94051]

Mr. Kilfoyle: There are currently no surplus 500lb bombs in this country. However, a number of 500lb bombs which had reached the end of their initial service life, and which subsequent testing had shown to be defective, were destroyed earlier this year at a cost of around £135K.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July Quarterly report to the House. [93562]

Mr. Battle: Details of the Department's progress in tackling the bug are set out in our quarterly monitoring returns. These are available in the Libraries of the House and are published on the internet. The results of the October monthly review of progress of Government departments and agencies in tackling the bug are due to be announced shortly by the President of the Council. It will show that the Department's business critical systems will be compliant by 31 October as scheduled and that work on non critical systems is well advanced. The Foreign and Commonwealth Business Continuity Plan and Millennium Operating Plan will also both be completed and tested by 31 October on schedule. All our posts have prepared and tested their own Business Continuity Plans.

Falklands

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department expects to clear the anti-personnel mines that remain in the Falkland Islands. [94641]

Mr. Battle: We are fully committed to the Ottawa Convention, which entered into force in the UK on 1 March 1999. It requires us to clear all anti-personnel mines from the Falkland Islands within 10 years of entry, unless we can show good reasons why an extension should be granted. Such reasons may include humanitarian, environmental and technical considerations. Mine clearance in the Falkland Islands is both difficult and dangerous and we should be keeping these points in mind.

The Ministry of Defence estimate that 14,000 anti-personnel mines were laid by the Argentines in the Falkland Islands in 1982. The Argentine Government have offered to assist in mine clearance. During President Menem's visit to the UK in October 1998, we agreed as a first step to work together with Argentina to evaluate the feasibility and cost of clearing the land mines still present in the Falkland Islands. Work on a Memorandum of Understanding setting out how this feasibility study will be carried out is underway. Both Governments re-affirmed their commitment to co-operate on mine clearance in the Joint Statement of 14 July 1999.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response there has been to the report of Mr. Jiri Dienstbier, the UN's Special Rapporteur on Human Rights for Yugoslavia, on sanctions against former Yugoslavia. [94711]

Mr. Hain: Mr. Dienstbier's most recent report was submitted to the UN Commission on Human Rights on 20 January 1999. It makes no reference to sanctions. I understand that, following his visit to the region in early October 1999, Mr. Dienstbier will shortly be submitting a further report to the General Assembly. The Government have not seen the report, which has yet to be published.

Missing Israeli Servicemen

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government (a) has made and (b) proposes to make, over the missing Israeli servicemen, Ron Arad, Zachary Baumel, Zvi Feldman and Yehuda Katz. [R] [94410]

Mr. Hain: We regularly raise the issue of the missing Israeli servicemen with those who might have knowledge of their fate. The late Derek Fatchett met the families of the missing servicemen when he visited Israel in January 1998. Other suitable opportunities will be taken advantage of as they arise.

Honorary British Consuls

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what stipend or other emoluments are paid to honorary British consuls. [94712]

Mr. Hain: Honorary British Consuls receive an honorarium, currently set at a ceiling of £1,835, and reimbursement of necessary expenses.

Iraq (Papal Visit)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made, by which (a) Ministers and (b) officials, to the Holy See about the Pope's planned visit to Iraq. [94360]

Mr. Hain: Ministers have not made any representations. Foreign Office officials have discussed the proposed Papal visit to Iraq with officials from the Holy See. We have expressed concern that the visit will be manipulated by the Iraqi government for propaganda purposes and represented as evidence of Papal support for Saddam Hussein's regime and its policies.

Hong Kong War Pensions

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many former prisoners of war currently benefit from the Hong Kong War Memorial Pension Scheme. [93831]

Mr. Battle: As at 31 August 1999, there were 661 pensioners under the Hong Kong War Memorial Pension Scheme, of which 467 were single widowed persons and 194 were married. None of these are British ex-servicemen. No distinction is made between those who were prisoners of war and others who qualify under the scheme.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution was made by the Government to the Hong Kong War Memorial Pension Scheme in 1991. [93830]

Mr. Battle: Under Section 5 of the Hong Kong War Memorial Pensions Ordinance of 1991, pensions were paid from the general revenue of the then Hong Kong Government. They are now paid by the Government of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region.

Turing's Treatise on the Enigma

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 689, on Government Codes and Cypher School, if GCHQ holds a complete copy of Turing's Treatise on the Enigma to be released to the Public Record Office; and if Turing's Treatise on the Enigma has been released to the United States National Archives. [93961]

Mr. Robin Cook: GCHQ holds Turing's Treatise on the Enigma and will shortly release it to the PRO. A facsimile is available in the United States National Archives.

International Criminal Court Treaty

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what timetable he has adopted in respect of the drafting of legislation to enable the signing of the International Criminal Court Treaty. [93675]

Mr. Hain: The legislation to enable ratification of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court will be introduced as soon as the Parliamentary timetable permits. Detailed work to prepare this legislation is going forward. We are strongly committed to the Court and intend to be among the first sixty States to ratify.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Solicitor General what proportion of cases brought by the Serious Fraud Office have resulted in conviction. [94156]

The Solicitor-General: Since its inception, the Serious Fraud Office has prosecuted 197 cases involving 442 defendants. Of the 442 defendants, 300 were convicted or pleaded guilty, an overall conviction rate of 68 per cent.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July Quarterly report to the House. [93569]

Mr. Chris Smith: All DCMS computer systems have been tested and are now millennium ready. My Department provides no public services via any computer systems for which it is directly responsible. A millennium contingency plan has now been completed and will be tested shortly.

No slippage occurred following the July statement to the House. My Department's Year 2000 programme was completed at the end of July 1999. We will though continue to monitor the position until the end of the year.

Stonehenge

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport in each year since the establishment of English Heritage, how much (a) his Department and its predecessors, (b) English Heritage, (c) other departments and (d) other agencies have spent on (i) public consultations, (ii) conferences, (iii) public exhibitions, (iv) public relations, design and other consultancy fees and (v) legal fees in connection with (1) the Stonehenge World Heritage Site, (2) proposals for a new visitors centre and (3) proposals for roads in the vicinity. [94153]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Prior to 1990–91, English Heritage incurred no expenditure in respect of Stonehenge beyond that arising from its normal day-to-day responsibilities. Between 1990–91 and 1997–98, English Heritage spent some £3.7 million in relation to proposals for a new visitor centre and for improving the setting of the monument. However, the total expenditure cannot at this stage be readily apportioned to specific aspects of the project. From 1 April 1998 to date, English Heritage expenditure has been as follows:

Stonehenge World Heritage Site Management Plan
Public consultation	47,678
Public relations, design and other consultancy fees	58,803
Proposed new visitor centre
Public exhibitions	24,304
Public relations, design and other consultancy fees	48,966
Legal fees	96,237

Prior to 1 April 1996, the only expenditure by the Highways Agency that can be attributed solely to the Stonehenge element of the A303/Amesbury—Berwick Down scheme relates to a public consultation exhibition in 1993 costing £32,000 and a conference and exhibition in 1994 costing £78,000. Since then, they have spent £794,945 on the design of the Stonehenge part of the scheme. In addition to this, they mounted a public exhibition earlier this year (1999) at a cost of £48,000.

My Department, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and their predecessor Departments have not incurred any directly attributable costs in connection with Stonehenge. It is not possible meaningfully to apportion the cost of official time spent in respect of consultations and correspondence.

Library and Leisure Services

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the levels of spending on (a) library services and (b) leisure services per head of the population in each county of England in each year since 1995–96. [94314]

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the levels of spending on (a) library services and (b) leisure services per head of population in (i) Staffordshire and (ii) each other county of England (1) in the current year and (2) in each of the last three years. [94017]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The requested information is set out in the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy's annual publications "Public Library Statistics" and "Leisure and Recreation Statistics", which can be consulted in the House Library.

Royal Armouries Museum

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement about the (a) financial situation at the Royal Armouries Museum, (b) public funds made available to the museum and (c) the future of the museum and its management. [94381]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Following the restructuring of the PFI arrangement at the end of July which enabled the Royal Armouries Museum in Leeds to remain fully open, DCMS Ministers are keeping the financial situation under close scrutiny. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made an additional £1 million per annum available to the Royal Armouries, a 25 per cent. increase in its grant support. The additional grant support is conditional on improvements in management and efficiency which are essential to the future well-being of the Royal Armouries Museum in Leeds.

Performing Arts

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on provision for performing arts for young people. [94428]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Ensuring all children have access to the arts and to quality arts education opportunities are key departmental priorities. We are working closely with the Department for Education and Employment, the Arts Council of England and other partners on a range of policies to deliver this.

Airport Tax

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent assessment he has made of the impact of the level of airport tax on the tourism industry in the United Kingdom. [94160]

Janet Anderson: My Department has made no systematic assessment of the impact of Air Passenger Duty (APD). APD was introduced in November 1994, and there were 20.8 million overseas visits to the UK in 1994. In 1998, there were almost 26 million overseas visits to the UK.

I am, however, aware of the travel and tourism industry's concerns about the APD and have passed these on to ministerial colleagues in the Treasury.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of her Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July quarterly report to the House. [93575]

Mrs. Beckett: The Privy Council Office (PCO) computer systems are part of the Cabinet Office network, which is millennium compliant. These systems are encompassed in the Cabinet Office returns.

PCO's own computer and other electronic hardware have been tested and are compliant. PCO has recently relocated to new premises, which have also been tested and are compliant. There has been no slippage in PCO's millennium bug programme.

PCO does not provide services to the general public.

PCO is in the process of finalising its business continuity plan and millennium operating regime and will be bound by the targets I set other Departments and Agencies of having robust and tested plans in place by the end of October.

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Council if she will list (a) the reports published by her Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by her Department, (c) the decisions her Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria she uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93981]

Mrs. Beckett: Paragraph 27 of the Ministerial Code makes it clear that when Parliament is in session, Ministers will want to bear in mind the desire of Parliament that the most important announcements of Government policy should be made, in the first instance, in Parliament. This is considered in the light of other parliamentary business under consideration in the same week. It is therefore not possible to say with certainty whether any particular decision would be announced in an oral statement even when the House is sitting.

During Parliamentary recesses, the business of Government continues and outside events often require ministerial decisions which cannot await the end of recess. Many of the significant reports published and decisions made during the recess will come before Parliament in other ways—such as the annual reports of agencies or statutory instruments—and are laid on the day the House returns. A full list of these will appear in the Votes and Proceedings for Tuesday 19 October.

In relation to my own responsibilities, monthly statements of progress on tackling the Millennium bug in central Government and the wider public sector were sent to all Members in August and September. Information was also made available in the Libraries of the House. When the house is sitting, these announcements are made by oral statement.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Rwanda

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance is being given to Rwanda to help improve its educational infrastructure. [94387]

Clare Short: Education is identified as a key sector for DFID support in our recently published Country Strategy Paper for Rwanda. Since 1998, we have provided short-term planning advice and, together with the World Bank, have been helping the Government of Rwanda carry out a Public Expenditure Review of education and other key social sectors aimed at identifying strategic priorities which are affordable and sustainable. In addition, we have provided direct budgetary support aimed at increasing the proportion of Government expenditure in the social sectors.

Over the next three years, we plan to build on this work as our partnership with the Government of Rwanda deepens. We are at the early stages of planning a sector support programme in education to be implemented in collaboration with the World Bank and other interested donors. In addition to providing much needed institutional strengthening and further strategic planning support, the programme would target infrastructure and training priorities.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the current humanitarian situation in Rwanda. [94388]

Clare Short: Unrest in the north-west of Rwanda in the latter part of 1998 led to the displacement of over 600,000 people. Since November 1998, we have provided over £1.7 million in humanitarian assistance to the most vulnerable groups. A degree of stability has now returned to the north-west, but we stand ready to respond to any further humanitarian crises in Rwanda as needs are identified.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list her Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93681]

Clare Short: We publish a wide range of material, both centrally funded and as part of individual programmes such as those covering knowledge and research work. We spent around £1.3 million on official publications since May 1997, which includes the costs incurred in publishing, preparation, production and purchase of copies for official use. It excludes the costs of publications produced for internal use and as part of individual programmes of research.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of her Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the last five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. [93850]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) has three main in-house publications for its staff:

'North & South', a bi-monthly staff newspaper produced since February 1991.

'What's happening?', a bi-monthly newsletter on management initiatives published since June 1997 under its present title, and from November 1996 to May 1997 as 'Management Matters'.

'Weekly Office Notices', an electronic newsletter of staff postings, and other events of general interest.

A number of individual departments also produce periodic newsletters for some or all staff. While it would be disproportionately expensive to provide an exhaustive list of these, examples include:

'European News', a monthly newsletter issued in print and electronic form by the European Union Department since 1997.

'NR News', a quarterly newsletter issued electronically by Rural Livelihoods and Environment Division since June 1996.

'Infoload', a monthly newsletter issued electronically by DFID's Library since 1997.

None of these in-house publications have any secrecy clarification. Several are only sent electronically to staff with an acknowledged interest in a particular subject, or to members of staff of the issuing department.

Western Kenya (Malaria)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid her Department is providing for Kisii, in Western Kenya, in relation to a malaria epidemic. [94390]

Clare Short: My Department gave technical advice to the Government of Kenya following the outbreak of this malaria epidemic. One of our regional health team based in Nairobi joined two Government/donor teams sent to the District to assist the local health authorities in the management of the crisis and helped to co-ordinate inputs from the European Commission, WHO, and UNICEF. DFID also drew up emergency treatment protocols in collaboration with colleagues from the WHO country office which were adopted and used.

DFID has provided around £1.3 million over the last two years for emergency malaria work in Kenya, including one year's supply of the new first-line drug for malaria treatment, Sulphadoxine-Pyrimethamine (SP). The availability of this drug was a major factor in reducing the impact of the epidemic. We are also helping the Government of Kenya to prepare epidemic preparedness guidelines which should strengthen the response to future outbreaks.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of her Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July quarterly report to the House. [93577]

Clare Short: Details of the Department's progress in tackling the Millennium Bug are set out in our quarterly monitoring returns. These are available in the Libraries of the House and are published on the Internet.

All of the key business critical systems have been tested and put back into service. Work is also complete on non-critical systems, telecommunications systems and embedded chips.

The Millennium Operating Regime has been completed and presented to Ministers. The Business Continuity Plans for all IT business critical systems have been dry-tested. Contingency arrangements on some non-IT aspects of the business covered by the Business Continuity Plans will be tested as appropriate in the next few weeks.

The results of the October monthly review of progress of Departments and agencies in tackling the bug are due to be announced shortly by the President of the Council.

In order to ensure that the projects are effective, they are appraised before approval and monitored during implementation.

Mine Clearance Projects

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what countries have received direct support from the UK Government since 1997 for mine clearance projects; and if she will make a statement about the effectiveness of the projects. [94667]

Clare Short: My department had funded projects to clear anti-personnel mines and other unexploded ordnance since 1997 in the following countries:

Afghanistan, Albania, Bosnia, Cambodia, Croatia, Egypt, Georgia, Iraq (Northern), Jordan, Laos, Mozambique, Yugoslavia (Kosovo province).

The projects address urgent humanitarian needs in the context of post-conflict resettlement. They improve access for rural or urban poor to land and services and thus promote sustainable livelihoods.

In order to ensure that the project are effective, they are appraised before approval and monitored during implementation.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on what dates special advisers from her Department have visited the United States of America on official business since 1 May 1997; which of her special advisers took part in each visit; and if she will list the meetings which these special advisers held with members and officials of the United States Government during each visit, specifying the date and location of each meeting and the names of the US members and officials at each meeting. [93943]

Clare Short: Since 1 May 1997, no Special Advisers from my Department have visited the United States of America on official business.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Employment Contracts (Clergy)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell), representing the Church Commissioners, what plans the Church Commissioners have to issue formal employment contracts for clergy. [93275]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Archbishops' Council has set up a staff group to explore what can and should be done to give the clergy the rights they could and should expect.

The great majority of clergy are office holders without contracts of employment. For National Insurance purposes only, they are deemed to be employees of the Church Commissioners.

Giving clergy formal employment contracts would raise questions about the current arrangements over patronage, parochial appointments practices, selection for ordination training and clergy discipline, and would require complex and protracted legislation with great problems in defining the employer.

The Minister for Trade has indicated that there would be extensive consultation were he to exercise the powers conferred on him by Clause 23 of the Employment Relations Act in respect of the faith communities.

Clergy (Housing)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what plans the Church Commissioners have to review the estimated value of the housing clergy receive. [94040]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Archbishops' Council, in its annual report as central Stipends Authority, provides an assessment of the value of the amount clergy would have to earn if they were to have to provide and maintain domestic accommodation (excluding office space) for themselves and their families.

The clergy remuneration package (including the value of provided housing) will be considered by the group set up by the Archbishops' Council to review clergy stipends. The group will make a preliminary report to the Council in November 2000.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what plans the Church Commissioners have for changing the housing situation of retired clergy as regards obtaining their own property. [94052]

Mr. Stuart Bell: There are currently no plans to change the retirement provisions for clergy. The level of clergy pensions and retirement lump sums recognise the need for retired clergy to meet the cost of their housing.

The Church of England Pensions Board operates a scheme for assisting with the actual provision of retirement housing. Under the scheme, applicants with some resources can be granted value-linked mortgage loans to enable them to purchase a property. Those with very limited resources may occupy a property owned by the Board, for which they pay a maintenance contribution. Most of the finance for the scheme is provided by the Church Commissioners.

Millennium Celebrations

Mr. Cummings: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what plans the Church Commissioners have for celebrating the millennium. [93653]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Church of England is working in close partnership with the other Christian Churches, with the overall goal of encouraging a wide range of activities and projects which seek to celebrate and explain the Christian faith. Hundreds of local congregations are also making plans for activities and events under the three themes of a New Start with God, a New Start at Home, and a New Start for the World's Poor. The Faith zone of the Millennium Dome will also celebrate the nation's Christian heritage. The Archbishop of Canterbury will lead the nation in prayer during the opening ceremony at the Dome on New Year's Eve and the Churches' Millennium Resolution, set to music by John Taverner, will be sung. Later in the year, the main focus of the Churches' celebrations will be Pentecost Sunday, June 11, when a large range of events have been planned.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Electoral Procedures

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the final report of the Home Office Working Party on Electoral Procedures. [94816]

Mr. Straw: I have today placed a copy of the Working Party's Report in the Library and it will also be published on the Home Office's internet website.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth), now Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, and all the members of his Working Party, on a report that will be a major landmark in this country's electoral history. The existing procedures have served us well but are now well over a hundred years old and do not fully reflect modern conditions of life and work. The Working Party has gone out of its way to ensure that the integrity and openness of our electoral system will still be maintained into the next century.

I am very pleased to see the cross-party consensus that was achieved within the Working Party as this is essential to any aspect of electoral legislation.

I commend the Working Party's report to the House. The majority of its recommendations will require primary legislation, and I shall be seeking the earliest practical opportunity for a Bill. I look forward to cross-party co-operation that will ensure a swift and smooth passage for this excellent set of proposals.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July Quarterly report to the House. [93564]

Mr. Straw: Details of the Home Office and its agencies' progress in tackling the bug are set out in our quarterly monitoring returns. These are available in the Library and are published on the Internet.

In the latest published return, up to the end of August, out of 28 business critical Information Technology systems in the Home Office and its Agencies, 25 had been declared Year 2000 compliant. The remaining three systems completed their work during September. In the Home Office all Business Critical systems (Information Technology, Telecommunications and Embedded Systems) have now completed their Year 2000 work.

My department will complete work on all non-critical systems slightly later. 86 per cent. of non-critical Information Technology systems are complete, with full completion due during November. 80 per cent. of all non-critical embedded systems are compliant, with all work due to complete during December. Non-critical telecommunications work is scheduled to finish during this month. It should be noted that none of these non-critical systems affect the key services provided by my Department.

In Home Office Agencies, with the exception of one building management system, whose functions can be performed manually, all non-critical systems are compliant.

The results of the October monthly review of progress of Government departments and agencies in tackling the bug are to be announced shortly by the President of the Council.

The Home Office has policy responsibility for the police, fire, prison and probation services, the Police Information Technology Organisation and the Forensic Science Service. The results of the latest independent assessment of these sectors will be announced at the National Infrastructure Forum (NIF) on 21 October. This will show that good progress has been made since the previous NIF on 13 July, with all areas expected to report a Blue grading, meaning no material disruption is expected.

All key services provided by the Home Office will have business continuity plans in place by the end of October. 16 of the 19 services have already completed this work. My Department's Millennium Operating Regime will be completed by the end of this month and will be effective from November 1999.

Two Home Office business critical systems reported minor slippage during August, although these have since been declared compliant. The Forensic Science Service also reported that embedded systems at one site were not yet compliant. Negotiations are continuing with the landlords and the necessary compliance work is expected to be completed shortly.

Schengen

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will deposit in the Library a copy of the Commission recommendation concerning the UK application to join elements of Schengen. [94139]

Mrs. Roche: The Opinion of the European Commission on the United Kingdom's application to participate in certain provisions of the Schengen acquis was deposited for Parliamentary scrutiny on 9 August 1999. At the same time a copy was placed in the Library.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration posts have run-out of forms SAL1 and SAL2 in the last year; how many have been using form IS96 for the wrong purpose in the last year; what assessment he has made of the effects of this on (a) fraud and (b) inconvenience to asylum seekers; what plans he has to issue more consistency of supply; and if he will make a statement. [93732]

Mrs. Roche: In the 12 months ending on 12 July 1999, because of printing problems, four immigration ports of entry exhausted their supplies of form SAL1 on various dates between 29 June and 12 July 1999 but no port of entry exhausted its supply of form SAL2. As a temporary measure, the Immigration Service, after liaising with the Benefits Agency, issued alternative confirmation that applicants who were not issued with form SAL1 had arrived in the United Kingdom and sought asylum on entry. There is no record that during the same period any port used form IS96 for the wrong purpose.

There are no indications that these measures had any bearing on fraud or that there was significant inconvenience to asylum seekers.

There are now adequate stocks of forms SAL1 and SAL2 available and future orders will be placed earlier.

Drug-related Crime

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the age distribution of individuals who commit drug-related crime on Merseyside. [94517]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This information is not centrally collated. However, some research bearing on the Merseyside area, is currently being analysed as part of the New England and Wales Arrestee and Drug Abuse Monitoring (NEW-ADAM) programme for interviewing and drug testing arrestees. It is hoped to publish the next set of full results, including those for Merseyside, in the first half of next year.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what range of national initiatives Her Majesty's Government have employed to reduce drug-related crime since 1997. [94523]

Mr. Charles Clarke: One of the four Key Aims of the Government's drug strategy is to protect communities from drug-related crime. National initiatives introduced since 1997 include the piloting of the new Drug Treatment and Testing Order, for which around £60 million has been earmarked for national roll-out next year, an additional £60 million for the provision of new treatment services in prison and up to £20 million over the next two years to assist in the development of arrest referral schemes to get drug misusing offenders into treatment.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much expenditure has been committed to reducing drug-related crime on Merseyside, for each year since 1995. [94522]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The total expenditure of the relevant agencies involved in tackling drug-related crime on Merseyside is not held centrally.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what range of initiatives have been taken by Her Majesty's Government since 1997 on Merseyside to reduce drug-related crime. [94516]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The responsibility for local delivery on Merseyside of the Government's drugs strategy, including the key aim of protecting communities from drug-related crime, rests with the four Drug Action Teams in Liverpool, Sefton, St. Helens and Knowsley and Wirral. In addition, Liverpool is one of the three locations in the country where the new drug treatment and testing order is being piloted under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much expenditure has been committed to reducing drug- related crime within the United Kingdom in each year since 1995. [94521]

Mr. Charles Clarke: It is not possible to identify separately the national expenditure on reducing drug-related crime. The total annual expenditure on tackling drug misuse has been estimated at £1.4 billion. An additional £217 million over three years was made available in 1998.

Police Service

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the levels of spending on the police service per head of the population in each county of England in each year since 1995–96. [94206]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is set out in the table:

Fire Service

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the levels of spending on the Fire Service per head of the population in each county of England in each year since 1995–96. [94207]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer to the reply given by my hon. Friend, the then Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth) to my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Marsden) on 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 503.

Passports

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in Lancashire received their passports after the target date set by the Passport Agency in each of the last six months. [94208]

Mrs. Roche: The Passport Agency does not monitor its performance on a county basis.

Applications from Lancashire would normally be dealt with by the Liverpool Passport Office, which faced considerable operational difficulties over the summer. To ensure that customers' needs were met, it moved from working a ten-day turnaround target for straightforward applications—its main customer service target—to prioritising applications by declared travel dates. These dates were met in 99.99 per cent. of cases.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in Lancashire did not receive their passports from the Passport Agency before their declared journey time; and when they will receive (a) compensation and (b) apologies. [94183]

Mrs. Roche: Applications from Lancashire would normally be dealt with by the Liverpool Passport Office and their records show that in the period January 1999 to September 1999 claims were received from 22 residents in Lancashire relating to a missed travel date. The Passport Agency very much regrets the anxiety and inconvenience caused by its missing of these dates. All these cases have received an apology and compensation as appropriate.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to carry out the next customer satisfaction survey for the UK Passport Agency. [94132]

Mrs. Roche: Customer satisfaction surveys are carried out by the Passport Agency bi-monthly for postal applications and every quarter for personal callers. The last postal survey covered the period 30 July to 2 September 1999 and is due to be published shortly. The last survey for personal callers covered the period 27 August to 4 October and is due to be published at the beginning of November. Copies of the analyses of these surveys will be placed in the Library.

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what subjects were discussed at (a) the informal EU Council of Justice and Home Affairs Ministers on 24 and 25 September and (b) the formal Council in Luxemburg on 4 and 5 October; and if he will make a statement. [94339]

Mr. Straw: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the meetings that took place on 16–17 September and 4 October.

The informal meeting of Justice and Home Affairs Ministers in Turku, Finland, on 16–17 September concentrated on preparations for the European Council at Tampere. Ministers exchanged views on the three main themes—asylum and immigration, cross-border crime and developing a European Judicial Area—proposed for discussion at Tampere.

As regards the formal meeting of the Justice and Home Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 4 October, I have written to the Parliamentary Scrutiny Committees, in accordance with the special arrangements which apply during a recess, reporting on the outcome. I am sending the hon. Member a copy of my letter.

Counterfeit Travel Documents

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy towards the Commission's comments (8505/99 ADD.1) on the proposal for a Council decision on the improved exchange of information to control counterfeit travel documents. [94318]

Mrs. Roche: The Government supported the adoption of this Council decision which was subject to agreement by unanimity. Nevertheless, it recognises that this measure can be seen both as a police co-operation measure and as a measure to combat illegal immigration and has noted the Commission's statement in that context. The final arbiter of the correct legal base for this measure would be the European Court of Justice; it is open to any interested party to bring such a matter before the Court for such a ruling.

The Government consider that, irrespective of whether the fifth recital of this Decision is redundant, it cannot as a Third Pillar measure affect the respective competencies of the Community and its member states.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the responsibilities of his Department in respect of (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [94340]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Broadly, my responsibilities remain the same as they were before devolution to Scotland and Wales (devolution to Northern Ireland has not yet taken effect). Specifically, details of the matters for which the devolved administrations in Scotland and Wales are now responsible, and for which the devolved administration in Northern Ireland will be responsible in due course, can be found in the following documents:

Scotland Act 1998, Schedule 5,

Scotland Act 1998: Executive Devolution Order,

Scotland Act 1998: Transfer of Functions Order,

Government of Wales Act 1998, Sections 21 and 22 and Part III,

Government of Wales Act 1998: Assembly Transfer Order, and Northern Ireland Act 1998, Section 4 and Schedules 2 and 3.

EU Readmission Issues

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the claim of the European Commission that the EU should have competence over readmission issues. [94133]

Mrs. Roche: Following the entry into force of the Amsterdam Treaty, matters concerning immigration and asylum co-operation are now contained within Title IV of the Treaty establishing the European Community and are therefore within Community competence. The Government is of the view that readmission issues could fall within the scope of Article 63(3)(b) TEC which provides for measures on immigration policy within the area of removal of illegal residents.

Under the terms of the Protocol on the position of the United Kingdom and Ireland, annexed to the Treaties by the Treaty of Amsterdam, the United Kingdom may decide to participate in the adoption and application of any measures, including readmission measures, brought forward in Title IV, but it is not otherwise bound by Community law in this area. Should any readmission measures be considered to be a development of the Schengen acquis, the provisions of the Protocol integrating the Schengen acquis into the framework of the European Union would also be relevant.

Prison Education

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors are used to determine the allocation of resources for postgraduate education courses to prisoners serving lengthy prison sentences. [94704]

Mr. Boateng: The main priority for the Prison Service is to raise the levels of literacy and numeracy among prisoners, but there are opportunities for eligible prisoners to pursue courses of higher education where resources allow.

A prisoner would be deemed eligible if as a result of assessment a higher degree course was a requirement of the sentence plan. It would be necessary prior to embarking on this course of study for the prisoner to demonstrate that he or she was capable of attaining the qualification. Resources to pay for this could either come from the governor's budget, a charitable organisation or from the prisoner or a relative.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what resources are available for courses of study to further degree level in each prison; what criteria are applied in deciding the allocation of these resources; and if he will make a statement. [94583]

Mr. Boateng: It is for prison governors to decide how much from their annual budget to allocate to education. The main priority of the Prison Service is to raise the levels of literacy and numeracy among prisoners, but there are opportunities for eligible prisoners to pursue higher education studies. Each application is considered on its merits, and there is no predetermined level of funding specifically for degree courses. Before any application can be approved, the governor and education officer need to be satisfied that the prisoner has the aptitude, ability and motivation to complete their chosen course.

The Prison Service has made arrangements for eligible prisoners to undertake degree and other higher education courses with the Open University. These can be funded either by the prisoner, a relative, through a charitable trust or by the prison.

In addition, the Open University has a system of financial support which it has agreed, as from the academic year starting February 2000, it will extend to pay the fees for continuing students in prison and has allocated up to £100,000 for this purpose.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will authorise correspondence and papers between Ministers and their US counterparts to be made available for public access, simultaneous to their availability in the USA under the provisions of that country's freedom of information legislation; and if he will make a statement. [94385]

Mr. Straw: The Code of Practice on Access to Government Information sets out current Government policy on access to information. The Code of Practice promotes a culture of openness. It makes the assumption that information should be released except where disclosure would not be in the public interest. Whilst the Code of Practice identifies categories of information that are exempt from the commitment to provide information, where there is a reference to harm or prejudice, there is the presumption that information should be disclosed unless the harm likely to arise from disclosure would outweigh the public interest in making the information available. The Code of Practice is a non-statutory regime which the Government plan to replace with a Freedom of Information Act. It will, however, continue to operate the Code of Practice until a new Act is brought into force. The Government plan to introduce a Freedom of Information Bill into Parliament as soon as the timetable allows.

The Government's proposals for a Freedom of Information Act are contained within Freedom of Information, Consultation on Draft Legislation. Under the provisions contained in the Bill, public authorities, including all central government departments, will have a duty to comply with requests promptly and in any event within a specified time limit. Where the information sought falls into an exempt area, it will be for the authority to consider, on a case by case basis, whether the information should be disclosed in the public interest. This will ensure that proper consideration is given to all requests by the authority. This is the appropriate way forward. It is for the United Kingdom Government to develop legislation which is appropriate to the needs of this country. It would be wrong to subject United Kingdom authorities to the scope of foreign legislation in the context of their activities in this country. It is for the Parliament of the United Kingdom to decide such matters, not the congress of the United States of America.

The draft Bill was the subject of pre-legislative scrutiny by the Public Administration Select Committee, as well as a Select Committee of the House of Lords and a period of public consultation. The Government will respond to the recommendations of the Select Committees and to the public consultation soon.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the new guidelines relating to the use of plastic bullets by police forces in England and Wales. [94379]

Mr. Straw: I refer to the reply I gave my hon. Friend, the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 246–47.

Prison Service Documents

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of reference for his inquiry into the leak of confidential Prison Service documents established on 12 July; if the inquiry team has power to examine the involvement of the intelligence services; and if he will place in the Library his letter to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe). [93528]

Mr. Boateng: An internal investigation into the loss of confidential information from Belmarsh prison was ordered by the Director of High Security Prisons on 14 July 1999, headed by the governor of Whitemoor prison.

A separate inquiry is being undertaken by the Metropolitan Police which has led to an arrest, but is still continuing. The Prison Service inquiry will not be completed until after any police matters are concluded to avoid jeopardising any legal proceedings.

A copy of the letter I sent to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) on 9 August about this matter has been placed in the Library.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Act

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act 1995 so that same-sex couples are dealt with in the same way as heterosexual couples. [93923]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We mounted a public consultation exercise on the compensation scheme earlier this year. That public debate was informed by the issue of a consultation paper "Compensation for Victims of Violent Crime: Possible Changes to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme". The possibility of extending eligibility for fatal awards to partners of the same sex was one of the options for change mentioned in that paper.

We received over 50 responses to the consultation exercise and a wide variety of proposals for change was put forward, including the suggestion that fatal awards be given to same-sex partners. We are still considering the results of the consultation exercise, and hope to be able to say later in the year how we proposed to take matters forward.

TREASURY

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July quarterly report to the House. [93561]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Details of the Treasury's progress in tackling the bug are set out in our quarterly monitoring returns. These are available in the Libraries of the House and are published on the Internet. They show that work on business critical IT systems, embedded systems and telecoms has been completed. Our Y2K business continuity plan and millennium operating regime were completed in September. The results of the October monthly review of progress of Departments and agencies in tackling the bug are due to be announced shortly by the President of the Council.

The results of the latest independent assessment of the tax collection and financial institutions sectors will be announced at the next National Infrastructure Forum on 21 October.

Refurbishment Costs

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated cost of refurbishing the Treasury. [94467]

Mr. Timms: The plans for the refurbishment of the Treasury accommodation in the building were announced by the former Chief Secretary on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 400–01. The design and build costs of the current project within the Private Finance Initiative package are £113 million. The non-Treasury space will be developed and let by the Private Sector Partner to other public sector bodies.

Smuggling

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his latest assessment of the volume of cigarettes and tobacco products illegally smuggled into the country without duty being paid. [93578]

Dawn Primarolo: Based on work still in progress, Customs' provisional assessment is that losses through all forms of smuggling were around £1.7 billion in 1998, equivalent to approximately 10 per cent. of the cigarette market and 75 per cent. of the hand-rolling tobacco market.

The Government take the challenge posed by smuggling to our health and revenue objectives extremely seriously and our position is clear. We will not permit organised smuggling to undo a policy on tobacco duty, which successive Governments have adopted for good and urgent health reasons.

EU Expenditure

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1999, Official Report, columns 132–34, on EU expenditure, if he will identify the legal basis for those items of Government expenditure listed; and what total sums are involved. [94148]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer the former Economic Secretary gave the hon. Member for Surrey Heath (Mr. Hawkins) on 27 July 1999, Official Report, column 392.

Public Finance Initiative

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the estimated cost to the Treasury of not enforcing in full in all cases financial penalty clauses in PFI contracts in the last year for which figures are available. [94525]

Mr. Andrew Smith: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ministerial Visits (United States)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings he held with members and officials of the United States Government during his visits of December 4 to 6 1997 to New York and 16 July 1998, to Idaho, United States of America; and if he will list the date and location of each meeting, and the names and officials of the United States Government at each meeting. [93953]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my predecessor gave him on 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 687. The main purpose of the Chancellor's visit to the United States in December 1997 was to deliver a speech to the British-American Chamber of Commerce.

Windfall Tax

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount collected by the windfall tax on the public utilities; and how much of this total has been paid out to each of the New Deal initiatives and other projects financed from the tax. [94447]

Mr. Timms: The Windfall Tax raised a revenue of £5.2 billion, all of which has now been collected. The allocation of this money to each initiative is set out in the Financial Statement and Budget Report, March 1999, Table 4.1: The Allocation of the Windfall Tax. These estimates will be updated in the Pre-Budget Report this autumn.

UK-US Inland Revenue Co-operation

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement on the ways in which the Inland Revenue and the United States Inland Revenue Service co-operate to achieve their objectives; [93937]

(2) if he will list all the (a) joint committees and (b) working groups which have been in existence manned by the Inland Revenue and the United States Inland Revenue Service since 1 January 1997, specifying the title, purpose, starting date and duration of each committee or group; [93935]

(3) if he will list the agreements between the Inland Revenue and the United States Inland Revenue Service since 1 January 1997, specifying the title, purpose, starting date and duration of each agreement. [93936]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue and the US Internal Revenue Service co-operate within the terms of the Double Taxation Convention between the UK and the USA, and also exchange views on general issues of mutual interest.

Council of Economic Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what dates Chris Wales, Paul Gregg and Shriti Vadera were appointed members of the Council of Economic Advisers. [93839]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Chris Wales and Paul Gregg took up their appointments on 3 September 1997, and Shriti Vadera on 1 April 1999.

Pakistan (Cargo Seizure)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on HM Customs and Excise's seizure of cargo at Thamesport, in July, imported from the United States destined for Dubai and Lahore, alleged to have been procured for the Pakistani nuclear weapons programme. [94149]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There was no seizure of the nature identified in July 1999. There was, in May 1999, a seizure of aluminium bars intended for shipment to Dubai with a final destination understood to be Pakistan. The bars were of a specification which requires an export licence and were seized because there was no licence. Inquiries into this incident are continuing.

VAT (New Houses)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce VAT at 17.5 per cent. on new houses; and if he will make a statement. [94196]

Dawn Primarolo: The Chancellor has no present plans to impose VAT at 17.5 per cent. on new houses. The Government keep under review the scope for using economic instruments to complement the planning system in achieving their social and environmental objectives.

National Insurance

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of employees whose liability for national insurance contributions will rise by 2001–02 as a result of the reforms to employees' NICs introduced in the (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999 Budgets. [94317]

Dawn Primarolo: There were no measures in the 1997 or 1998 Budgets which increased the NIC liability of employees. In fact, the 1998 Budget included the abolition of the 2 per cent. "entry fee", which would have cost all NIC payers about £1.40 per week in 2001–02 had it remained in place.

In the 1999 Budget, the Chancellor announced a number of changes for NICs. The point at which people start paying NICs and the upper earnings limit will be increased by more than indexation in April 2000 and April 2001, so those 16.6 million employees earning between £69 and around £540 per week will be liable to less NICs and 3.9 million employees earning more than around £540 per week will be liable to more NICs. The rise in the starting point for employees' NICs necessitates a rise in the upper earnings limit, to maintain the historical relationship between the two points and thus protect the base for such contributions.

Health Insurance

Mr. Efford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 632, (1) if the remit of the single ombudsman as proposed in the Financial Services and Markets Bill will extend to matters relating to permanent health insurers and claims of individuals suffering from chronic diseases; [94032]

(2) if individuals covered through a contract of their employer with a permanent health insurer will have the right to complain to the single ombudsman; and if he will make a statement; [94070]

(3) if the single ombudsman will have the power to investigate the methods used by permanent health insurers to assess the medical and mental condition of claimants. [94031]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The carrying on of permanent health insurance business will continue to be an activity requiring authorisation under the Financial Services and Markets Bill, as it is now under the Insurance Companies Act 1982.

The Bill will require any authorised person who carries on those regulated activities specified by the Financial Services Authority to be subject to the compulsory jurisdiction of the new Financial Services Ombudsman Scheme.

The Authority is due to consult on the activities which it proposes should be covered by the compulsory jurisdiction of the Scheme before the end of the year. It is envisaged that it will cover permanent health insurance.

The details of the Scheme's remit, powers and eligibility of complainants will be specified in the rules set by the Authority. Such matters will also be addressed in the Authority's consultation.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of families in Hendon which will benefit from working families tax credit in its first year. [94394]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Estimates for Hendon are not available.

Duty-free Money

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for 1999 the proportion of the money stock as measured by MO which can be attributed to duty-free money as measured by MO; and if he will state the proportion in the years (a) 1989 and (b) 1979. [94126]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Figures for MO are published in table 3.1B of the ONS publication "Financial Statistics". Data on the amount of duty-free spending is not available for the years requested.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of his Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the last five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. [93852]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Treasury has produced a monthly staff magazine called "Chequerboard" since July 1992. To date there have been 80 issues, all of which have contained only unclassified material.

Gold

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent European Central Bank's agreement on gold. [94834]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The agreement reached by European central banks[1] to limit gold sales and lending over the next five years means that the UK will be able to continue its sales programme while the price is underpinned. The agreement is an endorsement of the UK's transparent approach to selling gold. The Bank of England is a signatory on behalf of the Treasury.

The text of the European central banks statement is set out below:

Statement on Gold

In the interest of clarifying their intentions with respect to their gold holdings, the institutions listed below[1] make the following statement:

1. Gold will remain an important element of global monetary reserves.
2. The above institutions will not enter the market as sellers, with exception of already decided sales.
3. The gold sales already decided will be achieved through a concerted programme of sales over the next five years. Annual sales will not exceed approximately 400 tons and total sales over this period will not exceed 2,000 tons.
4. The signatories to this agreement have agreed not to expand their gold leasing and their use of gold future and options over this period.
5. This agreement will be reviewed after five years.

[1] The European Central Bank; the central banks of Germany, France, Italy, Netherlands, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, Ireland, Luxembourg, Austria, Finland, Switzerland and Sweden; and the Bank of England.

Pre-Budget Report

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to publish his Pre-Budget report. [94835]

Mr. Gordon Brown: This year's Pre-Budget Report will be published on Tuesday 9 November.

Diplomats (Tax-free Concessions)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the tax-free concessions which apply to (i) UK diplomats returning to the UK from EU countries, for (a) visits and (b) permanent residence and (ii) families of UK diplomats, indicating how many UK diplomats and members of their families are entitled to benefit from such tax free concessions. [94412]

Mr. Timms: No UK tax concessions are granted specifically to returning UK diplomats.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax-free concessions apply to (i) UK nationals and (ii) their families who are employed by or otherwise attached to, or are members of the (a) European Parliament, (b) European Commission, and (c) NATO when returning to the UK on visits or for permanent residence, indicating how many people in the above categories are entitled to benefit from tax-free concessions. [94413]

Mr. Timms: UK nationals and their families who are employed by or otherwise attached to, or are members of the (a) European Parliament, (b) European Commission, and (c) NATO on return to the UK for visits or transfer of residence are not by virtue of their status granted any special tax-free concessions. The host nation tax authority can, however, extend some concessions to eligible organisations and their personnel. Where the UK is the host nation no tax concessions are granted to UK nationals.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice is given to people with entitlement to tax-free concessions as to the use of the entitlements; and if he will make a statement. [94414]

Mr. Timms: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office advise diplomatic missions, international organisations and their entitled personnel as to their tax-free entitlements. Customs and Excise advise visiting forces as to their tax-free entitlements.

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) the reports published by his Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by his Department, (c) the decisions his Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria he uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93966]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which the President of the Council has given him today.

SCOTLAND

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July Quarterly Report to the House. [93574]

Dr. Reid: Computer systems, embedded systems and telecommunications within the Scotland Office have been tested and declared to be Year 2000 compliant. No slippage has occurred since the July return, and contingency plans are in place. Responsibility for Year 2000 compliance in the wider public sector in Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Executive.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the carbon dioxide emissions reduction needed for a 20 per cent. reduction in the UK's 1990 levels by 2010 he expects to be delivered in Scotland. [93868]

Dr. Reid: Following Kyoto in 1997, the UK has a legally binding target to cut emissions of a basket of six greenhouse gases by 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels over the period 2008–12. The UK Government also have a domestic goal to cut carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010.

The Government, in conjunction with the devolved administrations, are currently developing a draft climate change programme which will set out how we will deliver our Kyoto commitment and move towards our domestic goal. The aim is to publish the draft programme for consultation towards the end of 1999.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of his Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the last five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. [93846]

Dr. Reid: My Department is aware of 11 in-house publications and newsletters, which have been produced during the last five years. The information is set out in the table. Where the date of first issue falls before 1994, that is the date which is given. The majority of titles have not been issued according to a fixed schedule. Circulation of these titles ranges from 'all staff' to staff in a single Scottish Department. None of these titles carry any security classification.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many special advisers have worked for Ministers in his Department since 1 May 1997; and on what date each of these special advisers was appointed to their post. [93881]

Dr. Reid: Between 1 May 1997 and 6 April 1999, four Special Advisers have worked for Ministers in the former Scottish Office. Ms Wendy Alexander and Mr. Murray Elder were appointed on 5 May 1997. Ms Alexander resigned on 31 December 1998 and Mr. Elder resigned on 6 April 1999 prior to the Scottish Parliament Election. Mr. David Whitton was appointed on 5 May 1998 and Ms Elsbeth Johnson on 1 February 1999. Both resigned on 6 April 1999.

My current Special Advisers in the Scotland Office are Mr. Richard Olszewski, appointed on 17 May 1999, Mr. Mike Elrick, appointed on 14 June 1999 and Professor Mike Donnelly, appointed on 24 June 1999. Professor Donnelly will work in an unpaid capacity.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list (a) the reports published by his Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by his Department, (c) the decisions his Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria he uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93978]

Mr. Byers: I refer to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Council today, Official Report, columns 429–30.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July quarterly report to the House. [93572]

Mr. Byers: Details of progress in tackling the bug are set out in our quarterly monitoring returns, the most recent being for September, which are available in the Libraries of the House and are published on the internet.

Contingency plans are in place within the Department and its agencies. The results of the October monthly review of progress of Departments and agencies in tackling the bug are due to be announced shortly by the President of the Council.

Metric and Imperial Units

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the inspection, compliance and enforcement costs of converting to dual metric and imperial units for goods sold loose from bulk. [94433]

Dr. Howells: The cost of converting an existing weighing machine to operate in metric and imperial units would be between £60 and £145. The cost of buying a new machine in metric and imperial units would start at £450, depending on the model ordered.

The cost of indicating prices in metric and imperial units would be relatively low where price tickets are printed by computer, but would be more expensive where price tickets are prepared manually. There may be a relatively small increase in the cost of inspection and enforcement because of the need to check the accuracy of weighing machines and price indications in both metric and imperial units.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of ending the exclusive use of imperial units for loose goods after 31 December on the retail trade, with regard to (a) the number of traders affected, (b) the average cost of conversion to metric plus imperial systems and (c) the total cost to the retail sector. [94432]

Dr. Howells: The compliance cost assessment published by the Department of Trade and Industry when the metrication legislation was laid before Parliament in 1994 estimated that about 62,000 traders would be affected. The overall business costs were estimated to be about £33 million, of which about £30 million was identified as the conversion or replacement of an estimated 200,000 weighing machines. The assessment did not apportion the costs between the metric changes in 1995 and the change to loose goods by the end of 1999. The UK Weighing Federation estimated that, at the beginning of 1999, only 95,000 weighing machines were still to be converted or replaced. According to the Federation, about 76,000 machines could be converted and the remaining 19,000 would have to be replaced.

Small Business Service

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to transfer responsibilities from the Regulatory Impact Unit to the Small Business Service. [94669]

Ms Hewitt: There are three areas where responsibilities will be either transferred or shared between the Regulatory Impact Unit and the Small Business Service.

Regulatory information: The work on providing advice and information on regulations to small businesses was transferred to the Department of Trade and Industry earlier this year in anticipation of the establishment of the Small Business Service. This includes responsibility for the Direct Action Government internet service and the proposals for an Electronic Regulation Service.

Minimising regulatory burdens: The Small Business Service will be key to helping small businesses to meet the demands of regulation and ensuring that the impact of proposed regulations on small business is properly understood and taken into account at all levels of Government. The Small Business Service will work closely with the Regulatory Impact Unit to achieve this aim and working arrangements are being formulated at present.

Local Business Partnerships provide a forum for dialogue between local business and the local enforcement community. Responsibility for promoting partnerships will be transferred from the Regulatory Impact Unit to the Small Business Service shortly.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the aims and objectives of the Small Business Service Unit. [94500]

Ms Hewitt: A consultation paper on the Small Business Service was issued in June. It proposed that the Small Business Service should have three main aims: to act as a strong voice for small businesses at the heart of Government; to simplify and improve the quality and coherence of Government support for small businesses; and to help small firms with regulation and ensure small firms' interests are properly considered in future regulation.

The consultation process closed on 30 September and the submissions are now being analysed.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Chief Executive of the Small Business Service has been appointed. [94499]

Ms Hewitt: The post of Chief Executive of the Small Business Service was publicly advertised and the appointment will conform to public sector standards of recruitment. The date for applications has now closed and the selection process is taking place.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made establishing a Small Business Service; and what financial support the Small Business Service has (a) received and (b) been allocated. [94498]

Ms Hewitt: The consultation exercise on the role and objectives of the Small Business Service closed on 30 September. Over 700 written responses have been received and are currently being analysed.

The recruitment of the Chief Executive is under way and I hope to announce the name of the successful candidate in November.

As the Small Business Service will not begin operating formally until 1 April 2000, it is not currently in receipt of financial support. Its allocation for 2000–01 is not yet determined.

Forest Products

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has consulted the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport, and the Regions, concerning the impact on rates of deforestation of the proposed elimination of tariffs on wood products. [94462]

Mr. Caborn: The Government are very much seized of the importance of ensuring that trade liberalisation is consistent with sustainable development. My Department has been, and remains, in close consultation with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and other interested Departments on the range of environmental issues raised by the prospective new round of trade negotiations. With UK support, the European Commission is currently undertaking a sustainability impact assessment which will cover particular trade sectors, including forest products, likely to be included in the new round. This impact assessment will be used by the European Union to inform its negotiating position in the future trade negotiations.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will oppose the proposal to establish a World Trade Organisation agreement on forest products. [93835]

Mr. Caborn: We do not rule out the possibility of an agreement on tariff reduction on forest products as part of a comprehensive round of trade negotiations.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact on rates of deforestation of the proposed elimination of tariffs on wood products. [94461]

Mr. Caborn: With UK support, the European Commission is currently undertaking a sustainability impact assessment which will cover particular trade sectors, including forest products, likely to be included in the prospective new round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations. This impact assessment, along with the views of others, such as those received by my Department in our recent consultation on tariff priorities for the new round, will be considered in forming a UK Government position on the issue.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the mechanisms within Government to ensure that the Government's policies on forest conservation are taken into account when its stance in World Trade Organisation negotiations is being considered. [93833]

Mr. Caborn: In formulating the Government's approach to the negotiations, the Department has consulted widely. I am confident that the range of mechanisms for such consultations will ensure that all other areas of Government policy are fully considered in developing our position for the negotiations.

Employment Agencies

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assessment he has made of the change in costs of employing self-employed carers as a result of regulating secretarial and employment agencies; and if he will make a statement; [94373]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact on self-employed carers of his policy of regulating secretarial and other employment agencies; and if he will make a statement. [94372]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Carers supplied by employment bureaux, whether self-employed or not, are protected by existing regulations on employment agency standards. We have been consulting on replacement regulations, including a proposal that workers (including carers) supplied by a bureau on a staff hire basis should have a contract with that bureau instead of the hirer with whom they are placed. Care workers who are self-employed could remain so. The consultation document published on 31 May contains a regulatory impact assessment of possible cost consequences to those hiring staff through employment bureaux. We are also considering representations on costs.

Better Regulation Task Force

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which organisations have been or will be consulted in drawing up the terms of reference for research to assess the degree of consistency between tribunals in various parts of the UK as reported in the Government response to the review of anti-discrimination legislation conducted by the Better Regulation Task Force; and what steps he is taking to ensure that the project has expert advice on potential solutions in the field of information technology. [93529]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I propose to consult widely on the planned research project into the operation of tribunals which, as indicated in the Government's response to the Better Regulation Task Force Report, is likely to provide information on the consistency of employment tribunal decision-making. The exact terms of reference of the project are not yet determined. Given their interest, anti-discrimination bodies, the Equal Opportunities Commission and others will all be included in that consultation. Expert advice on the use of information and communication technologies in this project will be commissioned as necessary.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the statutory instruments introduced into Parliament by his Department in (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999. [93838]

Mr. Byers: My Department has introduced 280 Statutory Instruments into Parliament since 1 May 1997. A list detailing these has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Correspondence

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will reply to the letter of 26 May from the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton regarding Mr. M. P. Dickson, a constituent. [93737]

Mr. Byers: The Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney), replied to the letter on 26 July 1999. A copy will be made available in the Library of the House.

Ministerial Duties

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the dates in July when the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney), was not performing ministerial duties. [94147]

Mr. Byers: There were no such dates.

Electronic Communications

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Government proposes to introduce legislation to safeguard the privacy and security of e-mails; and if he will make a statement. [94577]

Ms Hewitt: In July the Government published the draft Electronic Communications Bill, which facilitates privacy and security of electronic communications, including e-mail, within the existing framework of legislation. It will be introduced into Parliament in the next session.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he proposes to publish the E-Commerce Bill. [94576]

Ms Hewitt: The Electronic Communications Bill was published in draft on 23 July and announced by my hon. Friend the Member for North Swindon (Mr. Wills) on 23 July 1999, Official Report, columns 681–83, as part of a consultation. I am pleased to say that we have received over 80 responses to the consultation.

The Government will introduce the Bill to Parliament in the next session.

Ilisu Dam

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on UK support for the Ilisu Dam project in Turkey. [94386]

Mr. Caborn: No decision has been made on the provision of ECGD support for this project. The case for such support is being considered in consultation with the contractors and governments from a number of countries.

Airlines

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he proposes to take to ensure fair competition between low cost airlines; and if he will make a statement. [94572]

Dr. Howells: Responsibility for ensuring that competition laws are not broken lies with the competition authorities, the Office of Fair Trading within the UK or the European Commission for activities which affect trade between member states. I look to these bodies to ensure fair competition, and for those with concerns to put them to the competition authorities for investigation.

Post Office

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what contribution was made to the Consolidated Fund by the Post Office in each of the last 10 years at (a) actual and (b) 1999 retail index prices; and if he will initiate a study of how future payments could be used to fund future investment in the postal services. [94637]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Post Office does not make payments to the Consolidated Fund, as it does not pay a dividend. However, its contribution to the Exchequer can be measured by its negative External Financing Requirement, through which it is obliged to invest in gilt-edged stock or National Loan Fund deposits. In each of the last 10 years its contributions in both actual and in 1998–99 RPI values were as follows:

£ million

	Actual	1998–99 RPI
1989–90	102	142
1990–91	0	0
1991–92	74	90
1992–93	80	94
1993–94	182	211
1994–95	235	265
1995–96	245	267
1996–97	285	304
1997–98	338	349
1998–99	321	321

In the White Paper "Post Office Reform: A World Class Service for the 21st Century", the Government confirmed that under the new financial regime for the Post Office an equivalent of a commercial dividend would be set at 50 per cent. of expected post-tax profits in the current financial year and at 40 per cent. in subsequent years. This will more than halve the rate at which profits are removed from the business and increase the funds available to the Post Office to fund future investment. Once the Post Office has been established as a plc, it will pay an annual dividend to the Exchequer rather than build up its deposits.

Timeshare

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement on the regulation of the timeshare industry in the United Kingdom; [94435]

(2) what statutory provisions govern the regulation of timeshare operations in the United Kingdom. [94434]

Dr. Howells: Regulation of timeshare operations in the United Kingdom are governed by the Timeshare Act 1992, as amended by the Timeshare Regulations 1997.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Timeshare Act 1992 and Timeshare Regulations 1997 in relation to the regulation of the timeshare industry. [94436]

Dr. Howells: I believe that the Timeshare Act has been effective and that timeshare in the UK is generally well run. Since the Act came into force in 1992, the level of complaints about timeshare made to the Office of Fair Trading has fallen significantly from over 11,500 in 1991–92 to less than half that number today—but there is no room for complacency with over 5,000 complaints every year. I intend to use the forthcoming consultation exercise to assess whether aspects of the legislation need updating.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to strengthen the regulations, under the Timeshare Act 1992 and Timeshare Regulations 1997, in respect of claims made by individuals against timeshare operators. [94437]

Dr. Howells: As set out in the Consumer White Paper "Modern Markets: Confident Consumers", the Government plans to review timeshare legislation to see whether aspects of it need updating. My Department will consult interested parties on our proposals before the end of this year.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the ways in which the Export Credits Guarantee Department and the Export-Import Bank of the United States co-operate to achieve their objectives; what joint working groups and committees between the Export Credits Guarantee Department and the Export-Import Bank of the United States have operated since 1 January 1997; what agreements between the Export Credits Guarantee Department and the Export-Import Bank of the United States have been in existence since 1 January 1997; how many personnel from the Export-Import Bank of the United States have visited the Export Credits Guarantee Department since 1 June 1998; and how many personnel from the Export Credits Guarantee Department have visited the Export-Import Bank of the United States since 1 June 1998. [93938]

Mr. Caborn: 1. Co-operation between US Eximbank and ECGD to achieve our objectives: ECGD and the Export Import Bank of the United States (US Exim) co-operate in a number of ways to achieve their respective objectives. This includes discussions in multilateral fora such as the International Union of Credit and Investment Insurers (the Berne Union) and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), with the aim of maintaining discipline in the field of Export credits and phasing out trade distorting subsidies. They also hold ad hoc informal discussions.

2. Joint Working Groups, Committees and Agreements that have operated since 1 January 1997: ECGD and US Exim participate in the following Committees and Working Groups:

In the context of the OECD:

The Participants to the Arrangement on Guidelines for Officially Supported Export Credits

The Group on the Sector Understanding on Export Credits for Nuclear Power Plant

The Group on the Sector Understanding for Civil Aircraft,

The consultation Group on Tied Aid

The Working Group of Experts on Premium and Related Conditions and the Sub Group of country Risk Experts

The Working Party on Export Credits and Credit Guarantees

The International Union of Credit and Investment Insurers.

In the context of the OECD:

The Arrangement on Guidelines for Officially Supported Export Credits

The Statement of Intent on Officially Supported Export Credits and the environment

Agreement on environmental Information Exchange for Large Projects

The Berne Union Sector Understandings (on credit terms).

ECGD has a number of Bilateral Co-operation Agreements between various other Export Credit Agencies which at present does not include US Eximbank.

ECGD has entered into discussion with them but the discussions are at an early stage and US Eximbank is yet to respond to our draft agreement and documentation. If US Eximbank wish to pursue this agreement then we would expect to conclude the negotiations next year.

3. Visits by staff to US Eximbank and ECGD since 1 June 1998: Our relationship with US Eximbank cuts across many areas and their meetings take place at all levels with regard to 2 above. Our respective Chief Executives meet and talk to each other on a regular basis.

Visits to our respective office have occurred on the following matters:

Aircraft financing matters (2 visits)

Project finance matters (1 visit)

Co-operation Agreement discussions (2 visits).

Departmental Publications

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of his Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the last five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. [93848]

Dr. Howells: A list of those in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for staff and that have been notified to my Department's Publications Unit and published by my Department during this period has been placed in the Library of the House.

Federal Key Management Infrastructure

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when officials from his Department attended meetings of the United States Department of Commerce's Technical Advisory Committee to Develop Federal Information Processing Standards for the Federal Key Management Infrastructure. [93841]

Ms Hewitt: Officials from the Department of Trade and Industry have not attended any meetings of the US's Technology Advisory Committee on developing a Federal Information Processing Standard for a Federal Key Management Infrastructure.

Ministerial Visits (United States)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times since 1 January 1998 officials from his Department have visited the United States to gather information to help set up his Department's Small Business Service; on what dates his officials visited the US on each occasion; and which US organisations his officials visited on each occasion. [93957]

Ms Hewitt: Officials from my Department with a responsibility for small firms issues visited the United States in October 1998 and February 1999. Both visits had a broad agenda, but included meetings with the Small Business Administration and a number of other organisations which are engaged with the SBA in delivering business support for small firms. In addition, officials have met with colleagues from the SBA in the United Kingdom in November 1998 and July 1999.

Encryption

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times (a) Ministers and (b) officials in his Department have held meetings with the United States Special Envoy for Cryptography, Ambassador David Aaron, since 1 January 1998, on (i) encryption and (ii) other issues; what were the dates and locations of each meeting; and if any other (a) British and (b) United States Government Departments took part in each meeting. [93865]

Ms Hewitt: Ministers have not met with Ambassador Aaron.

Officials from the Department of Trade and Industry, the Cabinet Office and the Government's technical advisers on information security, the Communications Electronic Security Group met Ambassador Aaron on 4 June 1998 in London, on 3 September 1998 in Ottawa and 3 December 1998 in Vienna. On the United States side, the meetings involved officials from the Department of State, Commerce, Justice and Defense, and from the National Security Council. Each of these meetings related to discussions about national and international policies on encryption and possible changes to export controls on cryptographic goods under the Wassenaar Agreement for Export Controls on Conventional Arms and Dual-Use Goods. Each of these meetings were multinational meetings involving a number of other countries.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July Quarterly report to the House. [93576]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the quarterly statements made in the House by the President of the Council. These statements cover the whole of the United Kingdom. The President of the Council is due to make a further statement shortly to update the House on progress towards compliance. Information on the compliance situation in each Department is laid before the House each quarter and is published on the internet.

It may be useful to point out that we have six Departments in Northern Ireland which are responsible, through Agencies, for the delivery of all key sectors of the infrastructure, with the exception of electricity generation and distribution. Hence most of the key services in Northern Ireland are included in the quarterly monitoring process and the statements by the President of the Council. They are also subject to the independent assessment process along with the Electricity Services and the results are reported at the Northern Ireland Infrastructure Forum and the National Infrastructure Forum.

At the Northern Ireland Infrastructure Forum on 11 October the following services reported a Blue rating under the Action 2000 colour coding:

Water and Sewage

Housing

Roads

Health and Ambulance Service

Payment of Welfare

Fire Service

Police Service

Electricity and Gas

NICS Telecommunications

Education

Prisons.

The position on the remaining services are:

Rail and Buses—90% Blue with 100% Blue expected by mid October

Housing—52% Blue with 100% Blue expected by November

Local Government—77% Blue with 100% Blue expected by October.

I should point out that Local Government in Northern Ireland has a much smaller remit than in Great Britain, the key business areas being refuse collection and disposal, street cleansing, environmental health and registration of births, deaths and marriages.

Four of the core Northern Ireland Departments are all now reporting that they are fully compliant. The Department of Economic Development and the Department of Health and Social Services state that they will be compliant by end of October. Only one Department has shown slippage since the July statement to the House, i.e. the Northern Ireland Office.

The compliance of critical and non-critical communication and embedded systems in the Northern Ireland Office were completed in August 1999. A robust programme to combat slippage in the critical and non-critical IT systems is under way to ensure timely compliance.

The Business Continuity Plans and Millennium operating Regimes are being tested and independently assessed in accordance with Action 2000 guidance and an overall 100% Blue rating is expected by the end of October.

The results of the latest independent assessment of the Northern Ireland Criminal Justice Sector will be announced at the next National Infrastructure Forum on 21 October.

Police Authority

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total work force of the Northern Ireland Police Authority, including staff seconded from the civil service; and if he will list the principal occupation sub-divisions and their composition in respect of (a) gender and (b) perceived religious/community origin. [94657]

Mr. Ingram: The total work force of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland, including staff seconded from the Civil Service, numbers 46 persons.

(a) The gender of the 46 members of staff broken down into the following branches is:

Branch	Female	Male	Total
Community Affairs	6	4	10
Policy and Research	0	2	2
Press Office	5	0	5
Police Administration	2	3	5
Internal Audit	4	6	10
Senior Management	0	2	2
Secretariat and Administration	8	4	12
Totals	25	21	46

(b) In order to preserve individual confidentiality, Central Personnel Group have provided an overall breakdown of the staff's religious/community origin as follows:

Protestant: 30

Roman Catholic: 8

Non Determined: 8.

Union Flag

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what days of each year it is (a) required and (b) permitted for the Union flag to be flown from (i) Government buildings, (ii) headquarters of public bodies, (iii) RUC stations and (iv) schools. [94662]

Mr. Ingram: The Union Flag is required to be flown on Government buildings in Northern Ireland on 20 days during the year. The days on which the Flag is flown are as follows:

New Years Day: 1 January

Her Majesty's Accession: 6 February

Birthday of The Duke of York: 19 February

Commonwealth Day: 8 March (in 1999)

Birthday of The Prince Edward: 10 March

St. Patrick's Day: 17 March

Easter Day: 4 April (in 1999)

Birthday of Her Majesty The Queen: 21 April

Europe Day: 9 May

Coronation Day: 2 June

Birthday of The Duke of Edinburgh: 10 June

The Queen's Official Birthday: 12 June (in 1999)

Battle of the Boyne Anniversary: 12 July

Birthday of The Princess Margaret: 21 August

Remembrance Day: 14 November (in 1999)

Birthday of The Prince of Wales: 14 November

Anniversary of Her Majesty's Wedding: 20 November

Christmas Day: 25 December.

There is no requirement for headquarters of public bodies, RUC stations or schools to fly the Union Flag on these days. It is entirely at the discretion of each public body, the Chief Constable and individual school authorities respectively to decide if and when the Flag should be flown on their buildings.

Social Workers (Attacks)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the trend in attacks upon those employed in social work; and if he will make a statement. [94541]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on the trend in attacks upon those employed in social work is not collected centrally.

HPSS organisations have policies to assist staff to deal with violence. The HSSE recently issued guidance for managers and staff. Further guidance on health and safety is to be issued shortly and organisations will be asked to review their policies. Violence is specifically mentioned and employers are to be advised to undertake risk assessments, to draw up action plans to identify, analyse and rectify problems, to train staff and to support and counsel those subjected to violence.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of his Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the last five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. HEALTH

Casualty Modernisation Schemes

16. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many casualty department modernisation schemes are planned this year to improve facilities for children. [92601]

Ms Stuart: Of the 242 schemes currently under way to modernise and expand accident and emergency departments, 55 include schemes of specific benefit to children. They range from creation of separate children's observation and assessment wards to separate waiting and play areas within the department. They amount to £28,360,000. In most cases, the children's schemes are an integral part of much wider A&E redevelopment schemes and it is not possible to identify the specific costing for the children's element of the schemes. The other 187 schemes, which are more general, will also be of benefit to children and their parents. Their safety, and that of the staff caring for them, will be better safeguarded. In other schemes, children will benefit from new diagnostic and resuscitation equipment.

Health Authority Priorities

17. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions are being given to health authorities on the relative priority to be given to (a) reducing financial deficits and (b) maintaining standards of health care among health providers in their districts. [92602]

Mr. Denham: The National Priorities Guidance for Health and Social Services 1999–2000 to 2001–02 highlights the need for the National Health Service to ensure financial stability is maintained and, where necessary, improve working balances and achieve clear targets on improving service standards for patients.

Non-emergency In-patient Cases

18. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many non-emergency in-patient cases were treated by the NHS during the year to the end of March (a) 1999 and (b) 1998. [92604]

Mr. Hutton: The number of non-emergency cases (ordinary in-patients and daycases) treated during 1997–98 was 4.9 million. The figure for 1998–99 was 5.4 million, an increase of 9.2 per cent. on the previous year.

Cardiac Care

19. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on waiting times for (a) non-urgent and (b) urgent cardiac (i) operations and (ii) procedures. [92605]

Mr. Denham: Since April we have received a number of letters from Members of Parliament and members of the public, and Parliamentary Questions, regarding waiting times for cardiac surgical procedures.

Beta Interferon

20. Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to issue new guidance concerning the prescribing of beta interferon for (a) relapsing remitting and (b) secondary progressive MS. [92606]

Mr. Denham: We consulted earlier in the summer on a proposal to refer beta interferon to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence, for an authoritative appraisal of the available evidence, and an announcement will be made in the near future. We intend to issue a Health Service Circular giving management advice on beta interferon for the period until NICE guidance is available.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities by region which (a) have and (b) have not agreed to clear their existing waiting list for MS patients waiting for beta interferon. [94195]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available.

We consulted earlier in the summer on a proposal to refer beta interferon to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE), for an authoritative appraisal of the available evidence, and an announcement will be made in the near future. We intend to issue a Health Service Circular giving management on beta interferon for the period until NICE guidance is available.

Optometrists

21. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy on the role and training of optometrists. [92607]

Mr. Denham: We value very highly the contribution that optometrists make to the eye care of the population. We intend that, with appropriate training, they should develop their role beyond sight testing to work with general practitioners and ophthalmologists in treating patients with eye diseases.

Capital Investment

23. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the planned level of capital investment in the NHS over the next three years. [92610]

Mr. Denham: Capital investment in the National Health Service over the next three years is planned at more than £8 billion, which will be targeted towards modernising the infrastructure of the NHS through spending on new hospitals, plant and equipment. This level of investment will be met from public capital and through the Private Finance Initiative.

Primary Care

24. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to date of establishing (a) primary care groups and (b) primary care trusts. [92611]

Mr. Denham: The establishment of Primary Care Groups has been funded using moneys released by the abolition of fundholding. The first Primary Care Trust will be established early next year. The cost of establishing Primary Care Trusts, like those of PCGs, will largely be met using moneys released by the abolition of fundholding. The previous Government had set aside an annual budget of £180 million to run fundholding. We have used those moneys both to set up Primary Care Groups and to improve services to patients.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners have yet to agree to participate in a primary care group. [93906]

Mr. Denham: All general practitioners are part of, and covered by, a Primary Care Group. However, it is for individual general practitioners to choose how they wish to participate in the operation of their Primary Care Group.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government will publish its response to the Health Committee's Second report of Session 1998–99 on Primary Care Groups (HC 153). [94788]

Mr. Denham: The Government's response to the Health Committee's Report on Primary Care Groups is published today and copies will be placed in the Library. The Government welcome the Committee's report and are pleased that the Committee supports the Government's policy that underlies this initiative.

Draft Tobacco (Prohibition of Advertising and Promotion) Regulations

25. Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what period of consultation he proposes on the draft Tobacco (Prohibition of Advertising and Promotion) Regulations. [92612]

Yvette Cooper: The eight weeks of public consultation on the draft Tobacco (Prohibition of Advertising and Promotion) Regulations 1999 and draft Regulatory Impact Assessment Document published on 17 June ended on 13 August.

Waiting Times

26. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been waiting in excess of one year for treatment. [92613]

Mr. Denham: At the end of August 48,900 patients (4.54 per cent. of the total list) had been waiting over a year for hospital admission. This is 23,000 lower than at the end of June 1998. In tackling waiting lists, we are reducing waiting times.

Prostate Cancer

27. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has held with local health authorities regarding the prevention and treatment of prostate cancer in men in their areas; and if he will make a statement. [92614]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are committed to improving the prevention, detection and treatment of all cancers including prostate cancer. We have identified this as a priority for the National Health Service. There is, as yet, no consensus of medical opinion about the correct management of early localised tumours. The Health Technology Assessment Programme has already funded two systematic reviews of the diagnosis and management of prostate cancer and the National Co-ordinating Centre for the HTA programme is commissioning a £200,000 study at the University of Bristol looking at the feasibility of conducting a multi-centre randomised trial of treatment for localised prostate cancer.

Mortality Ratio (Barnsley)

28. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the level of the standard mortality ratio in the Barnsley area. [92615]

Yvette Cooper: High level performance indicators show that the standard mortality rate for Barnsley in the age range 65–74 years is 103, compared with the national figure for England of 90. The comparatively poor health status of Barnsley, particularly with regard to coronary heart disease, stroke and some cancers, evident from measures such as the high level performance indicators and standard mortality rates, has been recognised. Barnsley (together with Rotherham and Doncaster) was designated last year in the first wave of health action zones which are at the vanguard of our new approach to tackling health inequalities, through partnership working and with targeted investment to achieve modernisation, reform and results.

"Smoking Kills"

29. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the proposals in the White Paper, "Smoking Kills". [92616]

Yvette Cooper: Progress in implementation of "Smoking Kills" includes the allocation of up to £60 million over three years to health authorities to develop specialist services, the establishment this year of National Health Service smoking cessation services in health action zones, draft Regulations to ban tobacco advertising, the launch of the Public Places Charter, £47.5 million over three years to prepare the health education programme and consultation on an Approved Code of Practice on smoking in the workplace.

TB

30. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to tackle the growing incidence of TB. [92617]

Yvette Cooper: The United Kingdom has a good record of tuberculosis (TB) control and we are determined this should remain the case. The Government are responding positively to adverse developments in other countries. These developments inevitably impinge on the incidence of TB in this country and we have recently seen small annual increases in the incidence of TB. However, notifications of TB in the UK have reached the relatively low levels of about 6,500 cases a year from nearly 50,000 in 1950.

In addition to the existing provisions we have for the surveillance, prevention and control of TB, including drug resistant TB, within the UK, recent developments include:

the commencement of work on ongoing enhanced surveillance of TB to improve monitoring; the appointment of regional epidemiologists to help towards a more coordinated approach to surveillance;

the strengthening of surveillance of drug and multidrug-resistant TB through a scheme co-ordinated by the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS);

the development—by the PHLS—and availability of more rapid diagnostic and drug susceptibility tests for TB, which can be used where there is a presence of risk factors which might predispose towards multidrug-resistant TB; the co-ordination of the PHLS's activities through the new Tuberculosis Programme.

Oral Cancers

31. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies he has commissioned or evaluated on the relationship between the chewing of tobacco products and the development of oral cancers. [92618]

Yvette Cooper: In its report published on 11 March 1999, the Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health noted that chewed tobaccos are sources of potent carcinogens in the mouth.

Social Services (Children)

32. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many action plans have been approved by his Department to help local authorities improve their performance in providing high quality social services for children in need. [92620]

Mr. Hutton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Angela Smith) on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 114.

IVF Treatment

33. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring is carried out to ensure that IVF treatment is available in every health authority area. [92621]

Yvette Cooper: We have pledged to tackle unacceptable levels of geographical variations in access to NHS infertility treatment and have set in motion a programme of work to achieve that aim. A Departmental survey of current health authority infertility service provision has recently taken place and the results are being analysed. The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists have published two sets of evidence based on clinical guidelines on infertility and intend to publish the third and final set on specialised services like IVF in January 2000. The RCOG guidelines have been commissioned by the Department.

The survey will enable the cost implications of any policy changes to be estimated and the RCOG guidelines will indicate the circumstances in which infertility treatment can be most clinically effective. We then hope to move towards fairer access to NHS infertility services where those most able to benefit from such treatment will be able to receive it.

Osteoporosis

34. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investment his Department is making in services to combat osteoporosis. [92622]

Yvette Cooper: The Department has invested in measures to highlight the importance in preventing the development of osteoporosis and resulting fractures and the need for health authorities to develop their own local strategies. An osteoporosis strategy for England was launched in June 1998 by my right hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich and West Norwood (Ms Jowell) at the sixth Bath Conference on Osteoporosis and Bone Mineral Measurement. The strategy consisted of a quick reference primary care guide, a laminated desk top guide and a local health action sheet.

The Department does not specify what proportion of health authorities' funding allocations is to be spent on services to combat osteoporosis. It is for health authorities, in partnership with National Health Service trusts, primary care groups, local authorities and local stakeholders to determine how best to use their funds to meet national and local priorities for improving health and modernising services. The additional resources of at least 5.45 per cent. cash increase to all health authorities for 1999–2000 will help them in this.

Consultant Referrals

35. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been referred to a consultant by their GP but are still awaiting their first appointment with the consultant. [92623]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Care Homes

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to accept the proposed national standards for the inspection of care homes drawn up by the Centre for Policy on Ageing earlier this year. [92608]

Mr. Hutton: Last year we commissioned the Centre for Policy on Ageing to work on identifying national required standards for older people in care homes. The proposed standards were published for consultation on 8 September. We will carefully consider all the comments we receive before finalising any regulatory standards and arrangements for implementing them.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July Quarterly report to the House. [93568]

Ms Stuart: Details of progress by the Department, its executive agencies and the National Health Service in tackling the millennium bug are set out in the appropriate monitoring returns. Those for the Department are available in the Library and are published on the Internet. The returns for individual NHS organisations are published on the Internet at: http://www.imc.exec.nhs.uk/2000

The results of the latest review of progress by Departments will be announced shortly in Parliament by the President of the Council. The latest results for the NHS are due to be announced at the Action 2000 National Infrastructure Forum on 20/21 October.

The Department and its Executive Agencies have completed all essential Year 2000 work by the published deadlines. Contingency plans for the Department have been prepared.

All NHS organisations have completed their compliance programmes or have contingency arrangements in place.

Cancer Services (North-West)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish his review of cancer services in the North-West of England. [94044]

Yvette Cooper: The report was published on 20 September. I have arranged for the hon. Member to receive a copy.

Anti-psychotic Drugs

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds will be available to provide a typical anti-psychotic drugs to those patients for whom they prove more effective and more acceptable. [94299]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service Modernisation Fund consists of £700 million over 3 years. As part of the first year targeted allocation of the fund (1999–2000), £2.5 million had been allocated for a typical anti-psychotics. Discussions are still under-way concerning allocation of the NHS Modernisation Fund for years 2 and 3.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if NICE intends to carry out an appraisal of the effectiveness of newer atypical anti-psychotics compared with older generation anti-psychotics. [94295]

Mr. Hutton: We are considering asking the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to look at all treatments for schizophrenia and similar conditions. In general, NICE clinical guidelines will give advice on the appropriate use of all therapies, including drug therapies.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when assessing the effectiveness of drugs such as anti-psychotics which are known to have major side effects, what account NICE will take of the preferences and experiences of the individuals taking the drugs. [94296]

Mr. Hutton: In appraising pharmaceuticals and other treatments, the National Institute for Clinical Excellence will need to assess carefully the evidence on both the intended therapeutic effects and any adverse effects of treatment. Representative patient organisations will be invited to submit evidence on these and other aspects and will have the opportunity to comment on guidance in draft.

Mid-Essex Hospital Trust

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish figures for the last three months for which figures are available in the Mid-Essex Hospital Trust area for (a) the number of people waiting for 12 months or more for hospital treatment and (b) the total number of people waiting for hospital treatment. [94564]

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on measures being taken by the Mid-Essex Hospital Trust to be millennium compliant by 31 December. [94565]

Ms Stuart: Mid-Essex Hospital Services National Health Service Trust successfully met the 30 September deadline to "ensure that all systems were Year 2000 compliant or that effective contingency plans were in place if full compliance could not be achieved". The NHS Trust was therefore designated as Action 2000 "Blue" as of 30 September, indicating that assessment had not identified any risk of material disruption.

The NHS Executive Eastern Regional Office and the NHS Trust continue to work closely, and the Regional lead on Winter 2000 attends Project and Trust Board meetings.

In the next three months, the NHS Trust will continue to monitor its systems to ensure that they remain millennium compliant and to train staff in contingency arrangements.

Sheltered Accommodation

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the levels of spending on sheltered accommodation per head of the population in each county of England in each year since 1995–96. [94315]

Mr. Hutton: Details of the levels of total spending on sheltered accommodation are not collected centrally. A table showing information on reported personal social services current expenditure on sheltered accommodation by each local authority in England for 1995–96 to 1997–98 has been placed in the Library. Data for 1998–99 are not yet available.

Health Spending

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the levels of spending on health per head of the population in each county of England in each year since 1995–96. [94312]

Mr. Denham: Levels of spending on health per head of the population are given in the table.

Expenditure levels per head of population on health are not available by county, but figures based on health authorities have been provided as the nearest figures available. In some cases the health authority area may approximate to a county boundary, but this is not the position for all health authorities.

Expenditure in 1995–96 is not included because information is not available on a comparable basis.

2. For 1997–98 and 1998–99 the majority of drugs expenditure has been accounted for by the Prescription Pricing Authority rather than individual health authorities. Also the majority of General Dental Service expenditure is not available by health authority. A total national position is shown including these two elements.

NHS Land Sales

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) of 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 410, how much money the National Health Service Executive expects to raise from the sale of the National Health Service sites listed for which planning permission for housing has been granted. [94290]

Mr. Denham: Most of the sites listed are in various stages of the planning process, and planning permission has not yet been issued. Of those where planning permission has been granted, the anticipated income is in the region of £15.5 million. If planning permission is granted for others listed, the anticipated income is approximately £180 million.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money the NHS Executive has raised in each year since 1995 for the sale of its land for private development. [94192]

Mr. Denham: The money the National Health Service Executive has raised from the sale of land from private developments cannot be separately identified. The figures show the total capital receipts.

Ms Stuart: Information is not collected centrally on National Health Service expenditure on commissioning health care from private hospitals. Figures on total NHS expenditure on commissioning hospital and community health services outside the NHS each year from 1995–96 are set out in the table for the area covered by each NHS Executive Regional Office. Note:

In addition 'Laing's Healthcare Market Review 1998–99' estimates that the value of NHS purchases of acute treatment in the UK under health authority contracts was £50 million in 1995, £52 million in 1996, and £56 million in 1997, the latest figures available.

Barnsley Hall

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was raised by the sale by the NHS Executive of the Barnsley Hall site in Bromsgrove; and where the money will be reinvested. [94194]

Mr. Denham: All proceeds from the sale of surplus National Health Service estate are directed back into central Departmental funds, to be redistributed back to regional offices as part of their overall capital allocations. The closure and sale of Barnsley Hall was the culmination of a range of investment in Bromsgrove and Redditch health services over the past few years, and as such the sale proceeds from Barnsley Hall can be seen as a partial repayment of this investment. It is not the policy of the NHS to reveal how much it receives for land sales, as this information is considered commercially sensitive.

Cancer Patients

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the number of cancer patients who will be seen per week by NHS consultants under the Government's proposal to ensure that no patient referred by a GP waits more than two weeks once it is implemented in April 2000; [94026]

(2) how many cancer patients referred by GPs are seen per week by NHS consultants at present. [94072]

Mr. Denham: The Department does not currently collect data on the number of cancer patients seen by consultants per week.

However, data from the first quarter monitoring of the two week breast cancer standard, which began in April 1999, show that an average of 1,686 urgent referrals of suspected breast cancer were seen per week over the three months April-June 1999.

Health Service Circular HSC1999/205 requested that health authorities, in consultation with their National Health Service Trusts and local primary care groups, should undertake state of readiness surveys in preparation for the extension of the two week standard for urgent referrals for all cases of suspected cancer. These will include baseline assessments of numbers of urgent referrals. The surveys will be carried out on a rolling basis, in line with the planned roll out of the two week standard during 2000.

Booked Admissions Policy

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his advice to hospital trust boards on the implementation of the National Booked Admissions Policy. [94146]

Mr. Denham: The National Booked Admissions Programme was established last year with 24 pilot sites across England. It has since been extended to a further 60 pilots plus nine looking specifically at cancer services. These pilots were set up to enable patients to pre-book their admission dates or hospital appointments. The Programme is closely managed and supported by the National Patients' Access Team, which is currently headed by Peter Homa, and National Health Service Executive Regional Offices. They are closely monitoring the pilots' performance against outcome plans and milestones. Support includes training in project management and redesign techniques and also regular meetings where all the pilot sites discuss progress and share experiences.

The first wave of the programme and the cancer work is being evaluated by the Health Services Management Centre, based at the University of Birmingham, over a 3-year period. They will report at regular intervals, to enable lessons learnt to be fed back to the pilot sites and spread more widely to the NHS. The first initial evaluation report will be published shortly and will be sent to all health authorities, trusts and primary care groups.

On 2 September, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced the 60 new pilots being set up, benefiting 1.5 million patients, taking the total benefiting from the programme to around 2 million.

Home Care Companies

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress the Government have made on proposed legislation on the registration of home care companies; and if he will make a statement. [94440]

Mr. Hutton: We are committed to reforming regulatory arrangements for care homes and other social services as set out in the White Paper "Modernising Social services". We will legislate for these reforms as soon as Parliamentary time allows.

Environment and Health

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the relationship between health and fitness levels and environmental factors. [93384]

Yvette Cooper: Our new health strategy Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation, published on 6 July 1999, acknowledges that health is affected by a complex interaction of factors including the environment. It recognises the health benefits of a good environment and that factors such as cold, damp housing and poor quality air contribute to health problems including respiratory and cardio-vascular diseases.

Recognising, among other things, the links between poor housing and health, we have made substantial additional resources available for regenerating the worst neighbourhoods, improving social housing stock and combating fuel poverty for groups most vulnerable to cold-related ill health.

We are working through the New Deal for transport to encourage walking and cycling and to reduce pollution from vehicles. We are also promoting Health Action Zones, Healthy Living Centres and National Health Service walk-in centres to promote healthy lifestyles and improve access to community-based health facilities.

Breast Cancer

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress his Department has made on meeting the target for seeing patients diagnosed with breast cancer within two weeks. [94030]

Yvette Cooper: The first quarter's data on achieving the two week standard for the urgent referral of patients suspected of having breast cancer were published on 24 September. These showed that 91.1 per cent. of patients were seen within two weeks of urgent referral by their general practitioner. This represents some 12,500 women seen within two weeks of urgent referral out of a total of nearly 13,700 patients seen during the quarter. This was an encouraging start to achieving the standard and the Department is currently working with poorer performing National Health Service trusts to ensure improvement in performance in the second quarter.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) circulars and (b) executive letters his Department has issued in each month since May 1997. [94028]

Mr. Denham: The table shows the number of (a) circulars and (b) executive letters the Department of Health has issued in each month since May 1997.

Notes:

1. Until December 1997 the Department of Health issued circulars in the following series:
Health Service Guidelines (HSG); Finance Directorate Letters (FDL); Family Health Service Letters (FHSL); Local Authority Circulars (LAC); Local Authority Social Services Letters (LASSL); Chief Inspector (CI); Family Practitioner Notices (FPN) and Professional Letters (PL).
In December FPNs were discontinued.
On 2 February 1998 ELs, HSGs, FDLs and FHSLs were replaced with a single series of management letters—Health Service Circulars (HSC). This was as part of the Department's strategy to improve written communications and in response to the recommendations in the "Seeing the Woods, Sparing the Trees" Efficiency Scrutiny.
2. The Department's Agencies occasionally publish in the above series, and also issue circulars in their own series. Between May 1997 and September 1999 Medicines Control Agency published 72 Drug Alerts and 15 Consultative Letters. Medical Devices Agency published eight Device Bulletins, two Advice Notices, 16 Hazard Notices, 94 Safety Notices and 11 Pacemaker Technical Notes.

Health Professions Regulatory Body

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the composition of the body he plans to establish to regulate professions allied to medicine. [93907]

Mr. Hutton: No decisions have been taken about the precise composition of the new Health Professions Council, which will eventually replace the Council for Professions Supplementary to Medicine, using an Order under s60 of the Health Act 1999. The Government is committed to full and wide-ranging consultation on the proposals for new legislation in addition to the statutory consultation on the draft Order required by the Health Act, with a report to Parliament on the outcome when the Order is laid.

Medium-secure Units

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the findings of the current review of data collection requirements regarding escapes and absconds from medium-secure units. [93871]

Mr. Hutton: The Department is in contact with the National Health Service Executive Regional Offices to access the current data collection and to ensure that procedures are in place for recording escapes and absconds from medium-secure units. We expect these procedures will be in place later in the year.

Fundholders

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners fundholding practices remain. [93905]

Mr. Denham: None.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of sustaining residual general practitioners fundholding practices in the next financial year. [93904]

Mr. Milburn: None. The residual fundholding scheme ended on 1 October 1999.

NHS Direct

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what qualitative studies he has commissioned regarding outcomes from calls to NHS Direct; and if he will make a statement. [93875]

Ms Stuart: The Medical Research Unit of the University of Sheffield is undertaking an independent evaluation of NHS Direct. This evaluation will include a study of the outcomes from calls to NHS Direct. We expect the University of Sheffield's full and final report to be published early next year.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the services of NHS Direct will be available in (a) Lymington, (b) New Milton and (c) Ringwood. [93869]

Ms Stuart: NHS Direct has been available in Lymington and New Milton since March 1999. The service will be available in Ringwood by the end of this year.

Strokes

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 13 July 1999, Official Report, column 151, on stroke services, if he will specify the funding that he is making available for initiatives related to strokes. [93902]

Mr. Hutton: The Department is currently supporting some inititatives relating to stroke through the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. The responsiblity (and hence funding) for the Effective Health Care Bulletin, national sentinel audits and development of clinical guidelines now rests with NICE, which has total funding of just under £10 million for this financial year. The hon. Member may wish to contact the Chairman of NICE, Professor Sir Michael Rawlins, for further details.

PRIME MINISTER

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July quarterly report to the House. [93559]

The Prime Minister: For these purposes my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office, Official Report, columns 527–28.

White Papers

Mr. Evans: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the White Papers published from 1998 to date indicating their sale price. [93674]

The Prime Minister: The term "White Paper" has no formal definition but is interpreted as meaning those statements of Government policy and other documents which have been published in the Command Papers series but excluding Treasury Minutes, reports from Committees and Commissions and the papers in the Treaty and other series presented to Parliament by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. A list of those published from 1998 showing their sale price has been placed in the Library.

Yugoslavia

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Prime Minister what estimates he has received of the cost of reconstruction in Yugoslavia made necessary by the NATO offensive. [94124]

The Prime Minister: The reconstruction of Yugoslavia, and in particular Kosovo, is a huge task which will take many years. This is not just as a result of the conflict brought about by Milosevic's policy towards Kosovo, but because of the need for modernisation and democratisation of Yugoslav society and its economy. The UK will play a full part in this reconstruction.

We will not have an accurate estimate of reconstruction costs until the next donor conference held under their auspices in November. In the meantime, emergency and immediate reconstruction projects are going ahead under the auspices of the EU Task Force in Pristina and the UN Interim Administration in Kosovo (UNMIK).

The EU Task Force in Pristina has committed 46 million euros so far. The EU has pledged a total of 137 million euros of reconstruction aid for Kosovo in 1999 through the EU Assistance Fund in addition to 378 million euros of humanitarian aid.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations he has had with the heads of other NATO countries about the cost of reconstruction in Yugoslavia; and if any member country has yet agreed to contribute financially. [94125]

The Prime Minister: The European Union (through the European Commission) and the World Bank are responsible for the co-ordination of the donor effort for the reconstruction of Yugoslavia. All NATO countries are represented in either or both of these organisations.

The EU and World Bank are organising a series of donor conferences, the first of which was on 28 July 1999. At this conference initial donor indications of financial support amounted to US$2.1 billion. NATO members indicating their intention to provide financial support at this stage were: Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Norway, Spain, The Netherlands, Turkey, United Kingdom and the United States. NATO countries who are also members of the EU will also be contributing multilaterally through the European Commission.

Government Reports

Mr. Evans: To ask the Prime Minister who was responsible for making the Government's Annual Report 1998–99 available to Tesco Stores Ltd. the day before it was made available to Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [94155]

The Prime Minister: Guidance to Ministers on the publication of Command Papers and other Government documents is set out in the "Ministerial Code" and "Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service".

The Stationery Office, who published the Government's Annual Report, were responsible for the marketing arrangements with Tesco. Copies of the report were distributed in advance by The Stationery Office to Tescos and other bookshops under the usual strict embargo that they should not be placed on sale until after the Report had been presented to Parliament on the morning of Monday 26 July. I understand that, due to an oversight in one or two individual stores, a small number of copies were available on Saturday 24 July.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of the Government's annual report 1998–99; [93670]

(2) what was the cost to public funds of the Government's annual report 1997–98; [93676]

(3) how many copies of the Government's annual report 1997–98 were (a) printed, (b) sold and (c) distributed free of charge. [93671]

The Prime Minister: The direct cost of preparing the Government's annual report 1998–99 for publication is estimated at £75,000. The equivalent figure for the Government's Annual Report 1997–98 is £96,000.

Additional costs associated with the Annual Report 1998–99, including putting the report on the No. 10 website and preparing a leaflet, are estimated at £105,000. The equivalent figure for the Annual Report 1997–98 are estimated at £144,000.

The costs, prices, print runs and sales for the first two Government annual reports are produced in the table.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy not to make command papers and other Government documents available for retail sale before making them available to parliament. [93708]

The Prime Minister: Guidance to Ministers on the publication of Command Papers and other Government documents is set out in the "Ministerial Code" and "Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service".

Mr. Luff: To ask the Prime Minister how many copies of the Government's annual report had been sold through (i) the Stationery Office and (ii) other retail outlets at the most recent date for which figures are available. [93710]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given to the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) today, Official Report column 482.

All copies of the Annual Report 1998–99 were sold by The Stationery Office, the publishers. Some have been sold direct to the public, the remainder through other retailers.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what was the cost of (a) copy writing, (b) design, (c) photography, (d) printing and (e) all other relevant items of the production of the Government's annual report; and how many copies were produced in total; [93713]

(2) how many civil servants were involved in the production of the Government's annual report; and what is his estimate of the number of person-hours involved. [93712]

The Prime Minister: Preparation of the Government's Annual Report was undertaken in accordance with the requirements of "Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service".

The approximate costs of preparing the Annual Report 1998–99 for publication were as follows: design £75,000 and photography £1,000. Copywriting was done entirely within Government. Printing costs fall entirely to The Stationery Office, the private-sector publishers. 100,000 copies of the Annual Report were printed.

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list (a) the reports published by his Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by his Department, (c) the decisions his Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria he uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93931]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the President of the Council, today, Official Report, columns 429–30.

Cabinet Meetings

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister (1) on how many occasions the Cabinet has met formally during the summer adjournment; [94624]

(2) when was the last full formal meeting of the Cabinet. [94623]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) on 30 April 1999, Official Report, column 281.

Single Currency

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what constitutional tests will be applied to any future decision concerning United Kingdom adherence to the euro. [94636]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Mid-Bedfordshire (Mr. Sayeed) on 13 April 1999, Official Report, columns 2–3.

MOD Electronic Test Facility

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from the Irish Government with regard to the Ministry of Defence's Electronic Test Facility formerly sited at the British Nuclear Fuels Ltd site at Capenhurst, Cheshire, since 1 July; when these representations were received; and from which Irish Government departments. [93882]

The Prime Minister: The Irish Ambassador called on a senior official in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 26 July, where this issue was discussed.

Policy Unit (US Visits)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer 25 June 1999, Official Report, column 480, on Policy Unit (US visits), what were the names of the members of his Policy Unit who accompanied (a) him and (b) other Ministers on visits to the United States of America on four occasions since 1 January 1998; and how many meetings each of these members of his Policy Unit held with members and officials of the United States of America Government on each visit, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Policy Unit members involved at each meeting, and the names of the US Ministers and officials at each meeting. [93962]

The Prime Minister: David Miliband, Geoff Mulgan and Derek Scott accompanied me for all or part of my visit to the United States of America on 4–7 February 1998. David Miliband also accompanied me on similar visits on 22 September and 8 November 1998. James Purnell accompanied the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry during a visit to the United States on 10–16 October 1998.

Members of the Policy Unit participated in the official Ministerial programme and also separately attended meetings with US public officials. All visits were undertaken in line with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions members of his Policy Unit travelled to the United States of America on official business between 1 May 1997 and 1 January 1998, indicating the name of the member and the dates of travel in each case. [93880]

The Prime Minister: None.

Prime Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer on 17 May 1999, Official Report, column 267, on meetings with President Clinton, how many meetings he held with members and officials of the United States Government during his visit of 21 September 1998, indicating the location of each meeting and the names of the members and officials of the United States Government at each meeting. [93960]

The Prime Minister: I travelled to New York in September 1998 to attend the United Nations General Assembly, where I heard a speech by President Clinton. I had also been invited to make a speech and focused on the development of the United Nations and the challenges we face in a global economy.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 17 May 1999, Official Report, column 267, on meetings with President Clinton, how many meetings he held with members and officials of the United States Government during his visit of 4 to 7 February 1998, specifying the date and location of each meeting and the names of the members and officials of the United States Government at each meeting. [93903]

The Prime Minister: My visit to the United States in February 1998 was my first official visit to the United States as Prime Minister. I had talks with the President at the White House in Washington to discuss a wide range of issues of mutual interest.

Child Poverty

Mr. Webb: To ask the Prime Minister what definition of child poverty underlies his target of eliminating child poverty within 20 years. [94702]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the right hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 29 March 1999, Official Report, column 496 and 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 717.

On 21 September 1999, we published the document "Opportunity for all" which sets out our strategy for tackling the causes of poverty and social exclusion. The report includes a range of indicators against which we can monitor our progress in tackling these causes and overcoming the problems of people living in poverty.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July Quarterly report to the House. [93560]

Mr. Hill: Details of the Department's progress in tackling the bug are set out in our regular monitoring returns. These are available in the Libraries of the House and published on the Internet.

The President of the Council wrote to all Members on 23 September 1999 with details of the latest position. That confirmed that, with two exceptions, all the business critical systems of DETR(C) and the other DETR Agencies were expected to be complete by the end of October at the latest.

The exceptions were:

(a) The Planning Inspectorate which is on course to confirm that a business critical IT system to produce 400 standard letters will be millennium compliant in November. In the unlikely event of a delay in installing the system, the Agency is confident that it would still be able to maintain its current level and standard of service to customers.

(b) The Rent Agency, created on 1 October 1999, which is currently establishing the compliance of the embedded systems in the rent offices previously managed by local authorities. The Agency is aware that local authorities have been actively dealing with these embedded systems, and is confident that they will be fully compliant by December 1999.

The results of the October review, [illegible] announced shortly by the President of the Council, are expected to confirm that, with the exception of the above two Agencies, the Department's business critical systems and most of its non-critical systems will be millennium compliant by the end of the month.

Turning to progress in devising contingency plans, DETR(C) and its Agencies are on course to complete and test these plans by the end of this month.

As regards the millennium readiness of public services for which the Department has oversight, the results of the latest independent assessment of the water, transport, and local government sectors will be announced at the National Infrastructure Forum on 20–21 October 1999. It is expected that all these sectors will report that the independent assessments have not identified any risk of material disruption to the infrastructure.

Voluntary Purchase Grant

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many tenants have received a voluntary purchase grant in (a) England and (b) London in each year since its introduction. [94347]

Mr. Mullin: The Voluntary Purchase Grant scheme was introduced in April 1996. The number of registered social landlord households who have received a voluntary purchase grant in England and in London since the scheme's introduction is shown in the table below.

Number of RSL households in receipt of VPG, in England and London

	London	England
1996–97	14	54
1997–98	35	195
1998–99	27	122

Note:
Source is the Housing Corporation's Annual Investment Reports

Rent-to-Mortgage Scheme

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many tenants exercised their rights under the rent-to-mortgage scheme in each year since its introduction. [94348]

Mr. Mullin: Latest information on rent-to-mortgage activity in England since the introduction of the scheme in October 1993 is given in the table.

	Claims	Acceptances	Sales
October 1993 to March 1994	152	19	—
1994–95	738	89	12
1995–96	396	45	8
1996–97	373	34	4
1997–98	402	51	7
1998–99	n/a	n/a	9

The figures to March 1994, and for Sales in each period, are of reported activity only as no estimates were made for non-responding authorities in either grouping; the figures cover around 90 per cent. of authorities.

London Airports

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many passengers passed through the London area airports in the past year; what is his forecast for the year 2015; and what estimate he has made of the number of such passengers who would in the next year if duty were to be imposed on aviation fuel at the same rate as on motor vehicle fuel, assuming a similar rate of tax is imposed by other countries. [93832]

Mr. Mullin: In 1998, 102 million terminal passengers passed through the London area airports (Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted, Luton and London City).

In the DETR 1997 air traffic forecasts, the unconstrained forecast for London area airports (defined there as Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted and Luton) is 147 million (low growth) to 212 million (high growth) with a mid point forecast of 184 million.

No specific estimate has been made on the effect of imposing a tax on aviation fuel at the same rate as that on motor vehicle fuel. However, studies have been done by the International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO) and for the European Commission, among others, on the effects of applying different tax rates to aviation fuel under different scenarios. In reviewing such studies the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, in its Special Report on Aviation and the Global Atmosphere published earlier this year, noted that levies (taxes and charges) could be a means of reducing growth of aircraft emissions by further stimulating the development and use of more efficient aircraft and by reducing growth in demand for aviation transportation. The studies also showed that to be environmentally effective, levies would need to be addressed in an international framework. Consequently further work on market based approaches to limit the growth in aviation emissions is being taken forward by ICAO.

M4 Bus Lane

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions at what time on the morning of 23 July the M4 bus lane was opened to all vehicles; at what time it was closed again; and what period of time elapsed between the closure of two lanes due to an accident on that morning and the opening of the bus lane to all vehicles. [94204]

Mr. Hill: The accident occurred in the nearside lane (lane one) at about 7:30am. At 7:37am lane one closure signs were displayed on the two matrix sign gantries approaching the incident and all traffic except buses and taxis used the middle lane (lane two). This continued until 8:14am when this lane was also closed and the bus lane was opened to all traffic. This was carried out under police supervision to enable the fire brigade to work safely. At 8:54am, lanes one and two were re-opened to traffic and lane three reverted to being a bus lane.

Swanwick Air Traffic Control

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the planned date on which Swanwick air traffic control will become operational. [94202]

Mr. Mullin: Swanwick is still expected to become operational in the spring of 2002.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact on Swanwick Air Traffic Control Centre of the Government's proposals for the future of NATS. [94300]

Mr. Mullin: The Government recognises the importance of introducing the right strategic partner to the New Partnership Company under the PPP. In order to protect the public interest and national security, given the strategic importance to the UK of NATS activities, the Government will have to be satisfied of, among other things, the strategic partner's commitment to the development of the New En Route Centre at Swanwick and the NSC, thereby maintaining the two-centre strategy.

The arguments for the PPP include: to give NATS access to private capital; enable that capital to be used to best effect; and bring in the investment and project management skills which only the private sector can offer. Additionally, it will free NATS investment and management decisions from Government financing constraints, allow NATS the commercial opportunities it lacks in the public sector, and introduce quality key private sector management skills to build on NATS operational excellence.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the climate change programme referred to on page 47 of the Government's Annual report 1998–99 will include measures designed to reduce carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. by the year 2010 based on 1990 levels. [94200]

Mr. Mullin: The draft UK climate change programme will set out the Government's strategy for meeting the UK's legally binding target agreed at Kyoto to reduce a basket of six greenhouse gases by 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2008–12 and moving towards our domestic goal to cut emissions of carbon dioxide by 20 per cent. by 2010. We are aiming to publish our draft programme towards the end of 1999 for consultation.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the level of carbon dioxide emissions in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement on future targets for carbon dioxide emissions in each area. [93862]

Mr. Meacher: A report is currently being completed for the Government and the devolved Administrations which will provide details of historic emissions in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The report will detail emissions of the six greenhouse gases covered by the Kyoto Protocol for the years 1990 and 1995 and will be in the same format as that currently used for the UK-wide greenhouse gas inventory. The report is due to be published shortly. In future years, the Government plans to produce a greenhouse gas inventory for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, alongside the UK inventory, on an annual basis.

Following Kyoto in 1997, the UK has a legally binding target to cut emissions of a basket of six greenhouse gases by 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels over the period 2008–12. The UK Government also has a domestic goal to cut carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010. The Government is currently developing a draft climate change programme which will set out how the UK will deliver its Kyoto target and move towards its domestic goal. We are aiming to publish the draft programme for consultation towards the end of 1999.

Threatened Species

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what response the Government have made to the report requested from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee on the rationale behind the listing of threatened species on schedules associated with Part 1 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. [94203]

Mr. Mullin: My Department is actively discussing with the Joint Nature Conservation Committee what further measures may be appropriate to protect the relevant species.

Fuel Poverty

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what estimate he has made of the number of people living in fuel poverty in (a) solid-walled and (b) cavity-walled housing; [94311]

(2) what plans he has to provide funding for the insulation of the walls of solid-walled properties for those deemed to be living in fuel poverty. [94308]

Mr. Meacher: Data from the English House Condition Survey shows that there were at least 4.3 million fuel poor households in 1996. Of these, 1.5 million are estimated as living in solid-walled properties and 2.4 million in cavity-walled housing. The remaining 0.4 million are thought to live in non-traditional and mixed-construction housing.

The new Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES) has been designed to tackle fuel poverty, focusing on those households most at risk of ill health due to cold homes. It does so by providing packages of heating and insulation improvements that will reduce the cost of keeping warm for households by up to £1,000 a year.

During the development of the scheme, the full range of heating and insulation measures were considered, including the use of external or internal wall insulation for solid wall properties. Discussions with the insulation industry showed that the cost of external wall insulation was about £2,500 for an average 3-bedroom semi-detached property with disruption for the household. With internal wall insulation, installation costs are less but the disruption to households is greater and there is a loss of internal space. In addition, there are redecoration costs after the work has been completed.

It was therefore felt that both these measures were more appropriate for large-scale estate renewal programmes where they could be combined with other work such as damp proofing, rather than for new HEES which will target individual properties, primarily in the private sector.

The packages available for solid walled properties under the new HEES include higher levels of heating improvements than those for cavity walled homes, so providing similar reductions in fuel costs for both types of property.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what responses have been received to the consultations relating to the proposed redefinition of households in fuel poverty; and if he will make a statement on his plan for action following the consultation. [94199]

Mr. Meacher: The consultation document on the new Home Energy Efficiency Scheme invited comment on two aspects of the commonly used definition of a fuel poor household—that is to say, one needing to spend more than 10 per cent. of income to achieve a satisfactory heating regime—namely:

> whether the use of fuel for non-heating purposes should be included in assessing the amount of fuel needed to achieve a satisfactory heating regime;
> and
> whether the calculation of household income should exclude any element of housing costs such as rent or mortgage payments.

A total of 252 responses to the consultation document have been received to date. Forty per cent. of respondents did not comment on either of these particular questions. On the issue of non-heating fuel, 54 per cent. felt that all fuel costs should be taken into account; 6 per cent. had various other suggestions. On the issue of housing costs, 34 per cent. felt that they should not be excluded from income; 20 per cent. felt the opposite; and 6 per cent. made other suggestions.

The eligibility of households for assistance under the new HEES is not directly dependent on the definition of fuel poverty. However, it is relevant more widely to the discussion of fuel poverty issues, and we intend to look at the definition in the light of the comments received.

I shall write to my hon. Friend separately with a full copy of the analysis of the consultation responses and place a copy in the Library.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what percentages of heat is lost on average from (a) solid-walled and (b) cavity-walled housing; [94310]

(2) what assessment he has made of the principal sources of heat loss in domestic properties. [94309]

Mr. Meacher: On behalf of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions the Building Research Establishment has undertaken research into heat loss from solid-walled and cavity-walled housing.

In a typical semi-detached dwelling with un-insulated cavity walls and with average insulation standards for the other elements, the walls account for about 40 per cent. of the total dwelling heat loss (reducing to slightly below 20 per cent. if cavity-wall insulation is added).

For the same dwelling with un-insulated solid walls, the heat loss through the walls accounts for about 48 per cent. of the total dwelling heat loss.

Estimates of the principal heat losses for a typical dwelling are: walls 38 per cent., ventilation 23 per cent., windows and doors 26 per cent., roofs 5 per cent., floors 8 per cent.

Strategic Planning (Spending)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the levels of spending on strategic planning per head of population in (a) Staffordshire and (b) each other county of England (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the last three years. [94018]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The available information on planning expenditure does not permit spending on strategic planning to be separately identified.

GM Micro-organisms

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the environmental and health risks posed by the release into the environment of genetically modified micro-organisms; and if he will make a statement. [94168]

Mr. Meacher: All activities involving the contained use of genetically modified micro-organisms (GMMs) are required to be assessed for potential risk to both human health and the environment by the Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992, as amended. These Regulations also require that control measures are used to limit contact of the GMMs with the environment and general population so that harm is not caused.

For higher hazard GMMs release, to the environment must be prevented. This is achieved by application of extremely stringent control methods and 100 per cent. kill of all waste and contaminated material before disposal. For low hazard GMMs, control measures must minimise release. Although absolute prevention of release in these cases is not required, waste is still treated to inactivate the GMMs prior to disposal with, typically, at least 99.999 per cent. of GMMs being killed. In all cases the risk assessment must be used to ensure that the control measures, including the degree of inactivation, to prevent or minimise release are commensurate with maintaining a high level of safety for both human health and the environment.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the arrangements for public involvement in decision making about the use of genetically modified micro-organisms; and if he will make a statement. [94163]

Mr. Meacher: All activities involving the contained use of genetically modified micro-organisms (GMMs) are regulated under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992, as amended. The Regulations require all activities to be assessed for potential risk to both human health and the environment. All activities involving hazardous GMMs have to be notified to the Health and Safety Executive (HSE).

Although there are provisions in these Regulations for information to be available to the public, including a public register with information from all premises undertaking work with hazardous GMMs, there are no provisions for statutory consultation with the public on individual activities. However, members of the public may request copies of activity notifications and are free to comment on activities to HSE. These comments will be considered and action taken as appropriate. Improvements to the public register proposed by the Health and Safety Commission in a recent consultation document on proposed new contained use legislation will greatly aid public access to information and therefore the ability to comment.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that inactivated waste from factories and laboratories does not contain living genetically modified micro-organisms; and if he will make a statement. [94172]

Mr. Meacher: None at this time.

The Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992, as amended, require that users limit contact of GMMs with the environment and the general population. In all cases the degree of limitation must relate to the level of risk. For hazardous GMMs "limit" must be interpreted as "prevent". Control measures in these cases will include inactivation of waste material to give 100 per cent. kill.

The European Directive on the contained use of GMMs has been revised. The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) has consulted on proposals to implement the revised Directive by replacing the 1992 Regulations. The handling and treatment of waste was one of the key aspects consulted on. The responses to the consultation are being analysed.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extend inspections of sites using genetically modified micro-organisms to include those currently classified as low-risk; and if he will make a statement. [94166]

Mr. Meacher: All sites where work with any genetically modified micro-organisms (GMMs) is to take place must notify HSE and are subject to inspection by HSE Specialist Inspectors. HSE is currently considering how to improve its arrangements for regulating risks from such biological agents and this will include inspection of sites using low risk GMMs.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce independent assessments of the risks of genetically modified micro-organism use at registered sites; and if he will make a statement. [94169]

Mr. Meacher: None at this time.

Provisions for independent assessment of risks relating to hazardous genetically modified micro-organisms (GMMs) at premises undertaking contained use activities already exist. All premises and all activities involving hazardous GMMs are required to be notified to the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992 (as amended). HSE's technical specialists, together with experts in other relevant Departments, scrutinise the risk assessments supplied with all notifications. In addition, advice can be sought from the Advisory Committee on Genetic Modification (ACGM).

The Regulations are due to be replaced by new legislation in Spring 2000 in order to implement the revised European Directive on the contained use of GMMs. The Directive requires that notification and an independent scrutiny is maintained for premises and all activities involving hazardous GMMs. The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) has consulted on proposals for the new legislation. Responses are being analysed.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce regulations specifying the maximum level of genetically modified micro-organisms in waste; and if he will make a statement. [94164]

Mr. Meacher: None at this time.

The Regulations which control all contained use activities involving genetically modified micro-organisms (GMMs)—the Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992, as amended—are intended to be replaced in Spring 2000. New Regulations are required to implement the revision of the European Directive on the contained use of GMMs. The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) has recently undertaken a public consultation on proposed new Regulations. The proposals did not include specifying limits for the numbers of GMMs which can be in waste. However, they did propose that there should be a requirement that all GMM containing waste be inactivated prior to disposal, unless users had the agreement of the authorities to do otherwise. Such agreement would only be given if fully justified by the risk assessment. In all cases the level of inactivation (ie percentage kill) must be commensurate with the level of risk. For hazardous GMMs inactivation must be 100 per cent.

Responses to the consultation are being analysed. I expect HSC to submit proposals to me early in 2000. It would be inappropriate to pre-empt their advice.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will backdate to pre-1992 the Health and Safety Executive's public register of centres using genetically modified micro-organisms; and if he will make a statement. [94171]

Mr. Meacher: The Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992, as amended, require the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) to maintain a public register with information from all premises which undertake contained use activities with hazardous genetically modified micro-organisms (GMMs).

The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) recently consulted on proposals to replace these Regulations in order to implement revisions to the European Directive on the contained use of GMMs. The proposals included significant improvements in the quality and quantity of information to be placed on the public register. In particular, it was proposed to include information from all premises undertaking contained use activities, even those originally notified prior to 1992.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to increase the resources dedicated by the Health and Safety Executive to the inspection of sites using genetically modified micro-organisms; and if he will make a statement. [94167]

Mr. Meacher: HSE is reviewing the way it inspects sites handling genetically modified organisms and biological agents to take account of the increased activity in this field and also to ensure that public concern is properly addressed. An internal HSE review will put forward recommendations in November 1999 and I am sure that HSE will wish to act on them as soon as possible. I believe it is right that HSE should consider ways in which it can continually improve its enforcement and inspection duties to ensure that risks are being properly controlled.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to improve the monitoring and control of discharges of genetically modified micro-organisms into the environment; and if he will make a statement. [94170]

Mr. Meacher: None at this time.

All activities in containment (eg laboratories, production facilities) are regulated under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992, as amended. These Regulations require all genetically modified micro-organisms (GMMs) to be controlled so as to limit contact with the environment and the general population. GMMs are inactivated prior to disposal. Users are required to test and maintain control measures and to test (ie monitor) when necessary for the presence of viable GMMs outside of the primary physical containment. The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) Specialist Inspectors enforce the requirements of the Regulations. This includes scrutinising users' monitoring data and inactivation methods.

The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) has consulted on proposals for new Regulations to implement a revision to the contained use of GMMs European Directive. Responses are being analysed. I expect HSC to submit its final proposals to me early in 2000. It would be inappropriate to pre-empt HSC's advice.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to require all registered users of genetically modified micro-organisms to provide information about their use; and if he will make a statement. [94165]

Mr. Meacher: None at this time.

The Genetically Modified Organisms (Contained Use) Regulations 1992 (as amended) require users undertaking contained use activities with GMMs which may be hazardous to humans or the environment to notify the individual activities to the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) before commencing work. Activities of negligible risk are not required to be notified, but users are required to provide information to HSE Specialist Inspectors if requested or during site inspections.

The Regulations are to be replaced in Spring 2000 to implement the revised European Directive on the contained use of GMMs. The Directive requires that users provide information to the authorities on all activities involving hazardous GMMs. The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) have consulted on proposals for the new legislation. Responses are being analysed.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the whole of the Jubilee Line extension will be open and fully operational before 31 December; and if he will make a statement. [93731]

Mr. Hill: The first two phases of the Jubilee Line Extension are now open, operating from Stratford to Waterloo. One phase 2 station, Southwark, is not yet operating, but will open within the next few weeks.

Phase 3 will include joining the existing Jubilee Line and will offer full through-running services from Stanmore to Stratford. It will also involve moving on to 7-day per week services (the Extension currently closes on weekends). Phase 3 is due to open in late autumn. The last new station, Westminster, will open a little later. I can therefore confirm that we expect the whole Extension to be fully operational by 31 December.

Best Value (Sefton)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what progress has been made in implementing Best Value in Sefton Metropolitan Authority; [94495]

(2) what progress has been made in implementing Best Value in the housing department in Sefton Metropolitan Authority. [94496]

Ms Beverley Hughes: It is the responsibility of each local authority to implement best value in its own area. However, I am aware that Sefton, like many other authorities around the country, is making progress. Each Department has drawn up proposals for a five-year fundamental review of all its services. In addition, Sefton is undertaking five pilot reviews. As part of this exercise, I understand the housing department will be reviewing services for the homeless. Under the best value regime, the performance of local authorities will be subject to independent scrutiny through the audit and inspection of all services, including housing.

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that the principles of sustainable development are built into Best Value. [93915]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Once the duty of Best Value comes into force on 1 April 2000, local authorities will be required to secure continuous improvement in the exercise of their functions with regard to a combination of economy, efficiency and effectiveness. We have made clear in the recently published 'Implementing Best Value—A Consultation Paper on Draft Guidance' that Best Value Reviews will need to give effect to the principles of sustainable development.

It is for local authorities to determine how to give such principles practical effect through the setting of consistent performance targets, following consultation with their community and in the light of progress with their Local Agenda 21 strategies.

Driving Licences

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to make the carrying of driving licences compulsory while individuals are driving. [94506]

Mr. Hill: This is being considered by the Vehicle Crime Reduction Action Team (VCRAT), formed by the Government last year to develop a strategy to reduce vehicle crime by 30 per cent. by March 2004. VCRAT concluded that the case for requiring drivers to carry their licences has not yet been made, but my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary indicated within the foreword to the VCRAT Strategy report that he will want to look at that issue again in the light of developing technology and further assessment of the potential wider crime reduction benefits. A copy of the report, published on 22 September 1999, is in the Library of the House.

Road Traffic Offences

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to publicise the (a) risk and (b) consequences of committing road traffic offences. [94505]

Mr. Hill: The Department's ongoing programme of publicity campaigns draws attention to the risk and consequences of committing road traffic offences. Our high profile advertising campaigns currently address speeding, drinking and driving, and the non wearing of rear seat belts, which are key factors in more than half of all road deaths. These campaigns focus on the potential risk of causing death or serious injury and the consequences to the perpetrator and others affected. Annex 5 of the Highway Code indicates some of the main offences and penalties.

We intend to publish soon a new strategy for improving road safety which will inform the development of future campaigns.

Construction Industry

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the state of (a) the construction industry and (b) the housing construction market between January and June 1997. [94596]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The volume of construction output in Great Britain increased by 1.0 per cent. from £13,700 million in the quarter beginning January 1997 to £13,834 million in the quarter ending June 1997. During this period new construction output fell by 0.3 per cent., whereas repair and maintenance grew by 2.3 per cent.

The volume of housing construction increased by 0.6 per cent. from £5,517 million in the quarter beginning January 1997 to £5,548 million in the quarter ending June 1997. During this period new housing construction remained unchanged and repair and maintenance grew by 0.8 per cent.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make a statement on his initiatives to improve skills in the construction industry; [94597]

(2) if he will make a statement on his initiatives to encourage young people to enter the construction industry; [94599]

(3) if he will make a statement on his initiatives to encourage family friendly policies within the construction sector. [94598]

Ms Beverley Hughes: It is vital for the construction industry to be able to attract and retain people with the right skills—women as well as men, and from all ethnic communities.

We are driving forward the "Movement for Innovation" which is seeking to implement the recommendations in Sir John Egan's report "Rethinking Construction". A key item on the agenda is "respect for people" which covers training, equal opportunities, health and safety and site conditions.

We will shortly respond to the Report on Combating Cowboy Builders, which includes a proposal to introduce a Quality Mark scheme for builders in the domestic sector. One of the requirements of the scheme will be that a firm has operatives with the appropriate skills.

The "New Deal in Construction", launched last year in collaboration with the construction industry, is designed to make it easier for the industry to recruit young unemployed people and as a way of reducing skills gaps in the industry.

ADAS 2000

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what tests he has carried out on the ICCS ADAS 2000 equipment; where such tests were executed and under what circumstances; and what training staff have received on this equipment. [94645]

Mr. Hill: Testing carried out on ADAS 2000 covered:

Testing and pre-roll out checks of the hardware itself;

Full functional acceptance testing of the software;

Test of the system's ability to cope with the year 2000 itself, and with the following leap year date;

Performance testing by a number of users;

On-site trials at a Coastguard Co-ordination Centre.

All of these tests were done according to a pre-designed plan drawn up before delivery of the software by the supplier. They were performed on a test system set up using examples of the target hardware at both the client and server ends. Users were fully involved in both the planning and testing processes.

As to training, a team of people drawn from Coastguard Operations Staff accompanied the installation team to each Co-ordination Centre and instructed Coastguard operators in the use of the new software and the difference between it and the previous version.

ICCS is a separate major project where the current VHF and MF Radio Control Equipment in HM Coastguard will be replaced.

Rented Accommodation

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he is ensuring that private landlords fulfil their responsibilities to maintain the standard of rented accommodation. [94494]

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is taking to ensure that private landlords fulfil their responsibilities to maintain the standard of rented accommodation. [94532]

Mr. Mullin: Local authorities are responsible for enforcing standards of fitness in privately rented properties. We intend to reform the housing fitness standard by introducing a hazard based rating system which will enable local authorities to assess the fitness of privately rented housing more effectively. The introduction of mandatory licensing of houses in multiple occupation will place duties on landlords of this type of accommodation to maintain their properties to decent minimum standards and ensure the health and safety of their tenants.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for raising the quality of private rented accommodation. [94493]

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have for raising the quality of private rented accommodation. [94534]

Mr. Mullin: We are committed to introducing mandatory licensing of houses in multiple occupation where the worst conditions are often found. This will place duties on landlords of this type of accommodation to maintain their properties to decent minimum standards and ensure the health and safety of their tenants. We also intend to reform the housing fitness standard by introducing a hazard-based rating system which will enable local authorities to assess the fitness of privately rented housing more effectively. In addition, we support the development of voluntary initiatives to raise standards in the private rented sector such as good practice codes and landlord accreditation schemes.

Homelessness

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many families were made homeless within (a) Sefton and (b) Merseyside in each year since 1993; [94580]

(2) how many people have been homeless during the last five years broken down by gender in Merseyside. [94648]

Mr. Mullin: Data on homelessness activity are reported each quarter by local authorities and this includes the number of households accepted as homeless and in priority need under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 and 1996 Housing Acts. Further classification by gender, or numbers of people, is not collected. The following table summarises information provided by authorities in Merseyside since 1994:

Households accepted as being unintentionally homeless and in priority need

Year	Sefton	All Merseyside
1994	218	3,235
1995	191	2,900
1996	166	2,557
1997	106	2,093
1998	109	1,995
1999 1st half	68	[1]1,030

[1] An estimate for non response from one authority is included in this figure

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to further reduce homelessness among (a) families and (b) young people. [94582]

Mr. Mullin: The Government have a Manifesto commitment to impose a new duty on local authorities to protect those who are homeless through no fault of their own and are in priority need. This includes families with children and others who are regarded as vulnerable, which can include young people. Since taking office, we have already strengthened the legislation to give homeless people reasonable preference in the allocation of long-term social housing.

My Department has set up an official-level sounding board with the local authority associations, Shelter, the Chartered Institute of Housing and others to discuss further proposals for change, on which we would propose to consult more widely in due course. In particular, we will be looking at ways of encouraging more partnership working at a local level, through the development of local homelessness strategies and preventive initiatives. We will also be considering further measures to ensure that housing solutions are sustainable in order to reduce the risk of homelessness recurring.

The Department has also established a Youth Homelessness Action Partnership, again with both the voluntary and statutory sectors, to look at the particular problems faced by young people and to develop proposals for tackling them. Our revised Code of Guidance on the Allocation of Accommodation and Homelessness, due to be published around the end of the year, will recommend local authorities to treat young care-leavers, especially, as being vulnerable under the homelessness legislation.

My Department is also contributing to follow-up work on the Social Exclusion Unit's reports which have a particular bearing on young people, including "Bridging the Gap" and the "Report on Rough Sleeping". These measures include: the extension to young homeless people of the Education Maintenance Allowance pilots (which aim to encourage young people to remain in full-time education and so improve their life-skills); the introduction of a new Youth Support Service, with links to statutory and voluntary housing and homelessness agencies; and the establishment of the new Rough Sleepers Unit, which is co-ordinating Government action to achieve our target of reducing the number of people sleeping rough in England by two-thirds by 2002.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to use lottery funding to support projects and organisations which help the homeless. [94649]

Mr. Mullin: None. Responsibility for distributing proceeds from the National Lottery rests with a number of distributing bodies which make their decisions independently of Government.

HM Coastguard

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the recommendations contained within Lord Donaldson's report on a five-year strategy for HM Coastguard. [94509]

Mr. Hill: The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions accepts all of the recommendations contained in Lord Donaldson's Review of the Five-Year Strategy for HM Coastguard.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if any dedicated frequencies are going to be allocated for marine safety information broadcasts; and if there have been any operational difficulties utilising existing frequencies for marine safety information broadcasts. [94646]

Mr. Hill: The Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) have applied to the Radiocommunications Agency for two additional VHF working frequencies which will be used primarily for Maritime Safety Information broadcasts. The MCA application was placed before the National Frequency Assignment Panel (NFAP) on Friday 15 October 1999.

Operational difficulties utilising those frequencies assigned to Maritime Safety Information broadcasts have been limited to some mutual interference between HM Coastguard transmissions and those of port operators in Clydeport, Liverpool and Medway. Those difficulties have been overcome by avoiding transmissions on a frequency in use by the other authority and HM Coastguard's use of an alternative working frequency not normally assigned to Maritime Safety Information.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the new equipment used by HM Coastguard for Medilink Services varies from the original equipment used by BT coast radio stations; and what difficulties have been involved in its introduction. [94626]

Mr. Hill: The Medilink equipment, known as TeleConnect, installed in HM Coastguard Co-ordination Centres is specifically designed for simplex communications. This mode of communications allows only one operator to speak at any time. Hospital medical staff who might not be familiar with this mode of communications have received appropriate training from HM Coastguard.

BT Coast Radio Stations were fitted with Medilink equipment which differs from HM Coastguard's equipment in that it provides duplex communications. This mode of communications is similar to that used, for instance, in normal telephone calls. The Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) has applied to the Radiocommunications Agency for two of the hitherto BT duplex channels following closure of BT Coast Radio Stations.

No difficulties were encountered with the introduction of Medilink equipment into HM Coastguard Co-ordination Centres. The TeleConnect Units installed for Medilink purposes have been used successfully on each occasion medical advice has been sought by vessels at sea.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many incidents, by category, have been handled by each coastguard station during the last five years. [94644]

Mr. Hill: The following tables detail incidents, by category, handled by each Coastguard station during the last five years.

HM coastguard SAR activity: 1994

Pupil Funding

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the average funding allocation per child attending (a) junior and (b) secondary schools in each year from 1992 to 1998 in the Metropolitan Borough of Sefton. [94595]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Sefton's Standard Spending Assessment per pupil figures for Primary and Secondary Education from 1992–93 to 1998–99 are shown in the table.

	Primary education SSA per pupil	Secondary education SSA per pupil
1992–93	1,769	2,586
1993–94	1,788	2,596
1994–95	1,879	2,630
1995–96	1,875	2,492
1996–97	1,955	2,590
1997–98	2,038	2,662

Road Traffic Reduction

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to set targets for road traffic reduction. [94459]

Mr. Hill: We intend to publish our first report on the issue of whether to set a national road traffic reduction target, under the Road Traffic Reduction (National Targets) Act 1998, by the end of this year.

Forest Products

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies his Department has carried out or commissioned into the environmental consequences of the proposed World Trade Organisation agreement on forest products. [93836]

Mr. Mullin: The UK and its EU partners are committed to the launch of a comprehensive Round of multilateral trade negotiations at the 3rd WTO Ministerial meeting in Seattle (30 November-3 December). The UK does not believe that a sectoral approach to trade negotiations in advance of the Seattle Ministerial is the best way forward.

The European Commission is currently undertaking a sustainability assessment of the WTO new Round. The UK supports this work and UK Government officials have met with the consultants to discuss progress. This study will consider the range of possible sustainability impacts in all trade sectors likely to be affected by the Round, including forest products, and will be used by the European Union to inform its negotiating position at Seattle and thereafter.

Thameslink (Franchise Extensions)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on Thameslink's plans for franchise extensions aimed at increasing capacity. [94134]

Mr. Hill: The Franchising Director and Chief Executive of the Shadow SRA has recently invited franchises to submit bids for the renegotiation of passenger rail franchises, and encouraged them to include proposals for significant new investment in improving capacity, punctuality and reliability of services in their bids. He has also announced that he will prioritise those bids that he receives, and will take them forward for renegotiation over the coming months. The Franchising Director will review any renegotiation that he receives from Thameslink's franchise GOVIA as part of this process.

Private Hire Vehicles (Control) Act 1998

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish the regulations to bring into effect the provisions of the Private Hire Vehicles (Control) Act 1998. [94404]

Mr. Hill: During the summer we conducted jointly with the Public Carriage Office a consultation on proposals for regulating private hire vehicle operators in London. We are considering the responses, with the aim of publishing draft regulations as soon as possible. Further consultations will follow on proposals for regulating private hire drivers and vehicles.

Train Operators' Performance

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what independent evaluations are commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) the Rail Regulator of the performance of train operators. [94020]

Mr. Hill: None. The Franchising Director is responsible for monitoring the performance of train operators. Performance data provided by train operators are independently and regularly checked for the Franchising Director by the University of Sheffield. Data relating to train operators' performance are also produced by Railtrack using trackside equipment. This data is independently audited.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends next to visit the Ribble Valley. [93660]

Mr. Prescott: I have no current plans to visit Ribble Valley.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Poland. [94573]

Mr. Prescott: I visited Warsaw on 20 September to attend informal high level consultations under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change. The purpose of the meeting was to prepare for the Fifth Conference of the Parties to the Convention, to be held in Bonn from 25 October to 5 November 1999. The meeting was well attended by Ministers and other high level representatives, and proved a valuable opportunity to discuss a number of important issues. I was pleased to note that there is still strong political commitment to the process and the participants reaffirmed their determination to drive the negotiations forward. I hope we can make good progress in Bonn and pave the way for a successful outcome at the Sixth Conference of the Parties, which is the deadline for decisions on key outstanding issues.

Planning Decisions

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local authority planning decisions have been overturned on appeal by (a) the Planning Inspector and (b) himself in each of the last two years. [93718]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Planning Inspectorate, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Nigel Evans, dated 19 October 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about local authority planning decisions that have been overturned by the Planning Inspectorate and the Secretary of State over the past two years.

The information requested is as follows:

Planning appeals against refusal

Appeal decided during	Decisions overturned by Inspectors	Decisions overturned by Secretary of State	Total
1997–98	4,200	31	4,231
1998–99	4,001	29	4,030

Regional Government

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many letters he has received from people living in Lancashire in support of a regional tier of government for the north-west. [94187]

Ms Beverley Hughes: None.

Unoccupied Shops

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) shops and (b) dwellings above shops are currently unoccupied. [93695]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Some local authorities collect data on empty retail units, but we do not hold national figures. There are 315,000 existing dwellings over shops in total in England, of which 18 per cent. or approximately 57,000, are empty (1996 figures).

New Homes (Lancashire)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 387, on new homes built in Lancashire in 1998, how many were built on (a) brownfield sites and (b) greenfield sites. [93673]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information requested is not available. Estimates of the proportion of new homes built on previously developed land are available from the Department's Land Use Change Statistics, for Government Office Regions but not yet for counties. Latest figures show that, in 1994, 57 per cent. of new dwellings were built on previously developed land in the north-west, and 43 per cent. were built on land that was not previously developed. These figures exclude new dwellings provided from conversion of existing buildings, for which reliable information is not available below national level.

Estimates of the number of houses built are available from the Department's housing completion statistics at county level, but these do not distinguish houses built on greenfield and brownfield land.

These sources are under review and will be developed to provide more detailed, timely information.

Sussex Downs

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make an announcement about the future structure and funding of the successor body to the Sussex Downs Conservation Board. [94463]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 29 September that he was asking the Countryside Agency to consider, in consultation with the local authorities concerned, designating a National Park in the South Downs. In the event of a National Park designation being confirmed, a South Downs National Park Authority could be expected to become the successor body to the Sussex Downs Conservation Board. Arrangements for the structure and funding of National Park Authorities are laid down in the Environment Act 1995. Almost three-quarters of the membership is made up of local councillors, including parish representatives. Current funding arrangements provide for 75% of core budgets to come direct from central Government, with the remaining 25% coming from constituent local authorities, compensated through the revenue support grant.

I met the hon. Member as part of a delegation from East and West Sussex and Hampshire on 12 October. As I indicated then, the Countryside Agency will liaise closely with all the local authorities across the South Downs to ensure that any recommendations it makes for a National Park properly take into account the particular characteristics of the area. I also indicated that Ministers would place importance on there being a smooth transition from the Sussex Downs Conservation Board to a successor body.

Bird-proofing

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce legislation for compulsory proofing of premises against birds; and if he will make a statement. [94454]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Local authorities already have powers to deal with bird nuisance through a variety of measures including the Public Health Act 1961, the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Government have no plans to introduce further legislation.

"Renegade" Collision

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made with the Marine Accidents Investigation Branch's inquiry into a collision between the Irish fishing vessel "Renegade" and an unidentified merchant vessel which occurred on 26 July; if he will place a copy of the report of the inquiry in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [93942]

Mr. Hill: The Marine Accidents Investigation Branch will not be investigating the collision between the Irish fishing vessel "Renegade" and a merchant vessel as both vessels were non-UK registered and the accident happened outside UK territorial waters. However, the Irish authorities are investigating the incident.

Disabled Rail Passengers

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Office of the Rail Regulator will publish the revised code of practice for disabled passengers. [94526]

Mr. Hill: The Rail Regulator has prepared a draft revision of his Code of Practice "Meeting the needs of Disabled Passengers". The draft version is currently subject to a technical consultation and the Regulator plans to publish the document in draft form during November 1999. He will invite comments from a wide range of interested parties including rail operators and representatives of disability groups.

JANSC

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the training and arrangements for consultation on, and consideration of, the future operation of the JANSC or its successor body. [94338]

Mr. Mullin: The future role and operation of the successor body to the JANSC is currently being formulated, in consultation with the Civil Aviation Authority and the Ministry of Defence. Once finalised, these will be encapsulated within formal Directions to the CAA, and made available to the House.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the time scale and arrangements for the exploration of his proposal for more conventional contractual arrangements for the provision of air traffic control services by NATS to BAA plc. [94337]

Mr. Mullin: Where NATS provides air traffic control services at an airport, it does so on the basis of a contract with the airport operator. However, the means by which it charges for these services differs between six of the BAA airports and other airports. Outside the BAA-run airports, NATS is paid by the airport operator, but in the case of Aberdeen, Edinburgh, Gatwick, Glasgow, Heathrow and Stansted, the contractual arrangement between NATS and the BAA provides for NATS to charge airlines directly for its services. No other provider of air traffic control services at airports has the ability to recover its charges direct from the airlines.

The Government, in line with its expressed desire to explore the feasibility and desirability of a more conventional contractual arrangement, have recently written to representatives of the airlines, air users and the airport operators. These parties have been invited to comment on the arguments for and against direct charging for air traffic control provision at airports.

The Government propose that the CAA, as regulator, should review how direct charging is working after the PPP is set up. In carrying out this review, the CAA will consult with air traffic control service providers, airport operators and users. The Government will take a final view as to whether the facility should be extended to all providers, or should be withdrawn, when this review is complete. It is not the Government's intention unilaterally to force an end to a charging method that, on reflection of the arguments, was acceptable to all three parties involved.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on those synergies which are to result from the public private partnership proposed by the Government for the future of National Air Traffic Services Ltd. [94322]

Mr. Mullin: We are determined to secure a genuine partnership between the public and private sectors. Private sector status will allow important investment and management decisions to be taken on commercial grounds while the public sector interest will be protected through the Golden Share, the shareholders agreements and the Government appointed partnership directors. There will also be a stakeholder council to provide a forum for consultation with all stakeholders in the partnership.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what level of proposed reduction in the Government's shareholding in NATS it will be required to seek prior parliamentary approval. [94330]

Mr. Mullin: The Government intend to retain a 49 per cent. stake in NATS and will seek to ensure through legislation that there can be no reduction below this level without Parliamentary approval. In addition to this, a mechanism will be devised which will allow for limited dilution of the Government's stake if that is necessary in order to raise investment capital.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the detailed discussions which are to take place with potential strategic partners in the public private partnership proposed by the Government for the future of National Air Traffic Services Ltd on the suggested employee share scheme, setting out the arrangements for the timing and publication of the results of these discussions. [94323]

Mr. Mullin: The Government have said that 5 per cent. of NATS shares will be made available for an employee share scheme. Details of that scheme are being developed and we intend to discuss proposals with pre-qualified potential strategic partners, and with employee representatives in due course. However, as the pre-qualification process cannot begin until well into the Parliamentary process for the legislation which will enable the PPP to be effected this will not be for some time.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the dates and duration of the meetings held by (i) himself and (ii) his Ministers with representatives of trade unions representing staff at National Air Traffic Services Ltd in the six months prior to 27 July. [94320]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister met with representatives of the IPMS and PCS on 27 July 1999 to discuss the NATS PPP.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect on employment levels of the Government's proposed sale of 51 per cent. of National Air Traffic Services Ltd in the (i) five years and (ii) 10 years following the sale. [94321]

Mr. Mullin: No formal assessment of staffing levels has been undertaken by the Government. However, it is expected that due to the continued increase in the growth of Air Traffic, coupled with the new opportunities the PPP will create, there should be no adverse effect on staffing levels as a result of the PPP.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the proportion of employees taken on by the public private partnership proposed for National Air Traffic Services Ltd who will be able to join the Civil Aviation Authority Pension Scheme. [94331]

Mr. Mullin: All NATS staff who are in employment with the company at the time the public-private partnership is established will be entitled to remain in the Civil Aviation Authority Pension Scheme. It will be up to the strategic partner to determine the pension arrangements to be offered to staff taken on by the partnership after it is established.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the decisions of the regulator proposed for Air Traffic Services in determining a dispute between the service provider and users envisaged under the public private partnership proposed for the future of National Air Traffic Services Ltd. will be open to judicial review. [94328]

Mr. Mullin: Decisions of the regulator will be open to judicial review in the same way as those of regulators in other regulated industries.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those potential strategic partners identified by the Government to date for participation in the public private partnership proposed for the future of National Air Traffic Services Ltd. [94324]

Mr. Mullin: The strategic partner for the NATS PPP will be selected following a competitive tender process. The Government will seek the widest possible participation in the process in the first instance, to enable them to pre-qualify a shortlist of quality and most appropriate candidates.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment has been made of the proposal that the employee share distribution involved in the public private partnership arrangements proposed for the future of National Air Traffic Services Ltd should include the distribution of shares into a Trust fund controlled by the employees. [94325]

Mr. Mullin: The form of the employee share scheme will be discussed with NATS staff representatives in due course. A Trust Fund is one option which will be considered.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the assurances to be given to leisure users of National Air Traffic Services Ltd on their exemption from certain charges under the proposed public private partnership. [94336]

Mr. Mullin: Leisure fliers are currently exempt from most air traffic control charges and NATS is not seeking to change this. There have, of course, long been differing views as to whether these exemptions should continue. But there will be full consultation with air users and other interested parties, if at any time in the future, there are proposals to remove these exemptions.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what mechanism will be set up to assess on its merits each occasion when it is necessary for the United Kingdom to be represented in international fora on air traffic matters by (a) Government officials and (b) the private sector partner envisaged in the public private partnership proposed for National Air Traffic Services Ltd. [94327]

Mr. Mullin: The question of United Kingdom representation at international fora is presently being considered. Many international panels and study groups, upon which the UK is represented, are highly technical in nature. In such cases the prospect of a conflict between commercial and public interest may be minor, and outweighed by the benefit of having the best qualified body take the lead. The Government are the signatory to most international instruments and must, therefore, ensure both that all interests are taken into account in deciding the UK's negotiating position, and that all relevant sources of expertise are used to the greatest effect.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the dates and duration of the meetings held by (i) himself and (ii) his Ministers with the senior management of National Air Traffic Services Ltd in the six months prior to 27 July. [94319]

Mr. Mullin: In the six months up to 27 July, the Minister for Transport met with Senior Management of NATS on 4 March, and 8, 22 and 27 July. The DPM met with senior officials of NATS in a separate meeting on 27 July, and that meeting was also attended by the Minister for Transport.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals to take powers of direction over National Air Traffic Services Ltd, the Civil Aviation Authority and UK civil aviation in times of hostilities, severe international tension or great national emergency; and what will be the arrangements for consultation on these proposals. [94334]

Mr. Mullin: The Government will need to be able to exercise control over NATS operations, and over UK civil aviation in the event of crisis, war, severe international tension or national emergency. The Government therefore intend to bring forward legislative proposals to take powers to direct the CAA, NATS and any other owner or operator of a relevant asset to:

participate in planning for an emergency;

in the case of the CAA, to discharge its functions in accordance with the directions; in the case of owners of assets and operators of air services, manage the asset or provide the service in accordance with the directions.

The Government will be seeking the consent of Parliament to these powers of direction being available in times of hostilities, severe international tension or great national emergency.

The Government's proposals were set out in the consultation paper "A public/private partnership for National Air Traffic Services Ltd (NATS)", published on 20 October 1998, and in the Government's report on the responses received, which was published on 27 July 1999.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contingency arrangements are to be put in place to ensure the uninterrupted provision of air traffic control services and the compliance of the United Kingdom with its international obligations in the event of insolvency of a strategic partner in the proposed public private partnership for National Air Traffic Services Ltd. [94326]

Mr. Mullin: The United Kingdom is bound by the Chicago Convention to provide continued air navigation services in national airspace. Where the company is, or is likely to become, insolvent, the proposed legislation will provide that the Secretary of State and the regulator have powers to petition the courts for a special administration order, to appoint an administrator to manage the affairs of the company. The administrator will oversee the transfer to another company, as a going concern, sufficient of the licensee's business to ensure that the licensed activities can be properly carried out, and to ensure that the licensed activities are carried out pending completion of the transfer. It is envisioned that these powers would be applied in the event that NATS was or was likely to be unable to pay its debts, or if it would be just and equitable under the Insolvency Act for the company to be wound up.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what sanctions the Economic Regulator will be able to impose under the public private partnership proposed by the Government for the future of National Air Traffic Services Ltd. for any abuse of the monopoly position of the private sector strategic partner. [94335]

Mr. Mullin: The Government feel that any proposed enforcement regime should be both prompt and effective. However, in order to ensure that the UK can provide an uninterrupted service—as the Chicago Convention requires—the holder of the en-route licence must be allowed to continue its licensed activities while any abuse of its monopoly position is rectified. To this end, the Government will be seeking powers for the CAA, as economic regulator, to secure, where necessary, Provisional or Final Enforcement Orders. These Orders will be used to prevent any contravention or likely contravention of a licence obligation. The regulator will be able to enforce such Orders through civil proceedings, in order to obtain appropriate relief.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what mechanisms and criteria he will use under the public private partnership proposed by the Government for the future of National Air Traffic Services Ltd., to determine whether the strategic partner is, and remains, a fit and proper person whose ownership will not compromise the public interest or national security. [94333]

Mr. Mullin: The strategic partner will be selected via a rigorous, competitive process—to ensure that they have the pre-requisite financial capability, proven commercial management expertise and strategic rationale for investing in NATS.

The Government will wish to satisfy themselves, at the earliest possible stage of the selection process, that the strategic partner passes all probity and national security examinations. The Government will also ensure resolution of any actual or perceived conflict of interest issues and that the partner is committed to maintaining and, where necessary, improving NATS provision of safe air traffic control services to users of UK airspace.

The design of the remaining stages of the process will allow bidders the opportunity to demonstrate their understanding of the aviation industry and public interest concerns. Shortlisted bidders will be required to prepare thorough final offers which will detail their long term commercial business plans for NATS and allow them to provide commitments for the further development and enhancement of NATS infrastructure and the broadening of NATS management skill base.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the response by the trade unions representing NATS staff to the Government's plans for selling 51 per cent. of National Air Traffic Services Ltd. [94332]

Mr. Mullin: The Trade Unions response to the Government's proposals for the future of NATS was contained in a joint submission made by the Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists and the Public and Commercial Services Union. In it, the Unions recognised the case for change, in order to access additional sources of capital investment, to meet the needs of maintaining existing safety and efficiency levels against increased traffic. However, they disagreed on the best way to achieve this, arguing that NATS should stay in the public sector, and putting forward as their preferred solution, an Independent Publicly Owned Company (IPOC) option.

The Government considered the IPOC model, and a range of other options, both in deciding on their preferred option in the first instance and in considering the responses to the public consultation. There are many similarities between the IPOC model and the New Partnership Company, but the Government believe that the New Partnership Company approach supplies all the solutions of an IPOC model, but with additional benefits.

In common with the IPOC, the New Partnership Company secures access to private capital, separates regulation from operations, introduces economic regulation, involves all stakeholders in the company's future, provides for Government to appoint Partnership Directors, gives Government—and consequently the taxpayer—annual dividends, and provides on-going assurances that the company is operating properly in the national interest. However, the New Partnership Company also:

removes any future risk of investment counting in the public accounts and therefore becoming subject to Government controls; enables private sector investment, project and commercial management expertise to be introduced;

brings in genuine private sector efficiency drivers at the outset; gives the company more freedom to extend its operations world-wide, while minimising the risk to the taxpayer of possible financial failure; provides proceeds for use in other transport projects.

The Unions also put forward a trust model (such as NavCanada) as an alternative to IPOC, if the Government's overriding objective was to raise proceeds for other transport projects. The Government also considered a trust model in deciding on their preferred option. They concluded that, while a trust might offer limited benefits, primarily the potential for involving airspace users and NATS staff, there were a number of weaknesses in the model. These included the lack of real commercial incentives or disciplines, making costs higher than they could be, difficulties in ensuring adequate accountability, and the potential complexity of the ownership structure.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what communication he has received from the institutions of the European Community concerning the proposed share of Her Majesty's Government in the re-organised National Air Traffic Services; and if he will list the articles of any treaty relating thereto. [94635]

Mr. Mullin: A copy of the Government's consultation paper, setting out the proposals for the Public-Private Partnership, was sent to the European Commission at the time of its Publication in October 1998. The commission acknowledged receipt of the document and said that it awaited, with interest, further developments.

In July 1999, the Government sent a copy of their report on the responses to the consultation exercise to the Commission, and offered an explanatory presentation, at official level, of the proposals. Arrangements for this presentation, particularly on the proposed regulatory, are oversight of the new partnership company currently in hand.

Housing Developments

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that substantial new housing developments have access to the necessary infrastructure and services; and if he will make a statement. [94157]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The draft policy planning guidance note 3 (Housing), which is now being finalised in the light of consultation, requires all major housing developments to be planned as communities. This implies adequate infrastructure and services.

Commercial Airline Pilots

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the recruitment and training of pilots for commercial airlines. [94027]

Mr. Mullin: This is one of the issues that was considered by the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs (ETRA) Transport Sub-Committee into Aviation Safety. The report was published on 21 July 1999.

We are currently considering all of the Select Committee report's recommendations. Our response will be before the House as soon as possible.

Wildlife Sites

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's legislative proposals on the protection of (a) SSSIs and (b) other wildlife sites; and what plans he has for the restoration of damaged sites. [94380]

Mr. Mullin: The Government will bring forward legislation to ensure the better protection and management of SSSIs as soon as Parliamentary time permits. Measures to be taken were set out in "The Government's Framework for Action" on 2 August.

Increased emphasis on positive management agreements, backed up by new powers to combat neglect, will lead to an improvement in condition for all our SSSIs through better protection and management.

In addition, we have set up a Local Sites Review Group to consider how local authorities and other bodies can best contribute to the identification, protection and management of locally important sites.

Lead Shot

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his proposals for the use of lead shot. [94378]

Mr. Mullin: On 1 September 1999, legislation to restrict the use of lead shot came into force in England. Regulations to restrict the use of lead shot in Scotland and Wales are a matter for the Scottish Parliament and the Welsh Assembly respectively.

The regulation prohibits the use of lead shot on or over all Ramsar sites, as well as those Special Protection Areas and other Sites of Special Scientific Interest (SSSIs) that have been identified as being sites important for waterfowl by English Nature. The regulation will also apply to areas below the high water mark of ordinary spring tides (only some of which are already designated as SSSIs). Outside these areas, the regulation prohibits the use of lead shot for shooting all species of Anatidea (ducks and geese) together with moorhen, coot golden plover and snipe.

A13

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contracts for the improvement of the A13 have been let; when, under the terms of the contract, they were due to be completed; and when each contract is expected to be completed. [94365]

Mr. Hill: Three contracts have been let in recent years to improve the A13: West of Heathway to Thames Avenue, Thames Avenue to Wennington and Wennington to Mar Dyke.

The contractual completion dates are, respectively, May 1999, March 1997 and August 1998.

We expect the Heathway to Thames Avenue scheme to be finished around November/December 1999; the other two schemes were completed in May 1997 and October 1998 respectively.

The West of Heathway scheme has been delayed by problems with statutory undertaker's equipment and there have been some difficulties with the design and construction of a complex viaduct. The other two schemes were delayed because of problems with earthworks.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list his Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93678]

Mr. Prescott: The spending on official publications since May 1997, which includes the costs incurred by the department in publishing, preparation, production and purchase of copies for official use, was £5,897,683. Where the Department makes use of a private sector publisher, the publishing, printing and design costs are generally met by the publisher as part of their acceptance of the risks of publication.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of his Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the last five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. [93843]

Ms Beverley Hughes: A list of corporate internal publications produced by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions since immediately before its creation in June 1997 has been placed in the Library. The Department's policy has been to rationalise the number of regular staff newsletters and magazines to improve communication and save money; periodic publications that have been incorporated into others have been marked with an asterisk.

Information about the former departments of the Environment and Transport before April 1997 is not readily available and could be gathered only at disproportionate expense.

Flaxmill

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in granting planning permission for Flaxmill; and if he will make a statement. [94123]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Secretary of State has decided that the applications for planning permission and for listed building consent with regard to Flaxmill should not be referred to him for determination. He has notified Shrewsbury and Atcham Borough Council of his decision. This is now a matter for the local planning authority.

Diesel Spillages

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce legislation to make negligent spillage of diesel on highways an endorsable offence; and if he will make a statement. [93646]

Mr. Hill: There is an offence, under existing regulations, of "using a vehicle in a dangerous condition" the penalty for which in the case of goods vehicles and buses includes an endorsement of 3 penalty points. It would be for the police and the courts to decide whether such an offence might apply to a case where a motorist had spilled diesel on the road.

The Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 currently require that fuel tanks must be constructed and maintained in such a manner that neither liquid nor vapour can escape from them. Anyone failing to comply with these Regulations may be liable to a maximum fine of £2,500.

The European Parliament is currently considering changes to the Fuel Tank Directive (70/221/EEC) which would require fuel caps to be securely attached to the tank. When applied in the UK this amendment should reduce the risk of spillage even further.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to include road accidents caused by diesel spillage as a separate category within road accident statistics; and if he will make a statement. [93645]

Mr. Hill: Data on the presence of oil or diesel on the road surface at the site of a road accident have been collected as a separate category within road accident statistics from the beginning of 1999. It was introduced following a review of the collection of national road accident statistics. No information is collected nationally on the contributory factors to accidents.

Regional Planning (London)

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the regional planning process in London. [94288]

Mr. Hill: The Government are putting in place new procedures for the regional planning process in London. The proposals were outlined in the White Paper "A Mayor and Assembly for London" and are contained in the Greater London Authority Bill currently before Parliament.

The Boroughs will remain the local planning authorities for their areas, but the Mayor will be responsible for drawing up strategic planning guidance in the form of a new Spatial Development Strategy (SDS) for London. The detailed content of the SDS will be for the Mayor to consider but, in general terms, it is expected to address all issues of strategic importance to the capital with a spatial dimension. The SDS will also provide a common spatial framework for all the Mayor's strategies and policies. Borough Unitary Development Plans will be required to be in general conformity with the SDS.

Present strategic planning policy for London is contained in The Secretary of State's Strategic Guidance for London Planning Authorities, and its annexes. This will remain in place until the Mayor produces the first Spatial Development Strategy.

The Mayor must also have a means of intervening in the development control process where issues of genuine strategic importance are concerned. The Mayor will therefore become a statutory consultee for planning applications of potential strategic importance. The Mayor will also have the power to direct a Borough to refuse planning permission for these cases where he or she considers this necessary on strategic grounds. The criteria for applications that will be notified to the Mayor were announced by my hon. Friend the Member for Greenwich and Woolwich (Mr. Raynsford) on 15 March 1999, Official Report, columns 472–74, and will now be taken forward into secondary legislation. The Government will be carrying out further consultation on the draft secondary legislation associated with the Mayor's planning role shortly.

The Mayor will also be responsible for representing London's interests on broader strategic planning matters, including at the regional level.

Dangerous Goods Cargo

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many dangerous goods incidents attributed to the carriage of cargo have been reported to the CAA in the last 12 months; how many of these were investigated; how many of these were forwarded to the CPS for prosecution; and how many led to successful prosecutions. [94539]

Mr. Mullin: In the twelve months to the end of September 1999, the Civil Aviation Authority received 126 reports of incidents involving dangerous goods carried as cargo. The CAA's Dangerous Goods Office reviews the circumstances of all reported incidents and will take appropriate action. If an incident is the result of a deliberate action or has potentially serious consequences, it may be referred to the CAA's Aviation Regulation Enforcement and Investigation Branch for formal investigation. Five of the dangerous goods incidents reported in the last 12 months have been referred for formal investigation. So far, one of these incidents has resulted in a prosecution by the CAA. That prosecution was successful.

Housing (North-west)

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in meeting targets for housing on recycled land in the north-west. [94533]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department's Land Use Change Statistics show that, in 1994, 57% of new dwellings were built on previously developed land in the north-west, but these figures exclude conversions from existing buildings. The existing Regional Planning Guidance for the region emphasises the importance of channelling growth back into the main urban areas, but gives no targets. This guidance is currently being reviewed, and the issue of an appropriate target for the reuse of previously developed land and buildings for housing is under consideration.

Audit Fees

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government take to regulate the size of audit fees for small village councils. [94531]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The setting of audit fees in respect of the audit of accounts is a statutory responsibility of the independent Audit Commission under Section 7 of the Audit Commission Act 1998. The Secretary of State has no powers to direct an auditor or the Audit Commission on the conduct of an audit.

The Commission is aware of the burden that audit costs can impose on small parish councils and have introduced measures designed to reduce fees. Parish Council audit fees are charged at a rate that is 40% of that charged for principal authorities. Parishes with an income below £5,000 per annum can reduce the burden further by adopting the 'triennial scheme' which allows three annual audits to be undertaken together to save on the overheads associated with an audit.

Sellafield MOX Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many responses were received to the public consultation which closed on 23 July on the Sellafield MOX plant; what proportions were in favour; and what proportion were received from abroad. [94154]

Mr. Meacher: A total of 332 responses were received during the public consultation period on the economic case for the Sellafield MOX plant. Of these, 16 (5 per cent.) were in favour, and 32 (10 per cent.) were from abroad.

Green Ministers Committee

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Elmet (Mr. Burgon), 16 July 1999, Official Report, column 341, if he will list the Departments which did not send a Minister to the Green Ministers' meeting of 6 July, indicating the reasons given for non-attendance; and if he will make a statement. [94294]

Mr. Meacher: The Departments represented by Ministers were: Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions; Law Officers Departments; Department of Trade and Industry; Home Office; Ministry of Defence; Department of Culture, Media and Sport; the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food; and the Northern Ireland Office. Those represented by officials were: the Chancellor's Departments; Cabinet Office; Department for Education and Employment; Department for Health; and Department of Social Security. The Departments not represented were: Foreign and Commonwealth Office; Lord Chancellor's Department; and the Department for International Development.

Several Ministers were absent from the meeting because they were attending a ministerial awayday organised by the Cabinet Office on behalf of the Prime Minister.

The first annual report of the Green Ministers Committee has been published since the meeting. This sets out in some detail the achievements and future plans of the Committee.

Powered Garden Tools

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to bring forward measures to restrict the use of powered garden tools on Sundays. [93644]

Mr. Hill: The Government have no plans to bring forward measures to restrict the use of powered garden tools on Sundays.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what dates Special Advisers from his Department have visited the United States of America on official business since 1 May 1997; which of his Special Advisers took part in each visit; and if he will list the meetings which these Special Advisers held with members and officials of the United States Government during each visit, specifying the date and location of each meeting and the names of the US members and officials at each meeting. [93959]

Mr. Prescott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 27 July 1999, Official Report, column 332. In addition, I was accompanied by a Special Adviser when I undertook a further visit to the United States of America in April 1999.

Ministerial Meetings (United States)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what meetings he held with members and officials of the United States Government during his visit on 7 to 9 June 1998 to the United States of America for the UN Special Session on Drugs; and if he will list the date and location of each meeting, and the names of the members and officials of the United States Government at each meeting. [93950]

Mr. Prescott: None.

MTBE Contamination

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what analysis he has carried out where MTBE has been found in ground water and aquifers; and if he will make a statement; [93666]

(2) what assessment he has made of the extent of ground water contamination by MTBE; if he will list those sites where MTBE contamination has been detected; and if he will make a statement. [93665]

Mr. Mullin: At the request of my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, the Environment Agency is undertaking a research project to establish the incidence of MTBE in England and Wales, the results of which are expected in the first half of next year. The Environment Agency has already monitored for MTBE at 300 sites in its Thames region. MTBE was found at the sites listed although my advice is that the observed concentrations are all below the level at which it has been suggested that health hazards may arise.

FPSO (Fires)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contingency plans he has for responses to major fire on board any of the FPSO in severe weather conditions in the oil fields west of Shetland; and if he will make a statement. [94528]

Mr. Meacher: Arrangements are in place; the response to a major fire would be dealt with by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) in co-operation with operators of offshore installations and the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI). In line with Lord Donaldson's report on command and control at sea, DTI would co-ordinate in the event of an incident involving a Floating Production, Storage and Offloading (FPSO) installation at anchor, where there is risk of or actual damage to the environment.

Under health and safety law, operators must assess major accident hazards, including fires, and take appropriate measures to deal with them. The Health and Safety Executive enforces these requirements, and inspects the installations to ensure measures are in place.

School Bus Transport

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to improve the safety of school bus transport. [94723]

Mr. Hill: The use of buses is already considered the safest way to transport children to and from schools. With the introduction of seat belts on forward facing seats in coaches and minibuses carrying groups of children on organised trips we have already implemented measures that improve the safety of these vehicles.

A new School Travel Advisory Group has been set up to advise local authorities, school governors and teachers etc. on the best practices for operating school travel. It includes safety as part of its remit.

Rent Service

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made with the establishment of the Rent Service as a Next Steps executive agency. [94817]

Mr. Mullin: The Rent Service was established as a Next Steps Executive Agency on 1 October 1999. Copies of the Agency's Framework Document have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The aim of the Agency is to provide for rental valuations which are impartial and fair to tenants, landlords and taxpayers.

I have set the following targets for the Agency for the remainder of 1999–2000:

1. Achieve targets for service delivery set out in table below.
2. Manage the Service within financial allocation.
3. Implement new and streamlined management structure by end November 1999, including appointment of Area Managers, posts in the Quality Inspectorate and regional redetermination teams.
4. Develop and implement effective Agency systems for finance, personnel, training and development, internal and external communication, and the quality control of valuation by 31 March 2000.
5. Put in place by the end of October 1999 a detailed plan for the implementation of the new IT system and abide by that plan.
6. Produce detailed action plan for phased rationalisation of the office structure in London by 31 October 1999 and implement first phase by 31 March 2000. Produce detailed action plan for reorganisation of the office structure outside London by 31 December 1999.
7. Negotiate and conclude 1999 pay settlement for rent officers. Develop plan to negotiate harmonised terms and conditions for Agency staff by 31 March 2000.

London Transport

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the Government's performance targets for (a) London Underground and (b) London Buses have been met in the last two years. [91528]

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of her Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July quarterly report to the House. [93566]

Marjorie Mowlam: Details of the Cabinet Office, its Agencies and associated public bodies—for which I am responsible—progress in tackling the bug are set out in our quarterly monitoring returns. These show that work on all business critical systems, embedded chips and telecommunications systems is now complete. The results of the October monthly review of progress of Departments and agencies in tackling the bug are due to be announced shortly by the President of the Council.

There has been a slight slippage in ensuring the compliance of a few non-business critical applications and embedded systems. This work had been scheduled for completion by the end of September. Some of this has now been completed and contingency arrangements have been invoked to ensure compliance of all systems by the end of October.

In line with CCTA guidance, all areas including No. 10 will have Business Continuity Plans and Millennium Operating Regimes in place and tested by the end of October.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July quarterly report to the House. [93565]

Mr. Wills: The Department's millennium readiness programme was completed in April 1999. Prior to completion of the programme, all of the Department's systems were subjected to a rigorous testing process. Consequently, there has been no slippage since the July quarterly report to the House.

Where functions delivered by the Department involve the provision of public services, business continuity plans have been developed and tested. In addition to subjecting continuity plans to rigorous testing, each plan, and test results, have been subjected to independent assessment before being agreed.

Similar progress has been made in the Employment Service where the millennium readiness programme was completed in June 1999 with business continuity plans completed and tested in August 1999.

Details of the Department's and the Employment Service's progress in tackling the bug are set out in their quarterly monitoring returns. These are available in the Libraries of the House and are published on the internet. The results of the October monthly review of progress of Government Departments and agencies in tackling the bug are due to be announced shortly by the President of the Council.

Vocational Programmes

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students are currently on (a) GNVQ and (b) NVQ programmes; and what proportion achieved their intended qualifications in each of the last five years. [94736]

Mr. Wicks: The figures requested are shown in the following table. Information on the proportion of students achieving GNVQ and NVQ qualifications is not available on a consistent basis for all GNVQs and NVQs.

Numbers on NVQ/GNVQ programmes

Academic year	Numbers studying for: NVQs [1]	GNVQs [2]
1994–95	660	n/a
1995–96	799	n/a
1996–97	871	198
1997–98	789	186
1998–99	856	[3]—

[2] These are figures for England, Wales and Northern Ireland taken from the Joint Council for National Vocational Awarding Bodies annual press notice.
[3] To be published in November 1999.

Able Pupils

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to reflect the attainments of able pupils who take GCSEs early in school performance tables. [94740]

Jacqui Smith: The achievements of such pupils have been included in performance tables since they were first published in 1992.

Level 3 Qualifications

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for the last five years the numbers and proportions of whole Level 3 qualifications obtained through (a) GCE A Level, (b) GNVQs, (c) NVQs and (d) other recognised qualifications. [94731]

Mr. Wicks: The information requested is shown in the following table. Information on the proportion of people gaining level Figures are for England unless stated otherwise.

Table 1 Numbers of Level 3 qualifications awarded by type (1993/94–1997/98)

Qualification type	Academic year qualification was issued
	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
2 or more GCE A Levels[1]	164,469	164,597	169,345	182,523	188,173
Advanced GNVQ	1,210	11,493	28,078	34,274	39,011
NVQ Level 3	[2]25,114	[2]48,682	[2]63,794	[2]90,385	90,343
Other VQs Level 3[3]	123,736	101,965	83,685	66,560	57,672

[1] The figures represent the number of people who have achieved two or more passes at A level. A levels are level 3 courses but a person needs to have two or more passes at A level to have achieved the same as an advanced GNVQ or a NVQ level 3.
[2] Figures are for United Kingdom only.
[3] Other (unregulated) vocational qualification only relate to those awarded by the following awarding bodies (Oxford Cambridge and RSA (OCR), Edexcel and City and Guilds).

Level 2 Graduation Test

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultations he has held with disability interests concerning the modification of the Level 2 graduation test at age 19 years for those with special educational needs. [94679]

Mr. Wicks: The Qualifications Curriculum Authority (QCA) will be consulting disability interests as part of its remit to develop and consult on options for a 'graduation' certificate.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements he will make for further progression after Level 2 graduation at age 19 years; and if modern apprenticeships will remain open to young adults who have graduated from Level 2. [94684]

Mr. Wicks: The Government are committed to offering continuing learning opportunities for young people. Those, for example, who have successfully completed NVQ qualifications at level 2 are encouraged to progress to further training or vocational education. Many will opt for Modern Apprenticeships, where funding is available until the young person's 25th birthday.

Student Loans

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the starting-point of annual income for the repayment of student loans which are in (a) income-contingent and (b) old-style mortgage loans. [94743]

Mr. Wicks: The starting point of annual income for the repayment of student loans which are income-contingent will be £10,000; the starting point of annual income for the repayment of student loans which are old-style mortgage loans is £18,192 in academic year 1999–2000. The repayment of income-contingent loans will be fairer than mortgage-style because it will be tied closely to income. Repayments will be based on 9 per cent. of income over £10,000 a year so that repayments will increase or decrease in line with changes in income. The repayment of mortgage style loans above the threshold is not income-contingent. A fixed proportion of the loan has to be repaid each year: someone earning £20,000 a year will repay the some monthly sum as someone earning £40,000.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will announce arrangements for the extension of loans to part-time students. [94745]

Mr. Wicks: My noble Friend the Minister for Education and Employment announced on 29 January that from 2000–01 we would make loans available to part-time students on low incomes to help with the costs of study, and would announce details later this year. The Department is now analysing information from the Student Income and Expenditure Survey, and will make a further announcement before Christmas.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students hold means-tested loans; and what is their overall value. [94744]

Mr. Wicks: The Student Loans Company have informed me that at 15 October 1999, cheques have been issued to 325,000 students under the new student support arrangements. The total value of the loans was approximately £346 million. These figures are for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received about delays in the delivery of student loan cheques following their arrival at college for the autumn term. [94675]

Mr. Wicks: To date, my Department has received one e-mail about delays in the delivery of this term's student loan cheques. Students who applied on time and provided the necessary documentation should have received their cheques: that is a considerable achievement by all concerned.

Learning Accounts

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received about the current acceptability of individual learning account credits to higher education institutions; and what advice he has circulated to them. [94732]

Mr. Wicks: The Department has not received any representation about the current acceptability of individual learning account credits to higher education institutions, nor have we issued specific advice to higher education institutions on the acceptability of credits.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many individual learning accounts are currently open; and what is their cumulative value. [94734]

Mr. Wicks: By the end of August 22,530 individual learning accounts were opened through Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs). The cumulative contribution from TEC resources to these accounts is £734,277. These are the first pilot accounts. The national framework will be rolled out as planned in 2000. Under that we expect to see a rapid build-up towards the target of 1 million accounts in 2002.

Inspection Procedures

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has for co-ordination of inspection procedures for post-compulsory education between Ofsted, the Further Education Funding Council Inspectorate and the Training Standards Council Inspectorate. [94761]

Mr. Wicks: Under the proposals in our "Learning to Succeed" White Paper (CM 4392), we will bring together the current arrangements for the inspection of provision for post-16 education, (excluding higher education), and of work-based training, into a single system.

Ofsted will take responsibility for the inspection of 16–19 provision in schools and colleges. For post-19 provision in colleges, and for work-based provision for all age-groups, there will be a new independent Inspectorate. The two Inspectorates will work together, where appropriate, to plan a joint inspection plan for sixth form, further education and tertiary colleges, working to a common inspection framework.

Social Exclusion Unit Report

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many times the departmental-led Ministerial Group has met to progress the Social Exclusion Unit report (Cm 4405); and how many times the official cross-departmental implementation group has met. [94747]

Mr. Wicks: The Ministerial Steering Group has met once to progress the work set out in "Bridging the Gap: New Opportunities for 16–18 year olds not in education, employment or training". The official cross-departmental implementation group has met twice.

Careers Education

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the relationship between the proposed Connections Support Service and the existing providers of careers education and advice, with specific reference to the professional qualifications and inspection regime; if the remit covers all young people; and who is to finance the service. [94683]

Mr. Wicks: The Social Exclusion Unit report "Bridging the Gap: New Opportunities for 16–18 year olds not in education, employment or training", published in July, outlined a new support service for all 13–19 year olds. Since then we have consulted widely on the service, including its functions, structure and professional formation. The consultation closed on 15 October and we are considering responses. Decisions on the structure, professional qualifications, inspection and funding of the new service and how these will affect existing organisations providing careers education and advice to young people, will be taken following analysis of the consultation response.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice he has issued to higher education institutions about collection of tuition fees in circumstances where students have not yet received their loan cheques. [94676]

Mr. Wicks: Loan cheques are intended to cover maintenance costs rather than tuition fees and have already been issued to eligible students who applied on time and provided all the necessary documentation. We have asked higher education institutions to be flexible and sensitive in collecting tuition fees and not to bill or require payments from students whose financial assessments have not yet been completed. A copy of our written advice to institutions has been placed in the Library.

Lecturers (Professional Qualifications)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress he has made in developing new professional qualifications for lecturers in further education and the private training sector. [94762]

Mr. Wicks: All further education colleges in England will shortly be consulted about proposals. As regards the private training sector, the Employment National Training Organisation (ENTO) is currently reviewing the range and scope of its qualifications.

Adult Education (Funding)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on standards fund grants for adult and continuing education. [94756]

Mr. Wicks: The level of the 2000–01 Standards Fund grant for Local Authority Lifelong Learning Development Plans will be announced shortly. Local education authorities have an important role in lifelong learning and the grant next year will be significantly higher than this. We want authorities to use this money to reach new learners, to improve the quality of learning opportunities they offer, and to strengthen their own internal planning and their links with other learning providers. That is the way to ensure the learning opportunities they offer best meet the needs of the people they serve.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received concerning the withdrawal of local authority discretionary award schemes and the implications of new funding arrangements for improving access to further education. [94735]

Mr. Wicks: The discretionary awards scheme was not working well with large variations in funding in different parts of the country with consequential effects on access. A number of letters have been received about the new further education student support arrangements in 1999–2000. But more money will be available overall so that, in general, students are better off than in the previous year and than would have been the case had we allowed discretionary awards to continue for this year.

Study Leave

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what basis his Department is planning for 50 per cent. participation in the right to time off for study or training; and if he plans any incentives to providers to achieve this level of participation. [94681]

Mr. Wicks: The Department made a planning and costing assumption, published in the 1997 Regulatory Appraisal, based on our estimate of the number of young people aged 16 and 17 in employment, not qualified to Level 2, and not working towards a Level 2 qualification. This is a new entitlement, and performance will be kept under review. Employers can apply to the local TEC for a contribution towards the cost of the study or training.

Post-16 Education

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements he proposes to put in place to secure an element of moral and social education and pastoral arrangements in post-16 education. [94759]

Mr. Wicks: It is a matter for the individual institutions and private training providers to decide how they address moral and social education and pastoral arrangements for their post-16 students. There is no compulsory curriculum post-16, and therefore no requirement to study any particular subjects. However, for example, the new GCE A-level specifications have been written to identify, as appropriate to the subject, ways in which the study of the area can contribute to an understanding of spiritual, moral, ethical, social and cultural issues.

Hardship Loans

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will announce the result of his consultation exercise on hardship loans. [94746]

Mr. Wicks: The review of Hardship Loans and Access Funds will be completed by Christmas and the outcome will be announced in the new year.

Schools Access Initiative

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress with the Schools Access Initiative. [94725]

Jacqui Smith: The Schools Access Initiative gives capital support to make more mainstream schools accessible to pupils with disabilities and those with sensory impairments. It has run each year since 1996 and a total of £25 million had been allocated by March 1999. We have allocated a further £20 million in 1999–2000 which will benefit over 1,600 schools and are planning further big increases for the following two years.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on local education authorities' progress in developing special educational needs development plans. [94724]

Jacqui Smith: From 1 October 1998 LEAs have a statutory duty under Section 5 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 to carry out all their functions to promote high standards. Education Development Plans are three-year plans whose purpose is to draw together the main actions which LEAs are taking in pursuit of this statutory duty. They will increase accountability to schools, local partners and to Government.

Targets for special schools and information on how LEAs plan to improve standards achieved by pupils with Special Educational Needs (SEN) in their schools must be reflected in the main body of the EDP. The SEN Annex (Annex 4) gives further more detailed information about the LEA's policy.

All LEAs now have an EDP, and almost all have been approved for three years from April 1999 to March 20002. The Department will continue to monitor and evaluate EDPs during this period.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if a premium will be available for work-based training of those with special educational needs. [94752]

Mr. Wicks: The funding which the Department provides to Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs) for work-based training includes an element to cover the additional costs incurred in providing quality training for those with special training needs.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils in England carried statements of special educational need in each of the last 10 years; and what proportion of the total of pupils they represented. [94680]

Number and percentage of pupils with statement of special educational needs in England
Position in January each year

Year	Number of pupils with a statement of special educational needs	Percentage of pupils with a statement of special educational needs
1999	248,041	3.0
1998	242,294	2.9
1997	234,629	2.9
1996	227,348	2.8
1995	211,307	2.6
1994	194,541	2.5
1993	178,029	2.3
1992	160,759	2.1
1991	153,228	2.0
1990	159,485	2.1
1989	155,191	2.1

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for improving the transition planning for those aged 16 years with special educational needs. [94753]

Jacqui Smith: The Government intend to change the law in order to require local education authorities to conduct the 'transition review' of a child's statement during academic year 9. At present the transition review takes place after the child's 14th birthday, which means that the review may not in practice be undertaken until year 10. Where the young person leaves school at age 16 he or she may therefore have had only one review which has focused on the personal 'transition plan'. The proposed change will ensure that 16-year-old school leavers who have statements of special educational needs will have had the benefit of at least two and in most cases three annual reviews at which planning for their transition from school has been actively and effectively addressed. Further guidance on good practice in transition planning will be provided in the revised SEN Code of Practice.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to encourage local education authorities to alter the balance of their provision for children with special educational needs between (a) privately funded institutions, (b) publicly funded special schools and (c) inclusion in mainstream schools, respectively. [94729]

Jacqui Smith: It is for local education authorities to decide the pattern of provision they need to meet the special educational needs of pupils in their area.

Where parents want a mainstream setting for their child, our policy is to try to provide it. Equally, where more specialist provision is what is sought, it is important that parents' wishes are respected. Our approach has been practical, rather than dogmatic, with an acceptance that the key objectives must be to safeguard the interests of all children and to ensure that they achieve to their full potential. We are advocating inclusion by choice and have underlined that there remains a continuing and vital role for specialist schools.

We are seeking to join up the different sectors (maintained, independent and voluntary) and establish more effective links between the special and mainstream schools. Through the establishment of the SEN regional co-ordination projects local authorities are being encouraged to work with each other and with the voluntary and private sectors to better plan and meet the needs of pupils with special educational needs.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what initiatives he has taken to improve the education provision within the special needs sector within Sefton Metropolitan Borough. [94587]

Jacqui Smith: The Government's Programme of Action: Meeting Special Educational Needs, published in November last year, announced a package of measures designed to improve special educational needs provision across the country. As part of the targeted support available to local education authorities in 1999–2000, Sefton Metropolitan Borough was allocated £182,987 under the Special Educational Needs Standards Fund Programme and a further £152,800 under the Schools Access Initiative to make more primary and secondary schools accessible to disabled pupils.

These targeted resources are additional to the substantial increase in resources available to local education authorities via the Standard Spending Assessment. Sefton's Standard Spending Assessment for 1999–2000 was £122.2 million, an increase of £5.7 million on the previous year. It is for local education authorities to determine, within the total resources available to them, the level of resources available for special educational needs provision.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many primary and secondary children with (a) learning and (b) physical difficulties are accommodated within the mainstream school system in Sefton Metropolitan Borough. [94588]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not held centrally. However, in January 1998, of the 27,882 pupils in maintained primary schools in Sefton Metropolitan Borough, 369 were pupils with a statement of special educational needs and 4,239 were pupils with special educational needs but without a statement. Of the 19,744 pupils in maintained secondary schools in Sefton Metropolitan Borough, 506 were pupils with a statement of special educational needs and 2,020 were pupils with special educational needs but without a statement.

Academic Standards

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultations he plans on the maintenance of academic standards while extending participation in higher education to 50 per cent. of young people. [94678]

Mr. Wicks: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has announced that 50 per cent. of young adults will be able to enter higher education by the age of 30. Increased participation is likely to be largely in high quality, shorter qualifications valued by employers. Maintenance and improvement of standards would be central to any consultation.

Young Carers

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to support learning at a distance by young people who have responsibilities as carers. [94748]

Jacqui Smith: There is already a comprehensive range of distance learning materials available for young people which can be accessed by those young people who have caring responsibilities.

Education Business Partnerships

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to complete a national network of education business partnerships. [94757]

Ms Estelle Morris: There is already a national network of education business partnerships in place. We are, however, working closely with the National Education Business Partnership Network and others to strengthen the national, regional and local structures for promoting and encouraging greater collaboration between schools and business.

Educational Maintenance Allowances

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will give details of pilot schemes for Educational Maintenance Allowances and define the basis on which income eligibility is to be calculated and the number of pupils affected. [94751]

Mr. Wicks: The Education Maintenance Allowance (EMA) is being piloted in 15 local education authorities (LEAs) across England to test the effectiveness of targeted financial support on post-16 participation and attainment rates. The 15 pilot LEAs are: Middlesbrough, Walsall, Southampton, Oldham, City of Nottingham, Bolton, Doncaster, Stoke-on-Trent, Gateshead, Cornwall, Leeds, Lewisham, Southwark, Greenwich, Lambeth. Different pilot variants are being tested in different areas.

Young people resident in the pilot areas may be eligible to receive an EMA if they left Year 11 last summer, participate in full-time post-16 education at school or college, and satisfy a financial assessment based on their parents' annual gross taxable income. The full allowance (£30 in all areas except Nottingham and Oldham where £40 is the maximum) will be payable if the parents' gross taxable income is less than £13,000. For higher incomes, the amount will be tapered, down to a minimum of £5. No allowance will be payable where the taxable income exceeds £30,000 (£20,000 in London). In the London LEAs, eligibility is restricted to young people living in selected wards; in Leeds to those who attended selected schools pre-16.

The EMA will be paid during term-time only and will be stopped if the young person fails to comply with the terms of a learning agreement (such as not attending lessons) drawn up with the institution. Bonuses are payable for retention and achievement.

We estimate that around 29,000 young people in the 15 pilot areas will be eligible for an EMA.

Learning Direct Helpline

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the correlation between those accessing the Learning Direct helpline and their eventual attainment of (a) qualifications at Level 2 or above and (b) basic skills qualifications. [94738]

Mr. Wills: The information is not available from existing evaluation. We are currently designing continuing evaluation arrangements on the use made of Learning Direct.

Small Business Service Areas

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will give details of the network of local learning and skills councils and Small Business Service areas. [94755]

Mr. Wicks: When the Government published the "Learning to Succeed" White Paper and Small Business Service consultation document, my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry asked the Regional Development Agencies and the London Development Partnership to provide us with advice on potential local Learning and Skills Councils, and Small Business Service boundaries.

Ministers are currently considering the advice received and we intend to announce details of boundaries shortly.

National Record of Achievement

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress to date with the National Record of Achievement in education. [94677]

Mr. Wicks: Following early trialling of the ideas proposed by the 1997 report of the National Record of Achievement Review Steering Group, materials under the title of "Progress File" have been developed and are being tested and adapted over the next three years with schools, colleges and employers in ten demonstration projects in different areas of England. The new materials are also available to other interested schools. The existing National Record of Achievement remains available to schools and training providers.

Return Rates (Education)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the current social rate of return to (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) tertiary education. [94730]

Mr. Wicks: The estimated social rate of return to A-levels taken by young people is 14–21 per cent. The National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education estimated the rate of return on first degrees at 7–9 per cent. in the first half of the 1990s, and there are some indications that a marginally higher figure may now be appropriate. Estimates for compulsory education are not available.

Discount Card

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what detailed proposals he has for the 16 to 18 discount card; who will finance these discounts; what arrangements will be made to deal with complaints by (a) dissatisfied consumers and (b) potential providers who are excluded from the scheme; and what is the anticipated cost to public funds. [94750]

Mr. Wicks: The Youth Card will build on the current Learning card which is issued to all young people during their final year of compulsory education. When fully up and running it will reward young people in learning and help to remove some of the barriers to further learning by offering a range of attractive discounts covering transport, leisure, and the commercial sector.

Discussions are taking place with a wide range of organisations to secure these discounts. The expectation is that the cost of discounts will be borne by those organisations willing to accept the Youth Card for discounting purposes. Consequently no significant additional public cost is anticipated.

All those organisations willing to recognise the Youth Card for discounting purposes will be bound by contract to deliver the agreed discount and to ensure that any complaints are dealt with properly. This contract will be reviewed annually.

School Sixth Forms

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will announce the results of his consultation on school sixth forms. [94754]

Mr. Wicks: The consultation on the funding of school sixth forms closed on Friday 15 October. Some late responses are still being received. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce the results of the consultation after he has considered all views.

Learning Support Assistants

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in developing professional qualifications, matched to NVQs, for learning support assistants. [94728]

Jacqui Smith: Work is currently in progress to develop a national framework of training and qualifications for teaching assistants. The Department is working on this with the Local Government National Training Organisation (LGNTO) in consultation with Local Educational Authorities, the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority and other bodies. This framework will cover all teaching assistants including those learning support assistants who support children with special educational needs. As part of the first phrase of this work, we have commissioned LGNTO to develop national occupational standards for all teaching assistants. This work is due to be completed in Spring 2000.

"On a Wing and a Prayer"

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what reply he has made to MENCAP's report on school inclusion entitled, "On a Wing and a Prayer". [94727]

Ms Estelle Morris: The DfEE is working closely with MENCAP. However, the publication of this report coincides with the publication of a DfEE commissioned report entitled "The Management, role and training of Learning Support Assistants". Both reports explore how learning support assistants work with pupils with special educational needs in inclusive settings. They each highlight good practice. The Government are already taking forward work relating to a number of the recommendations in the MENCAP report, as highlighted in the Teachers Green Paper. Specifically we are:

working with the Local Government National Training Organisation to develop a national framework of training and qualifications; developing good practice materials on the effective deployment of teaching assistants, including learning support assistants; making available £350 million over this and the next two financial years to support the recruitment and training of an additional 20,000 (FTE) assistants, including learning support assistants.

In addition, we are currently in discussion with MENCAP and the authors of the two reports about the possibility of a joint conference to discuss the research findings and identify ways forward for improving practice.

"Learning to Succeed"

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultations he has had with local education authorities (a) in the course of the preparation of the paper "Learning to Succeed" (Cm 4392) and (b) after the paper's publication. [94739]

Mr. Wicks: Ministers and officials meet with the Local Government Association and individual local education authorities on a regular basis to discuss a wide range of issues including our proposals in "Learning to Succeed". We have also received written responses to the consultations associated with the White Paper from the Local Government Association and a large number of individual local education authorities.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the role of the voluntary sector in the implementation of Learning to Succeed. [94760]

Mr. Wicks: The voluntary sector has a number of important roles to play in implementing the proposals in 'Learning to Succeed'. These include helping to ensure that the education and training that the Learning and Skills Council provides is relevant to the needs of young people and adults and providing high quality opportunities to help young people and adults get and keep work. Voluntary organisations are particularly well placed to contribute their expertise in key areas such as tackling social exclusion and in the education and training of those with special or basic skill needs.

Pupil Numbers (Crosby)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average number of children by year group in primary and secondary schools within the Crosby constituency, in each year from 1992 to 1999. [94585]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on the number of pupils by year group is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the expected average number of children by year group in primary and secondary schools within the Crosby constituency in each year from 1999 to 2001. [94586]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information is not available in the form requested.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many private finance initiatives are currently being promoted by Lancashire Education Authority. [94184]

Jacqui Smith: Lancashire Education Authority is currently engaged in replacing Fleetwood High School through the Private Finance Initiative.

Science Laboratories

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list the cases where private finance initiative resources have been given to science laboratory development; [93706]

(2) how much private funding initiative resource has contributed to capital budget funding for science laboratory development in the last five years. [93707]

Mr. Wicks: In the Schools sector, five Private Finance Initiative (PFI) projects have been signed, with many more in the pipeline, to provide new or replacement secondary schools. All of these schools will have modern science laboratories fully capable of delivering the national curriculum. The PFI credits given by the Government to support these projects do not include separately identifiable amounts for specific aspects of each development.

In the Higher Education sector two of the seven signed deals include modern facilities for teaching and research in the fields of medical, biological and clinical science. In the Further Education sector, the seven PFI deals signed to date do not include specific science laboratory elements.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the results of the examination of the design needs of scientific laboratories in secondary schools under Building Bulletin 80. [93715]

Jacqui Smith: The Department has reviewed its guidance on science accommodation in secondary schools, and a revised building bulletin updating Building Bulletin 80, 'Science Accommodation in Secondary Schools: A Design Guide', will be published shortly.

National Curriculum for Science

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment with whom consultations were held in the revision of the experiments carried out in the National Curriculum for Science in Schools. [93709]

Jacqui Smith: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority consulted a number of science associations, prior to preparing advice to the Secretary of State on proposals for a revised science curriculum. A full list of those consulted is contained at Annex 2 of the QCA's Report "Developing the School Curriculum", which was published on QCA's website www.qca.org.uk following the Secretary of State's announcement on 9 September. In addition all local authorities, teachers, governors, parents and other interested parties were able to contribute to the public consultation on the revised National Curriculum which ran from May to July this year. On the basis of the QCA's advice we have strengthened the role of Scientific Enquiry within the Science curriculum by establishing it as a separate Attainment Target. Revised curriculum handbooks will be sent to schools in November and copies will be placed in the Library.

Building Bulletin 80

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the distribution list for the replacement document for Building Bulletin 80. [93714]

Jacqui Smith: The Department will distribute copies of the revised Building Bulletin 80, 'Science Accommodation in Secondary Schools: A Design Guide', to the House of Commons and House of Lords Libraries and the British Library. The priced document will be available from the Stationery Office.

Maths Year 2000

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what support schools will be given in the forthcoming Maths Year 2000. [94538]

Ms Estelle Morris: This September we launched the National Numeracy Strategy in primary schools, underpinned by a comprehensive programme of training. Maths Year 2000 aims to support teachers as they implement the strategy by creating a positive, "can-do" culture towards mathematics throughout the community.

We are investing £105 million in the National Numeracy Strategy over two years. This includes up to £19.2 million available to provide maths resources in the classroom for 2000–2001. £6.75 million is being invested in the Maths Year which includes a total of £0.5 million specifically provided for local numeracy projects involving schools and their business partners. Many businesses will also be running their own schemes to support schools as their contribution towards the year.

Schools will be able to find a range of ideas for ways to get involved through regular newsletters, a free calendar with puzzles and stories about the history of maths and, from December, the Maths Year Website (www.mathsyear2000.org).

Teachers' Pay

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans to introduce performance-related pay for teachers; and what recent representations he has received on this issue. [94159]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State submitted the Department's written evidence to the School Teachers' Review Body (STRB) on 23 September, asking them to consider the Government's proposals for reform of teachers' pay, including a new upper pay spine for classroom teachers accessed via a performance threshold, and requesting the Review Body to make recommendations accordingly. A copy of this evidence is in the Library of the House. The formal consultation period on the Green Paper and its accompanying technical consultation document ended on 31 March. Detailed summaries of the responses to the consultation are also available in the Library of the House.

The Department has continued to discuss the Government's proposals in detail with representatives of the teacher unions and employers.

Corporal Punishment

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to introduce legislation to outlaw the use of (a) the cane and (b) other forms of corporal punishment in independent schools; and if he will make a statement. [94579]

Jacqui Smith: From this September, Section 131 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 outlawed corporal punishment for all pupils in maintained and non-maintained schools, and for children receiving nursery education.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list his Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93690]

Mr. Wills: Within the Department's Advertising and Publicity Budget the total spend on publications since May 1997 is £4.106 million.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of his Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the last five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. [93844]

Mr. Wills: Since the Department was created in 1995, it has produced the following internal communications for its staff:

The News Centre—daily electronic information which announces key news about policy or work related issues published via the Department's intranet;

BulletinBoard—a weekly paper publication which briefly outlines what has been on the week's Newscentres;

BulletinBoard Link—issued weekly to staff on loan/secondment, career breaks, maternity leave and home workers, who do not have access to electronic information. It provides an outline of what has been on the Newscentre and details where to get more information;

A Message From . . .—gives important strategic information from members of the Board. It is produced as required and available on paper and electronically; and Feedback—a staff magazine published six times a year.

None of them bear a security classification.

Employment Service Appeals Procedure

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in each of the last three years (a) how many cases were referred to the Employment Service Appeals Procedure, (b) what percentage of cases handled by the Employment Service was referred to the Employment Service Appeal Procedure, (c) what was the average time that cases referred to the Employment Services Appeals Procedure took to be resolved, and (d) what percentage of appeals taken to the Employment Service Appeals Procedure were withdrawn before reaching a final ruling; and if he will make a statement. [94593]

Ms Jowell: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Lembit Öpik, dated 19 October 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency the Secretary of State has asked Leigh Lewis to reply to your question concerning statistical information about appeals received by the Employment Service over the last three years. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

It may be helpful, by way of background, if I first explain a little about the Employment Service appeals procedure. Decisions on doubtful claims to Jobseeker's Allowance are made by Employment Service Adjudication Officers. If a jobseeker wishes to appeal against a decision given by the Employment Service Adjudication Officer, they complete a form giving their reasons for appeal. The Adjudication Officer then re-examines the case, collects any further information that may be required from the jobseeker and the employer, and either revises the decision in the jobseekers favour or prepares a written submission to The Appeals Service, which is not part of the Employment Service. On receipt of the submission, The Appeals Service allocates a date when the case can be heard by an appeals tribunal and deals with all subsequent administration such as notifying the jobseekers of the outcome of the appeal.

Against this background, the following table shows the number of appeals received by the Employment Service over the last three operational years.

Operational year	Number of appeals received by the Employment Service
1996–97	18,628
1997–98	30,312
1998–99	19,261

The following table shows the number of appeals received as a percentage of all the decisions given by Employment Service Adjudication Officers.

Operational year	Percentage of decisions appealed against
1996–97	1.2
1997–98	2.8
1998–99	2.2

In answer to your question on what was the average time that cases referred to the Employment Service Appeals Procedure took to be resolved, the only information available on speed of process is the length of time appeals take to be processed by the Employment Service. The following table shows the length of time between the appeal being made by the jobseeker and processed by the Employment Service Adjudication Officer either by revising the decision in the jobseekers favour or referring the appeal submission to The Appeals Service.

Operational year	Percentage of appeals processed within the stated periods
	Up to 28 days	29–56 days	Over 57 days
1996–97	90	8	2
1997–98	83	13	4
1998–99	86	12	2

As you will see, it is split into three periods, appeals processed within 28 days of receipt, those processed between 29 and 56 days after receipt and those not processed within 57 days. Because Employment Service Adjudication Officers often need to obtain further information from the jobseeker on receipt of an appeal, it is unusual for a decision to be revised or a submission to be prepared and referred to The Appeals Service immediately on receipt.

On occasions these enquiries can be protracted which means that the Employment Service Adjudication Officer is not in a position to process the appeal quickly. However, the Employment Service sets performance targets to encourage appeal submissions to be processed as quickly as possible. These are that 70% of appeals must be processed within 28 days and 85% within 56 days. The Employment Service does not collect information on the time the appeal subsequently takes to be allocated a hearing date and resolved by The Appeal Service.

Finally, I am sorry that the Employment Service does not keep information on the numbers of appeals which were withdrawn before the Appeals Tribunal made a decision. This would be a matter for The Appeals Service which is the responsibility of the Department of Social Security.

You may also be interested to know that from 18 October the appeals procedure will be changing with the implementation of the new Decision Making and Appeals arrangements.

I hope this is helpful.

Professor Barber

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what date Professor Michael Barber was appointed as Standards and Effectiveness Adviser; when Professor Barber has travelled on official business to the United States of America since his appointment; and what meetings he held with members and officials of the United States Government during each visit. [93887]

Ms Estelle Morris: Michael Barber was appointed as Head of the Standards and Effectiveness Unit on 2 May 1997.

Michael Barber visited San Diego to speak at the National Centre on Education and the Economy's conference in January 1998. He met various state level officials but no representative of the US Government. He visited Washington DC in December 1998 to present to the World bank on education reform in the UK. While he was there, he met Bruce Reed, Assistant to the President for Domestic Policy. He visited the USA again in August 1999 to speak at the International Principals' Institute conference in Lancaster, Pennsylvania and on that occasion met Bruce Reed again and Andrew Rotherham, who shortly afterwards took up a post as education adviser to President Clinton's administration. He also gave a presentation to a group of officials in the Education Department in Washington DC.

Postgraduate Students

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish (a) the number of students undertaking postgraduate university courses for (i) MA and (ii) PhD degrees in the arts and humanities and (b) the amount of finance provided by his Department to help sustain such students in each of the past five years. [94673]

Mr. Wicks: The available data for both student numbers and expenditure for the five most recent years are shown in the following tables.

Students on Arts and Humanities[1] courses in HE institutions in the UK

Academic year	MA	PhD
1994–95	97,133	20,524
1995–96	107,338	23,523
1996–97	108,375	25,924
1997–98	113,282	26,849
1998–99[2]	112,547	27,082

[1] Excludes students on Combined courses who may study Arts and Humanities as part of their course.
[2] Provisional data.

Departmental postgraduate expenditure[1] for the UK

Financial year	£ million
1994–95	18.3
1995–96	18.5
1996–97	18.0
1997–98	18.3
1998–99	18.8

[1] The Department allocates expenditure on postgraduate courses as a whole and it is not therefore possible to separately identify expenditure on MA and PhD courses.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the funds available to support students undertaking postgraduate courses in the arts and humanities; and if he will make a statement. [94674]

Mr. Wicks: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, welcomed the establishment of the Arts and Humanities Research Board to allocate postgraduate awards and research grants for arts and humanities courses. The total funding of the Board is over £44 million in 1999–2000, which includes funds for postgraduate arts and humanities courses. Decisions about the level of future funding for postgraduate courses in arts and humanities are under consideration.

Careers Service

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to change the statutory basis for the Careers Service in England. [94033]

Mr. Wicks: Following publication in July of the Social Exclusion Unit's report on new opportunities for 16 to 18-year-olds not in education and training, we have consulted widely about a new service to support young people including its functions and organisation. The consultation period ended on 15 October and we are considering the responses.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to integrate careers advice and guidance for young people with the service for adults; and if he will make a statement. [94039]

Mr. Wicks: Access to high quality information and advice on learning and career opportunities is essential for young people and adults to make well informed decisions about the range of learning and career opportunities open to them.

Following publication in July of the Social Exclusion Unit's report on new opportunities for 16 to 18-year-olds not in education and training, we have consulted widely about a new service to support young people, including its functions and organisation. The consultation period ended on 15 October and we are considering the responses.

From April 2001, the Learning and Skills Council will be responsible for planning and funding local provision for adults. We will ensure that provision for clients of all ages is complementary.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to change the contracting system for the Careers Service; and if he will make a statement. [94035]

Mr. Wicks: Following publication in July of the Social Exclusion Unit's report on new opportunities for 16 to 18-year-olds not in education and training, we have consulted widely about a new service to support young people including its functions and organisation. The consultation period ended on 15 October and we are considering the responses.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to make additional funding available to Careers Service contractors for improved use of ICT. [94037]

Mr. Wicks: The Government fund Careers Service contractors to deliver a range of services as set out in their contract with the Secretary of State. Contractors are expected to develop the use of ICT to deliver services more effectively.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve guidance to 18-year-olds who are in full time education. [94034]

Mr. Wicks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State requires careers services to focus their help on young people, including 18-year-olds, who need most help to stay in, or progress in, education. The "Learning to Succeed" White Paper announced the creation of a new youth support service which will provide guidance and support for all young people aged 13–19, building on what is currently provided by the Careers Service, parts of the Youth Service and other organisations. Guidance for 18-year-olds currently given through their FE institution or from the Careers Service will continue under a new youth support service. Eighteen-year-olds in higher education will continue to receive guidance through their education institution.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to introduce externally validated quality assessments of Careers Service contracts and contractors. [94038]

Mr. Wicks: The "Learning to Succeed" White Paper announced the creation of a new youth support service which would provide guidance and support for all young people aged 13–19, building on what is currently provided by the Careers Service, parts of the Youth Service and other organisations. Consultation on the new service ended on 15 October 1999. Quality assurance arrangements are being considered as part of that process.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to monitor the education and career progression of 18 to 25-year-olds. [94036]

Mr. Wicks: The Government have invested significant resources to ensure that all adults, young and old, have access to high quality and co-ordinated information and advice on learning and careers opportunities. Services will be co-ordinated and delivered at local level through the lifelong learning partnerships. The partnerships will be expected to identify and target particular groups of people who, for various reasons, may lack confidence and need extra support and encouragement to access the learning opportunities open to them. The Government, through the Learning and Skills Council from April 2001, will monitor the success of the partnerships in achieving this objective.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people were employed by his Department in each of the years from 1993–94 to 1998–99; if he will break down the total into the categories (a) male, (b) female, (c) registered disability and (d) ethnic minority; and if his Department has an equal opportunities policy. [88684]

Mr. Wicks [pursuant to the reply, 30 June 1999, c.225]: The original answer failed to explain that information on people with a disability and people from an ethnic minority background is not held in the form requested before April 1996. The following table shows the breakdown of available DfEE staff figures from 1993–94 to 1998–99:

	Total employed	(a) Male	(b) Female	(c) Registered disability	(d) Ethnic minority
1 April 1993	8,978	3,950	5,028	[1]—	[1]—
1 April 1994	6,561	2,887	3,674	[1]—	[1]—
1 April 1995	5,683	2,500	3,183	[1]—	[1]—
1 April 1996	5,212	2,345	2,867	240	324
1 April 1997	4,795	2,206	2,589	226	312
1 April 1998	3,956	1,838	2,118	191	310
1 April 1999	4,094	1,874	2,220	247	347

[1] Information on people with a disability and people from an ethnic minority background is not held in the form requested before April 1996.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July Quarterly report to the House. [93571]

Mr. Morley: Details of the Ministry's progress in tackling the millennium bug are set out in our quarterly monitoring returns. These are available in the Libraries of the House and are published on the Internet. The results of the October monthly review of progress of Departments and agencies are due to be announced shortly by the President of the Council.

Work on ensuring that all of the Ministry's internal systems are millennium ready has been completed, for both critical and non-critical systems. Testing will be ongoing to ensure that compliance is maintained. As indicated in the July quarterly Report to the House, work on IT and telecoms systems was completed earlier in the year. Work on embedded systems was not completed until September, in part because of the take-on of new buildings/systems.

Business continuity planning (including contingency planning) and development of MAFF's MOR will be completed this month. As part of our MOR we will be ensuring that contact is maintained with key players in the food industry throughout the millennium period.

With regard to the provision of related public services, millennium preparations in non-Departmental and other associated Public Bodies are being monitored and satisfactory progress is being maintained. Independent assessments of the preparedness of the food and groceries and flood defence sectors were reported to the July National Infrastructure Forum. Emerging results for the food and groceries sector indicated blue for internal compliance and amber for business continuity planning, using Action 2000's colour coding system. The flood defence sector was assessed as 95 per cent. blue and 5 per cent. amber. The latest results of the independent assessments of these sectors (including continency planning) will be announced at the next National Infrastructure Forum on 21 October.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates special advisers from his Department have visited the United States of America on official business since 1 May 1997; which of his special advisers took part in each visit; and if he will list the meetings which these special advisers held with members and officials of the United States Government during each visit, specifying the date and location of each meeting and the names of the United States members and officials at each meeting. [93987]

Mr. Nick Brown: No special advisers from my Department have visited the United States of America on official business since 1 May 1997.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends next to visit the Ribble Valley. [93661]

Mr. Nick Brown: I hope to visit the North-West Region this year to meet farmers and others, and would like to include a visit to the Ribble Valley in my itinerary. I will let the hon. Member know when a firm date has been established.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 20 July 1999, Official Report, column 495, if he will list the average size and weight of the (a) undersized and (b) oversized fish corresponding to his answer on percentages by weight for cod, haddock and whiting. [94341]

Mr. Morley: The average sizes and weights of the three species sampled as part of the 1997 CEFAS North Sea discard study are detailed in the following table.

Cod	Length (cms)	30.0	36.0
MLS=35 cms	Weight (g)	277	455
Haddock	Length (cms)	26.6	21.2
MLS=30 cms	Weight (g)	175	279
Whiting	Length (cms)	24.2	29.1
MLS=27 cms	Weight (g)	114	202

The actual estimates of the proportions of discarded fish, by number that were undersized, were cod 82 per cent., haddock 57 per cent. and whiting 67 per cent.

By weight, the percentages were cod 73 per cent., haddock 46 per cent. and whiting 53 per cent.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if Local Veterinary Inspectors carry out pre-export inspections during the hours of darkness. [93039]

Mr. Morley: Information on the time of day when inspections are undertaken is not kept centrally. However, we are aware that many inspections are carried out in buildings under artificial light, irrespective of the time of day when they are undertaken. It is the Local Veterinary Inspector's responsibility as the certifying officer to ensure that the conditions during his inspection are such that he is able to carry out his certifying officer responsibilities properly.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he makes to ensure that his staff at Dover dockside are able to make proper inspections when livestock vehicles are loaded on to the ship during the hours of darkness. [93038]

Mr. Morley: State Veterinary Service staff stationed at Dover are equipped to carry out the necessary inspection of vehicles carrying livestock for export, whatever the time of that inspection.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to discourage regular sailings of the vessel which carries live farm animals from Dover to the continent at night; and if he will make a statement. [93040]

Mr. Morley: None. The timing of sailings of any vessel, whether it carries live animals or not, is a matter for the operators of the vessel and their customers, provided that the relevant regulations are obeyed.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the sailings of the vessel carrying live farm animals from Dover to the continent began during the hours of darkness in the last year for which figures are available. [93037]

Mr. Morley: In the period 1 October 1998—30 September 1999, out of a total of 195 sailings of vessels carrying live farm animals 103 (52.8 per cent.) began between 8.00 pm and 6.00 am the following morning.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) live sheep and (b) live pigs have been exported for (i) slaughter, (ii) further fattening and (iii) breeding to date in 1999; and how many of each was exported to each individual country of destination. [93036]

Mr. Morley: The tables show the number of live sheep and live pigs exported from the United Kingdom during the period 1 January 1999 to 26 July 1999.

Table 1 shows the number of animals certified for export from the UK to other member states during the period 1 January 1999 to 26 July 1999. These figures are derived from the electronic messages which European law requires exporting countries to send to importing countries to inform them of the number of animals being exported in a given consignment.

The number of pigs exported to the Republic of Ireland for slaughter may have been influenced by a fire in a pig plant in Northern Ireland which reduced slaughtering capacity in the Province.

Table 2 shows data for exports to third countries. Specifically, it shows the number of export health certificates which were prepared and sent to official veterinarians for completion during the period 1 January 1999 to 26 July 1999. In the case of exports to third countries, precise figures of how many animals were ultimately exported are not available as there is no central record kept showing exactly how many animals were certified for export to third countries. The cost of collecting this level of detail would be disproportionate.

There were no exports from Northern Ireland to third countries.

In view of the continual updating of statistics, the figures in Tables 1 and 2 remain provisional and subject to change.

Table 1: Number of live sheep and pigs certified for export to other member states of the EU during the period 1 January 1999 to 26 July 1999

Concordat (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish before the summer adjournment, the most recent draft concordat between the Department of Agriculture and the National Assembly for Wales. [92331]

Ms Quin: Work on the concordat between this Department and the Cabinet of the National Assembly for Wales is proceeding well. We hope that formal agreement on the text can be reached shortly. We do not intend to publish the concordat in advance of that.

Equal Treatment

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has established a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [93456]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 July 1999]: The Government are committed to making sure that its policies are fair and inclusive and take full account of the needs and experiences of all those affected by them.

As part of this commitment, the Ministry has guidance in place to ensure that those involved in policy development check how the policy or programme will affect, either directly or indirectly, different groups of people and take action if necessary where any adverse differential impact is identified. Whilst this does not involve the establishment of a base line, it does involve the consultation of appropriate groups and consideration of their views. However, the nature of the Ministry's responsibilities means that much of its activity does not have a differential impact on different groups of people.

Fur Farming

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many mink and fox factory farms there are, by county, in England and Wales. [93616]

Mr. Morley: There are currently the following number of mink farms in England:

County	Number of licensed mink farms
Cornwall	1
Dorset	1
Hampshire	1
Isle of Wight	1
Lancashire	5
Northumberland	1
South Yorkshire	1
Staffordshire	1
West Yorkshire	1
Total	13

There is no requirement to register fox fur farms. However, I am not aware of any in England.

The situation in Wales is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales to report on.

Market Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the title and purpose of each item of market and opinion research commissioned by or through his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997 stating in each case whether or not the results were published. [89688]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 July 1999]: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Employees

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many persons were employed in his Department (a) 10 years ago and (b) at the latest available date. [92716]

Mr. Morley: On 1 April 1989, there were 10,577 staff working in my Department and its agencies. On 1 January 1999 (the latest published information available) there were 9,711 staff working in MAFF and its agencies undertaking broadly comparable functions. In addition, there are 1,528 staff working for the Meat Hygiene Service who undertake functions which were the responsibility of local authorities in 1989.

Government Patents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the Government patents held by his Department. [93080]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 26 July 1999]: The following sets out the key families of UK granted patents and patent numbers currently held by MAFF arising from Research and Development which it has funded. In a number of cases, patents have been granted (or are pending) in other countries.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Raynaud's Disease

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of young people suffering from Raynaud's disease who are in receipt of the full rate of Disability Living Allowance. [94053]

Mr. Bayley: Specific information on higher rate Disability Living Allowance recipients with Raynaud's Disease is not available. Sample counts show that there are a small number of DLA recipients (possibly around 100) aged under 16 in the wider group whose principal disabling condition is peripheral vascular disease including thrombosis and claudication, but this estimate is based on numbers too small to be reliable.

Family Credit

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much maintenance is paid to families in receipt of Family Credit. [94049]

Angela Eagle: As at May 1999, there were a total of 790,000 families receiving Family Credit, of which 131,000 were receiving maintenance. The average amount of maintenance in payment was £32.85 a week.

Family Credit was replaced by the new Working Families Tax Credit on 5 October.

1. Numbers are not rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Based on 15 per cent. sample, figures are therefore subject to sampling error.

Lone Parents (New Deal)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on the progress of the New Deal for Lone Parents (a) nationally and (b) in the Vale of York; and if he will make a statement. [94158]

Angela Eagle: The New Deal for Lone Parents (NDLP) was launched nationally on 26 October 1998. The results of the national programme and those for North Yorkshire District, which covers the Vale of York, are available up to the end of July 1999. The information is in the table.

	North Yorkshire district	National programme
Initial interviews carried out	725	80,130
Number agreeing to participate	639	71,480
Number of jobs obtained	188	18,260

Lone parents and organisations that represent them have welcomed NDLP and a vast majority of those attending an interview with a personal adviser have decided to participate in the programme.

There were two earlier phases: phase one prototypes in eight areas from July 1997 and phase two, for new and repeat claims, from April 1998. The full independent evaluation of the prototype phase is now expected to be published by March next year.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July Quarterly report to the House. [93570]

Angela Eagle: Details of the Department's and its Agencies' progress in tackling the Millennium bug are set out in our quarterly monitoring returns. These are available in the Libraries of the House and are published on the internet. The results of the October monthly review of progress of Departments and Agencies in tackling the bug are due to be announced shortly by the President of the Council.

The Department's key benefit paying computer systems had all corrective work and testing complete by the end of 1998 allowing a full annual processing cycle before 2000. Additionally, all telecoms systems have been confirmed as compliant and the few remaining critical embedded systems (less than one per cent.) are receiving close management attention and will be cleared by 31 October. Since the President of the Council's quarterly Report to the House in July, there has been some very minor slippage in the embedded systems area, which poses no risk to the delivery of benefit.

Contingency plans are in place; have been rehearsed; and continue to be refined to mitigate the latest assessment of risks, in particular those which specifically relate to the date change. The Department will have a Millennium Control Centre in operation over the period 1–5 January 2000, which will manage a range of readiness checks and pro-active communication on our status. The Departments key Social Security services of paying benefits, pensions and Child Support have been subject to independent assessment and each were assessed as "Blue" prior to Action 2000's National Infrastructure Forum in July. The results of the latest independent assessment of the "pay benefit" sector will be announced at the next National Infrastructure Forum on 21 October.

Benzodiazepine

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he has issued regarding the handling of disability and incapacity benefit claims by people suffering from addiction to benzodiazepine drugs. [93719]

Mr. Bayley: Entitlement to state disability or incapacity benefits is dependent not on the diagnosis but on the functional effects resulting from the condition. The Department provides guidance regarding benzodiazepine and other substance abuse to benefit decision makers and doctors providing advice or undertaking examinations in connection with a State benefit.

The Disability Handbook is available to all decision makers handling claims to Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance. It contains a section which outlines the functional effects of drug abuse, including benzodiazepine abuse, on an individual's care needs. A copy of the Disability Handbook is available for consultation in the Library. Guidance for approved doctors undertaking All Work Test Assessments is contained in the Incapacity Benefit Handbook for Medical Services Doctors, which is also available in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of ex-offenders who qualify for a Social Fund grant but do not receive one because of the limited funds available; and if he will make a statement. [93928]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is that in the financial year 1998–99 less than 10 per cent. of community care grant applications refused were on the grounds of insufficient priority.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of the new Budget Loans system upon single people; what plans he has to improve the system as it affects single people; and if he will make a statement. [93986]

Angela Eagle: The new budgeting loan system is designed to improve fairness to all applicants, including single people, and to provide access to interest-free loans to as many eligible applicants as possible.

Indications from the first six months of the scheme are that the proportion of successful applications from single people has increased.

Monitoring of the new scheme is continuing, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will report on the first year of the new scheme in his next annual report on the Social Fund, due for publication next summer.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons local benefit agencies do not have flexibility in respect of their overall expenditure on Social Fund grants; if he will introduce greater flexibility; and if he will make a statement. [93929]

Angela Eagle: The national discretionary Social Fund budget is cash limited. The community care grant budget for 1999–2000 is £98 million.

Allocating the community care grant budget to District offices ensures that local expenditure is targeted on those in greatest need while keeping expenditure under control. However, additional funding can be provided from the centrally held contingency reserve to any District faced with additional expenditure resulting from an emergency in their locality.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons Social Fund grants have been increased by less than inflation over the past two years; what assessment he has made of the impact of this on claimants; and if he will make a statement. [93927]

Angela Eagle: The Community Care Grant budget is reviewed annually. It was increased in April 1998 by £1 million to support greater help for homeless people. This increase, which was the first since 1994, has been maintained in the current year's budget allocation. As a result, the number of homeless people getting help more than doubled.

British Pensioners (Overseas)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact on British citizens of the decision of the Australian Government to cease its topping-up procedures to compensate British citizens of pensionable age who live in Australia and whose United Kingdom pension entitlement is frozen. [93741]

Mr. Rooker: The Australian Government announced in July that it intended to terminate the bilateral Social Security Agreement with the United Kingdom. We have not received formal notice of termination. The Agreement would terminate 12 months after formal notice was received.

The Agreement has a bearing on UK pensioners in Australia only if they have lived there for less than 10 years. It helps them to satisfy Australia's 10-year residence test for its Age Pension. UK pension is deducted from any Age Pension due. About 3,000 UK pensioners in Australia receive Age Pension with the help of the Agreement. They would be unaffected by termination, as anyone already entitled to benefit with the help of the Agreement when it terminated would continue to be covered by its terms.

If the Agreement is terminated, UK pensioners would have to have lived in Australia for 10 years before they could become entitled to Age Pension.

Age Pension is subject to a test of income and assets, so the amount any pensioner receives, or whether they qualify at all, depends on their financial circumstances.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many British citizens living abroad have had their United Kingdom pension entitlement frozen. [93742]

Mr. Rooker: At present, of the 870,000 UK State Pensions paid to people living abroad, some 470,000 are frozen. That is, annual upratings are not paid after the date the person becomes entitled to the pension, or the date on which they left the UK if that is later.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will assess the cost of abolishing the provisions which freeze pension entitlement for British citizens living abroad; and if he will make a statement. [93743]

Mr. Rooker: The total annual cost of uprating all frozen UK basic State pensions paid overseas to the rate paid to pensioners resident in the UK would be some £300 million.

War Pensions

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has to change the rules covering disregard relating to war pensions, whereby only the first £10 of a war pension is disregarded when other benefits are calculated; and if he will make a statement. [94452]

Mr. Bayley: The mandatory disregards for War Disablement and War Widows Pensions that already exist in the income-related benefits recognise the special nature of these pensions, and ensure that the pensioners receive preferential treatment. For example, a war pensioner can have between £10 and £181 a week of his pension disregarded on a statutory basis.

A full disregard of War Disablement and War Widows Pension in the income related benefits would cost in the region of an additional £160 million a year.

Income Support

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Government have to change entitlement to payment of Income Support to claimants who remain in hospital for longer than six weeks; and if he will make a statement. [94584]

Angela Eagle: We have no plans at present to revise the rules regarding the payment of Income Support to people who remain in NHS hospitals for longer than 6 weeks. We continue to keep these rules under review.

Child Maintenance

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if the child maintenance premium of £10 applies regardless of number of children; or if it applies for each child; [94050]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of introducing the £10 child maintenance premium for parents on income support. [94045]

Angela Eagle: The new Child Support system will allow parents with care on Income Support (or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance) to keep up to £10 a week of maintenance paid irrespective of the number of children involved.

The net cost to the Exchequer of introducing the child maintenance premium for existing parents with care is estimated to be £65 million in a full year, after allowing for abolition of the child maintenance bonus.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the categories of those on low incomes who are currently exempted from paying child maintenance, but who will become eligible for payment under the proposals in Cm 4349. [94058]

Angela Eagle: Non-resident parents who have been assessed to pay the minimum amount, including those on Income Support or Income-Based Jobseeker's Allowance, will no longer be exempt from paying maintenance where:

they receive Incapacity Benefit, Maternity Allowance or various disability benefits; or they have children in their second family.

However, a non-resident parent on benefit will be exempt from the minimum payment where he shares the care of a child for at least 52 nights a year.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the late payment penalty to be introduced within the reforms proposed in Cm 4349 will be calculated on the basis of (i) weekly, (ii) monthly and (iii) annually assessed maintenance; whether the fine will be cumulative; what will be the definition of late payment; and what recourse there will be when fines for late payment are not met. [94047]

Angela Eagle: The White Paper "A new contract for welfare: Children's rights and parents responsibilities" (Cm 4349) sets out our plans to introduce a straightforward penalty for late payment. The penalty will help to make sure that payments of child maintenance are made on time and to support negotiations aimed at getting payments flowing regularly.

A late payment penalty of up to 25 per cent. of the amount owed may be imposed. The penalty will be payable to the Secretary of State and may be levied at a discretionary rate for each week in which the maintenance is due but was not paid, but will not be compounded. Imposition of the penalty will be discretionary and reasons for late payment will be taken into account. Where late penalty payments have been imposed but remain unpaid enforcement measures will be taken to recover amounts due.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis he has estimated that one million or more children (Cm 4349, page 13) will benefit from child support from the non-resident parent as a result of changes outlined in the White Paper on reform of the CSA (Cm 4349). [94604]

Angela Eagle: The figure of one million is our best estimate of the number of children who will benefit from the reforms over time through a combination of a more effective system which will get more non-resident parents paying and more of what is due actually paid and of the new maintenance disregard in Income Support.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of non-resident parents who will pay weekly maintenance of (a) £5 or less, (b) £5 to £5.99, (c) £6 to £6.99, (d) £7 to £7.99, (e) £8 to £8.99, (f) £9 to £9.99 and (g) £10 and over. [94353]

Angela Eagle: The information requested is in the table.

Number of maintenance assessments of non-resident parents in work under the proposed new scheme

Maintenance assessments under the proposed new scheme	Caseload (Thousand)
£5 or less	45
£5 to £5.99	5
£6 to £6.99	5
£7 to £7.99	5
£8 to £8.99	5
£9 to £9.99	5
£10 or over	465
Total	535

Notes:

1. New scheme maintenance modelled using data taken from August 1998 5 per cent. scan of Child Support Computer System.
2. Caseloads calibrated to forecasts of caseload at 'A' day and rounded to the nearest 5,000.
3. Table covers non-resident parents in paid work with a full maintenance assessment. Non-resident parents on benefit will normally be liable to pay £5 a week.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if compensation will be paid, and overpayments will be recoverable, where the default maintenance rate applied is found to be greater than the full maintenance assessment. [94048]

Angela Eagle: Paragraphs 37 to 39 of Chapter Two of the White Paper "A new contract for welfare: Children's rights and parents' responsibilities" (Cm4349) set out our plans for a default rate of maintenance when maintenance liability cannot be assessed straight away. The purpose of a default rate is to enable children to see the advantages of maintenance as soon as possible and to get non-resident parents into the habit of paying. The proposal is that it is set at or around the average assessment of average earnings.

The full assessment will be payable from the date that all the information needed to complete it is provided. Maintenance liability for the past will only be recalculated if the full assessment is higher than the default rate.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much revenue he expects to receive as a result of doubling the proportion of lone parents on benefits who will receive maintenance payments; and by what date he expects this increased figure to have been achieved. [94046]

Angela Eagle: Under the new child support scheme, the increased number of lone parents receiving maintenance payments will result in reduced expenditure on social security benefits. These savings will build up from the introduction of the scheme and are expected to reach around £40 million a year after five years, taking into account the cost of the child maintenance premium and assuming cash compliance of 75 per cent. The reduction in spending will allow us to pay for the administrative costs of introducing the new scheme without increasing Government spending.

Tribunal Hearings

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appellants from (a) Orkney, (b) Shetland and (c) Scotland had to wait (i) up to three months, (ii) three to six months, (iii) six to 12 months, and (iv) over 12 months from the date of lodging an appeal against the decision of an adjudication officer to the date of the tribunal hearing, in respect of appeals lodged since 1 January 1997. [94371]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

	[illegible]	Up to 3 months	3 to 6 months	6 to 12 months	Over 12 months
Total for Scotland[1]	[illegible]	3,864	13,919	22,218	8,934

Housing Benefit

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his oral answer of 24 May 1999, Official Report, column 11, on housing benefit, what account was taken of the needs of students in his Department's review of Housing Benefit. [93956]

Angela Eagle: Most full-time students are not entitled to Housing Benefit as support for students comes through the educational maintenance system rather than Social Security. However, certain students in vulnerable groups, such as lone parents, remain eligible to claim. There are no plans to change this position.

We intend publish a housing Green paper.

Pensions Reform

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent discussions he has held with his Irish and Canadian counterparts regarding pensions reform; and if he will make a statement. [94458]

Mr. Rooker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security met Pierre Pettigrew, Canadian Minister for Human Resources Development, on 12 January, and Dermot Ahern, Irish Minister for Social, Community and Family Affairs, on 25 June. They had wide-ranging discussions on a variety of topics of mutual interest, including pension reform.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Access to Justice Act

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to publish the legal aid Funding Code consequent on its Access to Justice Act 1999 reforms; and if he will make a statement. [94397]

Mr. Lock: The Legal Aid Board published a consultation paper on the new Funding Code in January 1999 at the Lord Chancellor's request. The Board intends to publish a report on that consultation, and a new draft of the Code for further consultation, on 26 October. This will constitute the consultation required by section 8(8) of the Access to Justice Act.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date the reforms in the Access to Justice Act 1999 relating to (a) conditional fee agreements and (b) legal aid will come into effect; and if he will make a statement. [94399]

Mr. Lock: On conditional fee agreements, my Department issued a consultation paper, "Conditional Fees: Sharing the Risks of Litigation", on 23 September. This fulfilled our commitment made during the passage of the Access to Justice Act, to consult before implementing the provisions in the Act on recovery of insurance premiums and success fees. Consultation closes on 26 November. Subject to the results, we plan to implement these provisions in the first quarter of next year.

On the legal aid reforms, implementation is planned to take place in several stages. On 4 January 2000, contracts for family, immigration, mental health and advice and assistance work will take effect under the Legal Aid Act 1988. These contracts will be continued when the relevant sections of Part I of the Access to Justice Act come into force in April 2000. The new Legal Services Commission and Community Legal Service will also be established in April; in the same month the Funding Code will take effect (subject to further public comment and parliamentary approval); contracting for individual high-cost cases will begin; and there will be new regulations governing financial eligibility and conditions. In October 2000, the Criminal Defence Service will replace criminal legal aid.

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the Law Society's statements concerning the abolition of Queen's Counsel on the credibility of the Queen's Counsel system; and if he will make a statement. [94400]

Mr. Lock: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor is very disappointed that the Law Society has seen fit to adopt a concluded public position in advance of the publication of Sir Leonard Peach's report on the operation of the judicial appointments and Silk systems. He regards Silk as a kitemark of quality which engenders public confidence and enables lawyers and clients to identify the leading members of the profession. He and his officials are absolutely committed to ensuring equality of opportunity, and he makes his decisions on Silk only after wide, extensive and highly structured consultation with those who are best placed to judge the applicants against the set criteria. In fairness to solicitor applicants, he will respond to the Law Society's withdrawal of co-operation by developing other channels of consultation to ensure that he can give fair consideration to their applications.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the (a) individuals and (b) organisations consulted as part of the secret soundings for appointments (i) to the judiciary and (ii) to leading counsel; and if he will make a statement. [94402]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor consults widely among the judiciary and senior members of the legal profession about the suitability of candidates for judicial appointment and Silk. He entirely rejects any suggestion that those arrangements constitute "secret soundings". Information about those who are consulted is publicly available. Assessments are provided in confidence, but many candidates take up the offer of feedback which includes the tenor of the assessments received.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the decision of the Law Society to boycott the secret soundings process on appointments to the judiciary and leading counsel; and if he will make a statement. [94401]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor is disappointed by the Law Society's decision to withdraw from the existing arrangements for consultation on candidates for judicial and Queen's Counsel appointments, which do not in any way constitute a "secret soundings process". He has valued the help he has received from the Law Society in assessing solicitors as candidates for appointment, and he finds it difficult to see how the interests of solicitors can be advanced by a decision to withhold the assistance previously given. In fairness to solicitor candidates, the Lord Chancellor will continue to consult such representative bodies as the Solicitors' Family Law Association and the London Criminal Courts Solicitors' Association, and proposes also to develop other channels of consultation, potentially including solicitors' firms, senior practitioners and local and regional Law Societies.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to publish the report of Sir Leonard Peach into applications for judicial and QC appointments. [94426]

Mr. Lock: Sir Leonard Peach's report will be published after it has been completed.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will extend the terms of reference of Sir Leonard Peach in his review of appointment arrangements to Queen's Counsel and the judiciary to reflect the views of the Law Society on the secret soundings system; and if he will make a statement. [94398]

Mr. Lock: The system of consultation on candidates for the judiciary and Queen's Counsel is not secret. Information about those who are consulted for assessments of suitability is publicly available. Assessments are sought in a structured way against the specific criteria for appointment; they are provided in confidence, but many candidates take up the offer of feedback, which includes the tenor of the assessments received. The scope for improvements in the consultation arrangements is within the terms of reference of the scrutiny of judicial appointments and Queen's Counsel selection procedures which my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has asked Sir Leonard Peach to undertake. The Law Society has presented its views on the system to Sir Leonard, who will no doubt take these into account when he reports in due course.

Road Accident Victims

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps the Court Service proposes to take to ensure that those representing road accident victims are able easily to comply with the notice requirement of the revised Motor Insurers Bureau uninsured drivers' agreement; and if he will make a statement. [94395]

Jane Kennedy: I do not foresee any action on the part of the Court Service being immediately necessary. However, I am of course willing to consider any suggestions that my hon. Friend may have. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, will be providing a substantive response to this and other associated parliamentary questions, and proposes personally to contact my hon. Friend.

Magistrates Courts (Sign Language)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to provide (a) sign language interpreters and (b) other facilities to enable people suffering from hearing loss to observe magistrates courts proceedings. [94403]

Jane Kennedy: Arrangements are in place for the provision of sign language interpreters for defendants and witnesses appearing in criminal proceedings in England and Wales. However, there are no plans to provide such interpreters for a member of the public who visits the court to observe the proceedings. The Lord Chancellor's Department has issued guidance to magistrates courts committees and local authorities on the court environment and range of physical facilities that we would expect to be provided to enable those court users with hearing difficulties to observe magistrates court proceedings. Provision of such facilities is a matter for the magistrates courts committee and local authority.

Civil Procedure Rules

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consultation arrangements are (a) in place and (b) proposed in relation to proposed amendments to the Civil Procedure Rules; and if he will make a statement. [94396]

Mr. Lock: Papers sent to the Civil Procedure Rule Committee are also circulated to a number of other persons and bodies, including the Bar Council and the Law Society, who thus have an opportunity to comment. Major issues considered by the Committee are the subject of consultation papers, which receive a wide circulation.

Impecunious Litigants

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the levels of court fees on impecunious litigants since the start of the Civil Justice Review; and if he will make a statement. [93730]

Mr. Lock: A new civil court fee structure was introduced on 26 April 1999, at the same time as the Civil Procedure Rules. Impecunious litigants continue either to be automatically exempt from paying fees or able to apply for fee remission or reduction. There have been minor changes to fee remission and exemption provisions: the wording of the hardship criterion is now the same in each Fees Order; Court Service guidelines on fee remission have been amended; and the automatic exemption provisions have been updated to take account of the introduction of Tax Credits. None of these changes has adversely affected the level at which relief is granted.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to reconsider the requirements for litigants who wish to apply for reductions in court fees on the grounds of undue hardship following the Court of Appeal judgment in ex parte Scarth; and if he will make a statement. [94393]

Mr. Lock: My officials are considering whether any changes should be made to the guidelines or legislation governing fee exemption and remission, in the light of the judgment in ex parte Scarth. I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as I am able to let him know what conclusions I have reached.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list his Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93692]

Mr. Lock: The spending on official publications since May 1997 by the Lord Chancellor's Department was £4,407,500. This represents spending by LCDHQ, Court Service, Public Trust Office, Public Records Office, Office of the Official Solicitor and the Land Registry. This excludes the cost of publications produced for internal use. When the Department makes use of a private sector publisher, printing and design costs are generally met by the publisher as part of their acceptance of the risks of publication.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how often his Department produces (a) LCD News, (b) Talkback, (c) Hearsay and (d) Direct Brief; which of these publications are unclassified; and when each publication was first produced. [93934]

Mr. Lock: "LCD News" is published weekly and circulated to all staff in LCD HQ and the Court Service. It was first produced in 1972. It is unclassified. "Hearsay" is published bi-monthly and is circulated to staff in LCD HQ and the Court Service. It was first published in March/April 1997. It is unclassified. It replaced "Your Court," first published in October/November 1987, which was unclassified. "Talkback" was circulated to all LCD HQ staff on a six-weekly basis on average. It was first published in April 1997 and discontinued in February 1999. It was unclassified. "Direct Brief" is circulated to all Court Service staff. It is published monthly, with up to 3 to 4 "special" editions, as and when required, each year. It was first published in May 1997.

Legal Aid (Northern Ireland)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the amount of money paid out of legal aid in Northern Ireland for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99. [94343]

Mr. Lock: Expenditure in relation to civil legal aid, advice by way of representation, Green Form advice and assistance and criminal legal aid for the years 1995–96 to 1998–99 is as follows:

	£ million
Year
1995–96	25.78
1996–97	26.07
1997–98	28.85
1998–99	30.09

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list (a) the reports published by his Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by his Department, (c) the decisions his Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria he uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93968]

Mr. Lock: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Council on 19 October 1999, Official Report, column 429.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of the Lord Chancellor's Department computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July quarterly report to the House. [93563]

Mr. Lock: Year 2000 compliance work on all Business Critical Systems in the Department, its Agencies and other bodies which report to the Lord Chancellor is complete. No slippage on these systems has occurred since the July quarterly report. More details on progress which has been made in tackling the Millennium Bug are set out in our quarterly monitoring returns, available in the Libraries of the House and on the internet. The results of the October monthly progress review of Departments and Agencies are due to be published shortly by the President of the Council.

The Departmental Business Continuity Plan and Millennium Operating Regime is complete and testing is under-way, which will be complete before the end of October.

Our provision of key public services within the Criminal Justice System has been the subject of independent assessment and reported to the National Infrastructure Forum. For the July Forum under the Action 2000 colour coding system, the Magistrates' Courts were assessed as 53 per cent. Blue, 47 per cent. Amber, and the Crown Court 77 per cent. Blue, 23 per cent. Amber. The results of the latest independent assessment of these areas of the Department's responsibility within the Criminal Justice sector will be announced at the next National Infrastructure Forum on 21 October.

Motoring Offences

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to appoint specifically trained magistrates to handle road traffic cases. [94527]

Jane Kennedy: The Government is currently considering the report by the Parliamentary Advisory Council Transport Safety (PACTS)—'Road Traffic law and enforcement: a driving force for casualty reduction'—which includes a recommendation that only magistrates with specialised training should deal with motoring offences. There are no plans to appoint specifically trained magistrates to handle road traffic cases, but we are considering the case for additional training for all magistrates in motoring offences, including the causes of road casualties and the means of reducing them.

WALES

Mixed Sex Wards

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the costs of conversion of hospitals to mixed sex wards in Wales. [93134]

Mr. Hanson [holding answer 23 July 1999]: No estimate of costs of conversion of hospitals in Wales to mixed sex wards was made in the period up to 30 June 1999. Since 1 July, this has been a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

NHS Patients

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many NHS trusts in Wales were paying private sector hospitals to treat NHS patients on 1 April; if he will list the hospitals; and what were the costs involved. [93129]

Mr. Hanson [holding answer 23 July 1999]: This information is not collected centrally, and since 1 July 1999 this has been a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Consultant Posts (NHS)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of consultant posts currently vacant in Wales by (a) specialty and (b) health authority. [93144]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 26 July 1999]: This is now a matter for the National Assembly for Wales. However, as the information is collected annually in September, the most recent figures relate to a time when the matter was the responsibility of the Secretary of State. The information is collected by speciality and by trust rather than by health authority and is contained in the following table as at 30 September 1998.

Class Sizes

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reduce primary school class sizes in Wales. [93145]

Mr. Hanson [holding answer 26 July 1999]: The Secretary of State started to implement plans to reduce primary school class sizes in Wales from September 1998. Following the £3.7 million Welsh Office grant for infant class size reduction in 1998–99, the Schools Census for January 1999 showed that the number of large infant classes in Wales had reduced by 50 per cent. when compared with January 1998. Out of 100,000 pupils just 15,000 remained in classes of over 30.

As a result of the £11.3 million allocated for 1999–2000, it is expected that 90 per cent. of the problem of large infant classes, which existed in 1997, will be solved.

The Secretary of State has no further plans to reduce primary class size, as this is now a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement of progress on the millennium readiness of his Department's computer systems, and those for which it is responsible in the provision of public services; if contingency plans are in place; and what slippage has occurred since the July quarterly report to the House. [93573]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My Department is not responsible for any computer systems which deliver public services. My Department's internal computer systems form part of a larger network which also serves the National Assembly for Wales. A full inventory of every PC on this network has been undertaken, and progress is well advanced.

I understand that contingency plans are in place and I am not aware of any slippage since the July quarterly report in the House. The National Assembly for Wales is responsible for millennium preparations in Wales, and Mrs. Edwina Hart made a statement to the Assembly on 23 September regarding this matter.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of his Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the last five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. [93855]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The "Staff Bulletin" was first produced in November 1993. It is issued weekly, and it does not have a security classification.

"Links" is a staff newspaper which was first produced in November 1997. It is issued every two months, or six times a year, and it does not have a security classification.

In addition, a range of ad-hoc publications have been produced by various divisions of the Department for internal distribution to staff, on topics such as the devolution process. Information on each of these individual, and generally one-off, items is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list his Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93683]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The figures are as follows:

The Welsh Office (May 1997-July 1999)
May 1997-March 1998	82,611
April 1998-March 1999	139,232
April 1999-July 1999	24,103
The Office of the Secretary of State for Wales
July 1999–13 October 1999	0

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the carbon dioxide emissions reduction needed for a 20 per cent. reduction from the UK's 1990 levels by 2010 he expects to be delivered in Wales. [93866]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Following Kyoto in 1997, the United Kingdom has agreed a legally binding target to cut emissions of a basket of six greenhouse gases by 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels over the period 2008–12. The UK Government also has a domestic goal to cut carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010. The Government and the devolved Administrations are currently developing a draft climate change programme, which will set out how the UK will deliver its Kyoto target and move towards its domestic goal. Consultation on the draft programme will take place towards the end of the year.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the agriculture shows in Wales he has (a) attended and (b) intends to visit this year. [94043]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have not attended any agriculture shows in Wales this year and have no plans to do so at present. However, following my appointment as Secretary of State, and reflecting my keen interest in the future of the Welsh farming industry, I hope to visit Welsh farms and attend agricultural events in Wales in the year ahead.

Welsh Concordats

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made on matters relating to concordats with the National Assembly; and if he will make a statement. [94152]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Memorandum of Understanding and supplementary agreements between the United Kingdom Government, Scottish Ministers and the Cabinet of the National Assembly for Wales was published earlier this month (Cm 4444). Bi-lateral concordats between Whitehall Departments and the Assembly are being finalised.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with, and when he next intends to meet, the first Secretary and the Economic Development Secretary, regarding concordats relating to inward investment in Wales. [94174]

Mr. Paul Murphy: One of the supplementary agreements to the Memorandum of Understanding between the UK Government and the devolved Administrations concerned financial assistance to industry. I discussed this with the First Secretary before it was agreed. I meet the First Secretary and the Economic Development Secretary regularly to discuss a variety of topics.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when (a) he last met and (b) he plans next to meet the Chancellor of the Exchequer to discuss the Welsh Block for 2000–01. [94173]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I see the Chancellor of the Exchequer regularly when we discuss a number of issues.

Election Reform

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Electoral Reform Society regarding measures to increase the turnout for elections in Wales. [94181]

Mr. Paul Murphy: None.

Employment Concordats

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with, and when he next intends to meet, the First Secretary and the Economic Development Secretary, regarding concordats relating to employment in Wales. [94175]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Concordats will set out the administrative arrangements between the Assembly and each Whitehall Department. That dealing with the management of issues relating to employment is for the Assembly to discuss with the Department for Education and Employment.

Beef Exports

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what meetings he has had with the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to discuss assistance for Welsh beef farmers to export their beef; and if he will publish the minutes of these meetings. [94177]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I am in regular contact with my right hon. Friend and we discuss a range of issues. However, assistance to Welsh beef farmers is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales, which is discussing related matters direct with my right hon. Friend.

Milk Marque

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with (a) the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and (b) the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food regarding the implementation of the findings of the Milk Marketing Council's report on the future of Milk Marque. [94179]

Mr. Paul Murphy: None. The National Assembly for Wales is pursuing this directly with my right hon. Friend.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions concerning measures to reduce traffic congestion between London and Cardiff; and if he informed the Economic Development Secretary in the National Assembly for Wales of the outcome. [94182]

Mr. Paul Murphy: While I take a keen interest in transport issues in Wales and value the importance of good communications, the development of an integrated transport policy for Wales is the responsibility of the National Assembly. I understand that Assembly officials are in direct contact with officials in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure that the Welsh Assembly complies with section 76(3) of the Government of Wales Act 1998. [94180]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Under Standing Order 6.7. of the Assembly, documents relating to plenary sessions are made available to me at the same time as they are to Assembly Members.

Private Office (Running Costs)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of running his Private Office each year since 1995–96; and what estimate he has made of the cost of running the office in (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02. [94176]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The cost of Ministerial Private Offices in the Welsh Office was as follows:

1995–96	724,230
1996–97	720,625
1997–98	758,763
1998–99	820,240

Estimated costs of the Ministerial Private Offices are:

1999–2000	672,837
2000–01	682,930
2001–02	693,022

Abattoirs

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food regarding the number of EU export-approved abattoirs in Wales; and if he has informed the Agriculture and Rural Economy Secretary of the Welsh Assembly of the outcome. [94178]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have held a number of discussions with my right hon. Friend on a variety of issues concerning Welsh Agriculture and I have met representatives of the NFU and FUW. The specific issue of EU export-approved abattoirs in Wales is, however, a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

CABINET OFFICE

Departmental Meetings (United States)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many times (a) Ministers and (b) officials in her Department have held meetings with the United States Special Envoy for Cryptography, Ambassador David Aaron, since 1 January 1998 on (i) encryption and (ii) other issues; what were the dates and locations of each meeting; and what other (1) British and (2) United States Government Departments took part in each meeting. [94011]

Marjorie Mowlam: Cabinet Office Ministers have not met Ambassador Aaron. Cabinet Office officials have met Ambassador Aaron on four occasions since 1 January 1998. Each of these meetings related to discussions about national and international policies on encryption and possible changes to export controls on cryptographic goods under the Wassenaar Arrangement for Export Controls on Conventional Arms and Dual Use Goods. The dates and locations of these meetings were as follows: 18 May 1998, London; 4 June 1998, Stockholm; 3 September 1998, Ottawa; 3 December 1998, Vienna.

The meetings on 4 June, 3 September and 3 December were also attended by officials from the Department of Trade and Industry and the Government's technical advisers on information security, the Communications Electronic Security Group.

On the United States side, the meetings involved officials from the Departments of State, Commerce, Justice and Defense, and from the National Security Council. With the exception of the 18 May meeting, which was a bilateral visit by Ambassador Aaron to the United Kingdom, these contacts were multinational meetings involving a number of other countries.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when officials from her Department attended meetings of the United States Department of Commerce's Technical Advisory Committee to Develop Federal Information Processing Standard for the Federal Key Management Infrastructure. [94010]

Mr. Ian McCartney: No officials from the Cabinet Office have attended meetings of this committee.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to the answer of 29 June 1999, Official Report, column 128, on special advisers, how many meetings Mike Trace, deputy to the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator, held with members and officials of the United States Government during his visit to New York on 7 to 10 June 1998; and if she will list the date of each meeting and the names of the United States officials and members present. [93910]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Deputy UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator, Mike Trace visited New York as part of the UK delegation to the United Nations General Assembly Special Session from Monday, 7 June to Wednesday, 9 June. During that visit he met the United States 'Drug Czar', General Barry McCaffrey, Director, Office of National Drug Control Policy, Executive Office of the President.

Mr. Trace did not meet any other members of the United States Government on this visit; however, he did meet with numerous representatives from other nations and from non-governmental organisations.

Better Regulation Task Force

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what arrangements the Better Regulation Task Force has for liaising with other Departments. [94638]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Better Regulation Task Force is an independent advisory body supported by officials in the Cabinet Office Regulatory Impact Unit. The Task Force liaises with other Departments through established inter-departmental channels between Cabinet Office officials and their counterparts in other Departments, and through other arrangements as necessary.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what reviews are currently being considered by the Better Regulation Task Force for 2000. [94503]

Marjorie Mowlam: In the year 1999–2000 the Better Regulation Task Force is undertaking reviews of payroll (tax and benefit integration), the overall impact of regulation on the hotel and restaurant industry, small firms exemptions, public sector regulation, self-regulation as an alternative to state regulation and regulatory protection of vulnerable groups.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what regulations broken down by department have been reviewed by the Better Regulation Task Force. [94501]

Marjorie Mowlam: The areas of regulation which have been subject to published reviews by the Better Regulation Task Force are as set out together with details of the main Departments involved. The Task Force has also responded to a number of Government consultation documents. Full details of each review are available on the Better Regulation Task Force website, which can be found at www.cabinet-office.gov/uk/bru/index/task.htm.

DEFENCE

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Heseltine: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those contracts, awarded to (a) British companies and (b) British research facilities under the US Strategic Defence Initiative and their total value in each year since 1985. [94430]

Mr. Hoon: So far as contracts awarded to British Companies are concerned, I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given on 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 424.

So far as contracts awarded to British research facilities are concerned, the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) between the UK and US Governments in respect of the Strategic Defence Initiative (SDI), provides for contracts to be placed directly with the other Party's universities, which could include research facilities. As with contracts established directly with British companies, no central or comprehensive record is maintained.

It is believed, however, that most research has been undertaken on a Government to Government basis under an arrangement known as Letters of Offer and Acceptance (LOAs). In such cases research has been undertaken by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) or its forerunners. The total value of LOAs entered into since 1985 is approximately $150 million. While expenditure on an annual basis is not available in detail, work commenced at approximately $2 million per annum in 1986, building to $12 million over a seven-year period, then falling away to some $5 million currently.

Armed Forces (Strength)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Sir Roger Wheeler, Chief of General Staff, cleared with Ministers his comments on armed forces strength and commitments contained in his interview published in the press on 3 August; and if he will make a statement. [94383]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 19 October 1999]: General Sir Roger Wheeler was invited by Ministers to give the interview, and spoke with their full knowledge.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the current strength and (b) the establishment strength of (i) the Royal Navy, (ii) the Army and (iii) the RAF; and if he will make a statement. [94784]

Mr. Spellar: We remain entirely committed to achieving full manning in the Services, a key SDR target. Last year's recruiting performance was excellent; for the Army the best this decade. An Armed Forces Overarching Personnel Strategy is being developed, of which recruitment and retention will be major strands.

The required strength is expressed in terms of trained personnel. As at 1 September 1999, the latest date for which figures are available, the trained strength and requirement of the UK regular armed forces is:

	Trained strength	Trained requirement
Naval Service[1]	38,652	40,312
Army	96,381	102,389
RAF	51,395	53,081

[1] Includes Royal Marines

EU Driving Directive

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the European Driving directive on the services; and if he will make a statement. [94782]

Mr. Spellar: The Armed Forces are exempt from European Union drivers' hours legislation. It is, however, my Department's policy to comply with the spirit of the legislation, where possible, except during periods of active operations, training conducted under operational conditions, or in certain cases when acting in support of Civil Ministries and Authorities or when operating solely on Crown Land.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out (a) the results of his Department's funded research programme into the possible interactions between the vaccines and nerve agent pre-treatments that were administered to British troops during the Gulf conflict and (b) details of any other of his Department's research relevant to the health effects of organophosphates and carbonates, including nerve agents, organophosphate pesticides and nerve agent pre-treatments. [95072]

Mr. Spellar: The initial phase of the research programme involving a preliminary toxicological study of the effects of the co-administration of vaccines and nerve agent pre-treatments (NAPS) in guinea pigs has recently been completed at CBD Porton Down. An outline of the study's findings was presented at a conference on research into Gulf veterans' illnesses in Washington DC in June. This initial stage of the overall research programme, which was primarily designed to help inform the design of more sophisticated longer-term studies, does not report any remarkable findings on the administration of the combination of vaccines and nerve agent treatments examined.

The results of the study were reviewed by the Independent Panel, which oversees the vaccine interactions research programme, at a meeting earlier this year. The Panel agreed that the researchers should proceed with publication of the results of this initial study through the appropriate scientific channels. The Panel also agreed to more extensive rodent studies, to be carried out at the National Institute of Biological Standards and Controls, and further studies at CBD Porton Down which will include sophisticated techniques to examine any subtle long-term neurophysiological and cognitive effects of the administration of vaccines and NAPS.

I have arranged to have a copy of the information presented at the Washington meeting placed in the Library of the House. A more detailed paper is being prepared for submission to a peer-reviewed scientific journal and will be published as soon as possible. This information will be placed on the Gulf veterans' illnesses page on the MOD website in due course.

I am also today placing in the Library of the House copies of the Defence Scientific Advisory Council's Working Party Report on the Long Term Neurotoxicity of the Anticholinesterases, together with the Ministry of Defence's response to the Report. I am also placing in the Library three previously unpublished studies by CBD Porton Down, and one already published, which are referred to in the Report.

The Report, which is a review of existing literature and research, concludes that there is robust evidence that high doses of organophosphates may have long term toxic effects on the peripheral nervous system; that there is more limited information about the long term toxic effects of low doses of organophosphates on the central nervous system; and that there is little evidence that the prophylactic use of carbamates (such as NAPS) is associated with any long term adverse health effects, although this should be further explored. We hope that it will be a useful source of information on the long-term effects of these compounds. The Ministry of Defence welcomes the Report. We accept the recommendations for further research.

As the MOD's response to the Report makes clear, we continue to carry out a range of research into the health effects of organophosphates and carbamates, including nerve agents and nerve agent pre-treatments. In addition to the research set out there, work is underway at CBD

Porton Down to investigate the question of whether these compounds might have an effect on the immune system. This work, which is following up research reported in the open literature, is in its very early stages and we cannot yet say whether there is any such effect, or what the implications of that might be. We intend to make public the findings of this work as soon as possible, as each part of it reaches scientific maturity.

Colchester Garrison

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Colchester Garrison PFI project. [95211]

Mr. Spellar: I am delighted to announce that, following a thorough evaluation of detailed proposals from three short listed bidders, we have now selected RMPA Services, a consortia comprising Sir Robert McAlpine, Primary Management and W.S. Atkins, as the preferred bidder for the redevelopment of Colchester Garrison.

Detailed contract negotiations will now commence with RMPA Services with the aim of achieving contract signature towards the end of next year.

The benefits which we see flowing from this deal are the replacement of an estate which is mainly old and substandard, poorly laid out and significantly underscale, with one which will provide high quality barracks and facilities which conform to the appropriate accommodation scales, are flexible to use and are capable of further development. Furthermore this will be achieved very much more quickly under the PFI route than would be possible using our own internal procedures. For example, once the contract is signed we expect the redevelopment to be complete within four years compared to the 15 years it could have taken using a conventional, staged approach. It will also free up land for redevelopment close to Colchester town centre and therefore be of benefit to the local community.

Finally, this is a good deal for the taxpayer. As a result of the competitive bids received, we believe that from RMPA Services will offer the MOD excellent value for money resulting from design efficiencies, economies of scale in development and a more cost effective delivery of the support services.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

E-mail

Mr. Linton: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee if he will make a statement on arrangements for the introduction of a new e-mail system in the House. [94818]

Mr. Allan: As part of the Parliament-wide Information Technology Convergence Programme, which has been endorsed by the Information Committee, all personal computers linked to the PDVN are being converted to a new e-mail system, Microsoft Exchange and Outlook 98. Some older computers linked to the PDVN will need to be upgraded or replaced if they are to continue to use the parliamentary e-mail system. The old e-mail system, Groupwise, will be closed down on 16 November 1999, prior to the beginning of the next Session on 17 November.

The Parliamentary Communications Directorate (PCD) has sent to all Members and their staff information about the computer specifications required to run the new e-mail system and can advise Members and their staff about new central purchasing arrangements through which Members may purchase new equipment which meets those specifications. Members whose staff are linked to the PDVN from their constituencies are being sent a disc and information about remote conversion to use Outlook. Members and their staff based in the parliamentary precincts whose computers have not yet been converted to Outlook can arrange a date for their conversion and for a short training course by contacting PCD on extension 0899. Courses are being arranged for each weekday in October and November.

Breast-feeding

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what assessments he has made of the adequacy of the arrangements for breast-feeding in the buildings for which her Committee is responsible; and if she will make a statement. [94798]

Mrs. Roe: There are no designated facilities for breast-feeding on the Parliamentary Estate. However, I understand that individual hon. Members have made arrangements, through the Serjeant at Arms, for appropriate facilities to be made available as required.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Holocaust Remembrance Day

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will consult on the proposal for a Holocaust Remembrance Day. [95213]

Mr. Straw: We issued a consultation paper on 18 October. Copies have been placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Urban Renaissance

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress of the development of an urban renaissance in the north-west. [94510]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Government intend to respond to the urban renaissance recommendations by early summer next year. Already in the north-west, an urban regeneration company (URC), Liverpool Vision, has been set up in direct response to one of the recommendations in the Roger's Report and is actively pursuing the regeneration of the city centre. It is likely the URC for east Manchester will be announced shortly.

Vacant Properties

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many local government properties are currently unoccupied; [93672]

(2) how many houses were unoccupied at the latest date for which figures are available; and how many had been unoccupied for more than (a) six months and (b) 12 months. [93677]

Mr. Mullin: The latest available information shows that there were 753,200 dwellings in England vacant on 1 April 1998 of which 81,700 were local authority-owned. A level of vacancy is a usual feature of the stock, reflecting turnover and movement within the stock. However, recent analysis of local authorities reporting problems with unpopular housing contained in the PAT 7 "Unpopular Housing" report shows that low demand neighbourhoods tend to have vacancies at three times the national level.

A breakdown by length of time vacant is not collected centrally for all tenures. The available information is as follows:

Vacant dwellings at 1 April 1998

	Total vacant	Vacant more than 6 months and less than 12 months	More than 12 months
Local Authority	81,700	10,600	16,000
Registered Social Landlords	29,300	4,100	4,800
Other Public Sector	19,000	not available	not available
Other Private Sector	623,200	not available	220,100
Total Dwellings (all tenures)	753,200	not available	not available

Litter Offences (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in each of the last five years for which figures are available, how many (a) warnings and (b) fines were issued for litter offences in the Chelmsford local authority area under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. [94779]

Mr. Hill: The local authority does not collect information on the number of warnings issued for litter offences. No fines have been issued for litter offences in the Chelmsford local authority area under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 in the last five years.

Alandia Stream

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the investigations to establish why the master of the Alandia Stream which broke down in the Fair Isle channel on 26 June delayed notifying the coastguard of his ship's condition. [94602]

Mr. Hill: The vessel when adrift, was never within six miles of the coast or within the designated six mile "area to be avoided" navigational zone around Fair Isle. The vessel fully complied with the MCA requirement to accept a tug and the Anglian Prince was despatched to the scene. A tow was accepted and the vessel taken to Sullom Voe, Shetland as a port of refuge, keeping outside of the "area to be avoided" as per MCA instructions.

Following the Port State Control Inspection of the vessel at Sullom Voe, MCA investigated why six hours had elapsed before the tanker reported to the Coastguard that she was in difficulty.

The Master's response was that he wished to check the problem to see if it could be fixed without assistance. He maintained that the vessel's drift was monitored carefully to ensure that the ship remained outside the area to be avoided.

The MCA advised the Master that the UK Government expect to be immediately informed of any incident that affected the safety of vessels or possible endangerment to the environment even when assistance was not required. The MCA formed the opinion that the Finnish Master well understood the concerns of the UK authorities and would be more willing to keep the Coastguard informed of any future incidents.

The MCA also contacted the Bahamas, the Flag State Administration, notifying them that we would have expected an earlier notification from the Master to the UK Coastguard. The Bahamas have agreed to follow this up with the Finnish owners of the vessel.

Maritime and Coastguard Agency

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce the key targets for the Maritime and Coastguard Agency for 1999–2000. [94881]

Mr. Hill: I have today placed in the House Library a copy of the agency's business plan which includes its key targets for 1999–2000. The issue of the plan was delayed pending the publication of the Government's response to the Transport Select Committee's report on the Maritime and Coastguard Agency which recommended de-merger. That response was published on 12 August.

The key targets for the Maritime and Coastguard Agency are:

To complete: (a) at least 95 per cent. of the agreed programme of inspections, and (b) at least 90 per cent. of agreed key tasks.

To decide on the search and rescue (SAR) response to accidents and life-threatening situations, and to initiate action if necessary, within 5 minutes of being alerted in at least 95 per cent. of cases.

To follow up at least 95 per cent. of significant breaches of safety and environmental aspects of Merchant Shipping legislation to determine whether prosecution is appropriate.

To implement the outcomes of the review of the organisation, operations and functions of MCA to be operational by 31 December 1999.

Infrastructure Developments

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the Code of Practice on the Dissemination of Information during Major Infrastructure Developments; and if he will make a statement. [95071]

Mr. Raynsford: I have today published the Code of Practice and placed copies in the Library. The purpose of the code is to ensure that people are given as much information as possible at all stages of a development. It does, however, recognise that there may be exceptional circumstances where non-disclosure is justifiable, such as when issues of commercial confidentiality arise.

The provision of a referee who can be approached by members of the public, if they believe that information, which should be forthcoming under the code, has not been provided, is a new element in the code.

A key aspect of our proposals for modernising the planning system is to improve the handling of major infrastructure developments. The new code on the dissemination of information links the planning and implementation phases of such developments.

We are currently analysing the responses to our consultation paper on proposals for streamlining the planning approval procedures for major developments. We are also conducting a fundamental review to improve the system of compulsory purchase and compensation, which are often important aspects of major development implementation.

All Government Departments in England and their Agencies will follow the code. The Scottish Executive and the Welsh Assembly will be making their own arrangements. The code is also commended to local authorities and private sector developers who may be promoting major infrastructure developments.

Greater London Authority

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further steps he is taking to prepare for the Greater London Authority. [95212]

Mr. Hill: My predecessor, my hon. Friend the Minister for London and Construction, announced on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 398–99, that my Department had earmarked provision over the four years 1998–99 to 2001–02 to meet GLA preparation costs and that separate provision was being made to cover the costs of the first elections to the GLA, including publicity, and for establishing Transport for London and the London Development Agency. My Department has now earmarked £20.6 million from within existing budgets to cover these costs.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Ministerial Meetings (United States)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what meetings she held with members and officials of the United States Government during her visits to the United States on 22 to 24 June 1997 and 14 to 18 April 1998; and if she will list the date and location of each meeting and the names of the members and officials of the United States Government at each meeting. [93955]

Clare Short: I visited New York from 22–24 June 1997 to attend the United Nations General Assembly Special Session (UNGASS) on the follow-up to the UN Conference on Environment and Development. I did not have any bilateral meetings with members and officials of the United States Government.

On my visit to Washington from 14–18 April 1998, I had meetings with:

Mr. Eisenstadt of the US State Department

Mr. Atwood of USAID

Mr. Schuerch of the US Treasury.

Demining

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the expected expenditure by her Department on humanitarian demining for 2000 and 2001. [94666]

Clare Short: In 1997 I announced plans to double our annual expenditure on humanitarian mine action to reach £10 million in the financial year 2000–01. The programme is on track to meet this target.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 6 July 1999, Official Report, column 462, on Special Advisers, if she will list the countries to which her Special Advisers have travelled since 2 May 1997. [93911]

Clare Short: Since May 1997, Special Advisers from my Department travelled to the following countries on official business:

Antigua

Bangladesh

Belgium

Canada

China

France

Hong Kong

Japan

Jordan

Kenya

Nepal

Tanzania

Thailand

Vietnam

West Bank and Gaza.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Health Act 1981

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is his policy not to amend the arrangements his Department has for applying sections 40 to 49 of the Animal Health Act 1981 and any subordinate legislation made under the same sections of the Act; and if he will make a statement. [93213]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 July 1999]: We have no plans for such amendments.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Decommissioning

8. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the implementation of weapons decommissioning. [92978]

Mr. Ingram: The Government are determined to see the Agreement implemented in full. We, along with the Irish Government, have appointed Senator Mitchell to review the points of difficulty: an inclusive Executive exercising devolved powers and decommissioning of all paramilitary weapons by May 2000 in a manner determined by the Decommissioning Commission. Senator Mitchell aims to conclude his review speedily.

Good Friday Agreement

9. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners have been released under the terms of the Good Friday agreement. [92979]

Mr. Ingram: To date there have been 298 prisoners who have been released from prison under the terms of the Good Friday agreement. This is drawn from information current at 13 October 1999.

11. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the Belfast agreement. [92981]

12. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress on the peace process. [92982]

15. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress he has made towards establishing a power-sharing executive for Northern Ireland. [92986]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Mr. Gardiner) and the hon. Members for Lewes (Mr. Baker) and for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friends the Members for Amber Valley (Judy Mallaber), for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) and for Cleethorpes (Shona McIsaac). 20 October 1999, Official Report, columns 424–26.

16. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent meetings he has had with the Irish Government concerning the implementation of the Good Friday agreement. [92987]

Mr. Mandelson: Ministers continue to meet with members of the Irish Government on a regular basis to discuss matters relating to the implementation of the Good Friday Agreement and other areas of interest to the two Governments.

Policing

13. Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of officers in the RUC are (a) Catholics and (b) women; and if he will make a statement. [92984]

Mr. Ingram: On 1 July 1999 of the total number of people within the Royal Ulster Constabulary 8.35 per cent. were Catholics and 11.4 per cent. women.

19. Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Patten commission's report on policing in Northern Ireland. [92990]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore), 20 October 1999, Official Report, column 431.

Lifelong Learning

14. Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals the Government have for lifelong learning in Northern Ireland. [92985]

Mr. McFall: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron), 20 October 1999, Official Report, column 428.

Human Rights

17. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made by the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission; and if he will make a statement. [92988]

Mr. George Howarth: The Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission was established on 1 March this year. The Commission is required to produce an annual report under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. However, the Commission is an independent body and I have therefore asked the Chief Commissioner, Professor Dickson, to write to my hon. Friend to inform her of the Commission's progress since it was established and I shall place a copy in the Library of the House.

Security

18. Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to create a more normal security environment in Northern Ireland. [92989]

Mr. Ingram: We are committed to as early a return as possible to normal security arrangements, consistent with the level of threat.

Since the Good Friday Agreement, routine military patrolling has been reduced by almost two thirds. Military installations have been closed and demolished. Since January, there have been under 15,000 service personnel on operational duties in Northern Ireland, except during short periods of heightened tension over the summer. This is fewer than at any time since 1970.

Parades Commission

20. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extent the Parades Commission has been able to achieve a local accommodation over the disputed parades this year. [92991]

Mr. Ingram: The role of the Parades Commission is to promote and facilitate local accommodation in relation to contentious parades. Where this cannot be achieved, the legislation requires the Commission to make a determination.

Since its establishment in 1997, the Parades Commission has carried out a unique and very important task in the most difficult circumstances imaginable. The relatively peaceful marching season was due in no small part to the Commission's efforts.

Civic Forum

21. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made on the establishment of a civic forum in Northern Ireland. [92992]

24. Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made on the establishment of a civic forum in Northern Ireland. [92995]

Mr. George Howarth: The report identified the sectoral interests which should be represented and on 16 February 1999 the new Northern Ireland Assembly approved the report of the First and Deputy First Minister (designate) which included arrangements for a consultative civic forum guidelines which should be adhered to by nominating bodies. Work is ongoing to ensure the establishment of the forum within six months of devolution.

Reconciliation

22. Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to promote reconciliation in Northern Ireland among those whose family members or friends have been killed or injured in the past 30 years. [92993]

Mr. Ingram: Under the Government's Community Relations Programme and the European Union's Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation, funding is provided to a wide range of groups which promote peace and reconciliation. These include groups working with victims, their families and friends.

Inward Investment

23. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to encourage inward investment in Northern Ireland. [92994]

Mr. McFall: The Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland, the agency charged with attracting inward investment, continues its aggressive marketing and sales campaigns worldwide. In particular, they are following up on last year's successful promotional tour of North America, a year in which I am delighted to say they have achieved a record number of new projects.

Equality Commission

25. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the work of the Equality Commission in Northern Ireland. [92996]

Mr. George Howarth: The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland was appointed on 2 August and took over the functions exercised by its predecessors on 1 October. The commissioners have received training in their new role and are pressing ahead with the broadened equality agenda. The first formal meeting of the commission took place on 14 October 1999.

Planning (Newtownards)

26. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes are proposed in (a) those planning applications for which outline planning approval has been issued but construction has not commenced and (b) existing planning applications for which the planning decision has not yet been issued in the town of Newtownards. [92997]

Mr. George Howarth: The information is not readily available in the form requested; however, the planning service has recently carried out a detailed analysis of the housing land availability position in Newtownards. This assessment indicates that approximately 51 hectares of zoned land remains available for deployment, with the potential to accommodate some 850 dwellings. In addition, planning permission has been granted, or is currently pending, for some 360 dwellings on unzoned land within the development limits of the town.

British-Irish Council

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further talks have taken place about preparations for a British-Irish Council. [92980]

Mr. Mandelson: All preparations are now in place for the British-Irish Council and the other institutions created by the Good Friday Agreement. The Council will be established immediately on entry into force of the British-Irish Agreement. This will coincide with the devolution of powers to the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Structural Funds

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations he is having with industry and the voluntary sector in Northern Ireland on future EU structural funding. [92976]

Mr. Ingram: Representatives of industry and the voluntary sector are members of a core consultative group, established in July 1999, to enable local partners to be consulted on a regular basis regarding future EU funding. In addition, two major conferences have been organised involving many delegates from these sectors and they have also been invited to put forward their views in writing.

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the level of illegal activities by paramilitary forces. [92983]

Mr. Ingram: The situation with regard to the activities of paramilitary groups is closely monitored.

To date this year there have been seven deaths, 67 bombing incidents and 94 shooting incidents. Paramilitary attacks unfortunately also continue with 135 carried out so far this year.

This level of violence is unacceptable. I call on the perpetrators to cease these activities forthwith.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Benefit

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 9 June 1999, Official Report, column 339, on Child Benefit, when information by parliamentary constituency will become available; and if he will make a statement. [87864]

Angela Eagle: The administration of Child Benefit is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. I have asked him to reply to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 28 June 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question pursuant to the answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 339, on Child Benefit, when information by parliamentary constituency will become available.

Due to differing postcode formats used on the Child Benefit computer system and the Department's Analytical Services system, it has been difficult to derive accurate statistics by constituency. However, this is close to being resolved and I expect to be able to forward the figures to you by the end of August, once the necessary computer scans have been completed.

I hope this is helpful.

Winter Fuel Allowance

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 26 May 1999, Official Report, column 187, on winter fuel allowance, if he will re-estimate the number of eligible pensioners in Shrewsbury and Atcham who will benefit from the winter fuel payments next winter. [94145]

Angela Eagle: The administration of Winter Fuel Payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 19 October 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question pursuant to his Answer of 26th May, Official Report, column 187, on winter fuel allowance, if he will re-estimate the number of eligible pensioners in Shrewsbury and Atcham who will benefit from the winter fuel payments (WFP) next winter.

All eligible pensioner households will benefit from the WFP this winter. Pensioners, including pensioner couples who qualify by receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance which includes one of the pensioner premiums, and who are not permanently in residential care or a nursing home, will be entitled to £100. Eligible pensioners who live alone, or who are the only eligible pensioner in a household, will be entitled to £100. Other eligible pensioners will be entitled to £50.

The estimated number of pensioners in the Shrewsbury and Atcham constituency who will benefit from WFP next winter remains the same as in the previous reply to the Minister of State's answer at column 187 of the Official Report. This information is based on the data held for last year's exercise. Of the estimated 57,000 pensioners who will benefit from WFP, approximately 28,000 will receive £100 payments. We are currently preparing the relevant computer systems for this winter's payments to ensure that all payments are made before Christmas.

I hope this is helpful.

Incapacity Benefit

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in North Staffordshire are on incapacity benefit; of those who have been on this benefit for three years or more, how many have been called back on (i) a six-monthly basis, (ii) a 12-monthly basis and (iii) an 18-monthly basis; and with what results. [93659]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of Incapacity Benefit is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Ms Joan Whalley, dated 19 October 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people in North Staffordshire are on Incapacity Benefit (IB); of those who have been on this benefit for three years or more, how many have been called back on (i) a six-monthly basis, (ii) a 12-monthly basis and (iii) an 18-monthly basis; and with what results.

Information is recorded on the total number of constituents claiming IB at Hanley Benefit Office which covers the North Staffordshire area. The number of claimants receiving IB from Hanley Benefit Office is 25,940 and of these 15,160 have been receiving that benefit for three years or more.

Statistical information on the timing of re-examination of claims is not maintained by the Benefits Agency. However, it is expected that on a national basis, 4% of claimants will be referred to Medical Services for the All Work Test on a three month basis, 16% every six months, 19% every 12 months and 8% every 18 months.

I hope this information is helpful.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Westminster Foundation for Democracy

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial and other assistance has been given to the Westminster Foundation for Democracy during 1998–99; what support the foundation received during 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for giving support to the foundation. [94543]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Westminster Foundation for Democracy received £3,136,970 from the Foreign Office in 1998–99 in Grant-in-Aid and special purpose grants, as well as a grant of £31,845 from DfID. For the current financial year the Westminster Foundation for Democracy has been allocated £4 million in Grant-in-Aid and up to £244,000 for special projects from the FCO and £14,000 from DfID.

In addition to financial assistance, an FCO official serves on the Foundations's Board of Governors in an advisory capacity.

The Westminster Foundation for Democracy exists to promote democratic development worldwide. It has a proven track record in delivering high quality projects in support of democracy building around the world.

Diplomatic Staff

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how pay rates are set for locally engaged staff in overseas diplomatic missions; and what account is taken of recognised local poverty datum lines. [94162]

Mr. Battle: Pay rates and other conditions of service for locally engaged staff are set by reference to comparable employers based locally. These comparators are usually drawn from other diplomatic missions, private companies, and the local Civil Service. UK missions are also required to follow the terms of local employment law, including legislation on national minimum wage levels.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between Britain and Sierra Leone. [94876]

Mr. Hain: We welcomed the signature on 7 July of the Lomé Peace Agreement between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front. Our objective now is to help the Government and people of Sierra Leone to implement the peace agreement, and thus build a framework for lasting peace and security.

We have implemented the £10 million package of assistance which my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced on 2 March 1999. This has included: UK military advisers helping to train the new, democratically accountable Sierra Leone Army; a range of equipment for the new Army including uniforms, vehicles, and light weapons; logistical support and equipment for the ECOMOG peacekeeping forces; and support for civil society and Government participation in the negotiation of the peace agreement. The ECOWAS Secretariat confirmed that the weapons could be imported as an exemption to the ECOWAS Small Arms Moratorium; and the UN Sanctions Committee was notified of these exports. We are working with the United Nations to support the early deployment of a UN peacekeeping force to Sierra Leone.

DfID and the MOD are also supporting a range of projects in Sierra Leone. We will take every opportunity, including at the forthcoming Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Durban, to encourage further support for Sierra Leone from others in the international community.

GCHQ

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish GCHQ's recruitment statistics for 1998 indicating the comparable figures for 1997. [94877]

Mr. Robin Cook: GCHQ notified the Commissioners that as a result of recruitment schemes run in 1998, 182 individuals have joined the department or are awaiting completion of the recruitment process. The 1997 recruitment schemes yielded 236 new entrants. In addition, eight former members of staff were reappointed in 1998 compared with five in 1997.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the preparedness of other countries to deal with the millennium bug. [94878]

Mr. Battle: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has been actively gathering information about the preparedness of other countries to deal with the millennium bug. This information is being made publicly available on the FCO website at http://www.fco.gov.uk. So far, we have published information on 70 countries and these are continuously updated. More will follow soon. Copies of these statements have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

European Union Council

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union to the end of October together with the major European Union events for the next six months. [94879]

General Affairs Council

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the General Affairs Council. [94880]

Mr. Vaz: The GAC adopted the A points listed in document 11573/99 and noted the resolutions, decisions and opinions adopted by the European Parliament in its session of 13–17 September listed in document 10352/1/99. Copies of the documents listing the A points and resolutions will be placed in the House Libraries as soon as they become available.

Preparation of Tampere European Council

The Presidency briefed the GAC on Finnish Prime Minister Lipponen's tour of capitals. The traditional letter of invitation to Tampere would issue very shortly. The Presidency also briefly mentioned external aspects of Justice and Home Affairs co-operation, in the context of preparation for Tampere. There was no discussion.

Charter of Fundamental Rights

After a very brief discussion, the Presidency concluded that there was agreement on their proposals for the composition and rules of procedure of the body responsible for preparing the first draft of the Charter.

ESDP Military and Non-Military Crisis Management: Preparation in View of the European Council in Helsinki

The Presidency briefed Ministers on work underway on European defence.

Earthquake in Greece

The Greek Foreign Minister reported to the Council on the extensive damage caused by the earthquake in Athens on 7 September. The Council encouraged the Commission to examine all possible ways of assisting Greece, making full use of the possibilities offered under the structural funds, on the basis of a specific evaluation of the damage.

Northern Caucasus/Chechnya

Ministers expressed their strong concern at the deteriorating human rights situation in Chechnya and at the risks of the conflict spreading. They supported the Commission package of 1.2 million euro of humanitarian aid.

Western Balkans

The Council agreed the Commission's proposal for a pilot of the "Energy for Democracy" programme in Serbia, which will supply heating oil and diesel to the towns of Nis and Pirot, where opposition parties run the local administration. The Council discussed the possibility of lifting the flight ban on Serbia, but no consensus was reached.

The Council welcomed initiatives proposed by the UK on tackling organised crime in Kosovo. The Council asked the Commission and other relevant bodies to come up with proposals. Foreign Ministers will discuss the issue further when they meet at the Tampere Special European Council.

Burma

Foreign Ministers expressed their concern at the lack of progress on human rights in Burma. Ministers offered their full support for the forthcoming mission of the UN Secretary General's Special Representative to Burma and hoped that it would lead to an improvement in human rights and the promotion of democracy. The Council extended the EU's Common Position on Burma for a further six months, agreeing to review it after Mr. de Soto's mission.

EU Code of Conduct on Arms Export

The GAC approved the first consolidated report on the operation of the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports and agreed to publish the report in the Official Journal. The report summarises actions taken by member states to implement the provisions of the Code and outlines priorities for future action.

East Timor

Foreign Ministers welcomed the deployment of the International Force in East Timor. The Commission announced its intention to provide further EC funds for the UN Mission in East Timor and for the eventual UN Transitional Authority in East Timor.

Preparation for Seattle Ministerial

The GAC continued to discuss the EU's approach to the negotiations on a new multilateral trade round. They confirmed the EU's strong support for a comprehensive round to be launched at the WTO Ministerial conference in Seattle (30 November–3 December).

Foreign Ministers had lunch with the Israeli Foreign Minister, David Levy. Mr. Levy stressed the Israeli government's commitment to the Middle East Peace Process, and the importance of restarting all tracks of the Process. He called for strengthened links between the EU and Israel. The GAC welcomed EU Special Envoy Moratinos' initiative for an 'EU-Israel Forum'.

Meeting with Serb Opposition leaders

The GAC met with representatives of democratic forces in the FRY. Foreign Ministers underlined the EU's readiness to support the people of the FRY in their efforts to promote democracy, human rights and the rule of law, and the development of good regional and international relations.

Co-operation Councils with Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia

The first ever Co-operation Councils with the three South Caucasus states took place on 12 October. Discussion covered political co-operation, trade and investment, democracy and human rights and co-operation in Justice and Home Affairs.

HEALTH

Cancer

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many extra (a) radiographers and (b) oncologists he plans to recruit in each NHS region by April 2000 to implement his proposal that no cancer patient referred by a GP should wait more than two weeks. [94022]

Mr. Denham: It is for individual National Health Service trusts and health authorities to determine the number, grade and mix of staff they will require to deliver services. An additional £10 million has been made available to facilitate the two-week all cancers waiting time standard.

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the reports published by his Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by his Department, (c) the decisions his Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria he uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93974]

Ms Stuart: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him yesterday by my right hon. Friend the President of the Council, 19 October 1999, Official Report, columns 429–30.

Performance Indicators

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will incorporate total and classification group average figures for each of the tables listed in the high level performance indicator set for next year; and if he will make a statement. [94062]

Mr. Denham: The high level performance indicator set supports a comprehensive assessment of the performance of the National Health Service across the range of its activity, including services that are provided alongside social services. The current set was the first to be published and we are committed to making improvements over time. The Department is currently reviewing the content and presentation of figures for the next publication of performance indicators.

NICE

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the costs of establishing the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. [93918]

Mr. Denham: The cost of establishing the National Institute for Clinical Excellence was in the region of £734,000.

This figure includes accommodation costs for the Institute, costs of recruiting staff for the Institute and staffing costs of officials in the Department.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what constraints the National Institute for Clinical Excellence will be able to place upon a clinician's ability to prescribe. [93874]

Mr. Denham: Clinicians are expected to take National Institute for Clinical Excellence guidance fully into account when exercising their clinical judgment. Such guidance represents the views of an eminent body of senior practitioners who have had the opportunity of carefully considering the available evidence. However, NICE guidance does not override a doctor's individual responsibility to exercise his or her clinical judgment in determining what treatment is appropriate and necessary for a patient.

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when information regarding maximum and minimum per capita management allowances for 1999–2000 payable to primary care groups in England will be available. [93870]

Mr. Denham: This information is currently being collected and validated. Full details will be published as soon as possible.

Health Professions Regulatory Body

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will bring forward regulations to govern professions allied to medicine; and if a period of consultation will precede them. [93909]

Mr. Hutton: The Health Act 1999 provides for the replacement of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960 by an Order and the eventual repeal of the 1960 Act when replacement arrangements are in place. We are committed to full and wide ranging consultation on the proposals for new legislation as well as the three month statutory consultation on the draft Order, with a Report to Parliament on the outcome, when the Order is laid.

Commission for Health Improvement

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding loss of clinical freedom by clinicians consequent upon the establishment of the Commission for Health Improvement; and if he will make a statement. [93921]

Mr. Denham: The aim of the Commission for Health Improvement was clearly set out in the consultation document "A First Class Service" (July 1999). This was to work with clinicians to assure, monitor and improve the quality of care provided by the NHS. Clinicians will remain responsible for their clinical judgment in relation to individual patients, although they will be expected to take account of national clinical guidance and of the evidence on which it is based.

Most responses to "A First Class Service" were supportive of the proposals for the Commission for Health Improvement and the Government's quality strategy as a whole.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made regarding the additional manpower required for the Commission for Health Improvement. [93920]

Mr. Denham: The Commission will be an independent body and it will therefore be for the Commission itself to decide its manpower requirements. In doing so, it will need to be aware of its duty to carry out its functions effectively, efficiently and economically.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement regarding the powers of the Commission for Health Improvement to criticise individual doctors. [93922]

Mr. Denham: It is not the aim of the Commission for Health Improvement to assess or publicise the performance of individual clinicians. The Commission will look at organisational systems to assure and improve the quality of services.

The Commission's powers to disclose confidential information about individuals is strictly limited in the Health Act 1999. In line with these restrictions, if the Commission does find evidence of individual poor performance it will draw this to the attention of the employing organisation for them to take action. It may also, if appropriate, draw this to the attention of the professional regulatory body concerned.

NICE/CHIMP Running Costs

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the annual running costs of (a) the National Institute for Clinical Excellence and (b) the Commission for Health Improvement. [93919]

Mr. Denham: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence's total budget is £9.8 million. NICE will determine its own running costs. However, we expect them to maintain their running costs at a reasonable level to ensure that as much funding as possible is made available for its work programme.

The Explanatory Notes for the Health Act 1999 cited the estimated annual running costs for the Commission for Health Improvement for 2000–01 at around £7 million.

Staff Shortages Survey

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the findings of his staff shortages survey will be published. [93876]

Mr. Denham: The results of the recruitment, retention and vacancies survey were published on 10 September and have been placed in the Library.

Drug Prices

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement regarding the change in the number of category D entries appearing in the Drug Tariff published by The Stationery Office each month since February. [93878]

Mr. Hutton: Drugs are added to Category D of Part VIII of the Drug Tariff when community pharmacies are having difficulty obtaining supplies of generic drugs at Drug Tariff price. The closure of a significant manufacturer of generics last December, combined with the relocation of some manufacturing facilities at the beginning of the year, and the transfer of products from bulk to smaller packs has meant that a wider range of products than normal have been in short supply, and hence an unusually large number of products have been included in Category D.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what dates Special Advisers from his Department have visited the United States of America on official business since 1 May 1997; which of his Special Advisers took part in each visit; and if he will list the meetings which these Special Advisers held with members and officials of the United States Government during each visit, specifying the date and location of each meeting and the names of the US members and officials at each meeting. [93945]

Ms Stuart: Between 1 May 1997 and 18 October 1999, the Special Advisers to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health have visited the United States of America on two occasions in an official capacity as listed.

Date: 4–7 February 1998

Destination: Washington DC

Special adviser: Simon Stevens.

Accompanying my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Health to meeting with President Clinton.

Date: 21–23 October 1998

Accompanying my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State at the International Health Policy meeting and meeting with the Secretary for Health and Human Services.

All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the findings of the inquiry into the level of provision of beds in NHS hospitals; and if he will make statement. [94794]

Mr. Denham: The National Beds Inquiry is nearing completion. Its findings will be published in due course.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Coral Nurseries

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in the development of measures to protect coral and related nurseries for fish. [93493]

Mr. Mullin: The UK is a founding member of the International Coral Reef Initiative (ICRI), a co-ordination mechanism aimed at promoting coral reef protection and sustainable use of coral reef resources world-wide. One of the functions of ICRI is to provide a framework for supporting the development of the Global Coral Reef Monitoring Network (GCRMN).

Since February 1997 the UK Government have funded the development of the South Asia node of the GCRMN in India, the Maldives and Sri Lanka. This has already successfully established the foundations of an effective coral reef management mechanism in the region.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions visited the Maldives earlier this year and saw this programme in action. Whilst he was there, he was able to announce £300,000 of additional UK funding from the Department for International Development, which will assist countries of the region further to strengthen their national coral reef information systems. It will also enable local people to be trained in a wider range of data analysis and its use in coral reef management and will provide continuing advice to the national institutions implementing the monitoring programme.

In the past, the failure to undertake routine monitoring has been a significant constraint to effective protection and management of coral reefs. This UK funded programme has established a model which can be applied to other reef systems as a basis for helping poor coastal communities to optimise sustainable benefits from coral reef resources, including fisheries.

Biosafety Protocol

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from non-governmental organisations concerned with development issues regarding the United Kingdom Government's position on the Biosafety Protocol; and if he will make a statement. [94871]

Mr. Meacher: My Department has received no representations to date. Development incomes would be a matter for the Department for International Development.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Sub-post Offices

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the implications for sub-post offices of the industrial tribunal ruling of 27 September that sub-postmasters and mistresses are entitled to receive the national minimum wage. [95175]

Mr. Alan Johnson: It is too early to comment on any broader implications for the sub-post office network of the Inverness Employment Tribunal's decision on the pre-hearing of the case brought by Mrs. Elizabeth Bain, the sub-postmistress at Tore, that she is entitled to be paid the national minimum wage. I understand from the Post Office that nationally there are fewer than 1,500 sub-postmasters and post-mistresses for whom the Tribunal's decision is likely to affect their remuneration arrangements with the Post Office.

Fixed Rate Export Finance Scheme

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of the ECGD's Fixed Rate Export Finance scheme. [95430]

Mr. Caborn: ECGD is in active discussion with representatives of the British Bankers Association on a successor to the FREF Scheme that expired on 30 September. To allow time for these discussions to be completed, and for an appropriate successor scheme to be put in place, the scheme has been rolled forward for a further two months to the end of November.

Millennium Compliance

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made by UK offshore oil and gas producers and oil companies in dealing with the millennium bug; and what measures have been taken by his Department to ensure the security of concessionary coal supplies over this period. [95427]

Ms Hewitt: I can now report the findings of the independent assessment process established by the DTI which confirms that UK oil and gas producers and oil suppliers have now attained a 100 per cent. blue status against the Action 2000 assessment criteria and are now assessed as ready to ensure that it will be business as usual and that there should be no major disruption to supplies due to the Year 2000 threat to computer systems. The DTI has been pleased to take on the role of "responsible body" reporting to the Action 2000 national infrastructure forum on the year 2000 preparations being made by the oil industry and UK's offshore oil and gas producers.

The DTI has approached this task in a systematic and thorough way, making full use of the industry's own resources. It has engaged WS Atkins Consultants Ltd.—an internationally known and highly respected engineering consultancy with extensive experience within the oil and gas industry—to validate independently the process adopted and its results. The industry has fully supported this important work and provided full and frank access to all the relevant information and staff.

The independent verification approach adopted by DTI has been agreed with Action 2000 and designed to build on the work already in hand by offshore and onshore companies to avoid duplication of effort. It has been closely supported by the relevant trade associations (UKOOA—offshore oil operators association, UKPIA—UK Petroleum Industry Association and AUKOI—Association of UK Oil Independents).

For the offshore sector, DTI arranged for companies to conduct a stringent assessment process supported by UKOOA, which involved preparation of a report on each operator's state of readiness and its independent confirmation by either a "peer group assessor" or an external consultant.

To enhance further the independent element in this process, WS Atkins carried out a programme of visits to review the process adopted, the supporting data and its conclusions. The format and extent of the visit programme was determined by WS Atkins. It covered all the key elements of the offshore oil and gas industry including production and onshore terminal/pipeline facilities, and was designed to ensure they could reach a fair view on the overall status of the upstream industry.

For the downstream oil sector covering the supply and distribution of refined oil products, WS Atkins were engaged to carry out a more intensive role. They prepared and issued on behalf of DTI a detailed and closely targeted questionnaire to all the main downstream players. Following a detailed analysis of the responses WS Atkins conducted a series of detailed on site follow-up visits designed to validate the questionnaire responses. Officials from DTI and other interested Government Departments also participated in some of the visits.

Again, the visit programme was determined by WS Atkins and designed to ensure that they were able to form a fair view of the overall status of the downstream industry. The programme was carefully planned to cover all aspects of the industry. It looked vertically through the supply chain and covered refining, pipelines, distribution terminals, and retail outlets. It embraced all sectors of the industry from the majors, and hypermarkets through mid-size players to smaller retailers. It extended throughout the UK covering locations in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Throughout the process, DTI has worked closely with Action 2000, other responsible bodies and the various trade bodies to ensure nothing was overlooked and ensure that the process adopted reflected good year 2000 practice.

At the National Infrastructure Forum meeting in January 1999, the industry attracted an overall "amber" assessment against the standard colour code adopted by Action 2000. I am pleased to report that WS Atkins have confirmed that the industry has since then made substantial progress both onshore and offshore, and has now attained 100 per cent. "blue" status. A copy of their summary reports have been placed in the Libraries of the House, and copies made available on the DTI internet site. WS Atkins have also confirmed that the validation process adopted by DTI provides an effective means of independently validating the industry's state of progress, both in terms of its suitability to the offshore/onshore sector, and general good practice in relation to year 2000 risk assessment.

In detail WS Atkins have awarded 100 per cent. "blue" status in respect of the upstream sector which covers firms engaged in the production and transport to shore of oil and gas, and related gas interconnectors. 100 per cent. "blue" status was also attained by those companies assessed in the downstream oil sector. The assessed companies are responsible for over 90 per cent. of UK oil supplies and cover the receipt, refining, distribution and retail of oil products.

The DTI has agreed a follow up plan with WS Atkins, to continue to monitor progress and carry out a further independent check visits to monitor the industry's ongoing readiness throughout the millennium period.

Regarding coal, the Department is responsible for supplying concessionary fuel to some 90,000 former employees of British Coal. This accounts for 20–25 per cent. of all solid fuel for domestic use. Currently, two large coal companies are under contract to DTI for the supply and distribution of concessionary fuel (CPL Distribution Ltd. and T. H. Fergusson).

The Department appointed Aon Risk Services Ltd. (risk management consultants) to assess the security of supply of concessionary fuel over the millennium period. This covered the fuel distributors as well as a number of major producers. In addition, Aon was asked to advise on the position in the wider retail market for household coal in so far that the same systems are used by the companies under contract to DTI for distributing concessionary supplies. Aon's conclusions are equally encouraging with all the main operators now assessed as achieving 100 per cent. blue rating. Aon will be involved in continued monitoring of the position.

Gas and Electricity Regulation

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Government's response to consultation on proposals to reform the system of gas and electricity regulation, and on his plans to assess the regulatory, environmental and equal treatment impact of the proposed Utilities Bill as a whole. [95429]

Mrs. Liddell: In October last year, the Government published a consultation paper on their proposals for reforming the system of gas and electricity regulation. After considering the responses, I have published a document which sets out the Government's proposals on the issues raised ("The Future of Gas and Electricity Regulation: The Government's Proposals for Legislation", DTI, 13 October 1999, ref. URN 99/1049). These proposals will form part of the Utilities Bill which the Government intend to introduce when parliamentary time permits.

My Department has also published draft regulatory impact, environmental and equal treatment appraisals of the provisions to be sought in the Utilities Bill, requesting comments by 15 November.

Copies of the documents have been placed in the Library of the House, as has a list of the names of those who responded to the consultation document and who were content for their names and views to be made public. The responses themselves, with the exception of those from parties who made a request for confidentiality, have been placed in the library of the Department of Trade and Industry, where they are available for inspection.

Subsidence Compensation Scheme

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the Coal Authority's Fifth report on the administration of the Coal-Mining Subsidence Damage Repair and Compensation scheme. [95431]

Mrs. Liddell: I have now received this report from the Coal Authority and have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses today.

Employment Relations Act 1999

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which sections of the Employment Relations Act 1999 have been implemented and on what date; and what is the timetable for the remaining sections. [94791]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The first commencement order (S.I. 1999/2509) for the Act was made on 8 September, bringing sections 38 and 42 into force on 9 September and section 18(6) on 30 September.

The second commencement order (S.I. 1999/2830) was made on 14 October. Under it, sections 2, 3, 13(1) to (3), 18(1) to (5), 19 to 23, 26 to 33, 34(4), 35, 36(1) (in part), 37, 39, 40 and 43, Schedules 2 and 6 and paragraphs 1, 2, 5 (in part), 6 and 8 of Schedule 7 will come into force on 25 October and sections 7 to 9 and Schedule 4 will come into force on 15 December. The corresponding provisions of section 44 and Schedule 9 (repeals) will come into force on 25 October or 15 December as appropriate.

It is intended that the remaining provisions in the Act should be brought into force over the coming year, including, by Easter, new rules on industrial action ballots and notices (section 4 and Schedule 3), new protections for unfairly dismissed strikers (section 16 and Schedule 5) and better access for national security staff to employment tribunals (section 41 and Schedule 8), and, shortly thereafter, the new right to be accompanied in disciplinary and grievance hearings (sections 10 to 15) and the statutory trade union recognition scheme and associated provisions (sections 1, 5, 6 and 25 and Schedule 1).

Raventhorpe Power Station

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decision on ABB Energy Development Co Ltd's application to construct and operate a combined cycle gas turbine power station at Raventhorpe, Scunthorpe. [95428]

Mrs. Liddell: I have today decided to give a direction under section 14(3) of the Energy Act 1976 to prevent the building of a 450 MW generating station to be fuelled by natural gas at Raventhorpe, Scunthorpe, North Lincolnshire.

Copies of the press notice and decision letter are being placed in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Household Incomes

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the next analysis in the Households Below Average Income series. [94700]

Angela Eagle: Results to 1997–98 were published on 14 October and copies have been placed in the Library.

We hope to publish the next edition in the summer of 2000.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of his Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the last five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. [93847]

Mr. Bayley: The information is as follows:

"The Quarterly"; forerunner of "DSS News". First produced Autumn 1991, (ceased publication 1998), was issued quarterly.

"DSS News"; information for staff on current Departmental issues—input from Ministers and Permanent Secretary. First produced April 1998 and issued every two months.

"Leisure"; sports and social information on recreational events/activities for DH/DSS staff. First produced pre 1994 and issued monthly.

"The Weekly"; staff vacancies and moves, personnel issues, general issues affecting staff. First produced in current format pre 1994 and issued weekly.

"Cascade"; single information sheet issued by senior officials to inform staff of current policy or personnel issues. First produced 1998 and issued on an ad hoc basis as and when needed.

"Network" (now renamed "Oracle"); update by senior official on policy issues for staff in policy branches. First produced 1997 (ceased publication 1999). Issued monthly.

None of these publications carries a protective security marking.

In addition to those listed, individual branches may, from time to time, issue newsletters to their own staff. These have limited circulation and would not be distributed generally. Letters may also be issued to staff from time to time on an ad hoc basis on issues affecting staff.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to announce the outcome of the annual review of the cold weather payments scheme; and if he will make a statement. [95495]

Angela Eagle: Following advice from the Meteorological Office, the annual review of the Cold Weather Payments scheme has now been completed. Amending regulations were laid on 11 October 1999 and will come into force on 1 November, in time for the beginning of the winter period.

Four of the weather stations used in the scheme last winter have been replaced. Abbotsinch (Glasgow Airport), Turnhouse (Edinburgh Airport), Portland and Southampton. They will be replaced respectively by the stations at Bishopton, Edinburgh Gogarbank, Isle of Portland and Thorney Island. Thorney Island is an existing weather station which is already used in the scheme. In addition, a station at Lake Vyrnwy in North Wales has been added to the scheme to improve representation in that area. There have also been some changes by Royal Mail to postcodes which have been reflected in the amending regulations.

Cold weather payments are separate from, and in addition to, winter fuel payments which are paid only to pensioners.

I have written to each of the hon. Members affected by the changes.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Public Lending Right

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many authors have received their maximum entitlement from the Public Lending Right. [94457]

Mr. Alan Howarth: In the last financial year, 1998–99, 100 authors received the maximum entitlement of £6,000 from the Public Lending Right.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what assessment he has made of the operation of the Public Lending Right. [94455]

(2) what plans he has to increase funding of the Public Lending Right. [94456]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I are currently considering a range of proposals, following a review of the scheme by the Public Lending Right's Advisory Committee. We will be consulting on our response to the review very shortly. The Department greatly values the Public Lending Right scheme and last year found extra funding to maintain the rate per loan. We have also provided increases in funding for the next three years and are currently consulting on an increase in the rate per loan from £2.07 to £2.18. However, we have no plans at present to raise further the allocation to the Public Lending Right. Any bid for increased funding would need to be considered alongside the Department's other programmes.

Digital Terrestrial Signals

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the number of relay stations which will require alteration to deliver digital terrestrial signals to 95 per cent. of households. [94445]

Janet Anderson: The Independent Television Commission and the BBC are jointly responsible for the provision of digital terrestrial television services in the UK. They are considering, in consultation with the digital broadcasters, the Government, and other interested parties, how to develop the coverage of digital television throughout the UK so that the 99.4 per cent. of consumers who currently receive analogue television can receive the main free-to-air channels digitally.

No estimate is yet available of the number of relay stations which may be required in respect of digital terrestrial signals. The Government have indicated separately that they want to make sure that 95 per cent. of consumers have access to digital equipment before analogue switch-over is completed.

PFA Annual Dinner

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to attend the next Professional Footballers' Association annual dinner; and if he will make a statement on his policy in relation to (a) his attendance and (b) his officials' attendance at future PFA social occasions. [94384]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 19 October 1999]: Since the last general election no DCMS Minister or official has attended the PFA annual awards dinner. My Department has not yet received any invitations for future PFA social events to date.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list (a) the reports published by her Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by her Department, (c) the decisions her Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria she uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93980]

Clare Short: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Council on 19 October 1999, Official Report, column 429.

Montreal Conference

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received from the Like-Minded Group on the forthcoming negotiations at the Extraordinary Conference of the Parties in Montreal in January 2000; and if he will make a statement. [94870]

Clare Short: I have not received any representations from the like-minded group of 120 developing countries on the forthcoming negotiations in Montreal.

SCOTLAND

Environment Protection Agency

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the third annual report of the Scottish Environment Protection Agency will be published. [95459]

Dr. Reid: The Scottish Environment Protection Agency published its Third Annual Report and Accounts today. The report contains details of the progress made by SEPA during the period 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999, the Agency's third year of operation. Copies of the Annual Report and Accounts have been placed in the Library.

Departmental Funding

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will provide a breakdown of the running costs of his office to cover (a) staff salaries, (b) office accommodation, (c) residential accommodation, (d) administration and (e) others; and if he will make a statement; [94055]

(2) if he will provide a breakdown of the difference between the funds allocated to him by Parliament and the funds to be included in the Scottish Consolidated Fund for the years (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02; and if he will make a statement; [94054]

(3) if he will make a statement on the discussions he has had with the First Minister of the Scottish Executive on the proportion of the funds allocated to the Secretary of State for Scotland that he proposes to use to perform his duties. [94057]

Dr. Reid: The provision for grant payable to the Scottish Consolidated Fund, other grants and the running cost provision for my Department are set out in the Estimates for Class XIII, Vote 1. Details for the current year were set out in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Murphy) on 11 June 1999, Official Report, columns 412–13.

I have since been reviewing the role and functions of my Department and I have discussed these matters with the First Minister on a number of occasions. I will make a further statement in due course. No decisions have yet been taken about the provision for the Scotland Office for future years.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for an improved level of telephone access for asylum seekers after the Immigration Service takes over responsibility for paying their benefit and responding to inquiries; and if he will make a statement. [93985]

Mrs. Roche: The Home Office will be responsible for providing support to asylum seekers under part VI of the Immigration and Asylum Bill (when enacted and implemented).

Asylum seekers and their dependants who apply to the Asylum Support Directorate within the Immigration and Nationality Directorate will, under the new arrangements, contact staff within the new Directorate for information and inquiries about support.

We propose to have a single inquiry number for the new Asylum Support Directorate. The service provided will incorporate assisted call routing facilities to minimise the likelihood of calls being re-routed.

The number will be publicised and known to agencies with whom potential applicants may have contact prior to making a support application.

Callers requiring application forms will be asked to leave mailing details. Callers who need to speak directly with the caseworker responsible for their support will be able to do so.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the proposed offices the Immigration Service will operate to deal with asylum seekers benefit and inquiries; what hours they will be open; what estimate he has made of (a) the average and (b) the farthest distance an asylum seeker is likely to have to travel to the nearest office; and if he will make a statement. [93983]

Mrs. Roche: The Asylum Support Directorate will be located in Quest House and possibly other accommodation in Croydon. Quest House will have a public caller unit to enable asylum seekers, who would otherwise be destitute, to seek support. But the Asylum Support Directorate proposes to grant fund the voluntary sector to arrange for them to provide reception centres at some major ports and at one-stop shops around the country. The locations and opening times of these centres have yet to be determined.

Drugs

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what amount of drugs has been taken out of circulation in each year since 1995 within the UK, by type; [94519]

(2) what amount of drugs have been taken out of circulation annually in Merseyside since 1995, by type. [94520]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is given in the table, which covers the period 1995–1997, the latest for which date are available. It is hoped to publish 1998 figures by the end of the year.

Walton Prison

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what remedial assistance people who are convicted and imprisoned of a drug-related crime obtain in Walton Prison. [94518]

Mr. Boateng: All prisoners received into Liverpool prison, known locally as Walton, are screened in relation to drug abuse, regardless of the nature of their offences. Those in need of detoxification are prescribed medication appropriate to their clinical needs, and if necessary located in the health care centre. They are referred to the prison drug clinic the day following reception.

The prison has a designated wing which offers a 12-week programme of education, physical education and group work for prisoners with a substance abuse problem. Prisoners must remain drug free to participate in the programme. Individual counselling is also available.

Each residential wing has a drug liaison officer who works with specialist support providers to offer counselling, advice and support to enable prisoners to remain drug free.

The establishment has a throughcare team, seconded from a local drug agency, to offer support and advice and to help place prisoners with drug support agencies on release.

Cyber Crime

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress made towards agreeing a Council of Europe Convention on Cyber Crime. [94129]

Mr. Boateng: Proposals for a Convention have been prepared by a Committee of Experts drawn from 16 member states of the Council of Europe. Experts from a number of other states, including the United Kingdom, attend as observers and in practice participate fully in the discussions.

The Committee, which began its work in September 1997, was due to conclude at the end of this year but, due to the complexity of the issues, its remit has been extended until December 2000. The Committee's proposals, when completed, will be referred for consideration to the European Committee on Crime Problems, on which all member states at the Council of Europe are represented. The Convention will ultimately be referred for adoption to the Committee of Ministers.

The Committee of Experts is examining draft provisions which would:

require state parties to ensure that their criminal law includes offences against the integrity, confidentiality and availability of computer data; copyright and related offences; and content related offences such as the possession and distribution via the internet of child pornography;

minimise the problem of negative jurisdiction conflicts, where perpetrators of computer crime escape prosecution because the conduct and the mischief it causes occur in different jurisdictions; put in place arrangements for expedited mutual legal assistance between state parties, where delay risks the loss of vulnerable data required as evidence of computer crime. This includes a proposal that state parties should be able to request or require data holders to preserve for a short period information required as evidence for a domestic or foreign criminal proceeding, while a production order is obtained from a judicial authority; and provide for extradition of persons accused of computer and internet related offences.

The committee is also discussing whether to propose the inclusion of measures to facilitate co-operation between state parties on the tracing, interception or decryption of internet-related communications relating to criminal activity on the internet.

The Government have been taking advice on a number of the issues from the Forum established by the Association of Chief Police Officers with representatives of internet service providers (known as the ACPO/ Government/ISP Forum).

Harassment

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were prosecuted for harassment between September 1998 and May 1999; and if he will make a statement on the working of the Protection from Harassment Act 1996. [94389]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The available data from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database, covering the period from September 1998 to March 1999 inclusive, are given in the table. Provisional data for the second quarter of this year will not be available until December.

A research project to assess the use and effectiveness of the Protection from Harassment Act 1996 is in progress. A report is expected to be published at the beginning of next year.

Number of persons proceeded against at magistrates' courts for offences under s2 and s4 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997, England and Wales, September 1998 to March 1999 [1]

Offence	September 1998 to March 1999
Section 2—Offence of harassment (summary)	2,918
Section 4—Putting people in fear of violence	888

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the reports published by his Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by his Department, (c) the decisions his Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria he uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93969]

Mr. Straw: I refer to the reply given to the hon. Member by my right hon. Friend, the President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons on 19 October 1999, Official Report, columns 429–30.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of his Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the last five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. [93845]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office produces a range of in-house publications and newsletters for its staff, falling into the broad categories shown. All of the items in this list are, or were, made available to all or most Home Office staff. Not included in the list are items with a limited distribution or covering specialist areas.

None of these publications had, or has, a secrecy classification.

In addition, the Home Office produces a wide range of office notices and guidance for staff, which is updated as necessary.

Many people now receive their Home Office notices and some other professional guidance electronically through HORIZON, the Home Office intranet, or through disks copied onto their own networks. Only people who do not have access to a network will receive hard copies, which saves on printing costs.

Over 3,500 staff in the Home Office's central estate, at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in Croydon, and at some outstations now have access to HORIZON.

Guidance on the Code of Practice on Access to Official Information has been made available to all staff in the Home Office notice on Open Government featured in the list, and further information is available on HORIZON and on the internet.

Benzodiazepine

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to review the classification of benzodiazepine drugs; [93721]

(2) what action he is taking to prevent the illegal trade of benzodiazepine drugs. [93720]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The benzodiazepine drugs are controlled under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 as Class C drugs. They have licit uses as medicines and are subject to controls on their production and supply. They are currently exempted, however, from controls on their import, export and on their possession unless in base form.

The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs (ACMD) which advises the Government on drug misuse issues reviewed the controls on, and misuse of, these drugs last year. It recommended that additional controls should be introduced on their import, export and possession. The Government are actively considering the Advisory Council's recommendations.

LD50 Test

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on abolishing the LD50 test. [95670]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We will vary, or revoke, any licence which authorises the use of the LD50 test (as defined by Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development guideline 401) and which was issued since 5 September 1998. On this date, amendments to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 came into effect.

We have accepted legal advice that Section 5(5) of the Act as amended does not allow licensing of the LD50 test for the purpose of meeting international regulatory requirements. The general principle is that a test will be licensed only where there is no scientifically valid and reasonably practicable and accepted alternative.

In accord with this principle, we will also review all authorities to use the LD50 test in licences issued before September 1998.

Freedom of Information Bill

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to make available the responses to the public consultation on the draft Freedom of Information Bill. [95671]

Mr. Straw: I have placed copies in the Library today, where they will be held for six months. I intend to announce tomorrow the changes to the draft Freedom of Information Bill which arise from the Government's response to the consultation exercise and pre-legislative scrutiny.

Police Recruitment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were recruited to police forces in England and Wales in each of the last three years for which figures are available and in total for the period; and if he will make a statement. [94767]

Mr. Straw: The total number of police officers recruited by police forces in England and Wales in each of the last three years are:

Year	Number
1996–97	6,450
1997–98	6,543
1998–99	5,391
Total	18,384

These figures include transfers between forces and have been supplied by the Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are planned to be recruited to police forces in England and Wales in each of the next three years and in total for the period; and if he will make a statement. [94768]

Mr. Straw: In my announcement on 30 September about the Crime Fighting Fund, the planning estimate I used was 11,000 recruits over the next three years. The basis of this estimate is currently being examined. I shall report the outcome to the House as soon as possible. We shall shortly be asking forces for detailed estimates of their planned recruitment over the next three years in order to assess their bids for money from the Crime Fighting Fund.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers retired, resigned or were dismissed from police forces in England and Wales in each of the last three years for which figures are available and in total for the period; and if he will make a statement. [94769]

Mr. Straw: The information requested is shown in the table.

Total wastage for all police forces in England and Wales from 1996–97 to 1998–99[1] (all figures obtained from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary)

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Retirements[1]	4,478	4,807	4,204
Resignations	739	924	1,189
Dismissals	126	154	176
Total	5,343	5,885	5,569

[1] Covers both ordinary retirements and ill health retirements

Case Record and Management System

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement concerning progress on implementing the information technology Case Record and Management System in the probation service; [94771]

(2) how many probation services currently use the Case Record and Management System; and if he will make a statement. [94774]

Mr. Boateng: Forty-four probation services are currently using Case Record and Management System. Of these:

Six are currently training their staff to use it;

Twenty-seven use it and classify themselves as fully dependent on it; and

Eleven classify themselves as partially dependent on it (they are using only some functions or it has only been deployed to some of their offices).

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to replace the Case Record and Management System with an alternative information technology system; if a tender has been put out for an alternative system to CRAMS; and if he will make a statement. [94772]

Mr. Boateng: Case Record and Management System now needs to be re-developed in order better to support the modernisation of the probation service, including important developments such as the evidence-based programmes to reduce the likelihood of re-offending, the new joint probation-prisons offender assessment system (OASys), and the new National Standards for the supervision of offenders. Its successor will also need to facilitate connections to other parts of the criminal justice system and the time is now right to take advantage of the further advances in information technology.

A user requirement is currently being developed and the work will be put out to tender in due course.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost to date of developing and implementing the Case Record and Management System in the probation service; what was the original expected cost of the system; and if he will make a statement. [94773]

Mr. Boateng: There have been four major release versions of Case Record and Management System. The total development cost of these was £3.2 million which is in line with original estimates. The total implementation cost of the four versions was £1.4 million. This is £300,000 more than the estimated cost of implementation, largely for reasons of Year 2000 compliance.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a year 2000 compliant version of the Case Record and Management System has been made available to probation services; how many probation services are using such a system; and if he will make a statement. [94775]

Mr. Boateng: A year 2000 complaint version of Case Record and Management System is currently being rolled out to probation services. The rollout is on schedule and by the end of this week 26 probation services will have it. The rollout is due to be completed by 17 November.

HEALTH

Drugs

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the health trusts in Lancashire with regard to the availability of drugs through the NHS; and what discussions he has held with them. [94186]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 19 October 1999]: We have received no such representations, neither have we discussed the matter with any of the trusts concerned.

Dentists

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of NHS dentists by region in each year since 1995. [94316]

Mr. Hutton: The table sets out the number of National Health Service dentists providing treatment under the NHS in the General Dental Service, Salaried Dental Service, Hospital Dental Service and Community Dental Service by region in England at 30 September each year.

The number of general [1], salaried [2], community [3] and hospital dental service [3] dentists by health region, England

Health regions	30 September 1995	1996	1997	1998
England	19,563	19,978	20,484	21,041
Northern and Yorkshire	2,513	2,427	2,479	2,532
Trent	1,615	1,704	1,801	1,820
Anglia and Oxford	1,936	1,983	2,088	2,152
North Thames	2,997	3,097	3,286	3,406
South Thames	3,238	3,308	3,312	3,348

West Midlands	1,842	1,863	1,939	1,982
North West	2,630	2,737	2,778	2,856

[1] GDS dentists include principals, assistants and vocational dental practitioners.
[2] Salaried dentists are those in post as reported by HAs; 1995 figures are for the Number of contracts.
[3] Dentists are counted in each region in which they work. The figures include some double counting as a dentist may practise in more than one of the dental services. This explains the apparent disparity between the sums of regions and England totals.

World Mental Health Day

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's contribution to World Mental Health Day on 10 October. [94354]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has continued to support the World Mental Health Day campaign co-ordinated by the Health Education Authority. We have allocated £1 million in 1999 to support the campaign, an increase of 57 per cent. over last year. The campaign is an important element of our strategy to challenge discrimination and promote participation and inclusion as key positive steps for mental well being.

Commission for Health Improvement

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the costs of establishing the Commission for Health Improvement. [93917]

Mr. Denham: The budget for the Commission for Health Improvement in 1999–2000 is £3 million. This money will be spent on the establishment and early development of the commission and will cover various costs including accommodation, staff recruitment and training, and the development of methodologies.

Drug Prices

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which drugs will be reduced in price and by how much, consequent upon his agreement with NHS suppliers. [94029]

Mr. Denham: Under the 1999 Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme agreed with the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry, companies supplying branded medicines to the National Health Service to a value of more than £1 million per annum are required to reduce their prices by 4.5 per cent. from 1 October 1999. As an alternative to an across the board reduction, they are allowed to modulate the prices of these medicines by reductions that equate to an overall level of 4.5 per cent. Companies themselves decide on a commercial basis which medicines should be reduced in price and by how much and supply this information to the Prescription Pricing Authority. The Department monitors the sales of medicines to determine whether the modulation have achieved the necessary reduction.

A list of the price reductions notified to the Department at the outset of the scheme has been placed in the Library. It should be noted that companies can remodulate their prices following the initial reduction. Up to date information on the prices of medicines is maintained in the pharmaceutical trade press, copies of which are in the Library.

In two subsequent and separate incidents, a UK military observer attached to UNOMSIL was briefly detained. One was from RAF Innsworth, and the other from 39 Regiment Royal Artillery.

Personnel

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the cost of providing accommodation and infrastructure for his Department's personnel relocated from Germany to the United Kingdom under the terms of the Strategic Defence Review. [94151]

Mr. Hoon: The current estimate of the cost of providing accommodation and infrastructure for personnel relocating from Germany to the United Kingdom under the SDR is of the order of £150 million. The cost of the programme will be spread over seven years. I expect that a proportion of the works will be delivered through Public Private Partnership. Once withdrawal is complete, I expect operating cost savings of some £13 million a year.

PRIME MINISTER

Performance and Innovation Unit

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Prime Minister what future projects are planned for the Performance and Innovation Unit. [95073]

The Prime Minister: The Performance and Innovation Unit (PIU) was established to improve the capacity of Government to identify and address strategic cross-cutting issues and promote innovation in the development of policy and in the delivery of the Government's objectives. The PIU project teams are drawn from both inside and outside Government, to ensure new thinking and a wide range of experience is brought to bear on the issues. Their reports make an important contribution to policy making.

Further to the work announced in December 1998, the Modernising Government White Paper in March 1999 announced that the PIU is undertaking a project aimed at identifying the long-term strategic challenges facing Government. I have now asked the PIU to take on the following further projects:

The Pursuit and Seizure of Criminal Assets

To consider the role that following the money trail and seizing criminal assets can play in the fight against crime and how to maximise the effective use of these tools. My right hon. Friend the Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney), Minister of State, Cabinet Office is the sponsor Minister for this project.

The Post Office network

To identify the contribution made by post offices to the vitality of local communities, consider how the Post Office network can best contribute to the Government's objectives in the future and in the process formulate objectives for the Post Office network. My hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Clarke), Minister of State, Home Office is the sponsor Minister.

Social, Health, Environmental and Trade Objectives on the Global Stage

To identify a coherent set of principles for comparing trade measures with other national and international measures for addressing social, health and environmental objectives. My hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson), Minister of State, Scotland Office is the sponsor Minister.

The Use of Analysis and Modelling in Central Government

To review Departments' capabilities for quantitative analysis and modelling in key areas of Government policy, including access to and the use made of data, to identify strengths and weaknesses and make cost-effective recommendations for change.

The aim is to complete the first three projects next spring and the last by the end of the year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Plutonium

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement in respect of the international safety implications arising from the plutonium shipment involving the Pacific Teal and the Pacific Pintail. [94716]

Mr. Hain: The shipment of MOX fuel to Japan was undertaken in full conformity with well established international non-proliferation safeguard procedures and physical protection regimes. In terms of the measures taken to minimise the risk of radiological accidents all shipments by sea are undertaken in full compliance with all the relevant international standards, regulations and recommendations relating to the transport by sea of hazardous cargoes and nuclear materials. The ships and containers used for this shipment met, and in certain cases exceeded, these requirements.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current political and military situation in Sierra Leone. [94616]

Mr. Hain: There has been clear and welcome progress in recent months in the peace process in Sierra Leone. The overall security situation, however, remains volatile.

We welcome the signing of a Peace Agreement by the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front in Lomé on 7 July. The Agreement offers the people of Sierra Leone the real prospect of a sustainable peace. We support the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping operation to Sierra Leone.

We expect all parties to honour the agreement and the accompanying ceasefire, and to implement these fully. An important first step will be early progress on the Disarmament, Demobilisations and Reintegration programme for former combatants.

We welcome the return to Freetown on 3 October of Foday Sankoh, the leader of the RUF, and Johnny Paul Koroma, the leader for the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council. This is an important step forward in the peace process.

I gave further details of how we have implemented our £10 million package of assistance in my written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Midlothian (Mr. Clarke) on 20 October 1999, Official Report, column 599.

Small Arms Exports

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on policy towards the controlled export of small arms. [94141]

Mr. Hain: Pursuing a responsible and transparent policy on legal transfers of small arms from the UK, and encouraging other arms exporting countries to do likewise, is one of the main elements of our approach to combatting the problem of small arms proliferation.

All licence applications to export goods and technology on the UK Military List, including small arms, are assessed on a case-by-case basis against our national export licensing criteria and those in the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports. If there is a clear risk that the proposed export might be used for internal repression or international aggression, or would provoke, prolong or aggravate existing tensions or conflicts in the destination country, the application is refused. We also carefully consider the risk of the goods being diverted to an undesirable end-user and the effect of the proposed export on regional stability.

We have encouraged non EU-member states to respect the principles of the EU Code of Conduct in their exports of military equipment, including small arms. We have also supported moves to address the issue of legal exports of small arms in the Wassenaar Arrangement for Export Controls on Conventional Arms and Dual-Use Goods.

The EU Joint Action on Small Arms of December 1998 commits the UK and other member states to work for international acceptance of the principle that small arms specially designed for military use should be exported only to governments.

India

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet with Ms Maneka Gandhi of the Ministry of Welfare in India, and Shri I. P. Gupta, Lieutenant Governor of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, to discuss the Jarawa people. [94391]

Mr. Hain: FCO Ministers have no plans to meet Ms Maneka Gandhi or Shri I. P. Gupta.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with the Indian Government regarding the reserve for Jarawa people on the Andaman Islands; and if he will make a statement. [94392]

Mr. Hain: We are aware of reports regarding the Jarawa people of the Andaman Islands and plans for their resettlement. We understand that these are the subject of an individual's application to the High Court of Calcutta (on which judgment has yet to be delivered). We have not discussed these plans with the Indian Government.

Iran

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has (a) made and (b) proposes to make on the forthcoming visit of the Iranian Foreign Minister to the UK and (c) on his forthcoming visit to Iran concerning the position of the 13 Iranian Jews detained in Iran on alleged spying charges; and if he will make a statement. [94411]

Mr. Hain: We and our EU partners have pressed the Iranian authorities over this case and will continue to do so. As long ago as 20 May the German EU Presidency expressed concern at these detentions on behalf of EU member states, and a formal EU demarche to the Iranian government took place on 30 June.

We have also told the Iranians of our concern bilaterally, both in Tehran and in London. We have pressed for a fair and open trial, and access for visitors and legal representatives. We have also pressed for access for independent observers at any trial. Most recently the Foreign Secretary made these points to the Iranian Ambassador on 29 July. I reiterated them to him on 4 August. The Foreign Secretary also pressed Foreign Minister Kharrazi on this issue during their meeting at the United Nations General Assembly on 21 September. Our Ambassador in Tehran has spoken similarly to the Iranian authorities there.

Neither the agenda for the Secretary of State's visit to Iran, nor Foreign Minister Kharrazi's visit here, have yet been decided. Should this issue still not be resolved, we will raise it again.

Burma

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken following the imprisonment of James Mawdsley and Rachel Goldwyn in Burma; and if he will make a statement. [94606]

Mr. Hain: We have expressed our concerns to the Burmese authorities about the handling of these cases. Consular staff have visited James and Rachel; both confirmed they were well and had not been ill-treated. We will continue to visit regularly and stay in close touch with families. We have done and will continue to do everything we properly can to help.

Biosafety Protocol

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the next meeting on the Biosafety Protocol will take place; what preparations are being made by his Department for input into the EU position; and if he will make a statement. [94827]

Mr. Hain: The resumed extra-ordinary conference of the Parties on Biosafety Protocol will take place in Montreal on 24–28 January 2000. My Department is working closely with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and other Government Departments in assessing the options put forward by other negotiating groups in the informal consultations in Vienna. Our posts are also active in feeding in information on developments in other countries for consideration in discussion with EU partners.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects of the Extraordinary Conference of the parties meeting in Montreal under the auspices of the United Nations Convention on Biodiversity in January 2000 concluding the Biosafety Protocol. [94869]

Mr. Hain: Early agreement of a workable and effective Biosafety Protocol is an important objective for this Government. We welcomed the decision made by Minister Mayr to resume the extra-ordinary Conference of the parties to agree the Protocol and particularly the strong political commitment to complete the Protocol expressed by all negotiating groups at the informal consultations in September. Hard work is still needed to come to final agreement on the outstanding issues to be covered under the Protocol. We will be making every effort to promote successful completion of the negotiations.

Sanctions

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list changes to sanctions regimes implemented by the UK since 26 July. [95494]

Mr. Hain: New measures have been introduced against Indonesia; certain measures against Libya have been lifted; and amendments have been made to measures in place against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Details are as follows:

Indonesia

On 16 September, the Council of the European Union adopted a Common Position (1999/624/CFSP) imposing restrictive measures against Indonesia. These measures are an embargo on the export of arms, munitions and military equipment; a ban on the supply of equipment which might be used for internal repression or terrorism; and the suspension of bilateral military cooperation.

The embargo on the export of arms, munitions and military equipment is being applied to all goods and technology on the Military List which forms Part III of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended.

The Common Position shall expire on 17 January 2000.

Following from this Common Position, the EC adopted Regulation 2158/1999 on 11 October which prohibits:

(a) the sale, supply, export or shipment, directly or indirectly, of equipment listed in an Annex to the Regulation, whether or not originating in the Community, to any person or body in the Republic of Indonesia or to any person or any body for the purpose of any business carried on in, or operated from, the territory of the Republic of Indonesia;

(b) the participation in related activities the object of which is, directly or indirectly, to promote the transactions or activities referred to in (a) above.

EU member states may authorise the transactions or activities referred to at (a) and (b) above in respect to certain items in the Annex when they have obtained conclusive evidence that the end use of these items is not for internal repression or terrorism.

The Regulation applies within the territory of the Community including its air space and on board any aircraft or any vessel under the jurisdiction of a member state and to any person elsewhere who is a national of a member state and any body which is incorporated or constituted under the law of a member state.

The Regulation entered into force on 13 October and is directly applicable in the UK. Legislation has been introduced to provide for licensing and enforcement, including penalties. The Indonesia (Supply, Sale, Export and Shipment of Equipment) (Penalties and Licences) Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2822) came into force on 14 October.

The Regulation shall expire on 17 January 2000.

Libya

On 13 September, the Council of the European Union adopted a Common Position (1999/611/CFSP) lifting a number of EU sanctions against Libya which were imposed in 1986. These measures were restrictions on the freedom of movement of Libyan diplomats and consular personnel; the reduction of staff of diplomatic and consular missions; and stricter visa requirements and procedures. The EU arms embargo against Libya, also imposed in 1986, remains in force.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY)

On 3 September, the Council of the European Union adopted a Common Position (1999/604/CFSP) allowing exceptions to the EU oil embargo and flight ban in relation to Kosovo and Montenegro.

Following from this Common Position, the EC adopted two Regulations.

Regulation 2111/1999, adopted on 4 October, repeals and replaces Regulation 900/1999 prohibiting the sale and supply of petroleum and petroleum products to the FRY and provides for member states to authorise the sale, supply, export or shipment of such goods provided that the goods are shipped from the Community to Montenegro or Kosovo without transiting through other parts of Serbia and that the goods shall not leave the territory of Montenegro or Kosovo for any destination elsewhere in Serbia.

The Regulation entered into force on 5 October and is directly applicable in the UK. Legislation has been introduced to provide for licensing and enforcement, including penalties. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Supply, Sale and Export of Petroleum and Petroleum Products) (Penalties and Licences) (No. 3) Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2821) came into force on 14 October.

Regulation 2151/1999, adopted on 11 October, repeals and replaces Regulation 1064/1999 imposing a ban on flights between the European Community and the FRY and provides for member states to authorise specified flights between the territories of the Community and Montenegro or Kosovo provided that the points of departure, intermediate points and points of final destination in the FRY are located only in Montenegro or Kosovo.

The Regulation entered into force on 12 October and is directly applicable in the UK.

TREASURY

Departmental Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list his Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93694]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The spending on official publications since May 1997—which includes the costs incurred by the Department in publishing, preparation, production and purchase of copies for official use—is estimated to be £1,040,000. This excludes the cost of publications produced for internal use. Where the Treasury makes use of a private sector publisher, printing and design costs are generally met by the publisher as part of their acceptance of the risk of publication.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Special Educational Needs Tribunal

Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he proposes to undertake a review of the Special Educational Needs Tribunal. [95680]

Jacqui Smith: In accordance with the Government's policy of conducting quinquennial reviews of all non-departmental public bodies, the Department is launching today, in conjunction with the National Assembly for Wales, a review of the Special Educational Needs Tribunal. Following Cabinet office guidelines, the first stage of the review will take the form of a "prior options" study with the following terms of reference:

to review the functions of the Special Educational Needs Tribunal, and the likely future need for those functions; to consider the powers, remit, constitutional status, membership and activities of the Special Educational Needs Tribunal; to consider whether, on efficiency grounds, some or all of the functions of the Special Educational Needs Tribunal can be carried out within an alternative organisational framework including by another public, private or voluntary body or otherwise within government; to review the efficiency and effectiveness of the Special Educational Needs Tribunal in carrying out its functions.

The review will have particular regard to:

the overriding objective that special educational provision should meet the needs of individual children; and compliance with the Human Rights Act 1998.

We should welcome comments on those matters to be covered by the review from all those with an interest in the work of the Special Educational Needs Tribunal. Comments, which may be made public unless respondents specifically request otherwise, should be sent by 15 January 2000 to:

Mrs. Susan Ashford
Special Educational Needs Division
Department for Education and Employment
Sanctuary Buildings
Great Smith Street
Westminster
London SW1P 3BT.

The review should be completed by 29 April 2000. The findings will be published and made available to Parliament.

Student Loans

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current (a) number and (b) value of loans to students which have not been repaid by their due date; and if he will make a statement. [94742]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 19 October 1999]: The Student Loans Company has informed me that at 31 August 1999 167,716 student loans accounts were in arrears. The total value of the arrears at that date was £70,062,402. These figures are for the United Kingdom. These arrears arise from mortgage style loans taken out under the previous scheme. The new loan system where repayments are directly linked to a borrower's income after leaving university or college and are repaid through the Inland Revenue should result in lower levels of arrears.

Graduation Test

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he will take to ensure the separate identification of those who graduate under the Social Exclusion Unit's concept of graduation at Level 2 and those who graduate after taking a degree. [94765]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 19 October 1999]: The Government have asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to develop and consult on the options for a common objective obtainable by all young people which will encourage them to participate in learning beyond 16 and to achieve to at least a Level 2 standard, as recommended in the Social Exclusion Report, "Bridging the Gap". As part of its remit, the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority will consider, and consult upon, a name for such a certificate.

Basic Skills Qualifications

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has for national qualifications in basic skills for adults. [94763]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 19 October 1999]: Following the launch of "A Fresh Start", the report from Sir Claus Moser's working group on adult basic skills, the Government asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to develop national standards for adult literacy and numeracy at Entry Level and Levels 1 and 2. Draft standards will be issued for consultation shortly. We are expecting the final standards to be published in Spring 2000.

These standards will provide the base for the development of a core curriculum for adult basic skills and national tests at Levels 1 and 2. All recognised qualifications will need to be aligned with the new national standards. We have also asked the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority for advice on the link between national tests and qualifications.

Education Provision

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements he will make for the coherence of the curriculum and the delivery of education between the post- and pre-16 sectors. [94758]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 19 October 1999]: We have already introduced a number of initiatives which will lead to greater coherence between pre-16 and post-16 education and encourage progression throughout the 14–19 phase, as part of our overall drive to raise standards at all levels of education. We are increasing the range of qualifications on offer, and are increasing curriculum flexibility at Key Stage 4 (14–16) with enhanced opportunities for vocational study.

As a follow up to the National Curriculum Review and in the context of responses to the White Paper "Learning to Succeed", we are looking at ways of increasing coherence in both the curriculum and the delivery of learning. We are working to create a culture where all young people continue in learning until 18 or 19.

Key Skills

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on integration of key skills into the level 3 curriculum. [94737]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 19 October 1999]: The Government want to encourage more young people to develop their key skills as a natural part of their post-16 education and training. We are therefore introducing from September 2000 a new qualification covering communication, application of number and information technology. The intention is that individuals should study at the level appropriate to their own needs and to their main course of study. This will include level 3.

Key Stage 4 Pupils

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many Key Stage 4 pupils there are in schools for which the National Curriculum is currently disapplied. [94733]

Jacqui Smith: The Government are keen to encourage work-related learning at Key Stage 4. Under s363 of the Education Act 1996, two subjects can be disapplied to allow pupils to spend time in further education and work experience. 8,985 pupils followed this route last year. This year's figures are not yet available. This figure does not include pupils with special educational needs or those in the six schools which have applied under s362 of the 1996 Education Act to disapply all or part of the National Curriculum more generally.

Young People

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people aged 16 to 18 were not in either education, training or work in each of the last five years. [94764]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 19 October 1999]: The latest available information is in the table.

Year	Number	Percentage of population
1998 (provisional)	173,000	9
1997	167,000	9
1996	160,000	9
1995	152,000	9
1994	148,000	9

School, college, and trainee records, Labour Force Survey

We are taking a strategic approach to reducing the number of 16–18 year olds not in education, training, or work, and to improving participation and attainment across the board.

An enhanced strategy—called ConneXions—will ensure that far more young people continue in education and training until they are at least 19. Some initiatives under ConneXions, for example, Right to Time Off for Study or Training, will have begun to take effect from September this year. Further details of the ConneXions strategy will be announced shortly.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is chairing a Ministerial Steering Group to oversee the implementation of action recommended in "Bridging the Gap—New opportunities for 16–18-year-olds not in education employment or training", the Social Exclusion Unit's most recent report.

Local Learning Partnerships

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for involving students as members of local learning partnerships. [94682]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 19 October 1999]: The White Paper "Learning to Succeed" both endorses the current remit of Learning Partnerships and proposes strengthening their role in reflecting the needs of the community. They are being actively encouraged to involve partners who represent the wider interests of the community, including students and other learners.

Training

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if multinational and multi-site companies will be able to bypass the local learning and skills councils and deal directly at national level in connection with training and qualifications issues. [94741]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 19 October 1999]: It will be important for the Learning and Skills Council at national and local levels to engage employers of all sizes in workforce development which will benefit individuals, improve business competitiveness and strengthen the economy. There are large national companies which find it difficult to work effectively within the current system; and the Learning and Skills Council will be able to develop arrangements which make it easier to provide a national link to such companies. The precise arrangements will be developed in coming months.

New Deal

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what money has been received by Sefton Metropolitan Borough Council from the New Deal programme and how this money has been spent. [94594]

Ms Jowell: This information is a commercially confidential matter between the Employment Service and Sefton Metropolitan Borough Council and cannot therefore be released.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Carbon Dioxide (Emissions Reduction)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of the carbon dioxide emissions reduction needed for a 20 per cent. reduction from the UK's 1990 levels by 2010 he expects to be delivered in Northern Ireland. [93867]

Mr. George Howarth: Following Kyoto in 1997, the UK has a legally binding target to cut emissions of a basket of six greenhouse gases by 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels over the period 2008–2012. The UK Government also have a domestic goal to cut carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010.

The Government are currently developing a draft climate change programme which will set out how the UK will deliver its Kyoto target and move towards its domestic goal. We are aiming to publish the draft programme for further consultation towards the end of 1999.

Prison Wings

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the paramilitary affiliation of the prison wings in which the six persons charged in May 1997 with the murder of Robert Hamill were imprisoned. [94361]

Mr. Ingram: Five of the six persons charged were held within the UVF wings and one was held within the LVF wing in HMP Maze.

Enforcement Officer Statistics

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many enforcement officers currently operate within the Department of the Environment; and what were the comparable figures for 1992 to 1998. [94450]

Mr. George Howarth: At 1 October 1999 there were 13 enforcement officers attached to the Department's Transport Licensing and Enforcement Branch. The comparable figures for 1992 to 1998 are:

	Number
1992	14
1993	17
1994	15
1995	15
1996	15
1997	14
1998	13

Irish-medium Schools

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had with Ministers in the Irish Government about joint funding of Irish-medium post primary schools in the border region; and if he will make a statement. [94766]

Mr. McFall [holding answer 19 October 1999]: I have regular discussions with the Irish Minister for Education and Science on topics of mutual interest, including Irish-medium education. Those discussions have not yet involved joint funding of schools, though there is joint funding through the European Peace and Reconciliation Package of teaching materials for Irish-medium primary schools.

Debris

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date bomb debris from the 1974 Dublin and Monaghan explosions arrived in Northern Ireland; what was the recorded weight of debris received; if a continuous chain of custody for the debris can be established whilst it remained in Northern Ireland; what happened to the debris after the Belfast forensic scientist Dr. Hall carried out his examination; and where and in whose custody the debris is today. [93526]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 19 October 1999]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Forensic Science Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. R. W. Adams. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from R. W. Adams to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 19 October 1999:

I am writing in response to your question regarding debris received at this laboratory in connection with bombings in Monaghan and Dublin in 1974.

Items relating to the above incidents were received from the Garda Siochana at the laboratory in Belfast on 28 May 1974. No weight was recorded for them.

There are no records available in the laboratory in relation to the internal continuity of the items or to their ultimate fate. The presumption is that they were returned to the Garda in line with normal practice for items received from the police.

Fostering

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of children from Catholic homes who have been placed with Protestant foster-parents and the number of children from Protestant homes who have been placed with Catholic foster-parents for each of the areas within the South and East Belfast Trust. [94524]

Mr. George Howarth: At present, two Catholic children are placed with Protestant foster carers and one Protestant child with Catholic carers in long-term fostering placements. In addition, nine Catholic children are placed with Protestant carers and four Protestant children with Catholic carers in short-term, temporary arrangements. Each of these placements has been made with the consent of the child's parents.

Car Parking

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many car parks are provided by (1) the Department of the Environment, (2) the private sector and (3) district councils in the urban areas of (a) Dungannon, (b) Portadown, (c) Armagh City and (d) Newry; what is the total number of (i) paid for spaces and (ii) free spaces in each of these urban areas; and what proposals there are to provide additional parking spaces in each of these urban areas. [94625]

Mr. George Howarth: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. Colin James. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from C. James to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 21 October 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to respond to your recently tabled parliamentary Question about car park provision in the urban areas of Dungannon, Portadown, Armagh and Newry. The information requested is as follows:

[1] Following a review of car parking at Perry Street 40 paid spaces will become free spaces later this year, i.e., there will be 322 paid spaces and 258 free spaces.

Roads Service has no proposals at present to provide additional car parking spaces in any of the above-mentioned urban areas.

I hope you find this information helpful.

General Social Care Council

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the proposed General Social Care Council will operate in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [94542]

Mr. George Howarth: The publication of a fundamental review of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW) was announced in the House on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 553. The Secretary of State for Health announced his intention then to establish mechanisms for regulating the personal social services workforce in England and to hand over CCETSW's functions for social services training to the new body.

I have given careful thought to the best arrangements for regulating the social services workforce in Northern Ireland, consistent with the Government's plans as outlined in the Social Services White Papers for England, Scotland and Wales. I have taken into account that there are to be separate regulatory bodies for England, Scotland and Wales.

I have concluded that there should be a separate body for the regulation of the social services workforce in Northern Ireland and that it should, as in England, Scotland and Wales, assume responsibility for CCETSW's training functions. However, the Northern Ireland body must have the closest possible alignment with similar machinery in the other countries of the UK, and officials will be working to ensure that effective links of this kind are put in place.

We also need to have coherent overall arrangements for developing and enforcing high standards of conduct and practice, and for ensuring that workforce and training strategies are directed towards the same standards. I have, therefore, also asked officials to ensure that we bring together the work of the regulatory body and the work in Northern Ireland of any future National Training Organisation for the personal social services.

Children and adults who use the social services in Northern Ireland should be able to rely on a workforce that is properly trained, appropriately qualified and effectively regulated. We will be bringing forward more detailed proposals for the new regulatory body in a social services paper to be published shortly. It is our intention to ensure that the new arrangements in Northern Ireland are available at the same time as in other parts of the United Kingdom.

Policing Review

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated total cost of implementing the Patten Recommendations on Policing in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [94351]

Mr. Ingram: It is not possible to estimate the total cost of implementing the recommendations made by the Patten Commission. The Government are currently engaged in a consultation exercise and in assessing the impact of the proposals, including financial implications. The consultation process will continue until the end of November, following which the Secretary of State will make a statement to the House.

Director of Disability

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the new Equality Commission in Northern Ireland will appoint (a) a Director of Disability and (b) support staff in the Directorate for Disability; and if he will make a statement. [94561]

Mr. McFall: The Equality Commission is currently making preparations to appoint a Director of Disability and an additional operational post. In August 1999 it temporarily allocated an existing Director to take responsibility for disability issues including making preparations for the new advisory and enforcement powers, accommodation and staffing and organisational structure.

Prostate Cancer

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have died due to prostate cancer in each of the past 10 years; what has been taken to address the problem; and if he will make a statement. [94546]

Mr. George Howarth: The information on deaths is as follows:

	Deaths
1989	159
1990	195
1991	175
1992	201
1993	182
1994	209
1995	216
1996	211
1997	208
1998	[1]220

Cancer services in Northern Ireland are presently being reorganised to ensure that all cancer patients are managed by specialist cancer teams. Such care is associated with a better quality of life and improved prospects of survival. All patients with prostate cancer, who require surgery will be treated by specialist teams. Current research evidence does not support population screening for prostate cancer.

Sovereign's Portrait

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the portrait of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II is on display within RUC stations; if the Patten Commission report changes the policy of display of the sovereign's portrait; and if he will make a statement. [94349]

Mr. Ingram: The portrait of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II can be on display in RUC stations, though the RUC have advised that there is no formal policy about displaying the portrait. The Patten Commission did not make any specific reference to this issue in its report, however, it did recommend that the police service should maintain a 'neutral working environment'. This proposal, as with all the other recommendations, is part of the current consultation process.

Disability

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the timetable for the introduction of legislation to provide statutory enforcement powers in Northern Ireland similar to those available in Great Britain under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995; and if he will make a statement. [94560]

Mr. George Howarth: It is intended that the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland will enforce disability rights from April 2000. The legislation to confer the necessary enforcement powers on the Equality Commission will be introduced shortly by means of an Order in Council. If devolution of powers to the Northern Ireland Assembly occurs before the Order has completed all its parliamentary stages the legislation will transfer to the Assembly.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the new rights under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 will become available in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [94559]

Mr. George Howarth: New rights under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 were introduced across the UK from 1 October 1999.

School Premises, Portavogie

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) when the premises, formerly occupied by the East Down Institute for Further Education, adjacent to Portavogie Primary School, New Harbour road, Portavogie, became vacant; what proposals there are for the future user or ownership of these premises; and if he will make a statement; [94431]

(2) how long the school premises at New Harbour road, Portavogie adjacent to the primary school have been vacant; what proposals there are for the future use or disposal of these premises; and if he will make a statement. [94540]

Mr. McFall: The adult education centre in Portavogie was officially closed down by the East Down Institute for Further and Higher Education in June 1998. The South Eastern Education and Library Board carried out a feasibility study into possible renovation of the building but it proved too costly. I understand that the premises will now be offered for public sale.

Ambulance Service

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to make additional resources available to the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service Trust over the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [94342]

Mr. George Howarth: An additional £15 million has been invested in the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service over the three year period 1999–2002. The first instalment of that investment was announced on 28 June 1999 when £3 million was provided for immediate investment in the provision of accident and emergency ambulances, replacement of equipment, and training and development of ambulance crews. The balance of the £15 million will be deployed in accordance with the outcome of the Comprehensive Review of the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service which is due to report by the end of November.

Housing, Carryduff

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to publish the Strategic Framework for Northern Ireland; if decisions for planning applications for housing schemes at Carryduff will be delayed until after the publication of the Strategic Framework; and if he will make a statement about the future of housing development in Carryduff and District. [94556]

Mr. George Howarth: The Regional Strategic Framework for Northern Ireland is not expected to be published until Spring 2000. A draft of the Regional Strategy is presently the subject of a Public Examination and the independent panel conducting the examination will not submit its report to the Department of the Environment until the end of 1999. Thereafter, it is expected that the matter will be considered by the new Northern Ireland Assembly before the Regional Strategy is finalised.

As regards decisions on existing planning applications for housing schemes at Carryduff, the position is that these applications are incomplete and cannot be processed until Environmental Statements have been submitted in support of the proposals. Only when the Environmental Statements have been submitted will the Department be in a position to decide how the applications can be progressed.

The matter of future housing in Carryduff and District will be for the forthcoming Belfast Metropolitan Area (BMA) Plan; the BMA Plan will have due regard for strategic principles resolved by, and contained in, the final versions of the Regional Strategy.

British Fluoridation Society

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money the British Fluoridation Society received in grant aid from the Northern Ireland office in each of the last five years. [94717]

Mr. George Howarth: The Department of Health and Social Services provides funding to the British Fluoridation Society on an annual basis. In the last five years the following funding has been provided.

1999–2000	2,159
1998–99	2,104
1997–98	2,047
1996–97	2,037
1995–96	1,982

WALES

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the reports published by his Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by his Department, (c) the decisions his Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria he uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93979]

Mr. Paul Murphy: None. I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by the President of the Council on 19 October 1999, Official Report, column 429–30.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

30. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Solicitor-General how many cases have been successfully prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service in the last 12 months. [93421]

The Solicitor-General: In the year ending June 1999, the Crown Prosecution Service secured 975,003 convictions in magistrates courts and 69,299 convictions in the Crown Court. This amounts to 98.3 per cent. of cases proceeding to a hearing in the magistrates court and 88.7 per cent. of cases proceeding to a hearing in the Crown Court.

33. Valerie Davey: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement about the work of the Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate. [93424]

The Solicitor-General: The Chief Inspector is at present implementing the changes necessary to adapt the Inspectorate to the revised (42 Area) structure of the CPS and to give effect to the recommendation of the Glidewell Report that its remit should be widened. These changes will include, at the specific request of my right hon. noble and learned Friend the Attorney-General, the introduction of a substantial lay element in the inspection process. In addition, the Government are already committed to legislation to place the CPS Inspectorate, which is at present internal, on an independent statutory basis.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement on the implementation of the restructuring of the Crown Prosecution Service areas. [93419]

The Solicitor-General: The restructuring of the CPS into 42 areas was implemented on 1 April 1999. Chief Crown Prosecutors are now preparing outline plans for the implementation of further structural changes as recommended in the Glidewell report. These will involve the creation of new Criminal Justice Units and Trial Units.

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement on the recent visits by the Law Officers to branches of the Crown Prosecution Service. [93420]

The Solicitor-General: Since taking office last summer I have visited 16 CPS areas throughout England and Wales, as well as CPS Headquarters and CPS Inspectorate. The Attorney-General has visited four areas since taking up the post and has another three visits planned. I have another seven visits planned this year and by next summer I anticipate I will have visited all CPS areas. The visits have given me a valuable insight into the workings of the CPS and how the Glidewell and Narey initiatives are being taken forward.

I have met many Higher Court Advocates and I have been very impressed. The Higher Court Advocates seem to have been accepted well by the judiciary and the local Bar. They have had many years' experience of prosecuting in the magistrates' court and so are well equipped to meet the demands of higher court advocacy. Changes in the Access to Justice Bill allow CPS staff who are barristers to join their colleagues in the Crown Court.

Young Offenders (Trials)

31. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement on the length of time young offenders have to wait between being charged and trial. [93422]

The Solicitor-General: For young offenders' cases where not guilty pleas are entered, the average time from charge to start of the trial was 123 days in February 1999. For all cases in the youth court, the average period from charge to verdict was 67 days in February 1999, compared with 71 days in June 1998 and 81 days in June 1997. Information on the Crown court is not available as case progress information there does not distinguish adult from youth cases.

The Government are committed to reducing unnecessary delay in the youth justice system still further. Chief Crown Prosecutors throughout England and Wales are working closely with other agencies locally to ensure this is achieved.

Owen Oyston

32. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Solicitor-General what recent representations he has received concerning the conduct of the Crown Prosecution Service in the case of Owen Oyston. [93423]

The Solicitor-General: In August this year, the Attorney-General received a copy of a letter from my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) to the Secretary of State for the Home Department concerning the case of Owen Oyston.

Charities

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement with regard to his role in relation to charities. [93418]

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General's role in relation to charities is wide-ranging and of historic origins. The Attorney-General's function is to represent the Crown as parens patriae and so to act as protector, both of charity in general and of particular charities.

It falls to the Attorney-General to institute legal proceedings to protect a charity and to represent the charitable interest. The Attorney-General is a necessary party to any litigation in which the objects of a charity need to be separately represented, for example, where the interest of the Trustees do not coincide with the objects of the charity.

In addition, the Attorney-General has the power to authorise ex gratia payments from charitable funds on moral grounds where such payments might otherwise amount to breaches of trust. He also has the power, by derogation from the Sovereign, to give directions under the Sign Manual as to the re-distribution of uncertain charitable gifts under wills.

CABINET OFFICE

Enforcement Concordat

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the workings of the Enforcement Concordat. [94550]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Enforcement Concordat sets out a blueprint for fair, practical and consistent enforcement. It has been developed in consultation with all the key stakeholders in the enforcement process. The Concordat policies and procedures therefore represent a consensus about best practice in regulatory enforcement. The Concordat provides a balanced approach to enforcement based on the philosophy that enforcers should work with businesses who wish to comply while at the same time taking firm action against those who deliberately flout the law or act irresponsibly. The organisations that have adopted it have provided a clear statement to business and others being regulated about what they can expect from enforcement officers. I commend the Enforcement Concordat to all local and central government enforcement officers.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what procedures are in place to measure the impact of the Enforcement Concordat. [94555]

Marjorie Mowlam: The adoption, implementation and effectiveness of the Enforcement Concordat are all monitored.

The Cabinet Office keeps a record of all the authorities, agencies and other bodies that have adopted the Concordat. Individual implementation plans are sent to the Cabinet Office or the relevant local authority associations. Those plans should include arrangements for performance appraisal. The Concordat is still relatively new but, once arrangements have been operational for a year, individual annual reports will be submitted following which the Cabinet Office will review the Concordat's effectiveness. There should be sufficient data to begin the first review next spring.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what are the aims and objectives of the Enforcement Concordat. [94551]

Marjorie Mowlam: The aims and objectives of the Enforcement Concordat are to achieve widespread adoption by both national and local enforcement bodies of simple, business-friendly enforcement procedures.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the progress and achievements of the Regulatory Impact Unit. [94600]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Regulatory Impact Unit (RIU) was launched in March this year. Since then it has introduced the scrutiny of regulatory proposals to ensure that their impact has been properly assessed. It has published the Guide to Better European Regulation and continues to promote the use of the Better Regulation Guide. It has agreed with Departments that they will include regulatory performance reports in their Annual Reports. It has launched, on the Cabinet Office website and on the intranet of other government departments, an IT based checklist for policymakers.

The RIU has supported the Better Regulation Task Force in the production of its reports, reviews and other activities.

The RIU has also consulted about reform of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. The Government intend to bring forward reforms when parliamentary time allows.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the responsibilities, aims and objectives of the Regulatory Impact Unit. [94601]

Marjorie Mowlam: The RIU is part of the Cabinet Office and therefore shares its aims and objectives. In particular it plays a part in the Cabinet Office Public Service Agreement (PSA) to develop public services, programmes and regulation across the public sector which meet the needs of users and which are of a high quality, modern and well co-ordinated. Under the (PSA) it has been committed to introducing arrangements for the audit and evaluation of better government practice including the preparation of Regulatory Impact Assessments.

The RIU:

helps Ministers and Departments find the right legislative balance to achieve proper standards of protection without unnecessary impact on business;

scrutinises regulatory proposals to ensure that they have been properly assessed in line with the best practice that it develops and circulates such as the Better Regulation Guide and the Guide to Better European Regulation; works with other Member States and the European Commission to improve the quality of legislative proposals at the European level; promotes the Enforcement Concordat; operates the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 and develops proposals for its reform; and supports the Better Regulation Task Force in the production of its reports, reviews and other activities.

Regulations

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which regulations have been identified as (a) no longer necessary and (b) capable of simplification. [94502]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government have recently announced plans to remove and simplify regulations in a number of areas including; licensing law, the complex rules on tax relief on stakeholder and personal pension contributions, the law on weights and measures and the current system of consumer credit. We are also looking at simplifying regulation of the private recruitment industry, speeding up the way houses are bought and sold, and have announced a major review of farming regulations.

In addition, we are introducing legislation to make it easier for Departments to remove or refocus out-dated regulations by increasing the flexibility of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) of 11 June 1998, Official Report, column 664, if the total annual salary cost of £3.6 million of employing special advisers includes the pension contributions listed in the answer of 13 July 1999, Official Report, column 173. [94567]

Marjorie Mowlam: Yes. The figure of £3.6 million included pension contributions of £413,000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Feed

13. Mrs. Organ: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department plans to take to ensure that animal feed which includes genetically modified ingredients is so labelled. [93398]

Ms Quin: The Advisory Committee on Animal Feedingstuffs held its first meeting on 24 September. It will have an important role in considering both the safety and labelling of genetically modified material in animal feed.

Pesticides

16. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to reduce the use of pesticides. [93404]

Ms Quin: We actively encourage farmers and growers to minimise their use of pesticides, consistent with effective pest control. We fund extensive R&D programmes; we publish guidance; and we support the work of the Pesticides Forum.

Genetically Modified Foods

17. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the rules for the labelling of imported genetically modified foods. [93405]

Ms Quin: EC regulations require all foods containing genetically modified material to be clearly labelled. These rules apply equally to imported food and foods produced in the UK.

19. Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will intervene to ensure that products can only be described as 100 per cent. genetic-modification-free if they have no GM content. [93407]

Ms Quin: EC proposals on the rules to be applied to food described as "genetically modified (GM) free" are expected to be published in the next month or so. Until these rules are agreed any products described in this way will continue to be regulated by the Food Safety Act 1990. This Act makes it an offence to describe, by way of labelling or advertising, a food falsely or in a way likely to mislead a purchaser as to its nature, substance or quality. In addition, the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 makes it an offence for a trader to supply food to which a false trade description has been applied or to which a trade description has been applied which is misleading to a material degree. The interpretation and enforcement of these requirements is initially a matter for local authorities, and ultimately for the courts, to decide.

Fisheries

20. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Fisheries Minister of Iceland to discuss fisheries policy. [93408]

Mr. Morley: I met the Icelandic Fisheries Minister on 30 May 1998.

Climate Change Levy

21. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the protected horticulture sector regarding proposals for a climate change levy. [93409]

Mr. Morley: I have received several representations about the impact of the climate change levy direct from members of the protected horticulture sector and from hon. Members representing constituents in the industry. Concerns have been expressed about the high net cost of the proposed levy to protected horticulture businesses and the impact this will have on profitability and competitiveness.

Battery Hens

22. Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve the welfare of battery hens. [93410]

Mr. Morley: A new EU Directive on the welfare of laying hens was agreed on 15 June. This requires all member states to ban the conventional battery cage from 1 January 2012 and to apply improved standards to its use in the meantime.

Dairy Farmers

23. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the industry on the future structure of dairy farming and milk processing. [93411]

Ms Quin: Following the publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report into the supply of raw milk in Great Britain on 6 July by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, my right hon. Friend the Minister has had a number of meetings with representatives of all sides of the dairy industry to engage in a constructive debate on the way forward.

24. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of business prospects for small dairy farmers. [93412]

Ms Quin: All dairy farmers face challenging times as a result of reduced milk prices, increasing liberalisation of world markets, and progress on CAP reform. But, the dairy farming sector's ability to respond positively to these challenges will be helped by the high level of producer expertise and commitment, favourable farm structure and ideal climate for milk production.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the prospects for dairy farmers. [93401]

Mr. Nick Brown: Dairy farmers face challenging times as a result of reduced milk prices, increasing liberalisation of world markets, and progress on CAP reform. But the dairy farming sector's ability to respond positively to these challenges will be helped by the high level of producer expertise and commitment, favourable farm structure and ideal climate for milk production.

Farming (Less-favoured Areas)

25. Mr. Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on plans for reform of support for farming in less-favoured areas. [93413]

Mr. Morley: We issued an initial consultation paper on this subject in April to which we received 81 responses from a wide range of interests. These views are being taken into account as we draw up detailed reform proposals on which we shall consult in due course.

Animal Welfare

26. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives his Department is taking to improve standards of animal welfare; and if he will make a statement. [93414]

Mr. Morley: We have taken a number of initiatives to improve standards of animal welfare. These are detailed in our most recent "State of Play" document, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Bovine TB

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of the trials investigating the control and spread of bovine TB. [93402]

Ms Quin: Five triplets have been enrolled in the trial and work has been carried out in all these areas. Progress has been slower than we would have liked, mainly owing to interference by protesters which we regret as it will take longer to find a scientific solution.

Organic Farming

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on Government support for organic farming. [93400]

Mr. Morley: We have allocated more than £16 million of aid under the Organic Farming Scheme (OFS), we are funding the Organic Conversion Information Service and we are spending more than £2 million this year on organic R&D.

We are currently reviewing the operations of the OFS in the light of trends in the organic sector.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Climate Change Levy

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the impact of the Climate Change Levy on the transport industry. [94161]

Mr. Byers: As part of an ongoing process of dialogue and consultation between Government and business on the Climate Change Levy, I held a meeting with business representatives, including the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, on 20 October 1999.

Forest Products

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the environmental non-Governmental organisations with which he has held meetings during the past 12 months to discuss the proposal to establish a World Trade Organisation agreement on forest products. [93834]

Mr. Caborn: My predecessor, Ministerial colleagues from other Government Departments, officials and I myself have held numerous meetings with environmental and other non-governmental organisations over the past 12 months to discuss the proposed new Round of multilateral trade negotiations in the World Trade Organisation. Proposals for tariff reductions on forest products have been dealt with in these meetings in the context of the United Kingdom and European Union approach to trade liberalisation in a new Round.

Europlanner Disc

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many copies of the Europlanner disc have been created; at what cost; and how have they been distributed. [95230]

Mr. Caborn: The EuroPlanner (floppy disc) is a practical, self-help tool to help businesses prepare for the euro. Over 105,000 copies of the EuroPlanner have so far been distributed by Business Links, other intermediaries, the Treasury's euro telephone line (08456 01 01 99) and my Department to business to help them prepare their euro strategy. It is also available on the internet (www.connectbestpractice.com) and on a Euro CD ROM. The development and production costs for 155,000 copies of the disc were £109,000.

My Department launched the EuroPlanner on 23 February in response to requests from UK businesses and Business Support Organisations. It is important that UK firms consider the implications of the single currency and where necessary take steps to prepare. I would encourage British companies to use the EuroPlanner to help them do this.

European State Aid

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list, by country, the total amount of state aid approved by the Commission since the signing of the Single European Act. [95407]

Mr. Caborn: Between 1987 and 1997, the Commission approved a total of approximately 861,438 million euros in State aid throughout the EU, of which 430,240.21 million euros was paid to the manufacturing industry.

These data were compiled from the Commission's surveys on aid to industry across the EU; the most recent being "The Seventh Survey on aid in the EU in the manufacturing and certain other sectors", which was published in March 1999. The Eighth Survey, covering the period 1997–98, has not yet been published. The surveys provide a broad overview on aid granted across the EU, but data on State aid to agriculture, fisheries, coal, steel, transport and the financial services sector are not broken down by country.

The table sets out the total State aid to the manufacturing industry granted by each member state in millions of euro.

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the total value of contracts awarded to date in Kosovo since the cessation of hostilities, broken down by nationality of company. [95405]

Mr. Caborn: Almost all the contracts awarded to date to agencies and companies have been those to meet the immediate humanitarian needs in Kosovo. There is no central register of the multiplicity of such agencies which have won such contracts either through bilateral aid support or through that provided via other organisations such as the United Nations. However, British Trade International, the recently established joint DTI/FCO trade promotion organisation has, in conjunction with the British Office in Pristina, been asked (through the joint private sector Kosovo Taskforce established by the Secretary of State) to put together a list with details of all British companies which have won contracts in Kosovo.

The most significant of these to date is the concession awarded to a British consortium led by Mott MacDonald to manage the power sector in Kosovo over the next seven months; this should help ensure that there is sufficient power to enable Kosovo to get through the forthcoming hard winter. British Trade International has put nearly £500,000 into this project; a similar amount has been provided by the European Union.

Sombrero Island

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 1999, Official Report, column 115, what is the latest position regarding the possible lease of Sombrero Island for the purpose of launching commercial satellites. [94800]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Officials from the British National Space Centre remain in contact with the Government of Anguilla providing technical advice and assistance on the outer space aspects of the request by the US company Beal Aerospace to lease Sombrero Island for the purpose of launching commercial satellites. Officials are also helping the Anguillans to assess the probable environmental consequences of the proposed activity. ICF Kaizer have conducted an Environmental Impact Assessment on behalf of Beal and a Planning Inspector has been appointed to advise the Anguillan Government. It is hoped that a public consultation with interested parties will soon be conducted.

Hawk Exports

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reason the ECGD support for the export of the Hawk aircraft was agreed in March 1996 before the export licence was issued in November 1996. [95292]

Mr. Caborn: ECGD's support for the project was conditional upon an export licence being obtained.

Parental Leave

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the numbers and percentages of (a) mothers and (b) fathers who will choose to take their parental leave entitlements in each of the first five years after that rights comes into force. [95168]

Mr. Alan Johnson: We estimate that about 100,000 parents will take parental leave each year when the rights are fully established in 2004. We have not estimated how many will choose to take parental leave in each of the first five years after the rights come into force. Parental leave is a new right and we do not have enough information to make such detailed estimates.

Poland (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Minister of State's visit to Poland. [94707]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 19 October 1999]: I visited Poland from 21 to 23 September. My visit encompassed ministerial meetings, the opening of an all-British trade fair in Warsaw, visits to British businesses, a visit to Krakow to open the new British Council Offices and to support a project run by a British company to recycle the waste from the steel mill in Krakow.

The main reason for my visit was to raise the profile of British companies in Poland as part of British Trade International's strategy for encouraging more companies to consider the market. However, in meetings with Polish Ministers I also took the opportunity to raise the question of Polish coal exports to the United Kingdom and to underline our support for Poland in the EU accession process.

Airlines

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he proposes to take to protect consumers from the effects of predatory pricing activities by low-cost airlines; and if he will make a statement. [94708]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 19 October 1999]: Responsibility for ensuring competition laws are not broken lies with the competition authorities, the Office of Fair Trading within the UK or the European Commission for activities which affect trade between member states. I look to these bodies to ensure fair competition, and for those with concerns to put them to the competition authorities for investigation.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set up an independent inquiry into predatory pricing activities by low-cost airlines. [94709]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 19 October 1999]: We have no such plans. However, if my hon. Friend has any evidence of predatory pricing activities he should bring it to the attention of the competent authorities. In the UK this is the Director General of Fair Trading, and for activities which affect trade between member states it is the European Commission.

Plutonium

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement in respect of the proliferation implications of the plutonium shipment involving the Pacific Pintail and Pacific Teal. [94713]

Mrs. Liddell: The UK's international nuclear trade, including the export of Mixed Oxide (MOX) fuel, is undertaken strictly within the terms of international agreements on nuclear non proliferation, safeguards and physical protection and is entirely consistent with the UK's obligations in these areas. Very stringent physical protection and safeguards measures are applied to MOX at all time, including during transport, to prevent its theft or diversion to non-peaceful purposes. The Government are satisfied that the risk of nuclear weapons proliferation from the manufacture and use of MOX in Europe and its export to Japan is minimal.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the financial allocation towards the minor and major road works programme in each roads division in the current financial year; [94451]

(2) what was the financial spending on minor and major road works programmes in each roads division for each year since 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1999. [94469]

Long-term Unemployed

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to address the problem of the long-term unemployed in Northern Ireland. [94464]

Mr. McFall: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Eddie Grady, dated 21 October 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your question about help for the long term unemployed in Northern Ireland.

The number of long term unemployed people (i.e., those who have been unemployed for one year or more) who are claiming Jobseekers Allowance in Northern Ireland has declined substantially in recent years. In September 1999 there were 24000 long term unemployed claimants which is 3000 less than 1 year earlier and 13000 lower than 3 years ago.

It is against this background that New Deal, which is by far the largest programme for helping the long term unemployed back into work in Northern Ireland, is being delivered. Up to £200 million is available for New Deal in Northern Ireland over the lifetime of this Parliament.

The New Deal for 18 to 24 year olds and the New Deal for the over 25s are specifically designed to assist the long term unemployed. The New Deal for 18 to 24 year olds, introduced in April 1998, offers young people who have been unemployed for 6 months or more a tailored programme to improve their employability and enhance their chances of getting a job.

Northern Ireland is one of 29 areas throughout the United Kingdom currently piloting enhanced provision for those aged 25 and over who have been unemployed for 18 months or more. This pilot New Deal was introduced throughout Northern Ireland in November 1998.

Between April 1998 and September 1999, 4874 young people found work through New Deal for 18–24 year olds. In addition, 1980 adults have found work following their participation in New Deal for the over 25s. Many others are improving their prospects for employment by participating in the other available options.

The Work rack programme was introduced at the beginning of August 1999 to complement New Deal. Worktrack is the replacement programme for ACE and is targeted at long term unemployed adults who are ineligible for New Deal assistance. It will provide 1050 high quality temporary employment opportunities with training during the financial year 1999/00 and 2100 opportunities in 2000/01. Worktrack aims to prepare participants for sustainable employment at the earliest opportunity.

New Deal has had a very positive impact in helping to tackle the problem of long term unemployment in Northern Ireland. However, we are not complacent and the Training and Employment Agency will continue to play its part by considering what other measures and interventions would help long term unemployed people back into employment.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Riverside Development, Comber

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when planning application No. X/98/0820 for the Riverside Residential Development in Comber was received by his Department; if the application allows for the future construction of the next stage of the Comber by-pass road scheme; what matters are outstanding before a planning determination can be made; and if he will make a statement about the time still required before issue of that planning decision. [94377]

Mr. George Howarth: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. H. S. McKay. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from H. S. McKay to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 22 October 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the application for planning permission for the Riverside Residential Development in Comber.

The Department received this application on 12 November 1998 and designated it as a major one under the Article 31 procedure of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 on 12 March 1999. The Roads Service is actively exploring the options that may be open to the developers to fund or part fund the next stage of the Comber By-Pass. An Environmental Statement in support of the application was submitted on 21 June 1999 and the on-going assessment of this Statement has identified a number of shortcomings that the agent has been asked to address. This information has not yet been received and is of importance because the proposal raises a number of conservation issues which require careful consideration since the site impinges upon the Strangford Lough Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty and adjoins an Area of Special Scientific Interest, a proposed Special Protection Area, a Special Area of Conservation and a Ramsar Site. It is too early yet to say when a decision on the application can be made as it may be necessary to hold a public local inquiry into the proposal.

I do hope this is helpful.

Bowling Green, Cloughey

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) on what date the planning application for a bowling green at The Warren, Cloughey was received by his Department; how many local people have signed a petition in support of this bowling green; when a planning decision will be issued; and if he will make a statement; [94557]

(2) when the planning application for a bowling green at The Warren, Cloughey, Co. Down was submitted; when an environmental and heritage report was requested; when this report will become available; how many persons have signed a petition in support of this project; when the planning decision will be issued; what is the opinion of Ards borough council; and if he will make a statement. [94558]

Mr. George Howarth: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. H. S. McKay. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from H. S. McKay to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 22 October 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about an application for planning permission for a bowling green at The Warren, Cloughy.

Ards Borough Council submitted this application on 29 March 1999 and a petition of 1,200 signatures was received in support of the proposal. The Environment and Heritage Service's comments were sought on 19 April and their response, recommending that planning permission be refused, was received on 3 September. The Council was consulted with a preliminary opinion to refuse planning permission on 14 September, at which time it deferred consideration of the proposal for a site meeting that was held on 1 October. The Planning Service now proposes convening a meeting with the Council and the Environment and Heritage Service to discuss possible options for progressing the application. It is not, therefore, possible at this stage to say when a decision will issue.

I do hope this is helpful.

Traffic, Comber

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the volume of traffic on the Newtownards road near the cemetery in Comber; if he will assess the benefits of the provision of a pedestrian crossing at this location; how many pupils are enrolled at Comber Primary and Comber High schools; and if he will make a statement; [94370]

(2) what assessment he has made of traffic flow conditions at the junction of Darragh Road with the Newtownards Road in Comber; what plans he has to provide traffic lights at this junction; and if he will make a statement. [94369]

Mr. George Howarth: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. C. James. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from C. James to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 21 October 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to respond to your recently tabled Parliamentary Questions about, inter alia, traffic flows in the vicinity of Newtownards Road, Comber.

First, you asked about the volume of traffic on Newtownards Road near the cemetery in Comber, the benefits of a pedestrian crossing at this location and how many pupils are enrolled at Comber Primary and Comber High Schools.

The last comprehensive survey of traffic volumes on Newtownards Road close to the cemetery was carried out in 1996. The survey recorded an annual average 24-hour flow of 12,480 vehicles with a peak hour flow of 1,080 vehicles. A more recent survey of peak hour traffic volumes was carried out on 27 September 1999, when the peak hour flow was found to be 1,250 vehicles. This would equate with an annual average 24-hour traffic flow of 14,500 vehicles.

As regards the provision of a pedestrian crossing at this location, Roads Service carried out a survey of pedestrians and vehicles on Monday 27 September 1999. Our survey found that during each of the 4 busiest hours of the day the level of pedestrian traffic was significantly less than that required to warrant the provision of a pedestrian crossing. In the circumstances, Roads Service has no proposals to provide a pedestrian crossing at this location.

I am advised by my colleagues in the Department of Education that enrolment figures for Comber Primary and Comber High Schools for the academic year 1998–99 were 389 and 448 respectively.

Secondly, you asked what assessment has been made of traffic flow conditions at the junction of Darragh Road and Newtownards Road and what plans there are to provide traffic lights at this junction.

The flow of traffic at this junction has been assessed in the past but, as it is some time since a full appraisal was carried out, we will undertake an appraisal taking account of the volume of traffic, the lengths of traffic queues and the delays experienced.

As regards the provision of traffic lights, such facilities are only provided at junctions where there is significant congestion throughout the day. With the exception of the relatively short duration morning peak period, queues have not been observed at this junction during the course of the working day. Nevertheless, our appraisal of the junction will determine if there is a need for traffic lights at this location and I will write to you again when the results of our appraisal are known.

I hope this information is helpful.

Planning Applications, Carryduff

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many planning applications for residential developments in the Carryduff area are presently being considered; and if he will make a statement; [94547]

(2) how many applications for housing developments of more than 50 units have been submitted for planning approval within the green belt area in Carryduff district; and if he will make a statement. [94548]

Mr. George Howarth: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. H. S. McKay. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from H. S. McKay to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 22 October 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about proposed housing developments in the Carryduff area.

The Department is currently considering six applications for residential developments in the Carryduff area. Each of these applications propose more than 50 units in green belt locations.

I do hope this is helpful.

Area Plans

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many qualified town planners are employed in the planning service currently; what was the level five years ago; when preparation of the Ards Area Plan will commence; when preparation of the North Down Area Plan will commence; and if he will make a statement on resources available to the Planning Service to review the Area Plan Programme. [94374]

Mr. George Howarth: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. H. S. McKay. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from H. S. McKay to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 22 October 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Question about staffing levels and the resources available to the Planning Service for Area Plan work.

For the purpose of the answer, "qualified town planners" are taken to mean those staff who possess either MRTPI membership or a post-graduate diploma in Planning, or a degree qualification in Planning. Based on these criteria, there are currently 137 "qualified" planners (excluding temporary staff) employed by the Planning Service. Regrettably, historical information to this level of detail is not available.

Work started on the Ards Area Plan in January 1999. Work on the Belfast Metropolitan Plan, which will encompass the North Down Borough Council area, is currently scheduled in the Department's Area Plan Programme to commence in the 2000/01 financial year. This Programme is, however, reviewed annually and will be revisited in the forthcoming months when preparing the 2000/01 Business Plan.

Progress with the review of the Area Plan Programme is determined by the resources allocated to this work in the context of the Agency's Corporate and Business Plans as approved by the Minister. The Plans cover the whole range of the Agency's functions and key performance targets, which include the drafting and adoption of specific Plans in this business year, set priorities. In principle, the resources allocated to the Agency are sufficient to deliver these targets although other factors can come into play and affect the outcome.

I do hope this is helpful.

Houston Road (Car Accidents)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the hedge at the Houston Road into the plant testing station was last cut; what record there is of car accidents at this location; and if he will make a statement. [94545]

Mr. George Howarth: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. C. James. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from G. P. Fraser to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 25 October 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked our Chief Executive to respond to your recently tabled Parliamentary Question about hedge cutting at the entrance to the Plant Testing Station at Houston Road, Castlereagh, Belfast and car accident records at this location. In the absence of our Chief Executive, I am replying.

The cutting of roadside hedges is the responsibility of relevant landowners and, in this particular case, responsibility falls to the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, which owns the Plant Testing Station. Colleagues from that Department have advised me that the hedges around the Plant Testing Station are cut annually and that they were last cut in November 1998.

You also asked what record there is of car accidents at this location. The RUC has advised that its records indicate that there has been one "damage only" accident at the junction of Houston Road and Knockbracken Road during the last 12 months.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Scrabo Stone

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the location of the original Scrabo Stone from the former Kinnel Marsh and Kennedy's Bridges at Comber; if it will be saved for the construction of the next stage of the Comber Bypass; and if he will make a statement. [94368]

Mr. George Howarth: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Road Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. C. James. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from C. James to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 21 October 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to respond to your recently tabled Parliamentary Question about the location of the original Scrabo Stone from the former Kinnel Marsh and Kennedy Bridges near Comber.

I should explain that there are 3 former bridges still existing on the line of the Department of the Environment's proposed Comber Bypass, namely Marsh River Bridge, Kennedy's Bridge and Cherryvalley Bridge. All of these bridges are of Scrabo Stone construction. Over the years, stone has been removed from these bridges by persons unknown and recently Roads Service utilised some stone from Cherryvalley Bridge for use on accommodation works at a nearby road improvement scheme.

The Department's proposed Comber Bypass scheme requires the replacement of the Marsh River Bridge and the design carried out to date does not include the use of Scrabo Stone. Consideration could, however, be given to the possible use of the stone.

At present, discussions are ongoing between the Department and a consortium of developers regarding a proposed housing development in the area which might involve the completion of the Comber Bypass earlier than is currently planned. The proposed development may require some minor alterations to the line of the proposed Bypass and possible replacement structures for Kennedy's Bridge and Cherryvalley Bridge. As yet, however, no final decisions have been made regarding this proposal and no detailed design has been undertaken.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Ministerial Meetings (United States)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of his predecessor's special advisers travelled to New York on 6 October 1998; and if he will list the meetings which they held with members and officials of the US Government during this visit, listing the dates and locations of each meeting and the names of the US Ministers and officials at each meeting. [93948]

Mr. Mandelson: Mr. Nigel Warner was the only special adviser to accompany my predecessor during her visit to New York between 7 and 9 October 1998. During the visit he did not hold any official meetings with any members or officials of the US Government.

Wind Farms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the terms of Directive 85/337/EEC were applied to wind farms in Northern Ireland. [94787]

Mr. George Howarth: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its Chief Executive, Mr. H. S. McKay. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from H. S. McKay to Mr. William Ross, dated 25 October 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Question about wind farms in Northern Ireland.

Directive 85/337/EEC was applied to wind farms with effect from 14 March 1999, with the coming into operation of the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1999.

I do hope this is helpful.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 23 July 1999, Official Report, column 706, for what reason he did not state the most recent date on which (a) he and (b) the Minister for Transport used a train in the course of their duties. [94530]

Mr. Hill: As the then Minister for Transport said in her answer, Ministers travel by public transport on a regular basis on official visits and journeys to their offices. My right hon. Friend and my noble Friend last travelled by train on official business on Monday 18 October.

Driving (Drugs)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the impact that taking illegal drugs has on the driving ability of motorists; and if he will make a statement; [94511]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact that taking over the counter medicines has on the driving ability of motorists; and if he will make a statement; [94512]

(3) what initiatives his Department is taking to alert drivers to the hazards associated with drug abuse and driving; [94513]

(4) what plans he has for advertising campaigns to raise the profile of drug abuse related to driving; [94514]

(5) what discussions he has held with the pharmaceutical industry on driving under the influence of drugs. [94515]

Mr. Hill: Some medicinal and illegal drugs can impair driving ability and its is already an offence to drive while impaired through drugs. The Association of Chief Police Officers is researching suitable training for police to recognise the outward signs of drug taking and to assess driver impairment. The Department and the Home Office are supporting that and the development of roadside screening devices to further assist the police in enforcing the law effectively. However, the effect of drugs, both medicinal and illegal, on driving ability is a very complex issue and, in contrast to alcohol, it is very difficult to correlate directly the level of consumption with impairment of driving. Research is ongoing into the extent of the problem—an essential first step in formulating suitable and effective countermeasures. The Department is also participating in European Union research projects to develop roadside devices to screen for the presence of drugs and to detect impairment in a driver.

The Department is considering how the risks of driving under the influence of drugs might be publicised. The acknowledged success of the Department's drink drive campaigns was accompanied by effective enforcement and good knowledge of the way in which alcohol impairs driving. That makes such campaigns effective overall because they are authoritative, well targeted and there is a real threat of getting caught. For drugs (both illegal and medicinal), we would need to target any such campaigns towards the precise nature and extent of the problem and would need to give positive advice informed by well based knowledge.

I understand from the Medicines Control Agency that the current guidelines for pharmaceutical companies dictate that all medicines must comply with European Commission Directive 92/27/EEC on the labelling of medicinal products for human use and on package leaflets. All products have a Summary of Product Characteristics which explains how the medicine acts, how it should be used and any side effects that might be experienced, including a section on the effect of the medicine on the ability to drive. Prescribers are also provided with information on the effects of medicines on the ability to drive in the British National Formulary. This also lists standard pharmacy labels which pharmacists add when dispensing medicines that may affect a patient's ability to drive. Information for patients about medicines, including the effects on the ability to drive, is also provided to patients in Patient Information Leaflets. These should now be supplied with all medicines.

The information included in the Summary of Product Characteristics, including the effects on the ability to drive, is based on data supplied by pharmaceutical company at the time a product licence is applied for. This may be updated as further information becomes available.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what estimate he has made of the number of traffic accidents which occurred within the UK as the result of illegal drug abuse from May 1997 to June 1999; [94448]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of traffic accidents which occurred within the UK as the result of the use of legal over the counter medicines from May 1997 to June 1999. [94449]

Mr. Hill: The road accident statistics do not include information on drug use. The Department is undertaking research into the incidence of drugs in road accident fatalities. However, the presence of drugs, whether legal or illegal, is not of itself evidence of impairment of driver ability or accident causation.

Homelessness

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what initiatives he has launched to combat homelessness within (a) the UK and (b) Sefton since 1993. [94581]

Mr. Mullin: Since taking office, the Government have strengthened the legislation to give homeless people reasonable preference in the allocation of long-term social housing. My Department has also set up a sounding board with representatives from local and central Government and the voluntary sector to consider further proposals to give effect to our Manifesto pledge to increase the protection afforded to unintentionally homeless people in priority need. We have also set up a joint liaison committee, the Youth Homelessness Action Partnership, to look specifically at issues affecting homelessness among young people.

One of the first priorities the Prime Minister set for the Social Exclusion Unit was to report on Rough Sleeping. They identified that rough sleepers' problems and needs span the responsibilities of several central Government Departments. In response to this, a new Ministerial Committee on Rough Sleeping (MCRS), chaired by the Minister for Local Government and the Regions, has been established to ensure effective co-ordination of Government policy on this.

The Government have also established the Rough Sleepers Unit, which has the tough target of reducing the number of people sleeping rough by two-thirds by 2002. It is directly responsible to the MCRS for progress against the target and has a budget of £145 million over three years. This money is provided from a range of departmental sources (including DETR, DoH, DSS and DfEE) and will be used as a flexible integrated budget to tackle the health, education, training and benefit, as well as housing, aspects of rough sleeping.

We have also announced a £34 million funding over the next three years for over 250 projects outside London under the New Homelessness Action Programme. Sefton has received £44,034 to provide workers for two projects. Early in the New Year we will be inviting further bids for funding from voluntary organisations in the light of the forthcoming national strategy document on rough sleeping.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to reduce the number of homeless persons living (a) in Merseyside and (b) in Sefton. [94647]

Mr. Mullin: We have announced that £34 million will be available under the Homelessness Action Programme over the next three years to fund voluntary agencies to address the problem of homelessness outside London. Organisations in Merseyside have been allocated £458,696 to provide youth, outreach, project and field workers for five schemes. £44,034 of this is for two projects in Sefton. We will be inviting further bids under the programme following the launch of the new national strategy on rough sleeping, which we will be launching before the end of the year.

Uninsured Drivers

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are (a) the proposed duration of the Motor Insurers' Bureau uninsured drivers' agreement and (b) its termination provisions. [94409]

Mr. Hill: There is no formal termination date in Agreement. Past agreements have continued until it was clear that there was a need to revise them. There are provisions for termination of the Agreement upon either party giving a year's notice to the other.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what date the revised Motor Insurers' Bureau uninsured drivers' agreement was signed; and on what date it will come into effect. [94407]

Mr. Hill: The new Agreement was signed on 13 August 1999 and it came into effect on 1 October 1999.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions since the signing of the Motor Insurers' Bureau uninsured drivers' agreement what (a) meetings have been held with (i) the insurance industry and (ii) organisations representing victims of road accidents and (b) what representations have been made by (i) and (ii); and if he will make a statement. [94408]

Mr. Hill: Since the new Agreement was signed, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has met the Association of Personal Accident Solicitors and the Solicitors Indemnity Fund to discuss concerns they had expressed about the terms of the Agreement. I understand that the Motor Insurers' Bureau have also met Association of Personal Injury Lawyers and have arranged to meet the Motor Accident Solicitors Society. My Department stands ready to meet any of these representative organisations to discuss their concerns and, if it proves necessary, to amend the Agreement.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment of the problems of compliance with the revised Motor Insurers' Bureau uninsured drivers' agreement faced by accident victims or their representatives were made by his Department, prior to its signature; and if he will make a statement. [94406]

Mr. Hill: Representations received over the last 10 years from applicants, their legal representatives and from solicitors' organisations all pointed to a lack of clarity about the 1998 Uninsured Drivers Agreement. In particular there were several complaints about the lack of clear procedures and the absence of defined time limits. These have been addressed in the new Agreement.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions prior to the signature of the revised Motor Insurers' Bureau uninsured motorists' agreement, what (a) meetings were held by his Department with (i) the Motor Insurers' Bureau, (ii) other representatives of the insurance industry, (iii) the Law Society and (iv) organisations representing road accident victims, (b) what representations were invited and received from the above and (c) what other consultation arrangements were made; and if he will make a statement. [94405]

Mr. Hill: Representations have been received over the 10 years since the last revision from many applicants, their legal representatives and from solicitors' organisations. Representations have also been received from the European Commission. All of these are taken into consideration in the review of the Agreements. Representations were not formally invited from any of these organisations. We have recently received correspondence from the Association of Personal Injury Lawyers, and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State met them, in September, to discuss their concerns about the new Uninsured Drivers Agreement.

Minicabs

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue regulations under the Private Hire Vehicles (London) Act 1998 to require drivers of minicabs to carry the guide dogs of sight-impaired customers. [94692]

Mr. Hill: This is a matter which will be considered when we consult jointly with the Public Carriage Office on proposals for regulating private hire vehicle drivers in London.

Pillion Passengers (Motor Cycles)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the minimum age for a child to ride as a pillion passenger on a motor cycle; and if he will make a statement. [94686]

Mr. Hill: There is no minimum age for a child to ride as a pillion passenger on a motor cycle. The decision remains with the rider, who is legally responsible for ensuring that the child is safely supported. Existing legislation places a number of controls on the carrying of pillion passengers.

These legislative requirements, by their nature, restrict the carrying of children as pillion passengers unless that can be undertaken safely.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many children have been (a) killed and (b) seriously injured in road traffic accidents riding pillion on motor cycles in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [94685]

Mr. Hill: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Child twmv[1] pillion passengers killed or seriously injured: GB 1994–98

Casualties

	Severity
Year	Killed	Seriously injured	Total
1994	2	54	56
1995	0	46	46
1996	1	51	52
1997	3	48	51
1998	0	34	34

Maritime Pollution

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement in respect of maritime pollution threats involving the "Pacific Pintail", the "Pacific Teal" and the Greenpeace ship. [94714]

Mr. Hill: My Department is not aware of any incident involving the named ships that created a risk of marine pollution. However, the ships were involved in incidents in July this year that resulted in a risk to safety. Greenpeace manoeuvred inflatable boats near the ships owned by Pacific Nuclear Transport Limited. The Greenpeace ship had positioned itself in the approach channel to Barrow. Its crew did not provide information on their intentions, despite several requests that they do so. Without any clear indication of Greenpeace's intentions, there was concern that their activities could result in injury or loss of life. My Department's Maritime and Coastguard Agency therefore issued a direction requiring the M/V Greenpeace to leave specified areas of the UK's territorial sea. We cancelled the direction once there was no longer a risk to safety in the UK territorial sea.

Plutonium Shipments

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement in respect of safety issues arising from the plutonium shipment involving the "Pacific Teal" and "Pacific Pintail". [94715]

Mr. Hill: Mixed oxide fuel is transported in packages that have been approved as meeting the national regulations and international safety standards covering the transport of radioactive materials by sea.

The "Pacific Pintail" and the "Pacific Teal" already meet the highest requirements of the International Maritime Organisation's "Code for the Safe Carriage of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel", "Plutonium and High-Level Radioactive Wastes in Flasks on board Ships" ("INF Code").

Rail Safety Reports

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will require the Health and Safety Executive to make publicly available (a) reports on rail safety hitherto treated as confidential and (b) future reports on rail safety. [94701]

Mr. Hill: The results of HSE's investigations into rail safety are already made public. This has been achieved by publishing the findings eg of train accidents, research, passenger accidents and others in the Chief Inspector of Railway's Annual Report into Railway Safety. In the last year, HSE has also made public the result of its investigation into significant incidents as these are completed. Examples include findings following the derailment at Cadoxton and the accidents of Bexley and Winsford. Within the last year, HSE has also published the results of the investigation into the management of signals passed at danger.

HSE intends to make public the results of all such investigations as soon as possible after the completion of the investigation. This is illustrated by the publication of the interim findings into the recent train accident at Ladbroke Grove.

Radioactive Shipments (Irish Sea)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what controls exist to monitor the number of vessels in the Irish Sea carrying radioactive material; what requirements there are for the registration of such movements and the reporting of incidents which could endanger the public; and what was the average number of such vessels moving in the Irish Sea during the past 18 months. [94672]

Mr. Hill: UK legislation requires ship operators to provide my Department with information on dangerous and polluting cargoes, including radioactive material, carried by ships calling at UK ports. It also requires ship operators to report incidents to HM Coastguard. These requirements give effect to international rules adopted through the International Maritime Organization (IMO) and to an EC directive. We cannot require ships that pass through UK waters without calling at a UK port to provide us with information except in accordance with IMO approved schemes. Any such requirement would conflict with the navigational rights and freedoms enjoyed by foreign ships according to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea 1982, to which the UK is a party. Information on the number of ships passing through the Irish Sea without calling at a UK port is not available.

London Underground

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 5 July 1999, Official Report, column 370, concerning the agreement signed by London Transport Underground for the future supply of power, if, under the agreement, power for London Underground will cease to be generated in London; who the owners and managers of Power PFI are; to what extent the agreement transfers the responsibility for supply and distribution of electric power to appliances and live rails; what access agreements to linesides, switching equipment and sub-stations have been made with the contractors; and what transfers of personnel there will be. [94813]

Mr. Hill: The Power PFI contract transferred responsibility for the operation, maintenance, finance and renewal of London Underground's high voltage electrical supply network to SEEBOARD Powerlink (a consortium of companies consisting of SEEBOARD, BICC and ABB, owned in the following proportions: 80 per cent., 10 per cent., 10 per cent.). Under this contract, London Underground's power will be obtained from the National Grid. The day to day switching of electrical supplies to track and stations remains with London Underground.

Access by the contractor to linesides, switching equipment and substations is in accordance with the same procedures and conditions imposed for London Underground staff and all contractors working on the railway.

Under the terms of the Power PFI contract, the 315 London Underground staff responsible for the operation and maintenance of the generating stations at Lots Road and Greenwich, the power distribution substations and associated high voltage and control cable networks, transferred to SEEBOARD Powerlink on their existing terms and conditions of employment when the contract commenced on 16 August 1998.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many fires there have been on the London Underground in each of the last five years. [94793]

Mr. Hill: The numbers of confirmed fire reports for the last five years are as follows:

	Rolling stock	Trackside
1994–95	32	244
1995–96	37	347
1996–97	38	286
1997–98	58	327
1998–99	58	258

London Underground define a confirmed fire as any incident that activates a smoke alarm.

These incidents may be as seemingly trivial as a smouldering cigarette end. London Underground advise that these confirmed fires were small in nature, with little or no combustible material available that would lead to the development of a large fire. All such incidents, however small, are treated very seriously.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 5 July 1999, Official Report, column 370, concerning revenue and costs of London Underground Limited, if he will provide a breakdown of the £248 million of other costs in 1997–98 into (a) main categories of expenditure and (b) each line or interchange expenditure; and to what purposes the gross margin of £265 million has been devoted. [94814]

Mr. Hill: (a) The breakdown of "other costs" is as follows:

Other costs	£ million
Business rates	21
Operational materials and supplies	18
Train and station cleaning	20

Other costs	£ million
Repair costs allocated from project work	25
Marketing	4
Insurance	9
EDP costs	13
Consultancy	9
Accommodation and telephone	23
Charge from LT for finance and HR services	26
PFI contract costs	31
Costs of property rental collection	7
Other costs	42
Total	248

(b) A breakdown of these figures on a line by line basis is not available. Some of the costs above are incurred centrally rather than on a line by line basis.

The gross margin of £265 million went towards total LT investment.

Biosafety Protocol

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the next meeting on the biosafety protocol will be held; by what date his Department has to make its submission for inclusion in the EU position; and if he will make a statement. [94828]

Mr. Meacher: At the informal consultations on the biosafety protocol held by the President of the Extraordinary Conference of the Parties (Ex-COP), Minister Mayr, in Vienna in September, it was decided to resume the Ex-COP between 24–28 January in Montreal. The UK and the EU are considering the options arising from the informal consultations, and the EU position for the resumed negotiations will be established over the coming months. The UK is fully committed to an effective and workable Protocol which can be ratified by all countries active in biotechnology.

Glyphosate

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports he has received from the EU concerning the effects of the chemical glyphosate on (a) the environment and (b) biodiversity; and if he will make a statement. [94819]

Mr. Meacher: The EU has established a programme to review the safety of all pesticides which were authorised (by at least one Member State) for use in agriculture and horticulture on 25 July 1993. Glyphosate is included in the first round of this programme.

The EU review process begins with an evaluation, including effects on the environment, wildlife and other non-target organisms, by a "rapporteur" Member State. Germany was appointed rapporteur for glyphosate and has delivered its assessment to the EU Commission, the UK and other Member States. This evaluation is currently subject to peer review by experts from all Member States.

Transponders

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will report on progress made at a meeting of the IMO sub-committee on the safety of navigation held in September on the subject of the mandatory carriage requirement for transponders; and if he will make a statement. [94603]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 20 October 1999]: The International Maritime Organisation's (IMO) sub-committee on the safety of navigation (NVA 45) met from 20–24 September 1999 and developed a draft regulation for the phased introduction of a mandatory carriage requirement for ship identification transponders. The draft Regulation envisages new ships being fitted by 1 July 2002, with step-by-step application to existing ships between then and 2008. The draft will be further discussed at the 72nd session of the IMO safety committee in May 2000.

M60

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the M60 motorway from Denton to Middleton to open; and what assessment he has made of the prospects for opening sections of the motorway at an earlier date. [94831]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 21 October 1999]: As this is an operational matter for the Highways Agency, I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Lawrie Haynes, to reply.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mr. Andrew Bennett, dated 25 October 1999:

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Keith Hill, has asked Lawrie Haynes, the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, to reply to your recent Parliamentary question about the timing for the opening of the M60 between Denton and Middleton. I am replying in Lawrie's absence from the office.

The date for opening the whole of the Denton to Middleton section of the Manchester Outer Ring Road is Summer 2000. However, the Highways Agency is considering the possibility of opening some individual sections earlier. Whether it would be practical to do so is dependent upon the contractors' programmes for completion of the outstanding works. This will become clearer towards the end of the year. Traffic impact on the local road network is also a major consideration and the Agency is in discussion with the relevant local authorities about this.

I hope this is helpful.

Rail Safety

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the danger to rail travellers of the increased number of cases of broken rails since 1994–95; and what action he plans to take. [95173]

Mr. Hill: Broken rails result from a range of causes including rail age, increased traffic density and particular additional freight carriage. The general upward trend in the number of broken rails demonstrates that infrastructure maintenance, inspection and track replacement efforts must be increased. HSE's Railway Inspectorate (HMRI) has recently ordered Railtrack to define an urgent action plan to improve track maintenance and inspection to significantly reduce the number of broken rails across the network. Extreme damage to rails could potentially lead to train derailment and HMRI take a strong enforcement action where there could be a safety risk. For example, a prohibition was placed on the use of the Severn Tunnel earlier this year until suitable repairs were carried out.

Bridge Tolls (Buses)

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the current level of bridge tolls for buses, indicating the percentage differential with tolls for cars on the same journey. [94921]

Mr. Hill: The following list shows the current toll levels for cars and buses on toll bridges in England for which the Secretary of State has a statutory responsibility, as Highway Authority or for the determination of the level of tolls. The percentage differential between the toll level for cars and buses is shown:

Undertaking	Car (£)	Minibus (£)	Percentage differential	Large bus (£)	Current tolls: Percentage differential
Aldwark Bridge	0.15	0.30	100	0.80	433
Clifton Suspension Bridge	0.20	0.20	0	0.20	0

Raddicio Rosso

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice his Department has given the European Commission on the Dutch Government's approval for raddicio rosso to be sold in the Netherlands without the approval of the EU. [94868]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 21 October 1999]: Chicory (raddicio rosso) has been approved under Part C of Directive 90/220/EEC for growing in the European Union for the purposes of seed production only. It is not for general cultivation, nor can it enter the food or animal feed chain under this approval.

The application was submitted to the UK and the other member states via the Dutch Competent Authority in 1995. The UK together with the other member states reviewed the application dossier. The UK Competent Authority raised no objection to the product being placed on the European market. The Community's decision was that the cultivation of this particular GM crop for the purposes of seed production posed a low risk to human health and the environment.

Dog Identification

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies his Department has commissioned regarding the long-term effects of implanting microchips in animals for the purpose of identification; and if he will make a statement. [94890]

Mr. Hill: The Dog Identification Group, which my Department set up, is considering all the issues relating to dog identification including that of micro-chipping. No decisions will be taken until we have fully considered the report of the Group.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to bring forward legislation on dog identification; and if he will make a statement. [94891]

Mr. Hill: A Dog Identification Working Group has been set up by my Department to produce a report to reflect a consensus view on all the available options for dog identification. No decisions will be taken until we have fully considered the report.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to offer dog owners a choice in the method by which they identify their animals, pursuant to the report by the Dog Identification Group. [94888]

Mr. Hill: The Dog Identification Working Group will produce a report to reflect a consensus view on all the available options for dog identification. No decisions will be taken until we have fully considered the report.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the report of the Dog Identification Working Group. [94889]

Mr. Hill: The Dog Identification Group has been set up by my Department to report on the available options for dog identification. The report will be made public on its completion during the course of next year.

St. Mary's Hospital, Stannington

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what date he received the Planning Inspector's reports on the planning application for the site of St. Mary's Hospital, Stannington, Northumberland. [95104]

Mr. Raynsford: The report by the Inspector who conducted the public inquiry into the called-in planning application for the site of St. Mary's Hospital, Northumberland reached Government officials on 5 February 1999.

The hon. Member will know that the Secretary of State's decision to refuse the application was issued on 21 October.

Parish Councils

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the future of parish councils. [94937]

Ms Beverley Hughes: As stated in our White Paper "Modern Local Government—In Touch with the People" (Cm 4014),

"Parish councils will continue to play a key role in many of our towns and villages".

In our forthcoming Rural White Paper we intend to address further how we see parish councils playing their part in rural local governance.

Freemasonry

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Banbury concerning freemasonry and the Planning Inspectorate; [R] [94950]

(2) if he will make a statement on the policy of the Chief Planning Inspector that freemasons will not be eligible to apply for employment with the Planning Inspectorate. [R] [94943]

Mr. Prescott: This policy was incorrect and has been withdrawn. However, all new appointees to the post of Planning Inspector shall have as a condition of appointment a requirement to declare membership of the freemasons (and any later membership to them).

I expect to reply to the hon. Member this week.

Banbury

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make an announcement on town council status for Banbury. [94941]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Secretary of State has made a preliminary decision for the creation of a new parish of Banbury. Cherwell District Council was notified on 8 October.

We intend to consult the District Council and other interested parties shortly on a draft Order. Subject to that consultation, the intention is to make the Order before the end of 1999 with the view to first elections in May 2000.

Swanwick Air Traffic Control System

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the NATS part-privatisation on the implementation date of the Swanwick Air Traffic Control System. [95695]

Mr. Mullin: The Public/Private Partnership for NATS will not have any impact on the target operational date for the Swanwick centre which is spring 2002. At present the development of the centre is proceeding well, and meeting its target milestones. It is likely that by the time the NATS PPP is established, the air traffic control system will be ready for operations, and training of controllers on the new system will be well underway.

The introduction into operation of the Swanwick centre is an integral part of NATS' plans for the future control of air traffic in the UK. The NATS PPP will therefore be obliged to complete the centre and bring it into operation.

Road Safety

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the issue of deaths caused by negligent or dangerous driving will form part of the proposed White Paper on Road Safety. [95111]

Mr. Hill: The forthcoming road safety strategy will cover a wide range of issues, including those related to negligent and dangerous driving. It will also set out new targets to reduce the numbers of deaths and injuries on Britain's roads.

Rail Freight Terminals

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the rail freight terminals operating in each Government Office region. [95556]

Mr. Hill: Railtrack's "A Guide to Rail Freight", published in April 1999, says that there are around 1,000 active rail freight terminals connected to their network; a terminal can be any interface between rail freight services, other modes and/or storage facilities, and they vary enormously in size and scope from a simple siding through to a large distribution park.

Railtrack's "A Guide to Freight Connections" (Third Edition), published in October 1998, contains at Appendix B1 a list of private siding connections and at Appendix B2 a list of freight operating company sites. Each entry includes its geographical location by Railtrack Zone.

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to support the establishment of new Rail Freight terminals adjacent to motorways. [95578]

Mr. Hill: The Government's freight grants scheme is designed to assist companies in moving goods from road to rail where payment is justified by the environmental benefits. Capital grants are available towards the cost of new or refurbished freight facilities, including terminals, wherever they might be located. The Highways Agency has a Memorandum of Understanding with Railtrack to facilitate effective co-operation and understanding between the two organisations, and one of the areas of mutual interest mentioned in the Memorandum is the development of opportunities for the transfer of freight from road to rail through the provision of interchange facilities with access directly or indirectly from the trunk road network, including motorways.

Transport Safety Statistics

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many injuries (a) per million passenger journeys and (b) per million train journeys there have been in each of the last 10 years. [94777]

Mr. Hill: Information about the numbers of casualties per train journey is not available. Information about numbers of casualties per passenger journey and per passenger kilometre on all railway undertakings in Great Britain is as follows:

Railway movement accidents[1]: passenger casualty rates

	Casualties[2] per million passenger journeys	Casualties[2] per million passenger kilometres
1989	1.85	0.076
1990	1.73	0.072
1991–92	1.61	0.068
1992–93	1.59	0.066
1993–94	1.52	0.064
1994–95	1.54	0.069
1995–96	1.81	0.080
1996–97[3]	0.46	0.019
1997–98	0.47	0.020
1998–99	0.40	0.018

[1] Train accidents, or accidents due to the movement of railway vehicles (eg passengers entering or alighting from trains). Accidents not connected with the movement of railway vehicles, and casualties connected with trespass and suicide, are excluded.

[2] Until 1996 all accidents to passengers were required to be reported however slight their injuries. Under the Accident Reporting Regulations 1995, which came into effect on 1 April 1996, non-fatal injuries are only reported if the passenger is taken to hospital. Figures since 1996–97 are therefore not comparable with those for earlier years.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the (a) Government's response to the report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology on "The Management of Nuclear Waste" (HL Paper 41) published on 24 March, (b) High Level Waste and Spent Fuel Disposal Research Strategy project, (c) 1998 UK Radioactive Waste Inventory and (d) report on the UK's intentions for implementing the OSPAR strategy with regard to radioactive substances. [95881]

Mr. Meacher: I have today written to Lord Tombs, Chairman of the Committee, enclosing the Government response to the Select Committee report on "The Management of Nuclear Waste". Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The Government's paramount concern is to protect the safety of both current and future generations. The Government agree with the Select Committee that widespread public consultation must come before a final decision is reached on the most appropriate option for managing radioactive waste. The Government note the Select Committee's conclusion that deep disposal is the only solution which is ultimately sustainable. We shall, however, want to study very carefully the results of the consensus building process, initiated by the consultation which we intend to launch early next year, before coming to a final view. There are, in any case, questions to consider about when any underground repository might be needed and the period over which is should be possible to monitor and retrieve wastes placed in it. There is no need for an immediate decision at this stage.

The Government response is the first stage of the process to identify, develop and implement the best possible management option for radioactive wastes—one which commands widespread public support. It sets out the Government's commitment to a comprehensive policy for long-lived radioactive wastes, developed in an open and transparent way on the basis of widespread consultation to ensure the maximum possible public acceptance. The next stage will be full consultation on the management options for radioactive waste. Subsequent steps will need to be considered in the light of the results from this consultation. There is no question at this stage of looking at the potential suitability of any particular sites. This would only be necessary if, in the light of consultation, underground disposal were the chosen option. In any case, this would be some years away.

The Government have also accepted that it is possible that at least some plutonium may be declared a waste in the future. The response therefore also sets out our intention to consult with BNFL, British Energy and UKAEA on the likely future uses for the UK plutonium stockpile.

I have today published a report which my Department commissioned from consultants Quantisci setting out a research and development strategy for disposing of certain radioactive materials. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

The High Level Waste and Spent Fuel Disposal Research Strategy project has identified the scale and nature of the research and development that would be required, if deep geological disposal of high-level waste and spent fuel were to be pursued. The report will inform the forthcoming consultation paper on radioactive waste management.

I have also today published the 1998 UK Radioactive Waste Inventory. Copies of the summary report have been placed in the Library of the House.

The Inventory was jointly commissioned by Nirex and my Department. It describes all stocks of waste held in the UK at 1 April 1998, together with predictions of wastes arising into the future. There has been an increase of around 12 per cent. in the total volume of wastes in stock since the last inventory in 1994 due to the continued accumulation of intermediate and high level wastes in the absence of disposal facilities. However, the predictions of future arising have been revised downwards since the last report (17 per cent. for high level waste; 26 per cent. for intermediate and 2 per cent. for low level waste) due to developments in waste conditioning, better estimates of volume and some changes in the scale and nature of future operations.

The UK is one of the few countries where such information is made publicly available. Organisations involved with the nuclear industry, and relevant non-governmental organisations, will receive a free copy on compact disk. The summary report will also be available on the internet at www.nirex.co.uk.

A report on the UK's intentions for implementing the OSPAR strategy with regard to radioactive substances has been sent to the OSPAR secretariat today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies have also been sent to nuclear operators and relevant non-governmental organisations.

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came; and which of these twinnings related to the (i) environment, (ii) transport and (iii) regional policy aspects of his Department. [93993]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz).

CABINET OFFICE

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many requests there have been to her Department for placement of her officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of her officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [93992]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz).

Information Technology

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what action the Government are taking to improve its handling of major IT projects. [95754]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We have recently begun a major study into the handling of Government IT projects. It will consider best practice from within Government, the private sector and overseas to produce recommendations to improve performance in this area in the future. The work of the study team will be closely integrated with that on delivering the Corporate IT Strategy announced in the Modernising Government White Paper.

The study will be undertaken by officials in the Cabinet Office's Central IT Unit. It will be completed by next May. I will chair a steering committee that will oversee the study, bringing together senior figures from across Government and the private sector.

Horizontal Questions Working Group

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list those proposals made by her representative to the Horizontal Questions Working Group indicating the discussions on them. [95309]

Marjorie Mowlam: Officials from my Department have made no proposals to the Horizontal Questions Working Group over the past 12 months.

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by her Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94855]

Marjorie Mowlam: This Government are committed to the equal representation of women and men in public appointments. A plan of action has been drawn up, which includes individual departmental plans for increasing the participation of women in public life. Details of individual departments' are given in "Quangos: Opening up Public Appointments, 1999–2000", published by the Cabinet Office in May 1999. Copies are in the Libraries of the House and on the internet. The plans contain specific goals and objectives for increasing the representation of women on the boards of public bodies, and are updated annually in the light of progress made.

Michael John Smith

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) why undertakings contained in the letter of 7 January 1998 from the Secretary of the Civil Service Commission to Michael John Smith (prison number PR 3345) were not fulfilled; [94569]

(2) when Michael John Smith (prison number PR 3345) will receive a substantive reply to his letter of 10 January 1997 to the Secretary of the Security Commission; and what was the reason for the delay. [94568]

Dr. Mowlam: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Animal Procedures Committee

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes there have been to the membership of the Animal Procedures Committee. [95863]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am pleased to be able to say that Mr. Robert McCracken, a barrister, has joined the Committee with effect from 1 September 1999. I am sorry to have to announce the departure from the Committee of Professor Colin Johnston on grounds of ill health.

Millennium Celebrations (Security)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional measures he plans to ensure public order and security on the night of 31 December. [95148]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Maintenance of public order is primarily a matter for chief officers of police. The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) has established a millennium co-ordinating committee to ensure the readiness of forces and continuity of service over the millennium period. I understand that all forces have millennium planning teams in place to ensure business continuity and contingency planning for this period. Arrangements are in place for mutual aid between forces should this become essential.

The infrastructure preparedness, supply chains and business continuity plans of police forces in England and Wales have been independently assessed by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary using a process based on Action 2000 methodology. All forces have been graded as blue (no identified risks of material disruption) and have millennium operating regimes in place.

A police information centre will operate at Scotland Yard on 31 December, reporting to the President of ACPO. In addition, the Home Office's own millennium operating regime will ensure that Ministers are fully appraised of developments on the night.

Millennium Dome (Policing)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many regular police officers will be on duty at the Millennium Dome during normal opening hours. [95121]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There will be no police officers routinely on duty at the Millennium Dome, as security duties at the Dome site will be undertaken by the appointed Company, Group 4.

The Commissioner of the Police of the Metropolis tells me that a total of 89 additional officers will be seconded to the Greenwich Borough Operational Command Unit to undertake high visibility patrol, traffic patrol and crime investigation duties in anticipation of the increased numbers of people visiting the Dome and Greenwich. The secondment of these officers will last for the duration of the National Millennium Exhibition.

Thames Valley Police

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funds he intends to make available to the Thames Valley Police during the coming financial year; and what impact he estimates such funding will have on recruitment policy for the Thames Valley Police. [94938]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Last year the Government announced that the police service in England and Wales would receive an additional £1.24 billion over three years from 1999–2000. Our plans allow for police expenditure to increase by around 2.8 per cent. in 2000–01. No final decisions have been taken about the allocation of funding to individual forces for the coming financial year. We expect to announce provisional allocations towards the end of the year.

Police recruitment is not centrally managed from the Home Office. It is a matter for individual chief constables. The Thames Valley Police will be able to bid for a share of the crime fighting fund which the Government have set up to provide for 5,000 extra recruits over three years.

Freemasons (Police)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he expects police authorities to hold concerning the membership of freemasonry among police officers; on what basis such information will be compiled; and to whom it will be available. [R] [94942]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Police authorities will hold no such information. Chief Constables in England and Wales are in the process of establishing voluntary, internal, registers of freemasonry membership in their forces. At this stage, while arrangements for its publication remain to be determined, the information disclosed will be used for internal management purposes and to provide statistical information about the extent of freemasonry membership in the police service.

Refugees (Housing)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanisms he intends to be used to rehouse refugees throughout the United Kingdom; what consultations he or his Department have had with local authorities; and if there will be extra funding for local authorities to assist with the housing and other costs of accepting refugees. [94951]

Mrs. Roche: The Department has been in extensive consultation with the Local Government Association, the Association of Local Government and a variety of local authorities about the new support arrangements for asylum seekers in Part VI of the Immigration and Asylum Bill which are due to come into effect in April 2000, and the statutory interim arrangements in Schedule 8 of the Bill which are due to come into effect shortly after Royal Assent.

For the statutory interim arrangements, the Government have invited local government to devise a voluntary dispersal scheme which will enable asylum seekers to be dispersed to cluster areas around the country so that no single local authority bears a disproportionate burden. The statutory interim arrangements will underpin this scheme. The statutory interim arrangements also include provisions which will enable dispersal to take place if there is no voluntary scheme in operation.

From April 2000, the new support arrangements will enable the Department to provide support in cluster areas around the country and to disperse to those cluster areas asylum seekers who would otherwise be destitute and who claim the full support package.

For the period of the statutory interim arrangements, local authorities will be able to claim up to £150 per week for single adults and up to £220 per week for families who are being supported. When the new support arrangements are implemented, the Home Office will bear the costs of the provision of support (including accommodation, vouchers, cash, interpreter services and travel).

Dangerous Driving

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to provide a more severe penalty for those convicted of causing death by negligent driving. [95109]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There is no offence of causing death by negligent driving. Grossly negligent driving which results in a death could be charged as manslaughter, which attracts a maximum penalty of life imprisonment.

The Road Traffic Act 1988 contains two offences of causing death. Causing death by dangerous driving and causing death by careless driving while under the influence of drink or drugs both attract a maximum penalty of 10 years imprisonment. The Government have no current plans to increase these penalties.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change the charge of careless driving to a charge that recognises the culpability of the driver. [95108]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have no current plans to change the definition of the offence of "careless driving" under section 3 of the Road Traffic Act 1988. Research is, however, currently being conducted into the way in which cases involving "bad" driving proceed through the criminal justice system. The results of that research will help to establish whether any changes in the law are desirable.

Royal Parks (Demonstrations)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the enforcement of byelaws against demonstrating in the royal parks. [95649]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The enforcement of the byelaws is a matter for the Metropolitan Police and for the Royal Parks Police.

Crime and Disorder Act 1998

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many reparation orders under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 have been granted by the courts to date in each of the five pilot areas; how many of those orders have been breached; and if he will make a statement; [94957]

(2) how many applications he has received from local authorities for local child curfews under the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998; [94961]

(3) how many parenting orders have been granted to date by the courts under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 in each of the nine pilot areas; how many of those orders have been breached; and if he will make a statement; [94955]

(4) how many child safety orders have been granted by the courts under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 in each of the nine pilot areas; [94958]

(5) how many action plan orders under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 have to date been made by the courts in each of the four pilot areas; how many of these orders have been breached; how many have been revoked; and if he will make a statement. [94960]

Mr. Charles Clarke: By 30 September 1999, the latest date for which this information is readily available, the following orders had been made in the pilot areas: 122 Parenting Orders, 829 Reparation Orders, one Child Safety Order and 490 Action Plan Orders. Applying for a local child curfew is an option for local authorities to consider in light of the wider crime and disorder strategies they are developing under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. No applications have yet been received.

We do not currently have breach figures, but I will write to the hon. Member as soon as they are available.

The youth justice pilots are designed to allow us to assess the operation and costs and savings of the new youth justice measures. They will inform decisions about full implementation. Subject to the evaluation, we intend to implement the new court orders in 2000–2001.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many anti-social behaviour orders have been made by the courts to date under the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [94954]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the number of Orders made is not held centrally but we are aware of six Orders made since 1 April 1999.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sex Offender Orders have been made by the courts to date under the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [94956]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the numbers of Sex Offender Orders made is not currently held centrally.

We are, however, aware of 14 such orders having been granted.

Chinese Presidential Visit (Policing)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what meetings took place between his Department and the Metropolitan Police about the public order implications of the state visit by the President of China; [95646]

(2) what representations his Department made to the Metropolitan Police about the public order implications of the state visit of the President of China. [95648]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No such meetings or representations took place.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the backlog of (a) immigration and asylum cases and (b) nationality cases in the Integrated Casework Directorate of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in each month since 30 June. [94972]

Mrs. Roche: The backlog of immigration and asylum cases, and, separately, nationality cases at the end of July, August and September is set out:

Immigration and asylum

Month	Number of cases
July	104,464
August	123,454
September	149,013

Nationality

Month	Number of cases
July	97,900
August	99,500
September	97,900

We have recruited 340 staff and are planning to recruit another 250 to fill vacancies and expand the Integrated Casework Directorate in order to keep pace with the intake of new cases and eliminate backlogs.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the average daily number (a) of telephone callers to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, (b) of calls made to that directorate and (c) of calls answered by the Telephone Caller Unit, in (i) July, (ii) August and (iii) September. [94965]

Mrs. Roche: The figures relating to telephone calls to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate are provided each month by British Telecom and are actuals rather than estimates. Daily averages, by month, are set out in the table:

	Number of callers	Number of calls	Calls answered
July	4,307	51,925	1,795
August	4,133	53,352	1,867
September	4,741	37,503	3,668

Since July a number of measures have been introduced to improve the service offered by the Immigration and Nationality Enquiry Bureau (INEB). Significant numbers of new staff are now available to answer calls, a support team undertakes follow-up work generated by calls, and there have been improvements in training staff in call handling techniques and the mentoring of new and existing staff. In recent weeks the service provided by INEB has improved substantially with around 4,000 calls a day being answered (75 per cent. of incoming calls). Further changes are being considered to improve performance.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases are now held in the Central Work in Progress Store of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate; and how many of those cases have been outstanding for more than (a) six months, (b) one year and (c) two years. [94968]

Mrs. Roche: There are 83,796 cases held in the Work in Progress Store of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. This is a reduction of over 26,000 cases since July. Of the cases held in the Work in Progress Store, 12,654 have been outstanding for more than six months, 32,206 have been outstanding for more than one year, and 38,936 have been outstanding for more than two years. A number of measures have been taken to tackle the backlog, including the creation of the After Entry Clearance Team, which has had a major impact on the backlog of the after entry case backlog.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average daily number of personal callers to each public inquiry office of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in each month since 30 June. [94963]

Mrs. Roche: The average daily number of callers to each public inquiry office in July, August and September is set out in the table:

	July	August	September
Public Caller Unit Croydon	887	882	903
Asylum Screening Unit Croydon	248	309	327
Midlands Public Enquiry Office	141	133	190
Liverpool Public Enquiry Office	60	46	51
Glasgow Public Enquiry Office	51	52	55
Belfast Public Enquiry Office	33	30	26

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of letters to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate from (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public are currently replied to within the target times set by Ministers. [94969]

Mrs. Roche: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) defines and monitors public correspondence as set out in the Six Whitehall Standards. The Standards specifically exclude applications and casework related correspondence, that is the majority of correspondence received in IND.

The latest position is that 12 per cent. of letters from hon. Members and 89 per cent. of letters from members of the public to which the Standard applies, met it.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current backlog of cases at the Liverpool Office of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate; and how many of these cases have been outstanding for over (a) six months, (b) 12 months and (c) two years. [94966]

Mrs. Roche: At 30 September 1999, the current estimated backlog of cases in the Liverpool Office stands at 97,900. 72,500 cases have been outstanding for six months; 46,900 have been outstanding for 12 months and 3,500 for two years.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the earliest date of unopened travel documents applications held by the Travel Documents Case Management Unit of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [94970]

Mrs. Roche: The earliest date is 28 July 1999.

In the past few months, the number of staff allocated to travel documents work has doubled and is set to increase still further in the next few weeks. This combined with streamlined working practices, has resulted in dramatic increases in output from averages of 120 per week during August to well over 700 last week.

In addition, all applications received since 6 September have been opened within 24 hours of arrival in the section, and the majority processed within a matter of days.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average waiting time for nationality cases in (a) July, (b) August and (c) September. [94964]

Mrs. Roche: The average waiting time for nationality cases in July, August and September are listed in the table:

	Months
Month	Naturalisation	Registration	Overall
(a) July 1999	20.3	5.0	17.6
(b) August 1999	20.3	7.2	18.5
(c) September 1999	20.6	8.4	19.1

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his plans now are for the implementation of the integrated information technology system in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [94971]

Mrs. Roche: As was made clear in reply to the hon. Member's Question on 26 July 1999, Official Report, column 63, from the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, my hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), the system is currently being tested and that process is not expected to be completed before December. Plans for implementation will be prepared in the light of the information obtained during testing as to the business benefits conferred by the different components of the system.

UK Passport Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the date when he approved the Passport Agency's business plan for 1999–2000 and its corporate plan for 1999–2002; and if he will now place copies of both plans in the Library. [94962]

Mrs. Roche: The UK Passport Agency's Corporate and Business Plans for 1999–2002 are under active consideration by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and will be published shortly.

Publication of the Agency's Plans has been deferred to enable them fully to reflect the lessons learnt from this year's operational problems.

The Plans will be finalised in the light of the National Audit Office report which will be published on Wednesday 27 October.

Immigration Act 1971 (Detention Powers)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently detained solely under Immigration Act 1971 powers in each place used for such detention. [94967]

Mrs. Roche: The latest available information, relating to the snapshot of all persons detained solely under Immigration Act 1971 powers, by location, as at 30 September 1999, is given in the table:

Asylum Seekers (Dependants)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of dependants of applicants for asylum who are currently resident in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [95650]

Mrs. Roche: The latest published information regarding the number of dependants of applicants for asylum in the United Kingdom is given in Table 7.1 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom, 1998", issue 10/99. This shows that there were a total of 12,470 dependants in 1998.

Drug Treatment and Testing Orders

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug treatment and testing orders under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 have to date been made by the courts in each of the three pilot areas; how many of those orders have been breached; how many have been revoked; and if he will make a statement. [94959]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information is given in the table:

Area	Orders made	Orders revoked	Orders breached
Croydon	29	9	14
Gloucestershire	72	27	41
Liverpool	44	8	22
Total	145	44	77

In all cases, the orders revoked have also been the subject of breach and are included in both figures.

Correspondence

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken by his Department to reply to letters from members of the public. [95652]

Mr. Straw: On the basis of information available, the average time taken by the Home Office to reply to letters from the public between 1 March 1999 and 30 August 1999 was 16 working days.

Hunting

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations his Department has received since 30 June on the subject of hunting with dogs; and how many of those representations (a) favoured and (b) opposed a statutory ban on hunting. [95651]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No systematic record is kept, but it is estimated that well in excess of 100,000 representations have been received since 30 June 1999. We estimate that the representations are evenly split between those who support a statutory ban on hunting with dogs and those who are opposed to such a ban.

Rural Crime

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures he is taking to combat crime in rural areas; and if he will make a statement; [95261]

(2) what proportion of his Department's planned expenditure on crime and disorder reduction strategies will be targeted on rural areas; and if he will make a statement; [95258]

(3) what recent representations he has received about the level of crime in rural areas; and if he will make a statement. [95262]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The primary responsibility for tackling crime falls to police forces in conjunction with the local crime and reduction partnerships, established by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. The policing plans and the strategies developed by the partnerships will deal explicitly with rural crime where that is a significant local issue. Some parts of the £400 million Crime Reduction Programme are likely to be diverted to crime in rural areas. There is no other Home Office provision dedicated exclusively to rural crime.

On 20 October, I met a delegation from 14 rural police authorities in England and Wales to discuss crime and the costs of policing in rural areas. My Department has also received petitions from residents of Norfolk and neighbouring counties about the subject.

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is being given to the inclusion in the forthcoming Rural White Paper of proposals to help tackle rural crime. [95259]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The White Paper is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions. Home Office officials have been taking part in an inter-Departmental group which considers issues which might be covered in the White Paper. These include rural crime.

Rural Police Forces

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the special funding needs of rural police forces; and if he will make a statement. [95257]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The needs of rural police forces are already recognised in the current funding formula. We are considering the findings of an independent research report on the costs of policing in rural areas.

Rural police forces will be able to bid for a share of the new Crime Fighting Fund which the Government have set up to provide for 5,000 extra recruits over the next three years.

Police Station Closures

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown by police force area of the number of police stations closed in each of the past two years. [95260]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is not collected centrally for England and Wales and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Fire Services

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the levels of spending on fire services per head of population in (a) Staffordshire and (b) each other county of England (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the last three years. [94013]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Fire service spending per head figures for the years 1992–93 until 1997–98, the latest year for which full information is available centrally, were placed in the Library in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Marsden) on 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 503, by the former Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth). In 1998–99 spending per head on the fire service in Staffordshire County Council was £24.

Wildlife

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many successful wildlife protection prosecutions have been launched by Merseyside Police since 1992. [94654]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Merseyside Police Force's computerised records indicate the following number of successful prosecutions since January 1994 of persons charged with a wildlife offence:

Year in which person was charged	Number of persons convicted
1994	1
1995	0
1996	0
1997	0
1998	3
1999 (to date)	1

Earlier computerised information is not available.

Electronic Communications

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what departmental guidance is currently given, and what administrative rules apply, in relation to the accessing of e-mails and other forms of electronic communications by the security and intelligence services and other law enforcement agencies; and if he will make a statement. [94578]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Any communication, including e-mails and the internet, when it is being transmitted by means of a public telecommunication system, may be intercepted in pursuance of a warrant issued in accordance with the provisions of the Interception Of Communications Act 1985. Appropriate procedures to process such warrants have been laid down.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list his Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93691]

Mr. Straw: The spending on official publications since May 1997 by the Home Office, apart from the Prison Service; which includes the costs incurred by the Department in publishing, preparation, production and purchase of copies for official use; was approximately £4.6 million in 1997–98, £4.3 million in 1998–99 and £2.5 million to date in 1999–2000. The figures exclude the cost of publications produced for internal use. Where the Department makes use of a private sector publisher, the publishing, printing and design costs are generally met by the publisher as part of their acceptance of the risks, of publication.

Unfortunately, there is no central record of expenditure incurred on official publications at Prison Service outstations.

Sexual Harassment (Prison Service)

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 21 July 1999, Official Report, columns 524–25, what assessment the Prison Service has made of those sexual harassment cases notified to HM Prison Service headquarters since 1998 that have not been settled either by negotiation or by tribunal decision. [93658]

Mr. Boateng: No central assessment of these cases has been made. Complaints are dealt with locally in accordance with the Prison Service's procedure for handling complaints of harassment or discrimination. The Prison Service's equal opportunities team in headquarters keeps statistical records and offers advice on cases as necessary.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the scheduled date for the coming into force of the powers of the Criminal Records Bureau to monitor the record of adults working with children; and what representations he has received with regard to an earlier starting date for this scheme and for the provision of information free of charge to potential employers in the voluntary sector. [94671]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The timetable for implementation of the Criminal Records Bureau is under review. I shall make an announcement shortly. We have received some representations calling for the Bureau to be brought into operation as early as possible, and that is my intention. The Government have considered very carefully the many representations that we have received arguing for charges to be waived for checks carried out by the Bureau in the case of volunteers. This presents substantial problems of principle and would inevitably increase costs either for the public purse or for other applicants for certificates. But the concerns which have been expressed have increased our determination that the cost of certificates from the Bureau should be kept as low as possible. The cost of certificates has been previously estimated at between £5 and £10 depending on type of certificate.

DEFENCE

Anti-personnel Mines

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence of the anti-personnel mines stored by the MoD how many and what percentage of the total were destroyed in each year since 1991. [94663]

Mr. Spellar: The UK no longer stores any operational anti-personnel mines. The last of the Army's operational stocks of APMs were destroyed on 22 February this year. The destruction programme for the last of the RAF's operational stocks of APMs—the HB 876 sub-munition for the JP233 weapon system—was completed on 19 October 1999. Available figures for anti-personnel mines destroyed by the UK are shown in the table.

[1] As permitted under Article 3 of the Ottawa Convention, the UK will continue to retain the minimum necessary numbers of live APMs for training and testing in de-mining techniques. Other, inert, training APMs are not included in these figures.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what target date his Department has set to destroy all the anti-personnel mines it currently holds. [94664]

Mr. Spellar: I am pleased to announce that the last operational UK anti-personnel mines—the HB 876 sub-munition to the RAF's JP 233 weapon system—were destroyed on 19 October. We have completed the UK's destruction programme over three years ahead of the timeframe laid down in the Ottawa Convention. The destruction programme was accelerated to demonstrate to the world the UK's clear and unequivocal commitment to the Ottawa Convention. As provided for in Article 3 of the Ottawa Convention, the UK will continue to hold the minimum necessary numbers of anti-personnel mines for the development of and training in mine detection, mine clearance, or mine destruction techniques.

Royal Tournament

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review his decision not to continue the Royal Tournament's field gun display; and if he will make a statement. [94067]

Mr. Hoon: The decision to end the field gun competition runs parallel with the decision to end the Royal Tournament. In part this is because the event cannot easily be replicated in a suitable public venue outside Earl's Court, but also because it accounted for more than half the personnel resources used at the Tournament. It is recognised that the field gun competition is an event with much audience loyalty, and is held in special regard by Service personnel, particularly those who have participated in the past. It has also been a tremendous spectacle for over 90 years, and it was fitting that the final run should take place in the centenary year of the action it commemorated.

The event was, however, no longer fully representative of the Royal Navy or its contemporary activities. Consequently, the Royal Navy is keen to look to the future and concentrate on supporting events that more accurately reflect the training and operational activities of the Service in the next millennium.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what grounds the Royal Tournament is to be ended; and if he will make a statement. [94144]

Mr. Hoon: The Royal Tournament has made a major contribution over the years to British life and to the Service charities. I therefore pay tribute to the organisers and participants who have given such great pleasure to so many.

The Royal Tournament had been under scrutiny for some time. In part this was because the event had lost money in recent years—for example, it lost £400,000 last year—and this made the viability of the event questionable, particularly given its charitable status. More fundamentally, however, the format of the event could send only a limited message about the role and operational capabilities of the Armed Forces in the modern world. Moreover, the audience had reduced in recent years and as a result the Tournament neither informed the public nor attracted potential recruits to the extent we would have wished. Despite failing to meet our needs, it still placed a very considerable demand on our personnel, a minimum of 30,000 man-days per annum. This was hard to justify in the light of operational commitments and overstretch. Such considerations led the Services themselves to conclude that the Royal Tournament should end in order to help reduce commitments.

We have thought very carefully as to how we might bring about necessary change while preserving the best of the old Tournament. Next year a one-off event, the Royal Military Tattoo 2000, will be mounted against the spectacular backdrop of Horse Guards Parade. The Tattoo, which has the theme "Defence of the Realm: past, present and future", will involve 1,200 men and women from the Services, 75 per cent. of whom will be musicians. It will be a dramatic 90-minute show, recounting with pride 1,000 years of military history, whilst also celebrating the present and looking to the future. The Tattoo will combine imaginative staging, state-of-the-art technology, pageantry, son et lumière, lasers, fireworks and, I understand, the largest video screen to be seen in Europe. It will be held during the period 10–15 July 2000 and the planning team is working hard to ensure that the event is a great success.

A military Tattoo will continue to be held in London from 2001 onwards. Again using the spectacular backdrop of Horse Guards Parade, the Tattoo will build on the traditional pageantry that has been such a popular element of the Royal Tournament over the years and a special feature of London in Summer. A military festival will also be held outside London at varying locations that will allow the Armed Forces to showcase their equipment and to demonstrate their capability in an exciting and modern way. The festival will be based on existing and successful Service events starting in 2001 with the Royal Navy's International Festival of the Sea at Portsmouth. It will last for a whole day, enabling spectators to see a wide range of military activities, view the latest military equipment, meet personnel and participate in interactive displays in a way that is not possible with the existing Royal Tournament format.

Gulf War Veterans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many meetings officials from the Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit have held with the United States Department of Veterans Affairs since 1 January, indicating the date and location of each meeting and the names of the United States Department of Veterans Affairs officials at each meeting. [93940]

Mr. Spellar: In the period 1 January 1999 to 15 October 1999, officials from the MOD's Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit met US Department of Veterans Affairs officials on the dates and at the locations shown in the table:

	Location
21 January	Washington DC
26 February	Washington DC
2–4 March	Washington DC
14 May	Washington DC
4–8 and 14 October	Washington DC and Baltimore MD

I am withholding the names of the US Department of Veterans Affairs officials who attended the meetings above in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (which relates to international relations) and Exemption 12 (which relates to privacy of an individual).

In addition to the above, a member of the Gulf Veterans Illnesses Unit (GVIU) based in Washington DC maintains continuous dialogue with United States Department of Veterans Affairs colleagues.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the formal title of the agreement announced on 28 April by his Department between Britain and the United States of America to share information on Gulf veterans' illnesses research; what progress has so far been made under the agreement; how many working groups and committees will operate under this agreement; on what dates each of these working groups and committees so far have met; on what dates in 1999 each of these working groups and committees are scheduled to meet; which United States Government Departments and organisations are taking part in this agreement; and which other United Kingdom Departments and organisations will take part in the agreement; [93930]

(2) how many agreements on the subject of Gulf veterans' illnesses have existed between Britain and United States of America since 1 May 1997; what are the names of each of these agreements; when each agreement was signed; and what is the purpose of each agreement. [94009]

Mr. Spellar: The agreement announced on 28 April is to be formalised by extending the scope of the UK-US Master Information Exchange Memorandum of Understanding (MIEM). The new agreement is an Information Exchange Annex entitled: "UK-US Master Information Exchange Memorandum of Understanding Annex Concerning Persian Gulf Veterans Health Research". It is not envisaged that the agreement will lead to the formation of new working groups or committees. Work has been and will continue to be taken forward by arrangements already in place. The main participants will be the UK Ministry of Defence, the US Department of Defense, the US Department of Veterans Affairs and the US Department of Health and Human Services. Non-governmental research institutes, academic departments, other organisations and individuals will be involved as appropriate.

Prior to this agreement there were no formal agreements between the US and UK governments on Gulf veterans' illnesses. However, there has been a close history of co-operation between the two governments on Gulf veterans' illnesses matters.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many meetings officials from the Ministry of Defence's Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit have held with the United States Department of Defense since 1 January, indicating the date and location of each meeting and the names of the United States Department of Defense officials at each meeting. [93941]

Mr. Spellar: In the period 1 January 1999 to 15 October 1999, officials from the MOD's Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit met US Department of Defense officials on the dates and at the locations shown in the table:

Date(s)	Location
21 January	Washington DC
26 February	Washington DC
2–4 March	Washington DC
29–30 March	London
14 May	Washington DC
4–14 October	Washington DC and San Diego CA

I am withholding the names of the US Department of Defense officials who attended the meetings above in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (which relates to international relations) and Exemption 12 (which relates to privacy of an individual).

In addition to the above, a member of the Gulf Veterans Illnesses Unit (GVIU) based in Washington DC maintains continuous dialogue with United States Department of Defense colleagues.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many United States (a) Government committees, (b) boards and (c) working groups relating to the issue of Gulf veterans' illnesses his Department's representatives have sat since 1 May 1997; and if he will list the official titles of each of these committees, boards and working groups and the United States Departments to which each committee, board and working group belongs. [93988]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is provided in the following table:

Title of US Government committee, board or working group	US Department representation
Persian Gulf Veterans Co-ordinating Board (PGVCB) Research Working Group, PGVCB Clinical Working Group and PGVCB Benefits Working Group	PGVCB is an inter-departmental board comprising Department of Defense, Department of Veterans Affairs and Department of Health and Human Service
The Center for Disease Control Multiple Chemical Sensitivity Conference Planning Committee	Department of Health and Human Services
Planning Committee meeting for the Military Medicine Conference on Post-conflict Illnesses	Department of Defense
Planning Committee Meeting for the Principal Investigators' Conference	PGVCB is an inter-departmental board comprising Department of Defense, Department of Veterans Affairs and Department of Health and Human Services
The Armed Forces Epidemiology Board	Department of Defense

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which dates the Minister of State for the Armed Forces visited the United States of America this year to investigate Gulf veterans' illnesses research; how many meetings he held with members and officials of the United States Government during this visit; and if he will list the dates and locations of each meeting and the names and Departments of the United States members and officials at each meeting. [93990]

Mr. Spellar: On 26 February 1999, my predecessor as Minister of State for the Armed Forces, my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) attended a meeting on Gulf veterans' illnesses with the Senior Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs who was assisted by senior briefing officials from various US Departments. The meeting was held in the Old Executive Office Building, Washington DC. My predecessor also met the Deputy Secretary of Defense on 1 March.

I am withholding the names of the US officials who attended the meetings above in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (which relates to international relations) and Exemption 12 (which relates to privacy of an individual).

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the co-operation between the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme of his Department and the US Department of Defense's Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Programme; how many meetings the two units have held since 1 January; and if he will indicate the dates and locations of each meeting. [93989]

Mr. Spellar: My Department's Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme was established in July 1993 to examine UK Gulf veterans who were concerned that their health had been adversely affected by service in the 1990–91 Gulf conflict. Although since 1 January officials from the Medical Assessment Programme have attended conferences at which representatives from the Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Programme were present, there have been no formal meetings between representatives of the two organisations. The Head of the MOD's Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit attended a meeting at the Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Programme, Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Washington DC on 7 October 1999.

Air Force Board

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Air Force Board has met since 16 July 1998; and if he will place in the Library a list of items discussed at each of the meetings. [93885]

Mr. Kilfoyle: There have been two meetings of the Air Force Board since 16 July 1998. The first of these took place on 3 March 1999. The agenda consisted of a presentation by the Chief of the Air Staff on the RAF in 1999 and the key challenges facing the Service, and managing a forecast shortfall in pilots. The second meeting of the Air Force Board was held on 14 July 1999 and the only item on the Board's agenda was the officer branch structure review.

Procurement Board

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Procurement Board has met since 25 January; and if he will place in the Library a list of items discussed at each of the meetings. [93858]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The last meeting of the Procurement Policy Board was on 25 January. With the formation of the Defence Procurement Agency on 1 April the Board was dissolved. There is no direct successor body to the Procurement Policy Board. Future arrangements are under consideration within the framework of Smart Procurement.

Defence Research Committee

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Defence Research Committee has met since 16 November 1998; and if he will place in the Library a list of items discussed at each of the meetings. [93883]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Since 16 November 1998, the Defence Research Committee has met on one occasion, on 14 April 1999, and discussed Consultation with National Defence Industries Council, Strategy for Applied Research, Corporate Research Guidance, Long Term Costing 99 and Critical Defence Technologies.

Chiefs of Staff

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Chiefs of Staff have met since 23 February; and if he will place in the Library a list of items discussed at each of the meetings. [93884]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Admiralty Board

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Admiralty Board has met since 1 July 1998; and if he will place in the Library a list of items discussed at each of the meetings. [93861]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Council

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Defence Council has met since 20 July 1998; and if he will place in the Library a list of items discussed at each of the meetings. [93886]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Equipment Approvals Committee has met since 1 January; and if he will place in the Library a list of items discussed at each of the meetings. [93859]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Since 1 January the Equipment Approvals Committee has met in formal session on 17 March, 17 May, 26 May and 14 June. The projects discussed were the Type 45 Destroyer, Eurofighter, the Airborne Stand-Off Radar System (ASTOR) and the Beyond Visual Range Air-to-Air Missile (BVRAAM).

Army Board

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Army Board has met since 24 July 1998; and if he will place in the Library a list of items discussed at each of the meetings. [93860]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Kosovo

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 21 June 1999, Official Report, column 303, if he is now able to estimate the cost to the Exchequer of peacekeeping in Kosovo over the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [94799]

Mr. Hoon: Further to my predecessor's reply of 21 June, I am not yet able to provide an estimate of the future costs. I shall however write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Overseas Forces

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations and strength of British forces overseas; and if he will make a statement. [94785]

Indonesia (Training)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Indonesian military and police personnel are currently receiving training or education in the UK at military training establishments and non-military educational establishments; to which establishments they are attached; and what is the nature and cost of the training or education. [95336]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently no Indonesian military personnel receiving training or education in the UK at military training establishments or at HMG's expense in non-military educational establishments. Following agreement at the EU General Affairs Council on 13 September to suspend bilateral military co-operation with Indonesia, no members of the Indonesian military will be allowed to begin studying in the UK at HMG expense or at an HMG-administered training establishment. Although not the responsibility of this Department, we are aware of two officers who are studying privately in the UK. Such studies are not inconsistent with the EU's Common Position. Information on the location of these establishments has been withheld under Exemption 4 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

One Indonesian police officer is studying at a UK University under the FCO funded Chevening Scheme at a cost of around £16,000. This supports enhancing the democratic accountability of the Indonesia National Police following their separation from the Armed Force on April 1. Again, the location of this establishment has been withheld under Exemption 4 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Indonesian military and police personnel are currently receiving training in Indonesia under UK government schemes and (b) UK personnel are involved in each case; and what is the nature and cost of the training. [95337]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently no Indonesian military or police personnel receiving training in Indonesia under UK government schemes.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in each of the past two years RAF flights serving the Falkland Islands have been delayed by mechanical or other failures; and if he will make a statement. [95315]

Mr. Spellar: Between the beginning of September 1999 and the middle of October 1999, there have been 22 legs flown to and from the Falkland Islands (11 outward and 11 return). Of these, five were delayed for serviceability or aircraft availability reasons. This information has only been held centrally since September 1999, following the introduction of a new computer system. Information for flights before then is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will invite tenders from commercial airlines to provide planes to serve the garrison on the Falklands; and if he will make a statement. [95314]

Mr. Spellar: There are no plans to contract out the airbridge service to and from the Falkland Islands. The Ministry of Defence will of course look at any unsolicited proposals from commercial airlines, to determine best value for money. The examination of previous unsolicited proposals did, however, conclude that, taking into account the operational requirement to retain the Royal Air Force Tristars, the use of military aircraft was the most cost-effective solution.

Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has made to the US Government regarding the US Senate's refusal to ratify the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. [95243]

Mr. Hoon: We have made clear to the US Government our deep disappointment with the US Senate's vote against US ratification of the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty. We welcome the US Government's expression of strong continuing support for the Treaty. We will continue to work with the US Government and all other ratifiers and signatories for the Treaty's entry into force as soon as possible.

RAF Menwith Hill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the new security fence, including cameras, recently erected at RAF Menwith Hill; and what proportion of the costs was met by his Department. [95744]

Mr. Spellar: The construction of the new security fence at RAF Menwith Hill is being funded by the US Government. The UK contribution is limited to some administrative costs relating to professional fees and management of the works programme to which some £24,000 has been allocated to date. The total cost of the project is a matter for the US authorities.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Articles of the (a) Anti Ballistic Missile Treaty and (b) Outer Space Treaty, which govern the use of RAF Menwith Hill (i) as part of the National Missile Defense for the USA and (ii) as part of the Space Based Infra Red System (SBIRS). [95747]

Mr. Spellar: The United Kingdom is not party to the Anti Ballistic Missile Treaty. Questions on its interpretation should be addressed to the USA and Russia. Article IV of the Outer Space Treaty requires that the moon and other celestial bodies should be used exclusively for peaceful purposes; prohibits placing weapons of mass destruction in orbit, on the moon or on other celestial bodies; and prohibits placing military facilities, conducting military manoeuvres, or the testing of any type of weapons on the moon and other celestial bodies. It imposes no limitations on other military activities in outer space.

Service Personnel (Compensation)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish a consultation document following the comprehensive review of arrangements for compensating service personnel or their dependants killed or injured while on service. [95732]

Mr. Spellar: We hope to make an announcement later this year.

Thiepval Barracks

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what other uses he envisages for the land which will become available inside Thiepval Barracks in Lisburn following the planned demolition of married quarters. [95102]

Mr. Spellar: We aim to use some of the land to build a new Garrison Church, to replace the old church which was damaged in the bombing of Tiepval Barracks in 1996, and also to provide improved security arrangements for vehicle parking within the Barracks. The remaining land will provide much-needed flexibility in planning the future layout and utility of the barracks.

Army Retention Study

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Adjutant-General's Army Retention Study will be completed; when the findings will be made public; and if he will make a statement. [95524]

Mr. Spellar: The Army's Retention Study is a six-month strategic review to examine the effectiveness of present policies, which includes undertaking field research, and making recommendations for improvements. The work is being carried out by the Hay Management Group and the Institute for Employment Studies, who will report their findings to the Adjutant-General on 30 November 1999. The Retention Study was commissioned to inform the Army's personnel management policies and there are currently no plans to publish the findings externally.

Service Families Task Force

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the initiatives that have come directly from the Service Families Task Force; and if he will make a statement. [95523]

Mr. Spellar: The Service Families Task Force works across Government to tackle the problems caused by the mobile lifestyle of Service personnel and their families. It works with other Departments to address problems identified by the Service Families Associations. It has achieved some impressive results. These include: making it easier for Service spouses to claim Jobseeker's Allowance in the UK; the new DfEE Code of Practice on Schools Admission taking account of the particular needs of Service families; Service representation on Schools Admission Forums in areas where there are large populations of Service children; extra money for pre-five education for Service children in Northern Ireland; and 24 schemes in areas with large numbers of Service families to encourage dentists to take on more NHS patients. Work on other issues is continuing.

The Service Families Task Force is an example of the importance the Government attach to the needs of Service families. A full account of our family friendly policies is contained in our leaflet "A Special Message to Service Families From MOD Ministers", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the participating bodies on the Service Families Task Force; when the Task Force will next meet; if he will publish the agenda for the next meeting; and if he will make a statement. [95552]

Mr. Spellar: I chair the Service Families Task Force. It brings together Ministers from across Government, including from the Department for Education and Employment, Department of Health, Department of Social Services, Scottish Office, and Northern Ireland Office, and separately, the chairs of the Service Family Associations—the Association of Royal Naval and Royal Marines Families, the Army Families Federation and Airwaves. It operates at three levels: a Ministerial Group; a Families Forum; and a Working Group of officials. The Ministerial Group last met on 21 September 1999 and will meet again in the new year. The Families Forum is due to meet on 15 November 1999, and will discuss a range of issues of interest to Service families. The Working Group meets as necessary to deal with issues as they arise.

The Service Families Task Force works across Government to ensure that the particular circumstances of Service families are taken into account in developing and implementing new policies. It is achieving good results.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Government's policy on no first use of British nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement. [95735]

Mr. Hoon: In conducting the Strategic Defence Review, the Government concluded that a policy of no first use of nuclear weapons would be incompatible with our and NATO's doctrine of deterrence, and that it would not further nuclear disarmament objectives.

Service Children (Schools Admissions)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Department for Education and Employment guidance on schools admissions policy concerning the position of service children was issued and in what form; how it is to be implemented and enforced; and if he will make a statement. [95525]

Jacqui Smith: I have been asked to reply.

DfEE guidance on School admissions policy was issued in February 1999 in the "Code of Practice—School Admissions". The guidance came into force on 1 April 1999. It is the responsibility of local education authorities to implement the guidance and for DfEE to enforce it. The Service Children's Education Agency is working closely with those LEAs with large populations of Service children, to ensure that they are treated equitably.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Visits

Mr. Keetch: To ask the President of the Council if she will introduce a scheme for hon. Members to visit the Scottish Parliament, Welsh Assembly and Northern Ireland Assembly, in links with visits to the European Parliament; and if she will make a statement. [93924]

Mrs. Beckett: All hon. Members are already able to claim reimbursement for expenditure incurred visiting any part of the United Kingdom on parliamentary business under the extended travel scheme. It is the Government's stated hope that there will be links created at all levels between Members at Westminster and the devolved legislatures. However, access to the premises of the devolved legislatures is a matter for the bodies concerned.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the President of the Council if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by her Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94846]

Mrs. Beckett: It is made clear to all bodies making recommendations for appointments or reappointments that they should consider whether women are properly represented on the bodies concerned. Of the 149 appointments made by Her Majesty in Council, by the Privy Council or by me as President, 55 (37 per cent.) are currently held by women. This compares with the position five years ago when, of 141 such appointees, 43 (30 per cent.) were women.

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Council how many requests there have been to her Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [93999]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz).

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Pastoral Measure (Whitby)

Mr. Quinn: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the conclusions of Pastoral Measure 1983 Whitby St. John Proposed Pastoral Scheme published on 21 September (Ref. PR43/401), setting out how the views of the Whitby Anglican Community have been taken into account by the Commissioners and detailing the method of appeal to the Commissioners against this decision. [95100]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The draft scheme under the Pastoral Measure 1983 proposing the closure of the church of St. John, Whitby was, as with all such schemes, served on, inter alia, the relevant incumbent, team vicar, pcc, archdeacon and rural dean. It was also published in the Whitby Gazette and Middlesbrough Evening Gazette and displayed on the door of the churches of St. Mary, Whitby; St. John, Whitby; and St. Hilda, Whitby. It was open to anyone to make representations and the statement of 21 September 1999 to which my hon. Friend refers sets out who made representations in favour of the scheme and who made representations against. My hon. Friend will have noted that there were views for and against among Whitby churchgoers. An earlier identical draft scheme (which had to be withdrawn when procedural flaws in the diocesan consultations came to light) was the subject of a visit to Whitby by a Sub-Committee of the Commissioners' Pastoral Committee. On that occasion, the Sub-Committee met the incumbent, the Whitby pcc and the St. John's congregation.

All views were most carefully taken into account but ultimately the Commissioners concluded that the case for declaring St. John's redundant had not been made as, in their view, it was required as a chapel of ease in the centre of Whitby.

The Commissioners' Pastoral Committee provided, in effect, a place of appeal against the proposal by the diocese of York to declare this church redundant. The Pastoral Measure 1983 provides no procedure for appeal against a decision by the Commissioners not to proceed with a draft scheme but the diocese is free to promote fresh proposals for pastoral re-organisation in Whitby.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Land Mines

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money annually has been spent by her Department on humanitarian demining since 1991. [94665]

Clare Short: My Department's bilateral disbursements on humanitarian mine action are:

Financial year	£ million
1991–92	0.360
1992–93	1.769
1993–94	3.152
1994–95	5.969
1995–96	4.844
1996–97	4.369
1997–98	4.656
1998–99	5.824
1999–2000[1]	12.400

[1] Commitments to date including Kosovo

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money her Department has allocated to assist the victims of mines and on mine awareness in each year since 1991. [94640]

Clare Short: My Department does not set aside resources from its Humanitarian Mine Action budget specifically for land mine survivors. Instead, health care and community-based rehabilitation assistance is provided through DFID's bilateral development co-operation programmes or institutional programme support. The financial records do not disaggregate assistance to land mine survivors from other categories of special needs.

Community based mine awareness activities are usually integrated into mine survey and clearance projects, and are not recorded as a separate disbursement. In addition, disbursements on discrete mine awareness projects are:

Financial year	£
1992–93	6,451
1995–96	15,230
1996–97	70,000
1999–2000[1]	1,400,000

[1] Committed to date

Ministerial Visit (Balkans)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her most recent visit to the Balkans. [95643]

Clare Short: I visited Kosovo on 24–25 August to assess need and plan the shift of the Department for International Development's (DFID) assistance from an emergency to a longer-term programme. The overall message that I received was one of cautious optimism. We found there had been steady progress in rehabilitation, although much remained to be done. We emphasised to UNMIK and the EC the importance of moving quickly and enabling the Kosovars to take on a bigger role in the reconstruction effort. We continue to work with the international community and the local population to help achieve this. Our operations are now in transition to a longer-term programme of assistance. My officials will visit the region early next month to take this process forward.

TREASURY

Euro

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the European Commission's periodic surveys on the progress and impact of the Prince programme on public awareness of the euro. [95303]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I understand that, to date, the European Commission have not carried out any periodic surveys on public awareness of the euro under the Prince Programme.

Winter Mortality

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the excess monthly winter mortality over each of the last five years. [94948]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tim Boswell, dated 25 October 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on excess monthly winter mortality.

Excess winter deaths, England and Wales, 1993–94 to 1997–98

Year	Excess winter deaths
1993–94	25,900
1994–95	27,300
1995–96	40,190
1996–97	47,690
1997–98	22,900

Excess winter deaths are defined as the difference between the number of deaths during the four winter months (December to March) and the average of the number of deaths during the preceding autumn (August to November) and the following summer (April to July).

Cash Management

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the timing of the transfer of cash management from the Bank of England to the Debt Management Office. [95866]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer announced on 6 May 1997 that the functions of debt management and cash management would be transferred from the Bank of England to the Treasury. The UK Debt Management Office (DMO) was established on 1 April 1998 and took over debt management from that date. The Government's debt management plans for 1999–2000 which were published in the Debt Management Report in March 1999 anticipated that cash management would be transferred from the Bank to the DMO during 1999–2000. This transfer, when complete, will separate the Bank's monetary policy operations from the DMO's debt and cash management operations. This will avoid any perceptions of conflicts of interest between the two operations, and further deliver the Government's policy of predictability and transparency in debt management.

The transfer of cash management from the Bank to the DMO during 1999–2000 will be effected on a phased basis. The phasing is designed to avoid placing undue requirements on the markets in the period before and immediately after the change to the Year 2000 date.

From 15 November, the DMO will become accountable for the new Debt Management Account, which will take over from the Gilt-Edged Official Operations Account as the Treasury account for debt (and later) cash management operations. During January 2000, the DMO will start to issue Treasury bills from the Debt Management Account. During February, the DMO intends to undertake a limited range of bilateral transactions with counterparties. From the end of March 2000, full responsibility for managing the government's daily cash position will be transferred from the Bank to the DMO.

In order to enable the DMO to start the phased introduction of these cash management operations from 15 November, I have today laid before Parliament revised Treasury Bill regulations SI 1999–2907 and made a Commencement Order SI 1999–2908 (C.76) under paragraph 3 of Schedule 26 of the Finance Act 1998. Taken together, these statutory instruments will enable the Debt Management Office to begin accounting for its debt and cash management operations through the new Debt Management Account, which will be subject to NAO audit. The Gilt-edged Official Operations Account is currently used to bring debt management operations to account. The Commencement Order will also provide for the transfer of the debt assets of the Gilt-edged Official Operations Account to the Debt Management Account.

The Executive Agency Framework Document for the DMO has also been revised to take account of the transfer of the cash management function to the DMO. Copies of the revised Framework Document have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Pesticides

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's intention with regard to a tax on pesticides. [94940]

Mr. Timms: No decision has been taken on whether to introduce a tax on the use of pesticides.

Research commissioned by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions on a possible tax or charge on pesticides was published on 24 March focusing on various design options for a charge scheme or tax, and attempting to evaluate the potential impact. Views were invited on the issues raised in the research and this consultation exercise closed on 24 June. The Government are considering the findings of the research project and the views expressed in the consultation exercise in deciding how best to proceed.

WALES

British Fluoridation Society

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money the British Fluoridation Society received in grant aid from the Welsh Office in each of the last five years. [94718]

Mr. Hanson: Over the last five years, the British Fluoridation Society has received the following in grant aid from the Welsh Office:

1994–95	3,200
1995–96	3,200
1996–97	4,000
1997–98	4,000

Forestry Commission

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the method of sale to be used by the Forestry Commission when selling its forests. [95223]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Forestry matters in Wales are a matter for the Forestry Commission which reports directly to the National Assembly for Wales.

Welsh Office Responsibilities

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish details of the responsibilities within the Welsh Office undertaken (a) by himself and (b) by his Under Secretary. [94776]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My Ministerial colleague and I take a close interest in all matters which come before my Department. The new role of my office lends itself to such an approach. More broadly, however, I deal with constitutional matters, finance and economic policy issues, while my colleague deals with a wide range of social policy issues. We will both take a close interest in legislative matters which come before Parliament.

SCOTLAND

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the reports published by his Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by his Department, (c) the decisions his Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria he uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93972]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Council on 19 October 1999, Official Report, column 429–30.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Civil Service staff there are in his offices in (a) London, (b) Edinburgh and (c) Glasgow. [94056]

Dr. Reid: The number of staff in my office is under review. At present there are 28 staff of the Scotland Office and five staff of the Advocate General based in London. The figures for Edinburgh are 17 and 20 respectively. There are no staff based in Glasgow. In addition, I have three special advisers, one of whom is part-time and unpaid.

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 30 June 1999, Official Report, column 193, on Special Advisers, how many times his Department's Special Adviser held meetings with members and officials of the US Government during the visit of 15 to 19 March; and if he will list the dates and locations of each meeting and the names of the US ministers and officials at each meeting. [93964]

Dr. Reid: My predecessor's Special Adviser did not hold meetings with members or officials of the US Government.

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what meetings the then Secretary of State for Scotland held with members and officials of the United States Government during his visits to the United States on 2 to 28 September 1997; and if he will list the date and location of each meeting and the names of the members and officials of the United States Government at each meeting. [93954]

Dr. Reid: The visit took place from 20 to 28 September. No meetings were held with members or officials of the US Government.

Local Councillors (Gender Profiles)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the percentages of councillors in each local authority who are (a) men and (b) women. [95169]

Dr. Reid: The information in the table is derived from the Directory of Scottish Local Government, which is produced jointly by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the Scottish Local Government Information Unit. It represents the positions at the end of July 1999.

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [94000]

Dr. Reid: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him today by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz).

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EU Surplus Food Scheme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he undertook to publicise the EU surplus food scheme; and what categories of the scheme were available in the United Kingdom. [92827]

Ms Quin: My hon. Friend the previous Minister of State issued a News Release announcing details of the scheme for 1998 and invited interested organisations to apply to be designated to distribute canned stewed steak to eligible recipients. The scheme involved only intervention beef.

Forest Land

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy relating to consultation by (a) the Forestry Commission and (b) Forest Enterprise with (i) local authorities and (ii) the public prior to the sale of Forestry Commission forest land. [95222]

Mr. Morley: The subject of this question relates to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise and I have asked the Chief Executive to reply to my hon. Friend direct.

Letter from Bob McIntosh to Mr. Huw Edwards, dated 25 October 1999:

I refer to your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food asking what the Forestry Commission's policy is in relation to consultation on the sale of forest land. I have been asked to reply.

The Forestry Commission and Forest Enterprise notify the Local Authority of all sales of forest land as part of our Continued Public Access policy. This is to inform the Local Authority that we are considering sale of forest land and that we may be in a position to offer the opportunity to enter into an agreement to protect access after sale.

We do not, at the moment, notify forest land sales directly to the public. However we are in the process of reviewing our policy on community participation and involvement and are considering ways in which sales might be notified to local people. Of course when land is offered for sale on the open market it is advertised widely by our selling agents.

PRIME MINISTER

Fox Hunting

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in respect of the banning of fox hunting. [94620]

The Prime Minister: We believe that hunting with hounds should be the subject of a free vote, as we said in our manifesto. Right hon. and hon. Members had an opportunity to vote on the issue last year when the House considered the Private Member's Bill of my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster). The Bill's progress was frustrated by its opponents and did not become law.

Ascension Airbase

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Prime Minister what progress has been made on discussions between the UK and USA Governments about enabling commercial aircraft to use the airbase on Ascension. [95316]

The Prime Minister: In December 1998 the UK passed a draft treaty to allow certain types of civil flights into Ascension to the US Authorities for consideration.

During the visit of my noble Friend Baroness Scotland to the United States on 4–5 October 1999, the US Government confirmed in principle that the airfield should be opened to certain types of civil flights on a limited basis.

We are encouraging the United States to complete their internal discussions and to secure a mandate for formal negotiations to begin. British Embassy officials in Washington will soon meet US State Department officials to take this issue forward.

Prime Minister's Office

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what changes have been made to the running and organisation of the Government Department which directly serves the Prime Minister since the summer adjournment began; and what further reorganisation or changes in structure he contemplates. [94575]

The Prime Minister: In addition to the staff in my office in 10 Downing street, the Cabinet Office provides support to me as chairman of the Cabinet and Minister for the Civil Service. There have been no changes to the organisation or running of the Cabinet Office since the summer adjournment. Changes in the future will be made as and when necessary.

Government Annual Report

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will assess the benefits of commissioning an independent and authoritative body to prepare and publish the Government's annual report. [93717]

The Prime Minister: Both the 1997–98 and 1998–99 Annual Reports drew on publicly available facts and figures, all of which were provided by Departments. As a Government report it would not be appropriate for the Annual Report to be produced by an independent body. The National Audit Office provides independent information, advice and assurance to Parliament and the public about all aspects of the financial operations of Government Departments.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what representations the Government have received from other EU countries with regard to reviewing asylum procedures for applicants from eastern Europe. [95412]

The Prime Minister: None.

Ilisu Dam

Mr. Brake: To ask the Prime Minister what meetings have taken place between him or his office and Balfour Beatty on the matter of the Ilisu Dam. [95099]

The Prime Minister: None.

European Police College

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Prime Minister what is the purpose of the European Police College; and what will be studied there. [95078]

The Prime Minister: Tackling Europe's organised crime problem effectively means that we have to ensure that police officers are properly trained and encouraged to co-operate with forces in other countries. We see the role of the European Police College, which will start off as a network of existing national training institutes, as fulfilling these functions by supporting the establishment of a common approach to tackling transnational organised crime, and by drawing together work already being carried out by individual Member States on training police officers to tackle organised crime effectively. We envisage that, over time, those trained by the college will form a Europe-wide body of expertise about European policing and cross border operations. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, together with colleagues in other Member States, will take forward the work on establishing the College.

Secretary of State for Scotland

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the executive functions of the Secretary of State for Scotland. [95975]

The Prime Minister: As a consequence of the new constitutional arrangements under the Scotland Act 1998, I have approved a reallocation of certain functions of the Secretary of State for Scotland to other Ministers of the Crown with appropriate functional responsibilities. Copies of an Order which was made by Her Majesty in Council on 12 October and which transfer certain of these functions have been laid before Parliament.

In addition to the transfer effected by this Order, it is proposed that certain other statutory executive functions of the Secretary of State that are currently exercised by the Secretary of State for Scotland, but which could be exercised by any other Secretary of State, should also be transferred. No legislation is required to give effect to these transfers which will be carried out by administrative arrangement. One of these is the transfer to the Home Secretary of the Secretary of State for Scotland's functions in relation to the issuing of warrants for the interception of communications or interference with property for national security purposes where the person or property named on the warrant is, or is reasonably believed to be, located in Scotland at the time the warrant is issued.

I have placed a paper in the Libraries of both Houses that briefly describes the content of the Transfer of Functions Order and lists the other executive functions that are to transfer.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he is taking to ensure that relevant Departments work together to tackle problems related to domestic violence. [95521]

The Prime Minister: In June the Government published their integrated approach to tackling violence against women "Living with Fear".

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is taking forward this work, together with that in relation to domestic violence generally. A unit within the Home Office is responsible for ensuring that there is a coherent, consistent and properly co-ordinated approach across Government in the development and implementation of policy on tackling violence against women. Co-ordination at Ministerial level is through the Cabinet sub-Committee on Women's issues.

Drugs

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to ascertain details of precursor chemicals exported from the UK to South America suitable for use in the processing of drugs; and what action his Department is taking. [95546]

The Prime Minister: Exports to South American and other countries of precursor chemicals which might be used in the illicit manufacture of drugs are controlled and monitored by the UK in accordance with the UN Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances 1988 and the relevant EU Regulation implementing these controls in the European Union.

The chemicals which are included in such controls are listed therein and subject to regular review by the UN Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 19 October 1999, Official Report, column 261, what is the timetable for the action he proposes to take to counter the lack of traceability of drug money; and if he will make a statement on the range of measures he proposes to take. [95548]

The Prime Minister: The Government strongly support action to combat money laundering and so attack the crime on which it thrives.

At the European Council meeting at Tampere we agreed a range of special concrete actions against money laundering, listed in the Presidency Conclusions. They cover a wide range of initiatives to facilitate unproved asset tracing. The United Kingdom will be pressing for the conclusions to be converted into action by the Council and Commission as quickly as possible.

The United Kingdom has taken a leading role in the Financial Action Task Force (FATF), the leading international anti-money laundering body. In accordance with its recommendations, United Kingdom legislation already bans the use of anonymous bank accounts, as they may be used to conceal criminal proceeds. Law enforcement authorities in all member states must have the ability, as they do in the United Kingdom, to trace the proceeds of drug trafficking and other crimes, subject to judicial oversight but regardless of banking secrecy.

At the domestic level, the Government are examining how to strengthen existing legislation and arrangements for the investigation, restraint and seizure of criminal proceeds. I have approved a study by the Performance and Innovation Unit of the role that following the money trail and seizing criminal assets can play in the fight against crime, and of how to maximise the effectiveness of these tools. The study will report early next year.

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [93991]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him today by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz).

SOCIAL SECURITY

New Deal (Lone Parents)

15. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents in Chelmsford local authority area have been contacted by the new deal for lone parents programme; and how many have received a job. [93762]

Angela Eagle: We do not have separate figures for Chelmsford. The figures that are available cover the whole of Essex; 9,000 invitations to participate in the voluntary programme have been issued and 440 lone parents have so far found jobs.

Pensioners

16. Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to help the poorest pensioners. [93764]

Mr. Rooker: The Minimum Income Guarantee introduced in April provides a significant increase in incomes to the poorest pensioners. They will also start to receive their £100 Winter Fuel Payments in week commencing 8 November; this will ensure that no pensioner will have to worry about turning up their heating this winter.

17. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the percentage of the total population which is of pensionable age; what was the percentage 10 years ago; and what forecast he has made of the percentage in 10 years' time. [93765]

Mr. Rooker: The percentage of the UK population over State Pension age is estimated at 18 per cent., broadly the same as ten years ago. Over the next ten years it is projected to rise to 19 per cent.

Industrial Injury Benefits

18. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has for reforming industrial injury benefits. [93766]

Mr. Bayley: We continue to see a case for reforming the industrial injuries scheme so that it reflects better the needs of today's labour market and improves incentives for prevention and rehabilitation. Initial discussions with key stakeholders confirmed our belief that there is scope for reform. However, much work remains to be done to decide the best way forward. Against the background of the current major programme of reform to other parts of the Social Security system the work cannot be completed quickly.

Child Support Agency

19. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the timetable for the implementation of his proposed changes to the Child Support Agency. [93767]

Angela Eagle: The proposals for a new Child Support service set out in the White Paper represent a major change from the current arrangements. We will not repeat the mistakes of the previous Government by rushing the new scheme into effect before we are ready.

27. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his proposed changes to the Child Support Agency. [93776]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security set out our plans to reform the Child Support system in a White Paper published on 1 July. These will address the failures of the current scheme and put children's rights at the heart of the Child Support system.

Benefits Agency

20. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on delays in payments by Benefits Agency offices. [93768]

Mr. Rooker: The Benefits Agency is meeting most of its targets for the payment of benefits. In the recent past, some delays in paying benefits have been caused by complications arising from the introduction of the National Insurance Recording System (NIRS2). The majority of problems have now been resolved. Regrettably claims for Widows Benefit are still affected and the contingency arrangements in place take longer than normal to process.

Fraud

21. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve co-ordination between the Benefits Agency and local authorities in combating fraud. [93769]

Mr. Rooker: We are committed to reducing fraud and error in the benefits system. One key part of our strategy is to develop stronger links between the Benefits Agency (BA) and local authorities (LAs). Most recently, following testing of the electronic transfer of information between the BA and LA in Lewisham, we started to extend this facility to other LAs. Fourteen LAs are now piloting the system which we aim to roll out nationally from next April. In Lewisham, the evaluation indicated significant reductions in processing times and overpayments. We have also introduced a national liaison service level agreement (SLA) and a specific fraud SLA, both of which are mandatory on BA and strongly endorsed by the LA Associations.

£6 million has been allocated to BA Area Directors to fund joint working initiatives which identify an activity or programme that enhances the liaison between the BA and the LA and through that liaison will combat fraud and error in the benefit system.

25. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last reviewed his target for the reduction of benefit fraud for the year 1999–2000. [93774]

Mr. Rooker: As published in the Public Service Agreement, for the first time we have set a single outcome target to reduce fraud and error in the two major benefits by 30 per cent. by March 2007, with at least a 10 per cent. reduction by March 2002.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many calls have been received by the Benefit Fraud Hotline in each month since it was established. [93642]

Mr. Rooker: The information is as follows:

National Benefit Fraud Hotline calls answered from 5 August 1996

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the places in which and dates on which Searchlight on Fraud investigations have taken place since they were started. [93641]

Mr. Rooker: The Spotlight On Fraud campaign commenced on 1 April 1996. Certain areas of the country were subject to intensive counter fraud activity over a short period. The campaign consisted of three phases:

Welfare to Work

22. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures his Department is taking to help people move from welfare into work. [93770]

Angela Eagle: In the last two years we have launched an ambitious series of welfare-to-work reforms. We have invested almost £4 billion in New Deals, representing an unprecedented assault on worklessness. We are on target to meet our manifesto commitment to help 250,000 young people move from welfare into work, with 135,000 young people into jobs by the end of July. Our reforms are putting work at the heart of the benefit system.

Stakeholder Pensions

23. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the timetable for the introduction of the stakeholder pension. [93772]

Mr. Rooker: We aim to enable the first stakeholder pension schemes to be set up from April 2001. We will be announcing decisions, following our consultations, around the end of the year, and our final proposals will be set out in draft regulations for further consultation. Stakeholder pension regulations should then be laid by around April 2000, thereby giving a clear year for industry to develop schemes for the market.

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress he has made with developing his proposals for stakeholder pensions. [93783]

Mr. Rooker: Between 2 June and 16 September, we issued six consultation documents on Minimum Standards, Employer Access, Clearing Arrangements, Advice, Governance and the Tax Regime.

We have also held discussions with the Stakeholder Pensions Advisory Group and the Core Group.

We will be announcing decisions around the end of the year before issuing draft regulations for consultation.

SERPS

24. Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to compensate people who have been misinformed about the inheritance rules for SERPS; [93773]

(2) what estimate he has made of (a) the net costs of, (b) the gross costs of and (c) how many people would benefit from delaying the changes to the amount of SERPS payable to widows and widowers from (1) 2000 until 2010 and (2) 2000 until 2005 in (i) 2000 and (ii) every subsequent year until 2020; and how the (x) gross and (y) net costs of such a delay are calculated. [95256]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Notes:

1. Gross costs and potential numbers affected are supplied by the Government Actuary's Department. An explanation of the method for calculating gross costs of Additional Pension is given in the Government Actuary's Department publication 'National Insurance Fund: Long Term Financial Estimates', Appendix D (paragraphs 14.39 to 14.45), available in the House of Commons Library.

2. Precise estimates of net costs are not available.

3. Estimates of numbers affected assume that all widows and widowers have some SERPS entitlement although in reality there will be some who do not. Cases where the widower is over State pension age but the deceased partner is under State pension age are included in the estimates. These will both tend to overestimate the numbers affected.

4. Gross costs are rounded to the nearest £10 million, and are in 1999–2000 price terms. Potential numbers affected are rounded to the nearest 10,000.

5. Estimates assume average earnings growth from 1999 onwards of 1.5 per cent. per year above prices. The State Second Pension and Welfare Reform Bill changes are not taken into account in these figures.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when he intends to announce his decision as to what action he will take to remedy the problem of the changes to the inheritance of SERPS by spouses; and what provision has been made in the (a) CSR and (b) Contingency Fund to meet any extra costs; [95180]

(2) what assessment he has made of (a) the administration costs and (b) the setting-up time of a scheme to compensate those misled about the halving of the amount of SERPS payable to widows and widowers; and if he will make a statement; [95178]

(3) what assessment he has made of the ability of those misled about the halving of the amount of SERPS payable to widows and widowers to prove they were misinformed; and if he will make a statement. [95181]

Mr. Rooker: We will make an announcement about SERPS inheritance provisions shortly.

Annual Uprating

26. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he takes before making his annual assessment on uprating benefit and pension levels. [93775]

Mr. Rooker: The annual review of benefits is subject to the same decision-making processes as many other policy considerations. We will make an announcement on the uprating in due course in the normal way.

Child Poverty

28. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what factors he uses to measure child poverty. [93779]

Angela Eagle: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer the Prime Minister gave to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 19 October 1999, Official Report, column 486.

Disabled People (Employment)

29. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the measures in his welfare reform programme which will assist disabled people to take up work. [93780]

Angela Eagle: Together with my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment we have introduced New Deal for Disabled People to help disabled people move into or remain in work; piloting a voluntary personal adviser service in 12 areas throughout Great Britain, for claimants of incapacity benefits; and funding 24 innovative schemes to test different approaches.

The first four ONE pilots were successfully launched in June and a further 8 pilots will start in November. In these pilot areas, where appropriate, people of working age who claim benefits will be given a Personal Adviser who will be able to access information and the opportunities for employment, training and rehabilitation, and will help them plan a route back to independence.

In October 1998, we introduced a new 52-week linking rule for incapacity benefits and abolished the 16 hour limit for voluntary work. We have increased the therapeutic earnings limit from April 99 and are piloting further measures to help disabled people who wish to work. We are replacing the All Work Test with the Personal Capability Assessment which will focus on what people can do, not just their incapacities. From October 1999 the Disabled Persons' Tax Credit will replace Disability Working Allowance which will ensure that disabled people are better off in work than out of work.

Widows Benefits

30. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his proposals for the future of widows' benefits. [93781]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave to the hon. Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) on 5 July 1999, Official Report, column 353.

Parental Costs

31. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to assist parents with the costs of bringing up children. [93782]

Angela Eagle: We recognise the additional costs that families with children have to bear. As part of our strategy to increase opportunity for all, we are determined to improve family prosperity, reduce child poverty, and ensure that the tax and benefit system properly acknowledges the costs of bringing up children.

Measures already announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the last two Budgets, including the largest-ever uprating of Child Benefit, and the introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit, will ensure that families with children will gain an average of £750 per year the 20 per cent. of poorest households will gain the most, an average of £1,080 per year.

Total growth in spending on families with children will amount to an extra £5 billion a year in real terms, by the end of this Parliament.

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [94006]

Angela Eagle: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer from the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) today.

Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that all pensioners receive pension increases which are linked to increases in national prosperity. [93777]

Mr. Rooker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security is required by law to review the rate of Retirement Pension and other benefits each year. He will announce the outcome later this year in the usual way.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate, using his PENSIM model, the mean net incomes in 2025 of (a) single pensioners and (b) married pensioners on the basis of (i) unchanged policies, (ii) his proposed phased replacement of SERPS with the second state pension and (iii) the phasing out of SERPS coupled with the introduction of an age addition to the basic pension for those aged 80 years or over, set at three quarters of the gap between the basic pension and the minimum income guarantee, assuming in each case the continuation of earnings indexation of the minimum income guarantee; and if he will provide separate estimates for each quintile group of each distribution. [94695]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the tables:

Net income of single pensioners by quintile in 2025

£ per week

Mean	Quintile 1	Quintile 2	Quintile 3	Quintile 4	Quintile 5

Notes:

1. In order to model option (iii), it is necessary to make further critical assumptions about the current regime for contracting out of SERPS. If this were to cease at the same time that SERPS stops accruing, there would be a significant effect on private pension provision although highly dependent on the behavioural response of individuals and employers. Alternatively, if contracted out rebates continued to be available, there would be a large incentive for those who had previously been in SERPS to take advantage of the rebates, at significant extra cost to the public finances. Again this would depend on behavioural responses, unless private second pensions were made compulsory. The estimates in the table are based on assumptions which avoid the need to model behavioural responses ie those who are already contracted out continue to receive their rebates, whereas those in SERPS have no replacement second pension once SERPS accruals cease. This is not a sustainable set of assumptions in policy terms, but does provide a basis for answering the question as set out.
2. The estimates have been arrived at using the DSS's PENSIM model. PENSIM is a dynamic microsimulation model which projects future pensioners' incomes on the basis of past labour market and pensions information. Because the model is dependent on the assumptions used and the cohort sampled to generate the work and pensions histories, it is primarily a tool to compare policy options rather than to project the future course of pensioners' incomes with accuracy. Results so far into the future, even of a comparative nature, must be treated as broad brush.
3. The quintiles have been derived by dividing each income distribution in to five equal sized groups in ascending order of income size. The first quintile contains the fifth of the distribution with lowest incomes while the fifth quintile contains the fifth with highest incomes.

4. The income figures given are on a benefit unit basis. Therefore, the income of couples is that of both members of the couple combined.
5. Figures are expressed in 1999 prices rounded to the nearest ten pence.
6. Earnings indexation of the minimum income guarantee is assumed. The earnings assumption in the PENSIM model is 1.5 per cent. per year above inflation.
7. The State Second Pension is assumed to be introduced in 2002.
8. The suggested age addition to the Basic State Pension refers to three quarters of the gap between the full basic state pension and the maximum minimum income guarantee of a single person aged 80. It is assumed to be introduced in the year 2000. Under this option, the year 2000 also marks the end of all new SERPS accruals. Existing SERPS entitlements continue to be paid.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to seek an amendment to the law to require a stakeholder pension to be taken out in the form of an annuity by a specified age; and if he will make a statement; [94930]

(2) what plans he has to seek an amendment to the law to prevent any pension scheme from requiring a person to take out a pension in the form of an annuity by a specified age; and if he will make a statement. [94929]

Mr. Rooker: Only pension schemes which are not themselves able to pay a pension require their members to take pension benefits in the form of an annuity, so as to guarantee a pension income throughout retirement. We propose that this should also apply to stakeholder pensions. We will consider whether there is a case for changing the present age 75 limit for annuity purchase as part of the review of personal pension income withdrawal being undertaken by the Inland Revenue.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received on incapacity benefit. [93771]

Mr. Bayley: We have received a number of representations about our proposals to modernise the rules for the Incapacity Benefit. We believe the proposals are right in principle. We have made it clear that we will consider concerns when we finalise the details.

Race Awareness (Tribunals)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on race awareness training for chairmen of appeal tribunals. [93778]

Angela Eagle: The President of appeal tribunals is responsible for arranging the training of chairmen and members of appeal tribunals. The President intends to arrange for the chairmen and members to be trained in equal opportunities in the next financial year and that the training will include racial and disability awareness issues. The President will write to my hon. Friend setting out his plans for the training.

ONE Service Pilots

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the progress to date of the ONE service pilots. [93752]

Angela Eagle: The first four ONE pilots were launched as planned in June. They are making good progress in helping people plan ways to become independent, while dealing promptly and accurately with claims to benefit.

A further eight pilots will start on the 29 November. Four will test out the use of Call Centre technology in providing the ONE Service. The other four are led by the Private and Voluntary Sector—they will enable us to test what innovations that they can bring to client services.

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the reports published by his Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by his Department, (c) the decisions his Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria he uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93976]

Mr. Bayley: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer from my right hon. Friend the President of the Council on 19 October 1999, Official Report, columns 429–30.

This Department has made three announcements since 27 July as follows:

As my hon. Friend, the then Minister of State announced, in response to a Parliamentary Question on 9 June 1999, Official Report, column 340, a series of Consultation Documents would be published on pension reform, the last of which were published on 2 August and 16 September. Copies of the Reports were sent to the Chairman of the Social Security Select Committee and copies were placed in the Libraries of the House of Commons and House of Lords. These were announced publicly by way of a Press Release.

On 21 September we announced the publication of the first annual report on poverty and social exclusion entitled: "Opportunity for All". Copies were placed in the House of Commons and House of Lords Libraries. All MPs were sent a copy of the summary document under cover of a letter and copies were also made available to all key organisations. The Chairman of the Social Security Select Committee also received a copy.

On 26 August we received the CSA Independent Chief Examiner's Report. It was published in the normal way as soon as it was received. Copies of this report were placed in the House of Commons and House of Lords Libraries.

Andrew Mehdi

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what date the Benefits Agency received from the Independent Tribunal Service notice of the tribunal's decision of 5 August in the claim for disability living allowance by Mr. Andrew Mehdi (references D/04/048/1998/01876 and NH 01 71 23 B); and when he expects the Benefits Agency to implement the judgment of the tribunal; [94952]

(2) on what date the Independent Tribunals Service sent to the Benefits Agency notice of the judgment of the tribunal in the claim for disability living allowance by Mr. Andrew Mehdi (references NH 01 71 23 B and D/04/048/1998/01876). [94953]

Angela Eagle: The Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) first issued the judgment on 6 August which regrettably was not received. Despite investigation, ITS and the Benefits Agency have been unable to identify where the problem occurred.

A further copy was received at the Disability Benefits Unit (DBU) in Blackpool by fax on 19 October, following DBU's request to ITS dated 12 October. The decision was implemented and payment of all arrears and an order book for continuing payments were issued on 20 October.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the real-terms increase in spending on benefits for disabled people by May 2002; and how this figure is derived. [95438]

Mr. Bayley: The Social Security Departmental Report 1999 (Cm 4214) includes details of Social Security expenditure for the financial years 1993–94 to 2001–02. Table 10 of the report sets out benefit expenditure by Departmental Objectives in real terms (1998–99 prices). The individual benefits which comprise Objective 3 (Support for disabled people) are prescribed in the table.

Disabled Children

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has to assist disabled children. [93746]

Mr. Bayley: We are committed to maintaining Disability Living Allowance, the main disability benefit for children, as a national, universal benefit. We are making specific improvements to help children with severe disabilities: a clause within the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill, which is currently before Parliament, extends entitlement to the higher rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance to 3 and 4 year olds. This will help an additional 8,000 children from April 2001.

From April 2001 the new Disability Income Guarantee will provide extra help within Income Support premiums for families with severely disabled children getting the highest rate of the care component of Disability Living Allowance.

Occupational Pension Funds

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to amend the Pensions Act 1995 to require occupational pension funds to nominate a pensioner as a member trustee. [95660]

Mr. Rooker: We believe that member trustees add value to pension schemes, and want to increase their coverage.

The consultation document, "Strengthening the Pensions Framework", which was issued in December 1998, made a number of proposals on member-nominated trustees, including a proposal that large mature schemes should be required to reserve a place on the trustee board for a pensioner member. Responses showed widespread support for the principle of member trustees, but concern about some of the practical implications.

We have been working closely with the pensions industry and other representative bodies to develop revised proposals. A further consultation document was issued on 7 October 1999.

Our priority is to ensure that schemes have member-nominated trustees, and that members have a fair say in determining the arrangements for appointing them.

The revised proposals do not require schemes to have a pensioner trustee, but they do ensure that pensioners are given a fair say in the procedures.

Income Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of pensioners aged (a) 60 to 64, (b) 65 to 69, (c) 70 to 74, (d) 75 to 79 and (e) 80 years or above who are entitled to Income Support but do not take up their entitlement; and if he will provide separate estimates for (i) single male pensioners, (ii) single female pensioners and (iii) married pensioners. [94696]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Estimated average numbers not taking up entitlement to Income Support—Great Britain, 1997–98

Category	Total number of ENR's
Pensioner Couples Aged 60–64	50,000
Pensioner Couples Aged 65–69	30,000
Pensioner Couples Aged 70–74[1]	30,000
Pensioner Couples Aged 75–79[1]	20,000
Pensioner Couples Aged 80 and Over[1]	20,000
All Pensioner Couples	150,000
Single Males Aged 60–64[1]	20,000
Single Males Aged 65–69[1]	20,000
Single Males Aged 70–74[1]	20,000
Single Males Aged 75–79[1]	20,000
Single Males Aged 80 and Over	40,000
All Single Male Pensioners	110,000
Single Females Aged 60–64[1]	20,000
Single Females Aged 65–69	40,000
Single Females Aged 70–74	60,000
Single Females Aged 75–79	100,000
Single Females Aged 80 and Over	230,000
All Single Female Pensioners	450,000
All Pensioners	720,000

[1] These figures are based on small sample sizes and are to be treated with particular caution.

Notes:

1. ENR's = Entitled non-recipients.
2. These estimates are based on the 1997–98 Family Resources Survey. Reliable precise estimates are not available. Estimates by age band comparable with the aggregate estimates published in September could be provided only at disproportionate costs. The table provides a breakdown, by age band, of raw estimates with no attempt to correct for data imperfections. The available evidence suggests pensioner couples estimates are biased upwards relative to the estimates for single pensioners. The nature and extent of biases in the raw estimates may also vary by age band.
3. The figures for the number of entitled non-recipients are rounded to the nearest ten thousand.
4. The age of a couple has been defined by the age of the older partner.
5. The figure for the total number of ENR's does not comply with the sum of the component amounts. This is due to rounding of the figures.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Council

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the procedural changes set out in Council Decision 1999/468/EC of 28 June, OJ L184 of 17 July. [94143]

Mr. Vaz: Council Decision 1999/468/EC reforms the procedures for monitoring the exercise of implementing the powers delegated to the Commission by the Council and the European Parliament (the 'comitology' system). The Government welcome the changes that the Decision makes.

It improves the comitology system in three ways. Firstly, it increases democratic control over the process by giving an enhanced scrutiny role to the European Parliament. Secondly, it simplifies the system by reducing the number of committee types from five to three.

Thirdly, it takes an important step towards making the comitology system more transparent. For example, the Commission will for the first time be required to publish a complete list of comitology committees.

Overall, the changes should improve the efficiency, accountability and transparency of the comitology process.

EC Staff Contracts

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deposit in the Library the model contract of employment for European Communities staff working at the Commission. [94140]

Mr. Vaz: Only staff employed on a temporary basis have individual contracts. The terms and conditions of permanent staff are set out in Community Staff Regulations. A copy of the latest version of these Regulations will be placed in the Library as soon as we have received it from the Commission.

Rambouillet Agreements

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the proposals made by the Yugoslav Parliament in answer to the draft agreements made at Rambouillet; and what the differences were from the agreement reached on 3 June. [94127]

Mr. Vaz: The Rambouillet Agreements on Kosovo were presented to the FRY/Serbian delegation and the Kosovo Albanian delegation on 22 February, after two and a half weeks of intensive negotiation. Both sides agreed to attend a second round of talks to discuss implementation of the agreements. However, on the first day of the second round of talks, in Paris on 15 March, the FRY/Serbian delegation presented their own proposals for a Kosovo agreement. The Contact Group (the Governments of the UK, US, France, Germany, Italy and Russia) took the unanimous view that only technical adjustments to the draft agreements presented at Rambouillet could be considered. The proposals presented by Belgrade amounted to an extensive and unacceptable revision of the draft agreements presented at Rambouillet.

The proposals presented by the FRY/Serbian delegation and subsequently endorsed by the Serb Parliament were published recently in "The Crisis in Kosovo 1989–1999, International Documents and Analysis, Vol 1", as was the text of the Rambouillet Agreements signed by the Kosovo Albanian delegation on 18 March.

On 3 June, President Milosevic and the Serbian Parliament accepted an agreement, presented by the EU and Russian special envoys, which specified the principles for a resolution of the crisis in Kosovo, notably: the end of violence and repression; withdrawal of all FRY/Serbian forces; deployment of international civil and security presences in Kosovo; and return of refugees and displaced persons. The agreement also called for a political process, taking full account of the Rambouillet accords, to provide substantial self-government for Kosovo.

Cyprus

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for Cyprus of the recent rapprochement between Greece and Turkey after the earthquakes in their countries. [94415]

Mr. Vaz: We warmly welcome the recent improvement in relations between Greece and Turkey. We hope that it will contribute positively to international efforts, which the UK fully supports, to launch negotiations for a comprehensive Cyprus settlement under UN auspices this autumn.

Burma

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given to implementing sanctions against Burma under the provisions of Article 73g(2) of the EC Treaty of Rome; and if he will make a statement. [94605]

Mr. Battle: Article 60 (2) [ex Article 73g (2)] of the EC Treaty is not a power to implement sanctions but an exception to the rule that all restrictions on movement of capital and on payments between member states and member states and third countries (Article 56) should be prohibited: Article 60 (2) permits such measures in certain circumstances. There is limited power to implement unilateral sanctions under domestic legislation. There is an application for Judicial Review relating to the scope and meaning of Article 60 pending before the High Court. We are considering its position with regard to that application.

Honorary British Consuls

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which cities of (a) the EU and (b) applicant countries for EU membership his Department uses honorary British consuls. [94613]

Mr. Hain: Honorary British Consuls are situated in EU member states in:

France: Biarritz, Calais, Perpignan, Nates, Toulouse, Amiens, Boulogne-sur-Mer, Dunkirk, Nice, Montpellier, Cherbourg, St Malo-Dinard, Saumur.
Germany: Bremen, Nurenberg, Hanover, Kiel.
Belgium: Antwerp, Liege.
Italy: Genoa, Venice, Bari, Cagliari, Turin, Trieste, Catania, Messina, Brindisi, Palermo.
Spain: Vig, Santander, Menorca.
Finland: Jyvaskyla, Kotka, Kuopio, Aland Islands, Oulu, Pori, Tampere, Turku, Vaasa.
Austria: Bregenz, Salzburg, Graz.
Sweden: Gothenburg, Sundsvall, Malmo.
Portugal: Portimao.
Greece: Kos, Patras, Rhodes, Salonika, Syros, Zakynthos.

Honorary British Consuls are situated in EU applicant countries in:

Poland: Kotowice, Poznan, Gdansk, Szczecin, Wroclaw.
Hungary: Pecs.
Rumania: Constanta.
Bulgaria: Varna.
Turkey: Antalya, Bodrum, Iskenderum, Izmir, Marmaris, Mersin.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many honorary British consuls there are world-wide; and if he will make a statement. [94611]

Mr. Hain: At present there are 248 Honorary British Consuls world-wide. They are prominent members of their local communities, who undertake their role in a voluntary capacity. They provide support and advice to the head of the British diplomatic mission in the host country, and act as a first port of call for British nationals in their district in need of consular assistance. Our Honorary Consuls constitute an important resource for the delivery of our consular services world-wide.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will issue a minimum of two flags to each honorary British consul to facilitate their cleaning; and if he will ensure their regular replacement consistent with maintaining them in good condition. [94612]

Mr. Hain: Honorary British Consuls are issued with a set of Union flags sufficient for the Consuls' needs, including spares. Guidance is also provided on the flying of the flags, and on how to requisition replacements. But if my hon. Friend has a particular post or problem in mind, I would be happy to respond to his concern.

Belarus

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking in respect of human rights violations in Belarus; and if he will make a statement. [94615]

Mr. Vaz: We raised our concerns about the human rights situation in Belarus most recently when First Deputy Foreign Minister Martynov met senior officials at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 8 October. The British Embassy in Minsk also has frequent contacts with human rights organisations and has supported projects designed to promote human rights in Belarus. The UK has also played a leading role in shaping EU policy towards Belarus, which stresses the need for improved human rights performance. The EU has called on the Belarusian authorities to investigate the recent disappearance of Viktor Gonchar, Deputy Chairman of the 13th Supreme Soviet, and all other cases in which politically active figures have disappeared. We also fully support the activities of the Advisory and Monitoring Group of the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe, whose mandate includes promoting compliance with other OSCE commitments, including in the human rights field.

EU Treaty

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by the President of the Commission of the European Union to appoint an advisory body on steps to be taken to prepare for a further union treaty; what consultations he has had with the President; and what United Kingdom appointment has been made to it. [94362]

Mr. Vaz: The Commission is not preparing next year's Inter-Governmental Conference, but it will present a formal IGC Opinion for member states to consider. Romano Prodi asked a Group under Jean-Luc Dehaene to feed ideas in to that Opinion. The Group published its Report on 18 October. Lord Simon sat on the Group, but he did so in a personal capacity, not as a representative of the United Kingdom. It is up to the Commission how it reacts to the recommendations in the Group's Report. I have had no contact with Mr. Prodi about this.

MOD Electronic Test Facility

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has received from the Irish Government with regard to the Ministry of Defence's Electronic Test Facility formerly sited at the British Nuclear Fuels Ltd site at Capenhurst, Cheshire, since 1 July; when these representations were received; and from which Irish Government Departments. [93857]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 19 October 1999, Official Report, column 484.

Consular Records

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for direct computer access by his Department's Consular Division in London to consular records on cases abroad; and if he will make a statement. [94803]

Mr. Hain: Modernisation of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's communications technology continues to evolve. At present there is direct e-mail access to almost all consular posts overseas, and delivery to the remainder is planned. There are no existing plans for direct access by the Consular Division to the consular data bases of overseas posts. The concept is under consideration, but it carries with it substantial resource and technical strategy implications.

Foreign Policy Centre

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role and activities of the Foreign Policy Centre since its launch, with particular reference to its input into departmental policy; and what (a) financial and (b) other support his Department has provided. [95326]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Foreign Policy Centre is an independent organisation and has received no money from the Foreign Office. The Foreign Office welcomes ideas from outside organisations on all areas of its work. It is established practice for Foreign Office Officials and Ministers to have contact with policy institutes and NGOs, to consider their views when developing policy and to contribute to the debates initiated by them. Policy institutes and NGOs can also influence policy through their contributions to a wider public debate. The nature of these contacts means that it is not possible to assess the influence of one particular policy institute in isolation from other institutes and NGOs.

Africa

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the (a) agenda and (b) conclusions of the Franco-British meetings with African delegations held in New York on 22 September; to what extent (i) EMU, (ii) European politics and (iii) security policy was discussed; and what future meetings are planned. [95220]

Mr. Hain: The following press release was issued after the meeting in New York on 22 September:

"At the invitation of Britain and France, Foreign Ministers Robin Cook and Hubert Vedrine had a meeting in New York this morning with Amara Essy, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Cote d'Ivoire; Jean Ping, the Minister for External Affairs, Cooperation and Francophonie for Gabon; Alhaji Sule Lamido, the Minister for Foreign Affairs for Nigeria; and Adhi Bonaya Godana, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Kenya.

This meeting represents a further significant step forward in the efforts of Britain and France to develop, with African partners, joint strategies for cooperations on the continent.

The meeting focused on the current crises affecting the African continent and on how all concerned could join together to help resolve them.

It was agreed that Africans and Europeans must work more closely together to address the challenges facing the continent. Participants underlined the importance of vigorous joint action to end conflict, tackle poverty, debt and AIDS, promote good governance, and boost trade and investment.

All welcomed the opportunity for discussion and agreed on the usefulness of further harmonising the African and European perspectives. The Ministers agreed that further discussions between UK, French and African Permanent Representatives in New York would enable the dialogue to be continued and deepened. They further agreed that their countries would work together whenever possible on issues of mutual interest before the Security Council."

French and British officials are working on the practicalities of another meeting.

Libya

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards maintenance of an EU arms embargo against Libya. [95250]

Mr. Hain: Libya has taken a number of important steps towards reintegration with the international community, not least of which was the handing over for trial of the two Libyans accused of involvement in the Lockerbie bombing. In recognition of these developments, the UN has suspended its sanctions against Libya. The EU, with UK support, has lifted most of its own sanctions, but decided, for now, to retain the arms embargo. EU member states will review this decision regularly.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Sierra Leone Contact Group meeting on 27 and 28 July. [95300]

Mr. Hain: The third Sierra Leone Contact Group meeting on 28 July continued Britain's leading role in encouraging international support for the people of Sierra Leone. Participants welcomed the signature of the Lomé Peace Agreement, and committed themselves to work towards lasting peace in Sierra Leone. Following a presentation by President Kabbah, the meeting agreed priorities for the future, and an action plan for the Government of Sierra Leone, the rebels and the international community. Welcome progress has since been made on a number of the priorities identified.

At the meeting, Britain announced further help for building lasting peace and democracy in Sierra Leone.

Copies of the Contact Group Concluding Statement are being placed in the House of Commons Library; it is also available on the FCO website (www.fco.gov.uk).

Tunisia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received an invitation to send independent observers to Tunisia to scrutinise the presidential and legislative elections arranged for 24 October. [95096]

Mr. Hain: No but we would of course consider one.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed with the Tunisian Government the question of democracy and human rights in that country. [95095]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not yet met his Tunisian counterpart or any senior member of the Tunisian Government. He hopes to do so in the near future. I last met the Tunisian Ambassador on 6 September. We had a wide-ranging discussion, including the human rights situation in Tunisia. I hope to visit Tunis before too long.

Tanzania

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Tanzanian Government about Hutu militia operating from its territory. [95226]

Mr. Hain: I discussed the security situation in the Burundi/Tanzania border area with the Tanzanian Foreign and Defence Ministers during my visit to Tanzania (14–15 October). The Government of Tanzania deny providing support of any kind to Hutu militia groups, and are making efforts to improve security in the border region in western Tanzania where the refugee camps are located.

Colombia

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the proposals contained in the Plan Colombia. [95287]

Mr. Battle: Plan Colombia was presented at UNGA by President Pastrana. It is intended to highlight the Colombian Government's future strategy. The key proposals are:

i) an economic strategy, using fiscal and financial austerity measures to re-establish Colombia's position in international markets;

ii) a drugs strategy, aiming to reduce cultivation and distribution by half over six years. The strategy is to have full regard for human rights;

iii) strategy for democracy and social development, focusing on human rights, reduction of judicial impunity, forced displacement of communities, alternative crops to drug cultivation, the environment and training of local leaders;

iv) the peace strategy, with recognition of the role of civil society and the need for an effective presence of the army and police in all parts of Colombia;

v) the role of the international community, which could participate in the peace process as mediator and verifier. The international community should also condemn terrorist acts and human rights violations.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the Colombian peace process. [95286]

Mr. Battle: We support the Colombian Government's efforts to bring peace and stability to Colombia. We hope that the latest round of peace talks, which are due to start again on 24 October, will lead Colombia towards a lasting solution to its internal conflict.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received from Southern Sudan regarding the activities of the Arab militia. [95239]

Mr. Hain: We continue to receive reports from UN agencies and other NGOs working in the field of military activity conducted by a variety of militia groups in southern Sudan.

During October, both the Government of Sudan and the SPLA made further ceasefire commitments. We shall continue to promote the cause of peace in Sudan.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made with peace talks to end the civil war in Sudan. [95238]

Mr. Hain: The Government have continued to devote considerable effort to the peace process in the Sudan and has been an active member of the IGAD Partners Forum (IPF). On 20 October, the IPF agreed on the terms of reference and budget for their proposal for a permanent peace Secretariat in Nairobi. This will have as its objective a sustained and accelerated negotiation and a Special Envoy has already been appointed. We will contribute financially to the running of the Secretariat and will remain in close contact with the Special Envoy and all the parties in order to support the peace process in any way we can. I met the special envoy two weeks ago in Nairobi to discuss progress.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received from Southern Sudan regarding progress with the oil pipeline due to be operational in July. [95240]

Mr. Hain: The oil pipeline was formally opened on 30 August by President Bashir. On 19 September, an explosion east of Atbara damaged the pipeline but I understand that it was quickly repaired.

Arms Exports

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions the UK has initiated consultations on an export licence which has been denied by another member state under the consultation arrangements specified in the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports; what were the outcomes of these consultations; on how many occasions other member states have initiated consultations on export licences which have been denied by the United Kingdom; and what were the outcomes of these consultations. [95644]

Mr. Hain: Operative Provision 4 of the EU Code of Conduct states:

"Member states will keep . . . consultations [under the Code] confidential".

We interpret this as including the outcomes of such consultations.

The first annual report on the operation of the Code of Conduct, which has been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, records that between June 1998, when the Code was adopted, and September 1999, the UK was involved in seven bilateral discussions concerning denials issued either by the UK or by other member states. Several of these discussions focused on whether a proposed export was essentially identical to that covered by a denial notification, although in some cases there was also a substantive exchange of views on the proposed export. We would not therefore characterise all of these discussions as formal consultations under the Code of Conduct.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which UK officials are participating in the implementation of the EU code of Conduct on Arms Exports; what progress was made at the review meeting on 21 September in Brussels; and if he will make a statement. [95690]

Mr. Hain: The EU Code of Conduct establishes criteria which are to be applied to export licence applications covering all goods on the UK Military List, and dual-use goods where there are grounds for believing that the end-user will be the armed forces or internal security forces. Licences to export arms and other goods whose export is controlled for strategic reasons are issued by the Trade and Industry Secretary acting through the Export Control Organisation of the Department of Trade and Industry, which circulates all relevant applications to other Departments with an interest, as determined by those Departments in line with their policy responsibilities, including the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Department of International Development. All of the above Departments therefore have a role in implementing the Code of Conduct.

Lead responsibility for policy issues relating to the Code of Conduct rests with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, which consults other interested Departments as necessary, including those listed above.

The meeting of the CFSP Working Group on Conventional Arms Exports (COARM) on 21 September agreed the text of the first annual report on the operation of the Code of Conduct since its adoption on 8 June 1998. The report summarises member states' experiences of the Code, and gives a detailed account of practical steps taken to support the operation of the Code and priorities for future action. A meeting of the Council of Ministers on 11 October took note of the report and decided to publish it in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [93995]

Mr. Vaz: We are aware of the following attachments from Central, East European and CIS States to UK Government Departments this year:

Czech Republic

One official from the Ministry of the Interior's Refugee Department on a two-week work placement at Heathrow Airport. Three officials from the Environmental Inspectorate on a study visit to Heathrow, looking at protection of endangered species. Two Government human rights officials on a two-week work placement at the Commission for Racial Equality.

Estonia

The Head of the European Union Department was attached to the European Union Department (External) (EUDE) in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) from 12–23 April.

Hungary

The Head of the EU Political Relations Department was attached to the Common Foreign and Security Policy Department (CFSPD) in the FCO for one week in September.

Lithuania

One official attached to CFSPD in the FCO from 15–26 February.

Poland

One environmental official currently on a five-month secondment to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR).

Romania

One official attached to the FCO for three days in Spring 1999.

Russia

One official from the Ministry of the Economy attached to the DETR for four weeks in April/May. Two officials attached to the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) for 3–4 weeks (all organised by the Civil Service College as part of the EU TACIS programme).

Slovakia

One official attached to CFSPD in the FCO for 2–3 weeks in May.

Slovenia

Two officials attached to the FCO, one from 19–23 April and one from 6–17 September. One official on a one-month fact-finding mission to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) in early summer.

We are not aware of any requests for attachments that were not accepted.

South Eastern Europe Table

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) UK and (b) other representatives on the South Eastern Europe Regional Table and Working Tables on (i) democratisation and human rights, (ii) economic reconstruction and (iii) security issues; what timetable and action plans have been devised for meetings of these groups; who will be the chairs of the individual tables; and if he will make a statement. [95691]

Mr. Vaz: The UK's representatives at the first Stability Pact Working Table meetings were as follows:

(i) Democratisation and Human Rights—Our delegation was led by the Head of the Foreign Office Information Department (to present the UK's proposal for a Media Charter) with support from Eastern Adriatic Department at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. There were also delegates from the Department for International Development and our delegation to the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) in Vienna.

(ii) Economic Reconstruction—Our delegation was led by a representative from Economic Policy Department at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. There were also representatives from the Foreign Office Eastern Adriatic Department and from the Department for International Development.

(iii) Security Issues—Representatives from the Foreign Office's Eastern Adriatic Department and, for the Justice and Home Affairs Sub-Table, from Human Rights Policy Department within the FCO.

Attendance at Working Table meetings is flexible and appropriate experts will be called upon as necessary.

Other representatives at the three Working Tables are from Foreign Ministries and other government experts from full Participants, Facilitators and Observers to the Stability Pact.

The Work Plan for the Pact was agreed at the first Regional Table meeting on 16 September. All three Working Tables met in the first half of October. They are all due to meet again end January/early February 2000.

The Chairs of the individual Tables are:

Democracy and Human Rights—Max van der Stoel (OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities)

Economic Reconstruction—Fabrizio Saccomanni (Director General for International Affairs, Central Bank of Italy)

Security Issues—Jan Eliasson (State Secretary, Foreign Ministry of Sweden)

The United Kingdom remains committed to the Stability Pact as a force for co-operation, change and peace in the region. We look forward to concrete progress following the Working Table meetings, but impetus must come from the countries of the region.

Kosovo

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many have been arrested in Kosovo for crimes against Serbian civilians since NATO liberated Kosovo. [94933]

Mr. Vaz: Specific figures for those arrested for crimes against Serbian civilians since NATO liberated Kosovo are not currently available from UNMIK.

I can disclose that 200 individuals are currently in prison for committing various crimes. The ethnic breakdown of those individuals is: 1 Montenegrin, 1 Macedonian, 1 Bosniac, 4 Roma, 36 Serbs and 157 Albanians.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent murder of a UN official in Kosovo; and if any arrests have been made over the crime. [94934]

Mr. Vaz: We wholeheartedly condemn the recent murder of UN worker Valentin Krumov. There can be no excuse or justification for such acts of violence. The death of a UN employee just starting his work to contribute to the reconstruction of Kosovo is particularly tragic.

We join our international colleagues in calling for swift action to bring those responsible to justice. The forces of law and order in Kosovo under the direction of the United Nations Interim Administration in Kosovo (UNMIK) have launched an investigation which is on-going. I can therefore give no further details at this stage.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what steps NATO has taken to make clear that Serbs have a settled future in Kosovo; and if steps will be taken to encourage Serbian civilians to stay there; [94936]

(2) what action is being taken by NATO in Kosovo to protect the lives of civilian Serbs. [94935]

Mr. Vaz: The NATO-led international force in Kosovo, KFOR, has from the beginning of its deployment tried to persuade Serb citizens in Kosovo to remain in the province. KFOR troops, as part of their routine duties, maintain close contact with Serb citizens in Kosovo in order to help deter any violence against them, and so encourage them to remain.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Education Spending

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the levels of spending on education per head of population in (a) Staffordshire and (b) each other county of England (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the last three years. [94014]

Ms Estelle Morris: A table has been placed in the Library giving information by each county in England from 1996 onwards.

Accurate information per head of population is not available for each of the years requested. Information has, therefore, been provided on the basis of expenditure per pupil.

Key Stages 2 and 3

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many schools made representations to him in favour of revising the dates announced in June 1998 for the year 2000 statutory test dates for Key Stages 2 and 3; [94910]

(2) what date he decided to alter the dates announced in June 1998 for the year 2000 statutory tests for Key Stages 2 and 3; and on what date the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority issued Circular 040/99. [94911]

Jacqui Smith: Since the original test dates were published, a number of schools and some Local Education Authorities have made representations to the Department for Education and Employment and the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority in favour of revising the test dates for Key Stage 2 and 3 in 2000. David Hart, General Secretary of the National Association of Headteachers, supported the decision to move the test dates, recognising that the Government were responding positively to the genuine concerns of his members.

The decision to put back both the Key Stage 2 and 3 test dates by one week in the year 2000, was made on 14 July. Schools were notified by Circular 040/99 issued by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority on 16 July which reached schools by 20 July.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many schools have been granted a timetable variation in respect of the year 2000 statutory test dates for (a) Key Stage 2 and (b) Key Stage 3; which alternative weeks have been offered to those schools; and how many schools have been offered which alternative weeks; [94909]

(2) how many schools have applied for a timetable variation for the year 2000 statutory test dates for (a) Key Stage 2 and (b) Key Stage 3 which were announced in circular 040/99 in July; and how many of those applications have been agreed by the Qualifications Curriculum Authority. [94912]

Jacqui Smith: This is a matter for the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

New Deal

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the amount spent per head of the population in Lancashire on the New Deal since its introduction. [94188]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 19 October 1999]: Almost £6.75 million has been spent in the county of Lancashire, for the New Deal for Young People, aged 18–24, and the New Deal for those aged 25 plus, between April 1998 and 31 August 1999.

A total of 6,896 people entered into the New Deal for Young People and 2,232 people entered into the New Deal for those aged 25 plus to the end of July 1999 and on 31 July 1999.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if people who leave the New Deal without a job are listed as long-term unemployed if they were listed as long-term unemployed before they entered the New Deal. [94189]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 19 October 1999]: New Deal exists to get long-term unemployed people off benefit and into work. New Deal for Young People has been successful in doing this for 135,000 young people. In those cases where a young person reaches the end of their New Deal option and has still not obtained a job, they will enter a follow-through period and start a new claim to Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) whilst engaging in intensive job search activity with the assistance of their personal adviser. In these specific cases, unemployment duration is calculated from the date they returned to JSA.

Participants in the New Deal for Long-Term Unemployed People aged 25 plus who remain on JSA throughout will remain classed as long-term unemployed on leaving New Deal. If a jobseeker has an interruption to their claim, such as a period in subsidised employment or on Work-Based Learning for Adults, then their unemployment duration is calculated from the date they returned to JSA.

National Training Organisations

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of (a) the costs of setting up and (b) the annual running costs of the United Kingdom network of national training organisations; and what proportion of these costs will be carried within public funds. [94823]

Mr. Wicks: Since 1997 the Department has spent £151,854 on the independent panel assessing bids from organisations seeking to become national training organisations (NTOs). The Department does not hold complete information on the running costs of NTOs, most of which are met by employers, and is therefore unable to calculate the proportion of these costs carried within public funds.

Mathematics and Science Teachers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his reply of 27 July 1999, Official Report, column 180, on mathematics and science teachers, when he plans to write to the hon. Member for Hertsmere. [94918]

Ms Estelle Morris: The package of measures announced in October 1998 will affect teachers in the year 1999–2000. Information relating to returning teachers in 1999–2000 will not be published until the latter part of 2001. Copies of the relevant publications will be laid in the House of Commons Library.

Class Sizes

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the educational impact of class sizes of 41 or more. [94924]

Ms Estelle Morris: Evidence from Ofsted and others has shown that it is at Key Stage 1 that class size is most important, and that is why we have pledged to reduce the size of infant classes. Limiting the size of classes to 40 would have very little impact, whereas our pledge will ensure that all children benefit from infant classes of 30 or below. We are well on course to meet our pledge by September 2001 at the latest. More generally, the average size of classes taught by one teacher in all schools in England went down between January 1998 and January 1999, from 24.9 to 24.8.

Youth Service

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to publish a Green Paper on the Youth Service. [95077]

Mr. Wicks: We have recently carried out a broad consultation exercise, announced in the Social Exclusion Unit's report "Bridging the Gap", about the establishment of a new service to provide support to young people. The key aim of this service will be to create a comprehensive support structure for all young people in the 13–19 age group. It will build mainly on what is currently undertaken by the Careers Service, parts of the Youth Service and a range of other specialist agencies. We will consider the role the Youth Service will play within the new structure in the light of the consultation responses.

English SATs

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the qualifying marks for Level 4 of the Key Stage 2 English SATs in the last three years. [95101]

Jacqui Smith: The qualifying marks for Level 4 of the Key Stage 2 English SATs in the last three years were 1999—48 marks, 1998—51 marks and 1997—52 marks.

The level thresholds are the number of marks needed to achieve a specific level in the National Curriculum tests at Key Stages 2 and 3. The level setting procedures are the final stage of the test development process. The level-setting exercise is in two stages and draws on statistical data, from pre-testing and from a sample of live tests, and expert judgments made by test developers, teachers and markers concerning the difficulty of the test and the quality of pupils answers.

The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) is responsible for setting and maintaining the standards in the tests, and the level thresholds are designed to ensure that standards remain constant from year to year. For this reason the thresholds do not normally remain the same each year but change in response to the relative difficulty of the tests. They have changed in every year since the tests started in 1995.

In view of debate over the level thresholds this year, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment established an independent panel, with cross-party representation nominated by the shadow Secretary of State for Education and Employment and the Liberal Democrats' education spokesman.

The independent panel reported their findings in July. The panel was convinced that the concerns about the arrangements for setting, and maintaining the standards of the tests were without foundation. It was their view that the current method of setting standards for the National Curriculum tests appears to be the most rigorous standard-setting procedure in use in any educational tests anywhere in the country and that our system of national tests is well in advance of many, if not all, of our international counterparts.

Student Drop-out Rates

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students dropped out of their courses of higher education in each of the past five years; what proportion this represents of the student population; and what is the variation in the drop-out rate between institutions. [94946]

Mr. Wicks: The available information is full-time and sandwich first degree non-completion rates for the UK, and is published in the Departmental Annual Report. It is as follows:

UK[1] full-time and sandwich first degree non-completion rates

Percentage

	Non-completion[2]
1993–94	17–18
1994–95	17–18
1995–96	18–19

[1] The institutional coverage of the non-completion rates is restricted to the former UFC-funded universities in the UK and former polytechnics in England.

[2] "Non-completion" covers all those leaving degree courses because of exam failure, ill health, personal and other reasons. It includes those switching to a lower level course but it excludes students transferring between degree courses or subjects.

Ranges are given because the introduction of a new data source in 1994–95 made it difficult to measure non-completion, under existing definitions, accurately. For the same reason, it has not yet been possible to calculate accurate non-completion rates for later years than 1995–96. "Non-completion" covers those who leave full-time and sandwich first degree courses for various reasons, including exam failure, but students who failed their final examinations are not separately identified.The Department is currently working with the higher education funding bodies in the UK to calculate sector-level non-completion rates which will be extended to cover all UK higher education institutions, and which take into account the wider variety of patterns of attendance of students, including changing courses or institutions, repeating years or leaving higher education for a year or more before continuing their studies.

In addition, information on student progression for individual higher education institutions in the UK is due to appear in the Higher Education Funding Council for England's "Higher Education Performance Indicators" later in the year.

New Qualifications

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what response he has sent to proposals from the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority for a new qualification framework at degree level. [94944]

Mr. Wicks: The independent Quality Assurance Agency for Higher Education published a consultative paper on Higher Education Qualifications Frameworks on 18 October, requesting responses by 20 December. The Department has received copies of the paper and will be considering whether to comment.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received about creating a national register of school playing fields. [95186]

Jacqui Smith: The Department has received representations from both the National Playing Fields Association (NPFA) and the Central Council of Physical Recreation (CCPR) about creating a national register of playing fields, including school playing fields. Sport England, with the support of the Department for Culture, Media, and Sport, the NPFA and the CCPR, have been working with local authorities on a suitable model for a register which can be used by local authorities to undertake assessments of all playing field need and provision in their area, including school playing fields.

Literacy Hour

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many members of the People's Panel responded to the recent research on the Literacy Hour; how many of those were parents with primary school-age children; and if he will publish the questions asked on the Literacy Hour. [95103]

Ms Estelle Morris: 1,003 responded to the question on the literacy hour, of which 160 had children aged 5–10 in the household.

Fuller results are published on the internet (www.servicefirst.gov.uk).

Student Mentors

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students will be recruited as student mentors; what will be their terms and conditions of employment; if it will be subject to the consent of the higher education institutions in which they are enrolled; and if such appointments will be subject to competitive selection procedures, prior or in-course training and independent evaluation of performance. [94947]

Ms Estelle Morris: A pilot project of student mentoring is to be trialled in secondary schools in a number of Education Action Zones. About 600 students from six volunteer universities will be working as mentors, contracted on an annual basis to provide up to 120 hours of mentoring per year. They will be supervised and supported by their universities. There will be a rigorous selection process for mentors, including one-to-one interviews and accredited training. The project will be subject to independent evaluation.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [93996]

Jane Kennedy: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer given today by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz).

Paddington Train Crash

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Lord Chancellor intends to exercise his powers under section 71 of the Access to Justice Act 1999 in relation to the Paddington train crash. [95107]

Jane Kennedy: Section 71 of the Access to Justice Act 1999 is not yet in force. The Lord Chancellor is considering when the section should be implemented and whether it will apply to the inquiry chaired by Lord Cullen into the Paddington train crash.

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by his Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94842]

Jane Kennedy: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office.

HEALTH

Insulin Injectors and Pens

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when pen needles for diabetics' insulin injectors will become available on the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [94425]

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what decision he has reached about his proposal to prevent pre-filled insulin injection pen systems being available on prescription for diabetics; [95105]

(2) what estimate he has made of the amount that would be saved by the NHS if pre-filled insulin injection pen systems were no longer available to diabetics on prescription; and if he will publish a cost-benefit analysis of the proposal. [95106]

Mr. Denham: We have consulted on proposals which would include allowing insulin pen needles to be prescribed by general practitioners on the National Health Service. We have received representations from most of the organisations consulted. We are considering them, and are seeking clarification on certain points before we make our final decisions.

PFIs (Lancashire)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private finance initiatives are currently in operation within the Health Service in Lancashire. [94185]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 19 October 1999]: There are four schemes at various stages of preparation. They are at Bay Community National Health Service Trust; Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley Health Care NHS Trust (two schemes); and Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde Community NHS Trust.

Single-sex Wards

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress has been made in achieving single-sex wards in psychiatric units to the extent that there are no male patients anywhere in women-only wards; [94355]

(2) if all new psychiatric in-patient units are being constructed on the basis of the segregation of the sexes. [94356]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service Executive has a clear objective to work towards the elimination of mixed sex accommodation in 95 per cent. of health authority areas by the year 2002. The NHS Executive has set three national objectives:

to ensure that appropriate organisational arrangements are in place to secure good standards of privacy and dignity; to fully achieve the current Patient's Charter standard for segregated washing and toilet facilities across the NHS; to provide safe facilities for patients in hospital who are mentally ill, which safeguards their privacy and dignity.

For the third objective, the latest progress report indicates that 56 per cent. of health authorities expect to achieve this by the end of 1999. 97 per cent. of health authorities expect to meet it by 2002.

We will shortly publish new guidance for mental health units to reinforce earlier guidance designed to ensure the privacy, safety and dignity of patients. This guidance will also help to ensure that new NHS buildings will be constructed on the basis of having segregated accommodation for male and female patients.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will define single-sex wards in relation to (a) sleeping, (b) washing, (c) eating and (d) socialising facilities. [94357]

Mr. Denham: Single-sex accommodation in hospitals is defined by compliance with the Government's national objectives to secure good standards of privacy and dignity for patients, to ensure that washing and toilet facilities are segregated and to provide safe facilities for the mentally ill.

Skin Cancer Campaign

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of schools in each health authority agreed to participate in the Health Education Authority's skin cancer campaign, Sun Know How. [94059]

Yvette Cooper: The Health Education Authority (HEA) has produced sun safety guidelines for schools including a good practice guide on the use of sunscreens. Although the authority does not at present hold statistics on the percentage of schools in each health authority that participated in the Sun Know How campaign, representatives of around 80 per cent. of health and local authorities receive comprehensive support, including training, resources and policy advice.

In 1999, the HEA supported the first ever Sun Care for Schools campaign which aims to raise awareness of sun protection and make reduced price sunscreen available to schools. To date, 110 local education authorities in England support the campaign, with over 3,000 schools taking part, reaching over six million school children.

Emergency Contraception

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has issued to general practitioners regarding prescribing of emergency contraception prospectively. [93877]

Yvette Cooper: There is no guidance to general practitioners dealing exclusively with the advance prescribing of hormonal emergency contraception. This is a matter for clinical judgment. The responsibility for deciding what treatment is best for the patient rests with the doctors concerned, in consultation with the patient and informed by the patient's history.

Health Development Agency

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the proposed Health Development Agency will be established. [93872]

Yvette Cooper: We are currently considering options for establishing a new Health Development Agency and succeed the Health Education Authority. However, we anticipate that the Health Development Agency will be launched early in the New Year, subject to parliamentary approval.

Benzodiazepine

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish respite care and detoxification units for people who are addicted to benzodiazepine drugs. [93727]

Yvette Cooper: Decisions about the commissioning of drug treatment services are made locally by health and local authorities on the basis of local need. Assessment of the need for specialist services, such as particular services for users of benzodiazepines, should inform these commissioning decisions.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Government routinely record the occupation of people in whom infection with bovine tuberculosis is identified. [94536]

Yvette Cooper: Information on the occupation of individuals notified with tuberculosis in England and Wales is sought on the standard notification form. This information is used locally.

Reports of M.bovis infections are collated by the Public Health Laboratory Service Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre as part of a scheme called in the UK Mycobacterial Resistance Network (Mycobnet). On receipt of a report of M.bovis infection, a questionnaire is sent to the local consultant in communicable disease control inquiring, among other things, about whether the individual had an agricultural occupation (including working on a farm) or other animal contact.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of human tuberculosis and bovine tuberculosis were confirmed in humans in 1997 and 1998. [94535]

Yvette Cooper: A total of 5,859 cases of tuberculosis were notified in England and Wales in 1997 and 6,087 in 1998. 3,229 and 3,456 respectively were microbiologically confirmed. Of these confirmed cases, 29 cases in 1997 were due to M.bovis infection and 32 cases in 1998.

Social Workers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will include in the code of conduct for the General Social Care Council a requirement to establish and publish plans for monitoring the extent of (a) violence and (b) stress experienced by social workers, and to recommend to Government what action is necessary to minimise such pressures on social workers. [94721]

Mr. Hutton: We are determined to reduce substantially the incidence of violence towards everyone working in social care. We have set up a task force to produce a National Action Plan by November 2000 with recommendations and timescales for action to reduce violence against social care staff and to promote the safety and welfare of social care workers. We will also ensure that in drawing up its code of practice for employers the General Social Care Council includes practical references to dealing with violence.

Oxfordshire Health Reorganisation

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make an announcement on the proposals by Oxfordshire health authority for reorganisation of community health facilities in Oxfordshire and the Bicester community hospital. [94939]

Mr. Denham: We fully recognise the concerns of the local community on such an important issue.

We are carefully considering all options before reaching a final decision on the future arrangements for community hospitals in Oxfordshire and the future of Bicester Community Hospital.

Latex Allergy

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to encourage greater awareness of allergy to latex among (a) health professionals and (b) the general public; and what research in this area he is supporting. [94949]

Mr. Denham: The Department is aware of the problems associated with latex allergy for patients and healthcare workers in the National Health Service. The NHS Executive has recently issued guidance to all NHS trusts and health authorities on reducing the risk of allergic reaction to latex. This follows recommendations made to the Health Service in 1996 (Medical Devices Agency DB9601) which was re-issued with further advice in 1998 (Medical Devices Agency SN9825). The Department is an active participant in the European Commission Working Group which is investigating issues surrounding the use of medical devices made of latex and is also funding a study into the prevention of occupational skin disease in the workplace.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to fund further clinical trails of beta interferon if NICE were to recommend them. [95157]

Mr. Denham: Each case will be considered on its merits, but the presumption will be that research which is reasonably required to assess the clinical and cost effectiveness of products for use in the NHS should be funded by the relevant company. Under certain circumstances, some funding from the public sector may be appropriate, for example where there is no clear sponsoring company for an intervention to be appraised by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. The Department will make sure that, under such circumstances, any research falling to the public purse is taken forward by the appropriate body.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the responses to the consultation on the paper, "Faster access to modern treatment", on (a) the composition of the NICE appraisal group and (b) the format of NICE guidance. [95182]

Mr. Denham: Some 75 respondents to the discussion paper "Faster access to modern treatment" commented on aspects of the composition of the appraisal group and 25 on the format of the guidance. We are unable to list individual respondents since the invitation to comment did not seek permission for the detailed nature of the responses to be made public.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the groups that represent the interests of the disabled that are on the advisory body of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. [R] [95705]

Mr. Hutton: The Partners' Council of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has representatives from the following eight organisations:

Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales
Carers National Association
Long Term Medical Conditions Alliance
Patients Association
Wales Council for Voluntary Action
Association of Welsh Community Health Councils
The Relatives Association
National Consumer Council.

A further four members of the Partners' Council are patient representatives, chosen for their experience and expertise as either patients or carers. The Institute's board of directors has two non-executive members who have special interest in the needs of carers.

Child Migrants

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to review the eligibility criteria for former child migrants as to their entitlement to support for (a) air fares and (b) living allowance; [95155]

(2) what plans he has to allow former child migrants whose nearest living relatives are cousins to qualify for support to return to the United Kingdom. [95156]

Mr. Hutton: The eligibility criteria for access to the Support Fund are kept under regular review. Demand is currently running at a level which suggests that the Fund will be fully subscribed with the current criteria, which are designed to give priority to reuniting close family members.

Extending the scheme to others (including those wishing to meet cousins) would substantially enlarge its scope and would mean that there might be insufficient funding available to help this priority group. We do not therefore at present have any plans to amend the criteria.

Demand on the Fund will however continue to be closely monitored and should it appear that the Fund will not be fully subscribed, we will consider whether revised criteria might be appropriate.

Residential Accommodation (Elderly People)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his proposals for reforming the funding of residential accommodation for the elderly. [93758]

Mr. Hutton: The Royal Commission on Long-Term Care was asked to examine the options for funding long-term care, including residential care for elderly people. We are carefully considering the Royal Commission's proposals, the divergences of view within the Royal Commission and the comments that have been made by various organisations and individuals. We will make an announcement in due course.

Foster Care Standards

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he will be taking to ensure that independent fostering agencies are inspected against the recently introduced National Standards in Foster Care in order to ensure the safety and protection of vulnerable children likely to be placed with such agencies. [95528]

Mr. Hutton: As we announced in the White Paper "Modernising Social Services", independent fostering agencies (IFAs) will be brought into the regulatory framework and will have to be registered and inspected by the new Commissions for Care Standards (CCSs). This will of course be subject to the introduction of appropriate legislation. The National Standards for Foster Care will be used as a basis for developing new regulatory standards for the CCSs. As an interim measure the Department is planning to introduce a voluntary accreditation scheme for IFAs.

Sponsorship

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to those health professionals that are sponsored or paid by commercial organisations in relation to declaring an interest when recommending products. [R] [95702]

Mr. Denham: Guidance on standards of business conduct for National Health Service staff including when to declare an interest when recommending products is set out in Health Service Guidance (93)5. More recently, Executive Letter (96)12 was issued on 16 February 1996 again reminding National Health Service employers of the importance of avoiding potential conflicts of interest.

Copies of these documents are available in the Library. The National Health Service Executive is currently consulting on new guidelines.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what amount of money is currently held in the National Lottery distribution fund which has not been allocated to Lottery distributors. [95142]

Kate Hoey: None. All of the money held in the National Lottery Distribution Fund is allocated to Lottery distributors.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will list those parties which have applied for the new licence to operate the National Lottery; [95141]

(2) if he will make a statement on progress towards appointing a contractor to operate the new licence to run the National Lottery. [95139]

Kate Hoey: Responsibility for appointing the operator for the new National Lottery licence rests with the Lottery regulator, the National Lottery Commission. The Commission issued a draft Invitation to Apply for the new licence and a draft licence on 30 September 1999 and invited comments from potential bidders. The Commission aims to issue the final Invitation to Apply and a revised draft licence by the end of November 1999. Bidders will be asked to submit Letters of Intent by 7 January 2000. The deadline for applications is noon on 29 February 2000.

No applications have yet been received for the new licence.

British Library

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the appointment of a chief executive at the British Library. [95146]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The British Library Board intends to appoint a new Chief Executive next year and will shortly be issuing an advertisement for the post. My Department will be closely involved in the appointment.

Tourism

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received regarding proposals to introduce a rating system for visitor attractions; and if he will make a statement. [95143]

Janet Anderson: I have received representations from the Historic Houses Association regarding its concerns about a scheme in the West Country and rumours of a national scheme.

The Government are concerned to maintain and improve standards of quality in visitor attractions but there are no plans to introduce a national rating system for visitor attractions.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of visits to UK tourist attractions in each year since 1991; and what his estimate is for 1999. [95205]

Janet Anderson: The number of visits to UK attractions since 1991 is estimated as follows:

millions

Year	Number of visits
1991	333
1992	357
1993	367
1994	387
1995	392
1996	402
1997	409
1998	408

Source:
Sightseeing in the UK, English Tourism Council

Data for 1999 are not yet available.

Statistics for different years are not always comparable, because the number of attractions whose figures have been included has varied over the years, reflecting survey developments and the growth in the number of attractions.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the balance of payments surplus or deficit on tourism (a) in each year since 1995 and (b) for 1999. [95204]

Janet Anderson: Data from the International Passenger Survey show the following balance of payments for tourism in the period from 1995 to August 1999:

£ millions

	Exports	Imports	Balance
1995	11,763	15,386	–3,623
1996	12,290	16,223	–3,933
1997	12,244	16,931	–4,687
1998	12,671	19,489	–6,818
1999[1]	8,625	14,290	–5,665

[1] First 8 months

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the DETR regarding the impact on tourism of the dualling of the remainder of the A30 in Cornwall. [95194]

Janet Anderson: When I visited Cornwall in August, the dualling of the A30 between Bodmin and India Queens was raised with me on a number of occasions. I know that this road improvement is regarded as crucial to the development of tourism in the county, where we are investing heavily through Objective 1, Assisted Area grants and in a major Millennium project. I raised the matter with Lord Whitty at DETR on my return.

Lord Whitty informed me that the Highways Agency has recently awarded a new commission appointing consultants for the scheme which will enable development work to start straight away. It is hoped that a public consultation will take place later this year and that a solution which will benefit tourism in Cornwall will follow.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had about tourism courses in (a) higher education and (b) further education. [95202]

Janet Anderson: We have regular discussions with other Government Departments, tourism and hospitality bodies and relevant National Training Organisations, (in particular the Travel, Tourism Services and Events National Training Organisation and the Hospitality Training Foundation, the National Training Organisation for the hospitality industry) about the provision of tourism-related courses in both higher and further education.

National Arts Day

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will support plans to create a National Arts Day. [95131]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We are prepared to consider lending support to any practical and worthwhile project that would make a real contribution to our goal of bringing the benefits of the arts to the greatest number of people.

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the reasons for recent trends in the number of overseas visitors to the United Kingdom. [95140]

Janet Anderson: Since 1996, the number of visits from EU residents has been fairly constant; there has been a notable decline in visits from Asia and the Pacific, while the number of visits from the USA has risen sharply.

A number of factors underlie this mixed picture, for example, the strengthening of sterling against currencies of other EU members, and weakening consumer confidence in a number of EU countries; the financial crises in Asia; and the strong growth of the US economy, combined with increased airline capacity and lower air fares.

Art Exports

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he plans to review the rules governing the export of works of art. [95127]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We have no plans to review the export system.

School Sport

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the DfEE about the state of sport and physical education participation in schools, with particular reference to Ofsted inspections. [95209]

Kate Hoey: DCMS Ministers meet and have regular contact with their colleagues at DfEE to discuss a range of education issues, including PE and sport in schools. This topic is of particular importance at present, as we prepare our sports strategy paper. I recently met Chris Woodhead of Ofsted to discuss school inspections.

Millennium Commission (Projects)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on progress towards completion of the major capital projects funded by the Millennium Commission. [95119]

Janet Anderson: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will reply to the hon. Member in his capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of his reply in the Libraries of the House.

Regional Regeneration

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he has taken to ensure that Government regional offices involve (a) sport, (b) the Arts and (c) tourism in their plans for regeneration. [95197]

Janet Anderson: Our strategy document "Tomorrow's Tourism" and the Policy Action Team's report to the Social Exclusion Unit, "Arts & Sport", clearly illustrate how fundamental tourism, the arts and sport are to a successful regeneration programme.

Recently, my Department established a senior official in each of the Government Offices in the regions. They will champion the role, effectiveness and importance of these sectors for each region's regeneration strategy in one course of discussion on their Single Programme Documents, the framework by which EU Structural Funds are delivered, and the next Round (6) of the Single Regeneration Budget.

EU Agenda 2000

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of how much EU Agenda 2000 funding has been spent on (a) the arts and (b) sport (i) in cash terms and (ii) as a total of the Agenda 2000 money spent in England. [95196]

Janet Anderson: The European Commission has yet to approve the Single Programme Documents, the framework by which EU Structural Funds are delivered, for each of the country's nine regions. Consequently, it is too early to estimate a breakdown of EU Agenda 2000 funding on the arts. In terms of EU Structural Funds, sport is an ineligible activity.

Analogue Radio Frequencies

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the timetable for the switch-off of analogue radio frequencies. [95125]

Janet Anderson: Digital radio broadcasting is at an early stage of development in the UK. It is premature to set a timetable for the switch-over of analogue services to digital at this time. However, I look forward to the launch of the first national commercial digital radio services in November and to the future growth of commercial and BBC digital radio services.

Radio Authority

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his future plans for the Radio Authority. [95152]

Janet Anderson: We intend to set up a new dedicated unit in my Department to consider the future regulation of broadcasting, building on the interim measures set out in "Regulating Communications: the Way Ahead", which was published by my Department and the DTI in June.

Local Radio Licences

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list all applications for local radio licences which are currently under consideration by the Radio Authority, stating when each was lodged. [95151]

Janet Anderson: Independent radio licences are currently under consideration by the Radio Authority as follows:

Ten applications for new analogue licences:

three for Bridgend (received 22 June);
three for Newbury (received 27 July);
two for Burnley (received 7 September);
two for Hertford (received 5 October).

Seven applications for re-advertised licences:

two for Guernsey (received 12 October);
two for Jersey (received 12 October);
two for Alton/Haslemere (received 19 October);
one for Barnstaple under the 'special application' procedure (received 27 July).

Two applications for local digital radio multiplex licences:

one for Cardiff/Newport (received 14 September);
one for Wolverhampton (received 12 October).

British Museum

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the difference in cost between the stone in the specification originally detailed for the restoration of the south portico of the British Museum and that finally purchased; and if he will make a statement. [94446]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 19 October 1999]: I am advised by the British Museum that the stone is an oolitic limestone and therefore meets the original contract specification. I am also advised that the price of stone varies according to its size and the quantity needed, and that the price differential between Anstrude and Portland Stone is in the range of 10 to 20 per cent.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport for what reasons it was necessary to purchase an alternative to the Portland stone specified for the restoration of the south portico of the British Museum; and if he will make a statement. [94614]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I am advised by the British Museum that in line with European procurement regulations, the contract called for an oolitic limestone (Portland Stone from the basebed or similar). The rebuilding of the south portico is an exceptional example of architectural reconstruction, demanding some 60 massive blocks for the columns and pilasters. The contractor advised the Museum that stone of the required quality and size could not be procured in sufficient quantity from Portland. Another oolitic limestone, Anstrude Roche Claire, was therefore selected.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment was made of the visual properties and resistance to weathering and atmospheric pollution of alternative stone to Portland stone; prior to varying the specifications of the restoration of the south portico of the British Museum; and if he will make a statement. [94444]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 19 October 1999]: I am advised by the British Museum that there has been no variation to the specification, and the stone is fully compliant with the contract. The visual properties of the stone were assessed and approved by the Museum, its professional team and project monitors. The technical characteristics have been assessed by an independent body, and the Museum commissioned its own report. The courtyard will be under a new roof, so none of the new stone, neither the 900 tonnes of Portland Stone that is being used on the project, nor the Anstrude Roche Claire, will be subject to the same weathering as the original.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the stone used in the restoration of the south portico of the British Museum has the same visual properties and resistance to weathering and atmospheric pollution as Portland stone; and if he will make a statement. [94443]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 19 October 1999]: I am advised by the British Museum that there are minor differences in the visual properties and resistance to weathering and atmospheric pollution of the French Limestone. However, English Heritage has accepted that the stone is adequate. The stone will be in a covered courtyard, and therefore protected against the weathering effects of wind, rain and atmospheric pollution.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he was informed of the need to use alternative stone to that in the specification in the restoration of the south portico of the British Museum; and if he will make a statement. [94442]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 19 October 1999]: The stonework in question is being carried out on the South Portico of the Museum's inner courtyard. This portico was demolished in the 1870s and is being completely rebuilt. I am advised by the British Museum that the specification was for "oolitic limestone" (Portland Stone from the basebed or similar). The stone that is being used for the main body of the portico is Anstrude Roche Claire. This is an oolitic limestone of the Jurassic period, as is Portland Stone. It therefore complies fully with the specification and is not an alternative. The Museum has been working closely with the Heritage bodies throughout and notified them about the selection of Anstrude Roche Claire in June. English Heritage has accepted that the Anstrude Roche Claire is adequate. We inquired about the choice of stone in August.

Culture Consortiums

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects the Culture Consortiums to be fully functional. [95198]

Janet Anderson: We announced the appointment of the Chairs of the Regional Cultural Consortiums on 8 October 1999. They are:

Consortiums	Appointees
East of England	Graham Creelman
East Midlands	Venu Dhupa
North East	George Gill
North West	Felicity Goodey
South East	Sir David Watson
South West	Adrian Vinken
West Midlands	Baroness Christine Crawley
Yorkshire and Humberside	Chris Heinitz

The Chairs are now considering the appointment of members to the Consortiums. We expect that all the Consortiums will have held their first meetings before the end of the year. In London, under the GLA Bill currently before Parliament, instead of a Consortium, the Mayor will be responsible for appointing a Cultural Strategy Group for London to advise him or her.

Sports Cabinet

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the Sports Cabinet has met this year. [95192]

Kate Hoey: The Sports Cabinet met on 10 March and 6 October. Officials from this Department maintain regular contact with their colleagues in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland on those issues of most strategic priority for UK Sport.

Sports Institute Headquarters

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he had with representatives of Sheffield City Council about the decision to remove the headquarters site of the UK Sports Institute to London. [95207]

Kate Hoey: No specific discussions have been held with representatives of Sheffield City Council, though representatives of Phoenix Sports Limited (the company formed by members of the Sheffield Consortium) have met with Ministers from time to time to discuss general developments related to the proposals for the UK Sports Institute Network Centre Sheffield. Officers of the United Kingdom Sports Council (UK Sport) and the English Sports Council (Sport England) attended the Board Meeting of Phoenix Sports Limited on 7 October 1999. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has since agreed to meet representatives of Sheffield at a suitable time soon.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what criteria were used to determine that the headquarters of the UK Sports Institute should be in London; and (a) by whom and (b) when this decision was made. [95206]

Kate Hoey: It was originally envisaged that the UK Sports Institute headquarters would consist of around 200 staff providing a range of sports medicine and physiological services. In the light of discussions with the world of sport, and other developments both nationally and internationally, this view has been revised. With the new focus on a decentralisation of services to the network centres to better meet the requirements of athletes and coaches—and the need for a much smaller team at the centre—the UK Sports Council (UK Sport) considered it sensible to review how the central service functions could now best be delivered.

A full options analysis has been undertaken by PMP Consultancy on behalf of UK Sport. The criteria and relative weighting used to evaluate the qualitative aspects of the various options have been developed from the work undertaken by Dr. Roger Jackson, an internationally recognised expert in his field from the University of Calgary commissioned by UK Sport earlier this year to review and verify the role and functions of the UK Sports Institute headquarters/central services, and from the factors that will enable the Institute to do its job effectively. Seventeen different criteria were used covering (i) the impact on partnerships with key stakeholders; (ii) accessibility; (iii) resources; (iv) links with network centres; and (v) strategic role. The preferred option provided the greatest value for money in terms of qualitative benefit per £1 million of expenditure.

A summary of the options analysis was included in a paper about the UK Sports Institute prepared by my Department for consideration by the Sports Cabinet on 6 October. It was announced in a press statement on 7 October 1999 that the Sports Cabinet had agreed UK Sports' proposal that a headquarters is no longer required and what is now needed is co-ordination, support and administration from a body with a dedicated UK wide sports performance focus and responsibility. The preferred option meets these objects.

Volunteers

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the DfEE and the DSS about the effects of the benefits system on volunteers in (a) the Arts and (b) sport. [95193]

Kate Hoey: My Department recently published a report by Policy Action Team 10 (PAT 10), on how to maximise the impact on poor neighbourhoods of Government spending and policies on arts, sport and leisure. Other Government Departments including DfEE were represented on PAT 10. The report included a recommendation that

> 'the DfEE and DSS should work together to ensure that the benefits system does not penalise those who volunteer to help community-building activities or who want to take up training or work opportunities offered by small community organisations, and that it operates to meet the flexibility for developing artistic and sporting talent'.

My Department consulted with both DfEE and DSS regarding this recommendation prior to publication of the report and will be entering into further discussions with them in order to take the recommendation forward.

Horse Racing

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Home Office about the future departmental responsibility for the sport of horse racing. [95188]

Kate Hoey: Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State nor I have had any direct discussions with Home Office colleagues about the future departmental responsibility for the sport of horse racing. However, given the responsibilities of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in the horse industry and my own Department's interests in both racing and equestrianism, I intend to discuss with ministerial colleagues whether the current arrangements are satisfactory.

Broadcasting Standards Commission

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to review the functions of the Broadcasting Standards Commission. [95153]

Janet Anderson: We have no plans at present to review the functions of the Broadcasting Standards Commission. As "Regulating Communications: The Way Ahead" made clear, the Government believe the current system of broadcasting regulation, of which the BSC forms part, is broadly sustainable for the time being. However, I envisage that developments in broadcasting and communications will require a fundamental reassessment of broadcasting regulation, with the possibility of major new legislation early in the next Parliament.

Sports Strategy

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he will be publishing his Department's sports strategy. [95187]

Kate Hoey: The Government's Action Plan for sport will now be published early next year.

Voluntary Sports Clubs

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with (a) the Treasury and (b) the Home Office about charitable status for voluntary sports clubs. [95190]

Kate Hoey: My right hon. Friend and I are in regular contact with Ministerial colleagues in the Treasury and Home Office on a wide range of issues of mutual interest. Most recently we have been in contact with the Home Office and Charity Commission in relation to issues arising from the Commission's review of the Recreational Charities Act 1958 and the planned consultation dealing specifically with charitable status and community based sports organisations. My officials, together with those of Sport England, recently met representatives of the Charity Commission to discuss a range of issues relating to the charitable status for voluntary sports clubs.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received and from whom about charitable status for voluntary sports clubs; and if he will list them. [95189]

Kate Hoey: I have received representations in favour of granting charitable status to voluntary sports organisations from: Sport England, The Central Council of Physical Recreation, The National Playing Fields Association, and Lord Phillips and Lord Cowdray. Parliamentary Questions on this subject have recently been tabled for answer by my Department by my hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Reed) and the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones).

Policy Action Unit 10

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what resources his Department has devoted in terms of (a) money and (b) personnel to the monitoring of Policy Action Unit 10's recommendations on the arts and sport. [95195]

Kate Hoey: Staff throughout DCMS have been asked to incorporate promoting social inclusion into their divisional and personal objectives, including the advocacy, monitoring and follow-through of Policy Action Team 10's recommendations on arts and sport. £90,000 has been set aside this year for a programme of research into improved ways of monitoring and evaluating the success of cultural, sporting and leisure approaches to social inclusion.

Objective 1 Funding

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with (a) the West Country Tourism Board, (b) the Cornwall Tourism Board and (c) the DETR about possible projects to be undertaken with EU Objective 1 funding. [95201]

Janet Anderson: The Single Programme Document (SPD) for Objective 1 funding in the South West was presented to Government Departments for approval this week, prior to being submitted to the European Commission for approval.

I have had no discussions with the West Country Tourist Board, the Cornwall Tourism Board or the DETR about possible projects. However, I have asked my officials to assist in the preparation of the SPD, and discussions have taken place with the West Country Tourist Board, the Cornwall Tourism Board and DETR.

Business Partnerships

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the DTI about promoting partnerships between businesses and (a) the arts and (b) sport. [95200]

Kate Hoey: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had a number of discussions with colleagues in the DTI about promoting partnerships between business and arts and sports organisations. The vital contribution made to arts and sport by business is recognised across Government. In the arts, for example, my hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs participates in hosting receptions to recognise the contribution made by business sponsors through the Government's Pairing Scheme, managed by Arts and Business.

DTI Ministers have also responded positively to the report of the Policy Action Team on Arts and Sport which recommended that DTI should encourage the business links network to forge partnerships between businesses and art/sport organisations.

Manchester United

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what communications were sent by Ministers in his Department to Manchester

United concerning the club's participation in the FA Cup (a) before 29 July and (b) since 29 July; and if he will make a statement. [94710]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 19 October 1999]: The then Minister for Sport's letter of 10 June to Roland Smith was the only such communication.

I very much hope that a solution can be found and that Manchester United do compete in this season's FA Cup. Manchester United's exemption from the competition is ultimately something which only the FA could offer and only the Manchester United Board could decide to accept. Clearly any solution has to be acceptable to both these parties.

Playing Fields

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the DETR and DfEE regarding the sale of school playing fields in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [95210]

Kate Hoey: My right hon. Friend and I are in regular contact with Ministerial colleagues in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Department for Education and Employment on a wide range of issues of mutual interest including the important issue of protecting school playing fields. My right hon. Friend launched National School Grounds Week in June this year jointly with DETR and DfEE colleagues, at which the Government also announced details of the new procedural guidance on disposal of school playing fields. This builds on last year's DETR Direction requiring local authorities to refer the planning applications for the development of local authority owned playing fields and those currently used, or used in the past five years by schools, to which Sport England object.

Quest

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will report on the activities undertaken so far by the agency Quest. [95138]

Janet Anderson: The Quality, Efficiency and Standards Team (Quest) has been set up to identify, evaluate and promote good practice across the sectors for which my Department is responsible.

It works independently of the Department and reports directly to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The chief executive and advisory panel took up their appointments in July this year. The advisory panel has met to identify Quest's initial projects and draw up a work plan, details of which will be published shortly.

School Sports

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many school sports co-ordinators have been appointed to date. [95208]

Kate Hoey: None. We are working towards the appointment of the first Active Schools Sports Co-ordinators by September 2000.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces Personnel

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the policy of allowing armed forces personnel below the age of 18 years to serve in war zones, in peacekeeping or other combat roles; and if he will make a statement. [94344]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 19 October 1999]: The armed forces recruit only volunteers, and those who join under the age of 18 do so only with the written consent of parents and guardians. No personnel are deployed until they are well into their 17th year and only after they have undergone thorough professional training. Our recruitment and deployment policies are in line with international standards set by the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and the recent International Labour Convention 182 which prohibits the forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict.

Training (Armed Forces)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list average training days, by Army trade, for (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [95411]

Mr. Spellar: The information asked for is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the length of time typically taken for a soldier to progress from enlistment to completion of Specialist Training, i.e. to be sent to the Field Army as a trained soldier, is shown in the table, broken down by Arm or Corps. These times do not change significantly from year to year and are based on current information.

Days

Arm or Corps	Time in basic training	Time in specialist training	Total
Royal Armoured Corps	90	117	207
Infantry	90	138	228
Army Air Corps	90	175	265
Royal Artillery	90	111	201
Royal Engineers	90	505	595
Royal Signals	90	398	488
Royal Logistics Corps	90	282	372
Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers	90	559	649
Adjutant Generals Corps	90	62	152

Falkland Islands

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Falkland Islanders have enlisted in HM armed forces in each year since 1981. [95312]

Mr. Spellar: Data readily available indicate that:

Naval Service: since 1996, no Falkland Islanders have enlisted as ratings;

Army: since 1986, two Falkland Islanders have enlisted, joining in 1994–95 on Short Service Engagements;

RAF: since 1981, no Falkland Islander has enlisted.

In the case of the Naval Service and the Army, information prior to the dates indicated could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Falkland Islanders are currently serving in each service of HM armed forces. [95313]

Mr. Spellar: Data readily available indicate that there are no Falkland Islanders currently serving in the Naval Service, Army or RAF.

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on force levels in the Falkland Islands. [96090]

Mr. Hoon: The Government remain firmly committed to the defence of the Falkland Islands and the right of the Islanders to determine their own future. There are no plans to make changes to the front line strength of our forces stationed there. We have concluded however that minor adjustments can be made to some elements of the Falklands garrison without diminishing our ability to ensure the security of the Islands. These adjustments will reduce the number of service men and service women stationed there by around 100. The first of these adjustments, the withdrawal of a contingent of Royal Engineers, took place in early September. The remaining changes will be implemented over the coming months. These changes are a further demonstration of this Government's efforts to ease the burden on the armed forces where at all possible.

Northern Ireland

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans the General Officer Commanding in Northern Ireland has to close Army bases or establishments in the Province within the next three months. [95341]

Mr. Spellar: The General Officer Commanding in Northern Ireland keeps the operational requirement for Army bases in the Province constantly under review. No decision has been taken to close any base within the next three months.

Manpower Commitments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list total manpower commitments for the Armed Forces in each year since 1995; and what has been the total manpower available in each year. [95324]

Mr. Spellar: We do not hold information on total manpower commitments in the form that the hon. Member requests. These will vary at any point in a year depending on the circumstances. The total trained strength of the Armed Forces, including Gurkhas, on 1 April of each year since 1995 was as follows:

	Number
1 April 1995	226,328
1 April 1996	212,164
1 April 1997	197,390
1 April 1998	193,914
1 April 1999	190,506

Our commitment to achieve full manning in all three Services is a key component of the Strategic Defence Review (SDR). Recruiting is buoyant; for example, the Army have just had their best recruiting year this decade, and each Service is taking vigorous steps to tackle the problem of retention.

Under 18-year-olds

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many under-18-year-old UK service personnel are serving in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) Kosovo. [95684]

Mr. Spellar: As at 1 September 1999, the latest date for which figures are available, the numbers of UK service personnel under 18 years of age serving in Northern Ireland and Kosovo are:

Northern Ireland: 26

Kosovo: 49.

Iraq

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of United Kingdom military actions against Iraq in the current financial year; and what proportion of those costs have been borne by (a) UK public funds and (b) other sources. [95547]

Mr. Hoon: Information on the expenditure to date this year on ongoing military operations in the Gulf is not held centrally and could be collated only with disproportionate effort. However, excluding the value of assistance provided through host nation support, expenditure on such operations last year amounted to some £35 million, and is forecast to be some £28 million this year.

Disposal Sales Agency

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement setting out the key targets which have been set for the Disposal Sales Agency for financial year 1999–2000. [96020]

Mr. Spellar: Since its launch in October 1994 the Agency has brought in over £400 million in gross sales receipts and has achieved significant efficiency savings through contractorisation of the disposals business. The Key Targets which have been set for the Chief Executive of the Disposal Sales Agency for this financial year are aimed at a continued focus on receipts, much of which has been achieved through British companies participation, and to ensure continual improvement in efficiency and working practices.

The Chief Executive of the Agency has been set the following key targets for the financial year 1999–2000:

To achieve disposal sales income of £66 million from sales of surplus Government owned equipment and stores.

To reduce the unit cost of generating £1 million of sales to £62,500 from a baseline of £90,500 achieved in 1994–95.

To undertake customer satisfaction surveys designed to identify key issues and priorities, measure perceptions and expectations, and to communicate results and benefits of actions taken to Agency's customer base.

Bosnia

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the current security situation in Bosnia and the potential implications for the numbers of UK troops deployed there. [96088]

Mr. Hoon: The UK remains fully committed to supporting NATO operations in Bosnia. In conjunction with Allies, we have just completed a careful assessment of the current security situation in Bosnia. The situation has improved sufficiently in the four years since the deployment of the Implementation Force (IFOR) for NATO to move safely to a restructured force, of some 20,000 members. The implication for UK forces is that 900 personnel will now return to the UK, without replacement, before Christmas. The UK contribution to the Stabilisation Force (SFOR) will then stand at some 3,300.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will announce a decision on the way ahead for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency public private partnership proposals. [96089]

Mr. Hoon: Following the announcement on 6 July that further discussions with stakeholders were continuing, we have held consultations with interested parties, including UK industry, our international partners, DERA staff and trade unions. In response to the feedback we have received, and a number of views expressed, we have decided to widen the scope of these discussions to address the issues raised in the consultation process. We will now undertake further work on these issues. This process will continue into the New Year.

We continue to work positively for a PPP result which will strengthen DERA's ability to continue to provide world class scientific research and enable it to be a flexible and responsive organisation which can attract investment and develop new business, while at the same time preserving our essential defence interests and maintaining our valuable collaborative relationships.

Serbia

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 427, if he will make a statement on the progress of the Joint Task Force set up by the UN Environment Programme and the UN Commission on Human Settlements on the environmental effects of the conflict in Kosovo. [95810]

Mr. Hoon: The joint UN Environment Programme/UN Commission on Human Settlements Balkans Task Force issued its report "The Kosovo Conflict: Consequences for the Environment" on 5 October 1999. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library of the House.

Armed Forces (Running Costs)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number and running costs of (a) Royal Navy shore stations, (b) Army core headquarters and (c) RAF bases in (i) the South East of England, (ii) England, (iii) Scotland, (iv) Wales and (v) Northern Ireland. [95277]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Secondments

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel are (a) on secondment from UK armed forces serving with foreign armed services and (b) from abroad serving with UK armed forces, specifying their ranks and to which service they belong; and if he will make a statement. [95931]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [94001]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) gave on 25 October 1999, Official Report, columns 739–40.

Efficiency Savings

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a breakdown of the £594m of new efficiency improvements achieved in 1998–99, indicating where the savings were made; and if he will make a statement. [95551]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the letter sent on 27 July by the then Secretary of State, Lord Robertson, to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key), a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House. That letter provides a breakdown of the £594 million of new efficiency improvements in 1998–99, £89 million more than the target of £505 million.

Both service and civilian personnel made this achievement across all parts of my Department by seeking out genuine efficiencies. The extra efficiency gains have been retained by the defence budget and have contributed to funding other defence priorities. This further demonstrates the MOD's commitment to improving our capability and performance.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Biosafety Protocol

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what preparations her Department is making for input into the EU position for the next meeting of the Biosafety Protocol; and if she will make a statement. [94826]

Clare Short: My Department has been closely involved in the UK contribution to the EU position for the next meeting of the Biosafety Protocol to ensure that it takes account of developing country concerns.

Rwanda

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made on debt relief for Rwanda; and if she will make a statement on the Rwanda Trust Fund. [95237]

Clare Short: Rwanda's external debt burden is heavy. At the end of 1998, Rwanda's debt stock was around US$1.2 billion, equivalent to 59 per cent. of GDP.

Multilateral creditors account for over 80 per cent. of Rwanda's external debt stock. A Multilateral Debt Trust Fund was established in 1998 to service Rwanda's debts to the International Development Association, the African Development Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development over the period 1999–2001, using funds pooled by bilateral donors. The UK contributed £10.6 million to this Fund in 1999, as part of the disbursement of the £30 million of flexible assistance committed in the Development Partnership Understanding signed by the two Governments in April 1999. The Fund is expected to be adequately financed through to the end of 2000. The UK will keep under review whether a further UK contribution to the Multilateral Debt Fund might be appropriate.

We strongly support the agreement at the 1999 Annual Meetings of the IMF and World Bank to revise the framework for debt relief for heavily indebted poor countries (HIPC), and to link it to poverty reduction much more strongly. For Rwanda, the revisions mean additional debt relief, provided that it continues to pursue sound policies, and a start to this relief three years earlier than under the original HIPC framework. Rwanda's Decision Point, when it will start to receive its HIPC debt relief, is likely to be in the next year or so. The UK will press for the maximum reduction in multilateral debt servicing in the early years, consistent with Rwanda being able to spend the savings effectively on programmes to reduce poverty.

In July 1998, agreement was reached between Paris Club official bilateral creditors (Austria, Canada, France, Japan, the Netherlands and the United States) and Rwanda on a debt rescheduling on Naples terms. All the relevant bilateral agreements with Paris Club creditors have now been signed.

AIDS Research

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the use of the money earmarked by her Department for Aids vaccine research. [95285]

Clare Short: We are providing £14.2 million over 5 years to support the International AIDS Vaccine Initiative (IAVI) in developing an AIDS vaccine which is safe, effective and affordable for the developing world. This supplements our work with the Medical Research Council and the European Commission. IAVI are harnessing public and private human and financial resources to accelerate testing of a number of promising candidate AIDS vaccines suitable to market to developing countries within 10–15 years.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent reports she has received regarding food supplies in Bahr el Ghazal, Southern Sudan. [95236]

Clare Short: Latest reports show that food supplies in Bahr el Ghazal are relatively good this year and certainly much better than in 1998. The bulk of supplies consumed in the region are from local production but a top-up of food aid continues at a rate of between 3,000 and 4,000 metric tonnes per month. Although food aid deliveries are below planning figures, the low observed rates of malnutrition confirm improvements over the last year.

The UN Annual Needs Assessment for Sudan, which is being carried out by FAO and WFP, is presently under way. We await its results with interest.

PRIME MINISTER

Oleg Gordievsky

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what papers were passed during the past 10 years on the authority of (a) the Foreign Secretary, or (b) other Ministers, to Professor Christopher Andrew relating to Oleg Gordievsky, (i) in connection with his defection and (ii) in relation to other matters; and if he will make a statement. [94705]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 October 1999]: No such papers have been passed during this Government. I am not accountable for what happened under previous Governments.

Luxembourg Compromise

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions member states of the European Union (a) have invoked and (b) have threatened to invoke the Luxembourg Compromise. [95306]

The Prime Minister: There is no central record of the number of times member states have invoked or threatened to invoke the Luxembourg Compromise. We are not aware of any formal invocation since this Government took office.

Michael John Smith

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister (1) when Michael John Smith (prison number PR 3345) will receive a substantive reply to his letter of 10 January 1997 to the Secretary of the Security Commission; and what was the reason for the delay; [96168]

(2) why undertakings contained in the letter of 7 January 1998 from the Secretary of the Civil Service Commission to Michael John Smith (prison number 3345) were not fulfilled. [96167]

The Prime Minister: Mr. Smith last wrote on 3 August 1999 requesting a substantive reply to his letter of 10 January 1997. An acknowledgement was sent on 13 August by the current Secretary of the Security Commission also apologising for any earlier delays. A substantive response, approved by the Chairman of the Security Commission, was sent on 13 October 1999. This pointed out that the questions raised in Mr. Smith's letter of 10 January 1997 relating to the Security Commission Inquiry had already been dealt with in correspondence from the then Secretary of the Security Commission dated 20 December 1996 and in the Report of the Security Commission on Mr. Smith's case published in July 1995.

Robert Hamill

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received requesting that a judicial inquiry be held into the circumstances surrounding the murder of Robert Hamill; and if he will make a statement. [95356]

The Prime Minister: The Government have received a number of requests for an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the death of Robert Hamill. Whilst an inquiry has not been ruled out the Government take the view that this ought not to be considered while there is the possibility of disciplinary proceedings by the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary against police officers following the (Northern Ireland) Director of Public Prosecution's direction of no prosecution on 30 September 1999.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if fisheries policy will be negotiated at the forthcoming intergovernmental conference. [95786]

The Prime Minister: No. The Common Fisheries Policy will be reviewed in 2002.

Drugs

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister which is the lead Department in considering the effects of the drug pyridostigmine bromide in relation to the report of the RAND Corporation for the San Diego Veterans' Affairs Medical Centre. [95658]

The Prime Minister: The Ministry of Defence is taking the lead in considering the report of the review, by the RAND Corporation, of the scientific literature on pyridostigmine bromide as it pertains to Gulf War illnesses.

Former Paymaster General

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the officials in his Department who have held discussions with (a) the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) or (b) his representatives concerning the content of his memoirs. [95874]

The Prime Minister: None.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list his Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93679]

Dr. Howells: The spending on official publications since May 1997, which includes the costs incurred by the Department in publishing, preparation and production, was £13,206,319. This excludes the cost of publications produced for internal use. Where the Department makes use of a private sector publisher the publishing, printing and design costs are generally met by the publisher as part of their acceptance of the risks of publication.

In addition, my Department spent £221,154 on purchase of copies for official use from The Stationery Office between April 1997 and March 1999. Due to changes in ordering and payment systems this information is no longer held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Helium-Neon Lasers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much income his Department has received from Patent GB222 6443 Helium-Neon Lasers; when the patent came into force; and when it is due to expire. [94465]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 19 October 1999]: My Department has received income of £29,800 from patent "GB222 6443 Helium-Neon Lasers". It was filed on 5 May 1988, was granted on 8 January 1992 and is due to expire in 2008.

Y2K Product Liability

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on policy towards year 2000 product liability. [95409]

Dr. Howells: Computer equipment which is sold as year 2000 compliant and accessory equipment designed to fix systems so that they will be year 2000 compliant are subject to the Sale of Goods Act 1979. This requires goods to be of satisfactory quality and fit for their intended purpose. People suffering harm from defective products may have a right to compensation under Part I of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 which implemented the EC Product Liability Directive (85/374/EEC) into UK law.

Social Chapter

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those proposals within the social chapter remit which (a) have been placed before the Council since United Kingdom accession to that Chapter and (b) are currently being drafted; and what has been United Kingdom policy on each. [95296]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Social Chapter proposals placed before the Council since the United Kingdom's accession to that Chapter are:

a Commission proposal for a Council Directive concerning a Framework Agreement on Part-time Work (1997/81/EC) was forwarded to the Council on 28 July 1997. The Directive supports the Government's commitment to improving the functioning of the UK labour market by increasing its flexibility while providing a framework of minimum standards for workers.

a Directive concerning a Framework Agreement on Fixed-term Work (1999/70/EC) was forwarded to the Council on 30 April 1999. We support the aim of ensuring that fixed term contracts are not abused, while retaining flexibility. In implementing the directive, we will ensure that people's freedom to enter into contracts which suit their circumstances is not limited; and finally, a Commission proposal for a Council directive establishing a general framework for informing and consulting employees in the European Community (13099/98, COM (98)612) was forwarded by the Commission to the Council on 17 November 1998. The Government are not persuaded of the need for a directive on information and consultation in undertakings operating only at national level, which is difficult to reconcile with subsidiarity and would cut across existing practices in member states to no benefit.

I am not aware of any further Social Chapter proposals being drafted by the Commission.

Ilisu Dam

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the Export Credits Guarantee Department to make a final decision on whether to extend UK export credit support for British firms involved in the construction of the Ilisu Dam in Turkey. [95160]

Mr. Caborn: ECGD is some way from taking a final decision on the project. The issues are currently being considered with other interested Government Departments. There will also be further discussion with the export credit agencies supporting other contractors involved in the project.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the environmental and social impact assessments of the Ilisu Dam arrived at by the Government before a final decision is taken on whether or not to extend export credit support for the British firms involved. [95161]

Mr. Caborn: It is intended to publish the independent reports commissioned by the Export Credits Guarantee Department on the environment and social impacts of Ilisu before a final decision is taken on whether or not to extend export credit support.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what meetings have taken place between his Department and Balfour Beatty on the matter of the Ilisu Dam. [95162]

Mr. Caborn: Since receiving Balfour Beatty's application for support on Ilisu, ECGD has held four meetings with Balfour Beatty. There have also been six meetings on the project at which both ECGD and Balfour Beatty were among the participants, three with other UK Government Departments and three with the other export credit agencies.

Icecream Industry

Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department will publish its response to the Competition Commission's report into the icecream industry. [95079]

Dr. Howells: The Competition Commission report on impulse icecream will be published as quickly as is practicable. I cannot comment on the likely publication date of the report, which remains confidential until publication. Copies of the report will be laid before Parliament at the same time as it is published.

World Trade Organisation

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what outcomes the Government aims to achieve at the forthcoming trade round in Seattle. [95289]

Mr. Caborn: The Government hope that a comprehensive Round of negotiations will be launched at Seattle with a negotiating agenda which reflects the interests of all members of the World Trade Organisation in a substantial new package of trade liberalisation and will be guided by the aim of sustainable development.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received concerning reform of the World Trade Organisation. [95290]

Mr. Caborn: The Government have received a range of representations many of which support the UK's and EU's call for the launch of a comprehensive Round of trade negotiations at Seattle. Some have expressed the desire to see the pace of liberalisation stopped and a review undertaken of existing World Trade Organisation Agreements. In such cases, the Government have explained that we need a new Round to keep up the pace of liberalisation to promote growth in the world economy, jobs for our people and resist protectionist pressures which threaten us all. At the same time, the Government accept that more can be done to strengthen the World Trade Organisation through increased transparency and dialogue. This communication effort is very much the responsibility of national governments and the UK is committed to playing its full part.

Working Time Regulations

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidance he has given to (a) the Health and Safety Executive and local authorities and (b) Industrial Tribunals, on enforcing the new Working Time Regulations. [95698]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The Department of Trade and Industry published guidance on the Working Time Regulations, which covered enforcement, in September 1998. Copies were sent to the Health and Safety Executive and the Employment Tribunal Service (formerly the Industrial Tribunal Service). Guidance is also available on the Department website.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what provision has been made to increase the resources available to (a) the Health and Safety Executive and (b) industrial tribunals, to enforce the new Working Time Regulations. [95699]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The Department of Trade and Industry transfers funds to the Health and Safety Executive for enforcing the working time limits. This funding is reviewed in the light of experience.

Resources are allocated to the Employment Tribunal Service taking account of the Service's forecasts of overall caseload and operational requirements. Recent forecasts take into account the implementation of the Working Time Regulations.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received on the enforcement mechanisms for the new Working Time Regulations. [95697]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The Department of Trade and Industry is in regular contact with interested parties about many aspects of the Working Time Regulations, including enforcement.

Petrol Prices

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to ensure that the pricing policies of petrol wholesalers do not disadvantage independent retailers. [95746]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 25 October 1999]: Under UK competition legislation responsibility for monitoring markets, including the petrol market, and investigating allegations of anti-competitive practices lies with the Director General of Fair Trading. He has powers to act if necessary. Anyone with evidence of, or concerns about, anti-competitive pricing policies or other behaviour should contact the Director General.

Structural Funds

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about criteria for allocating structural funds to the regions. [94212]

Mr. Caborn: We received over 440 representations in response to the public consultation on determining areas for Structural Funds Objective 2 eligibility.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the procedures used to determine the selection of areas recommended for Objective 2 status. [94234]

Mr. Byers: On 8 October the Government submitted the UK proposals for new Objective 2 areas for 2000–06 to the European Commission.

The procedure the Government used is set out in the document URN99/1021 "The Government's proposals for new Objective 2 areas". Copies have been sent to all Members.

In drawing up its proposals the Government took account of responses to the earlier consultation exercise, and in particular of the proposals from the Scottish Executive and the National Assembly for Wales.

Electrical Installations

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to require electricity supply companies to upgrade consumer installations to comply with Building Standard BS 7671. [95264]

Ms Hewitt: None. The decision and responsibility for any necessary upgrading of consumers' existing electrical installations is a matter for those consumers alone.

Timor Gap

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent meetings (a) he, (b) his Ministers and (c) his officials held where UK investment in oil or gas developments in the Timor Gap was discussed; when these meetings were set up; with whom these meetings were held; what the precise purpose of the meetings was; and what involvement there was of Indonesian Government (i) Ministers, (ii) officials and (iii) businesses; and if he will make a statement. [95267]

Mr. Caborn: All the dealings of my Department regarding oil and gas developments in the Timor Gap have been with the Australian side. To date there has been no involvement of Indonesian Government Ministers, officials or other organisations in relation to such developments.

My officials visited Darwin in July 1999 and met the Northern Territory Minister, Hon. Daryl Manzie. Meetings were also held with the Office of Resource Development, Phillips Oil Company Australia, Woodside Energy Ltd., the Australian representative of the Australia-Indonesia Joint Authority for the Timor Gap Zone of Co-operation and with the University and local engineering and supply companies.

These meetings were set up by the British Consulate-General in Perth, WA, to allow an assessment to be made of the likelihood of oil and gas developments going ahead in the Timor Gap and the opportunities these might present for the suppliers of UK goods and services.

EU Trademark Directive

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to the EU regarding changes to the EU Trademark Directive, with respect to allowing branded goods from outside the EU to be imported; and if he will make a statement. [95710]

Dr. Howells: Since the European Court of Justice, in its judgment in the Silhouette case last year, determined that European trade mark law allows trade mark owners to prevent the import of their goods into the EU, we have made it clear to our European partners and to the Commission that full discussion, including possible change to European law, must take place. This discussion should be informed by studies into the economic effects of this judgment, in particular on prices, competition and consumers.

The European Commission has responded with a study undertaken by the consulting firm NERA which demonstrated that there would be a beneficial, if small impact on the European economy resulting from change to the law, and that such benefits would be focussed in certain sectors, especially clothing, footwear, perfumes and other luxury goods. Work undertaken by my Department concerning the United Kingdom economy, and by the Swedish government, supports these findings.

We have ensured that trade mark rights and the results of these studies have been discussed at meetings of the Internal Market Council. The Council will consider the issue again at its meeting in November. In the meantime we are encouraging other member States to undertake investigations to ensure that discussion at the Council progresses and is well informed.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what requirement there is for care workers to be paid at national minimum wage rates for time spent travelling between assignments; what representations he has received from and discussions he has had with care companies on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [95731]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The National Minimum Wage Regulation 15 provides that workers travelling on the business of their employer during their normal working hours must be paid the national minimum wage for that time, except where the travel is between the worker's home and place of work. I have received a number of representations on this issue from organisations involved in the provision of care work.

We have asked the Low Pay Commission to monitor and evaluate the impact of the national minimum wage on pay, employment and competitiveness. I would expect that care work providers will have taken the opportunity to raise this matter with the Commission.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Solicitor-General what training (a) in race awareness and (b) on employers' responsibilities under the Race Relations Act 1975 has been undertaken by (i) the DPP, (ii) CPS chief Crown prosecutors, (iii) CPS assistant chief Crown prosecutors and (iv) CPS branch Crown prosecutors; what plans he has to review training in (a) and (b); and if he will make a statement. [95773]

The Solicitor-General: A programme of training in race awareness was introduced in the Crown Prosecution Service for all staff managers in September 1997. In the London Area, which has a high percentage of staff from minority racial and cultural backgrounds, this training was extended to all staff. The course covers the provisions of the Race Relations Act 1976 and the Sex Discrimination Act 1975. The Director of Public Prosecutions and the Chief Executive have received this training since joining the CPS. The Chief Crown Prosecutors who were appointed to their posts this year will either have received this training earlier or should have done so by the end of the year. This training is now provided on an on-going basis so that all new managers receive it shortly after appointment.

The structure, delivery and content of all training provided within the CPS is currently being reviewed by the Equality Committee that was formed within the Department in August this year.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Solicitor-General what the present position is in relation to the Commission for Racial Equality's possible investigation into the Crown Prosecution Service; and if he will make a statement. [95774]

The Solicitor-General: On 27 July 1999 the Commission for Racial Equality wrote to the Crown Prosecution Service indicating that it was minded to undertake a formal investigation under section 48 of the Race Relations Act 1976. The Crown Prosecution Service have made written representations to the Commission in response to their letter and discussed these with a number of Commissioners on 5 October. The Crown Prosecution Service is currently waiting to hear from the Commission with their conclusions.

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Solicitor-General if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by his Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94843]

The Solicitor-General: The hon. Member is referred to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 682.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Museums, Libraries and Archives Council

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the cost of establishing the Museums, Libraries and Archives Council. [95136]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 25 October 1999]: £350,000 has been allocated to cover the costs associated with the establishment of the Museums, Libraries and Archives Council (MLAC) in this year and next.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many applications were received for the position of Chief Executive of the Museums, Libraries and Archives Council; how many candidates were interviewed; and what salary the position carries. [95150]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 25 October 1999]: Thirty seven applications were received for the position of Chief Executive of the Museums, Libraries and Archives Council.

Six Candidates were interviewed for the post. The position carries a salary of £67,500.

Tourism

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many incoming tourists to the UK there were annually since 1995, and what estimate he has made of the numbers for 1999. [95203]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 October 1999]: Since 1995 the number of incoming tourists to the UK has been as follows:

Thousand

Year	Visits to UK
1995	23,537
1996	25,163
1997	25,515
1998	25,745

There were 17.46 million visits to the UK in the first 8 months of 1999, an increase on 17.42 million visits in the equivalent period for 1998.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the effectiveness to date of the Government's tourism strategy. [95117]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 October 1999]: "Tomorrow's Tourism" is a challenging strategy for the next decade with many long-term goals. Together with the industry, we have already made good progress, for example:

- the creation of the English Tourism Council (ETC) to provide strategic leadership for the industry in England;
- the launch of the new standardised accommodation rating system;
- the addition of on-line accommodation booking facilities to BTA's award-winning "Visit Britain" website; the launch of 16 of the British Tourist Authority's planned 36 new websites overseas; and the launch of the "Britain—Now is the Time" campaign to market the UK as a visitor destination for the Millennium;
- the successful hospitality careers festival held earlier this year;
- the inclusion of many seaside resorts on the new Assisted Areas map.

A fuller progress report will be made at the first Tourism Summit early next year.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has made to Her Majesty's Treasury regarding the impact on the tourism industry of airport passenger duty. [95118]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 October 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have discussed many matters of concern to the tourism industry, including air passenger duty (APD), with a wide range of ministerial colleagues including my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In addition, my officials have made contact with their colleagues in HM Customs and Excise when representations about APD have been made by industry representatives or members of the public.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the future arrangements for England-wide marketing within the tourism sector. [95132]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The British Tourist Authority continues to market England abroad as part of its overall remit. It does so in partnership with the Regional Tourist Boards and the English Tourism Council with which it has an Overseas Marketing Agreement. Domestically, the English Tourism Council retains a strategic policy overview of marketing and has a major role in carrying out market research and providing advice on techniques and best practice.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact on the number of visitors to Britain of doubling airport passenger duty. [95124]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The new rates of APD were introduced on 1 November 1997. In the first twelve months (November 1997 to October 1998) in which the new rates were in operation there were an estimated 25.8 million visits to the UK, an increase of 3 per cent. on the previous twelve months.

Green Spaces

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what amount in (a) percentage and (b) money terms of the New Opportunities Fund budget is currently spent on the purchase of brown-field sites for developing playing fields; [95199]

(2) what is the breakdown in (a) cash and (b) percentage terms of the moneys set aside by the new Opportunities Fund for the Green Spaces initiative. [95185]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The New Opportunities Fund is currently consulting on the Green Spaces and Sustainable Communities initiative, and has so far made no grants under it. The policy directions that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has issued to NOF require it to commit at least 75 per cent. of the £125 million available for the initiative to green spaces, and NOF will decide in the light of its consultation exercise whether or not further to allocate this sum between particular types of project.

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by his Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94854]

Janet Anderson: The Cabinet Office is responsible for co-ordinating the Government's initiative on equal opportunities and public appointments, so I therefore refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 682.

This Government are committed to the equal representation of women and men in public appointments. A plan of action has been drawn up, which includes individual departmental plans for increasing the participation of women in public life. Details of individual Departments' plans are given in "Quangos: Opening up Public Appointments, 1999–2002", published by the Cabinet Office on 25 May 1999. Copies are in the Libraries of the House and on the Internet. The plans contain specific goals and objectives for increasing the representation of women on the boards of public bodies, and are updated annually in the light of progress made.

Dance and Drama

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Education and Employment regarding the funding of dance and drama courses. [95114]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 25 October 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have had a number of discussions with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and my noble Friend the Minister of State regarding the development of policy for funding dance and drama students.

Ealing Studios

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received in relation to the future of Ealing Studios; and if he will make a statement. [95128]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 October 1999]: In addition to the representation from the hon. Member, my Department has received four representations about Ealing Studios, three of which were from interested parties.

The National Film and Television School, as the owner of the land at Ealing, is responsible for the future of the site. As one of my Department's funded bodies, the School will keep my officials fully informed of its plans.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he last met representatives of the London Borough of Brent to discuss the development of the national stadium at Wembley; and what discussions have taken place regarding section 106 proposals. [95144]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 25 October 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met representatives of the London Borough of Brent on 15 and 22 July to discuss general progress with the national stadium project. He has had no discussions with the London Borough of Brent about section 106 requirements related to the national stadium project, which are entirely matters for the planning authority and the applicant, Wembley National Stadium Limited, to resolve following submission of the formal planning application.

I will be meeting representatives of the London Borough of Brent early next month.

Millennium Experience

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to increase public participation in Millennium Experience celebrations at a regional level; and if he will make a statement. [94069]

Janet Anderson: The Millennium Experience is already achieving considerable success in encouraging public participation at a local and regional level through its National Programme of events and activities and through its involvement with the Millennium Festival. To date 10 National Programme strands have been launched and another will be launched in December. Through this programme and the Millennium Festival, NMEC estimates it will have reached 40 million people before the end of the year 2000. Equally importantly, it believes it will have delivered a programme which will not only have encouraged people to celebrate this momentous point in time but will have left a legacy, the value of which will continue to be felt long after the Dome has ceased to welcome the public.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what events are planned in Shropshire as part of the Millennium Experience (a) National Programme and (b) Manpower National Skills Festival; and if he will make a statement. [94068]

Janet Anderson: The Millennium Experience National Programme is made up of a series of events and activities which aim to inspire everyone across the UK to take part and make a difference to us and to future generations. Shropshire and the West Midlands are keenly participating in many of these initiatives including over 40 major companies and public sector organisations signing up to Children's Promise; hundreds of schools busily composing a song for the Millennium as part of Voices of Promise; schools and the community in Shropshire performing in the Dome on 1 November 2000 for the Our Town Story show; and 74 Shropshire schools taking part in the creation of the greatest modern day domesday book on the internet. The area is also participating in the Manpower National Skills Festival, which encourages the promotion and celebration of vocational skills. The programme features regional contests and demonstrations culminating in the first-ever national skills championships at the NEC in Birmingham in July 2000.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Integrated Public Transport

10. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the integration of public transport in rural areas. [94220]

Mr. Meacher: Most of the proposals in our integrated transport strategy apply to rural areas just as much as other areas of the country. Local Transport Plans in particular will provide a much sounder base for local authorities to develop effective rural transport strategies. Additionally, in view of the urgent need to improve transport in rural areas, we have made available £170 million over three years to improve rural public transport.

Housing Tenancy Arrangements

15. Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans for the future of housing tenancy arrangements. [94225]

Mr. Mullin: I have no immediate plans to make any changes to housing tenancy arrangements. I am aware, however, of the discussion paper published by the Chartered Institute of Housing on a single form of tenure for social housing.

Roads Programme

16. Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the priority he will give to bypassing towns and villages on major trunk routes in his roads programme. [94227]

Ms Beverley Hughes: " A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England" sets out the priorities for investment in the trunk road network. Half the schemes in our targeted programme of improvements will provide bypasses of local communities.

House Building

17. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that his target for house building on brown-field sites is met. [94228]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have set in hand a number of policy initiatives to help authorities substantially increase their reuse of previously developed land. Chief amongst these is our radical revision of the last Government's outmoded planning guidance on housing (PPG3), which has caused so much greenfield development over the last decade.

21. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his target for the proportion of new housing to be built on brown-field sites. [94232]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Government's national target is that 60 per cent. of new housing should be built on previously developed land or provided by way of conversion of existing buildings.

24. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many houses will be built on greenfield sites in Lancashire in 1999–2000. [94236]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department does not estimate the number of new homes to be built. Estimates for Net Additional Dwelling Provision for 1991—2011, by county, are in Regional Planning Guidance for the North West (RPG13), but it does not make separate estimates for 'brownfield' or 'greenfield' sites.

25. Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has further to restrict house building in the green belt. [94237]

Ms Armstrong: Planning Policy Guidance note 2—"Green Belts"—already recommends that local authorities' development plans should include a strict presumption against inappropriate development in the Green Belt. This includes most types of house building.

Regional Strategies

18. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the draft Regional Strategies presented by the Regional Development Agencies. [94229]

Ms Armstrong: Regional Development Agencies have today formally handed over their Regional Strategies to Ministers for consideration. We aim to respond to the strategies before the end of the year.

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the regional development agencies' regional strategies will be published; and if he will make a statement. [96169]

Ms Armstrong: The Regional Development Agencies' regional strategies were handed over to Ministers today. Copies of those which have been printed to date have been placed in the Library of the House. The remainder will be placed in the Library as soon as they are published.

Rough Sleepers

19. Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many young people sleeping rough in England have been settled in accommodation in the most recent year for which figures are available. [94230]

Mr. Mullin: Comprehensive information on resettlement is not available. The Rough Sleepers Initiative has provided about 3,500 units of accommodation over the past 9 years, a large number of which have been let to young people.

Eastern Regional Development Agency

20. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in the work of the regional development agency in the eastern region. [94231]

Ms Armstrong: The East of England Development Agency has achieved much since their official launch on 1 April this year and are now fully established with a committed and enthusiastic Board.

The Agency have handed over the final version of their regional economic development strategy today and are currently working hard to finalise their first corporate plan.

They have already announced over £20 million of Single Regeneration Budget funding, £4.3 million for the Skills Development Fund, almost £3 million for the Rural Development Programme and are managing Land and Property Regeneration schemes with a value of £25 million.

English Partnerships

22. Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements he has made to ensure the accountability of English Partnerships to local communities. [94233]

Ms Armstrong: In carrying out its activities in the former new town areas, English Partnerships has to have due regard for the convenience and welfare of people who live, work or carry on their business there. When drawing up its plans, it consults with local councils and other interested parties.

Housing Green Paper

23. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he now expects to publish the Housing Green Paper; and if he will make a statement. [94235]

Mr. Raynsford: We intend to publish a Housing Policy Green Paper in due course. The Green Paper will build on our achievements in housing to ensure that everyone is offered the opportunity of a decent home and so promote social cohesion, well-being and self-dependence.

Thameslink Services

27. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the frequency and quality of Thameslink services to central London from Mill Hill Broadway and Hendon. [94239]

Mr. Hill: The frequency of service Thameslink are providing from Mill Hill Broadway and Hendon to Central London is greater than required by their Passenger Service Requirement. The Franchising Director is aware that services during peak periods are overcrowded beyond allowable thresholds and he has required Thameslink accordingly to produce a Feasibility Study detailing ways in which capacity can be increased to reduce this overcrowding. In addition to the Feasibility Study, Thameslink are currently negotiating with other train operators to lease additional trains.

London Underground

28. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made on the public private partnership for the London Underground. [94240]

Mr. Hill: Excellent progress has been made on the PPP. London Underground has been restructured, in shadow form, into one operating company and three infrastructure companies. Four consortia have been invited to tender for each of the two deep tube infrastructure companies. Discussions with Railtrack concerning the integration of the subsurface railway and the national rail network are continuing to make progress.

The Greater London Authority Bill, which contains the new powers governing the public private partnership, is in its final stages in the House of Lords.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the principal capital sums which need to be expended on the London Underground in respect of

(a) each line, (b) multi-line improvements and (c) other aspects, indicating the principal purposes of each and the (i) sums and (ii) proportion of each item or the total amount arising from the shortfall in past maintenance. [94792]

Mr. Hill: Information is not available in the form requested. London Underground have made the following line-by-line estimates of how much it will cost to implement the performance regime being developed for the first 15 years of the proposed Public Private Partnership. They estimate that £1.2 billion of the total projected expenditure of £7.36 billion can be attributed to past funding constraints on the Underground network.

Line	Indicative projection of 15 year investment expenditure
Bakerloo	390
Central, Waterloo and City	780
Victoria	900

[1] Northern Line train investment costs are contracted for under a separate PFI scheme and are excluded from these figures.
[2] Excludes operating and maintenance costs for the Jubilee Line Extension project.
[3] Excludes costs from potential project for extending East London Line.

Waste Minimisation Act

29. Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will undertake a review of the Waste Minimisation Act 1998. [94241]

Mr. Hutton: As the Waste Minimisation Act came into force only in November 1998, it is too early to undertake a review of it. During the passage of this Act, the Government promised to provide guidance to Local Authorities on the powers it conferred on councils and on the issue of consultation. My Department will be issuing such guidance shortly.

Urban Task Force

30. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in the north west with regard to implementing the recommendations contained in the report of the Urban Task Force, "The Urban Renaissance". [94242]

Ms Armstrong: The Government is considering the recommendations of the Urban Task Force's report in its preparation of the new Urban and Rural White Papers which are due to be published next summer. The Government has launched a pilot urban regeneration company, Liverpool Vision, and has invited Manchester City Council to submit a proposal for a second pilot in East Manchester.

Norfolk Broads

31. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the impact of aquatic pollution on the Norfolk Broads. [94243]

Mr. Mullin: The Environment Agency, as the environmental regulator, is responsible for keeping this matter under review. On their advice, parts of the Broads have been designated Sensitive Areas (eutrophic) under the Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive. This is subject to 4 yearly review due to report next in 2001. Designation requires phosphorus removal from sewage treatment works into the affected waters to combat eutrophication. The Agency is keeping this and other pollution sources under review through monitoring and research. Proposals for further action will be included in the Broadland Rivers Local Environmental Action Plan, which is in the final stages of preparation following public consultation.

Alternative Fuels

32. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has commissioned into alternative fuels. [94244]

Mr. Hill: The most recent research, commissioned jointly by my Department, DTI and MAFF, compared the emissions performance of a wide range of alternatively fuelled vehicles. The results were published by HMSO early last year as "Alternative Road Transport Fuels—UK field trials, Volumes 1 and 2".

Climate Change

33. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Ministers of other EU countries about climate change and the impact upon rare animal species. [94245]

Mr. Meacher: I regularly speak to my EU partners about the potential impacts of climate change and how to mitigate it. The EU fifth framework research programme includes a key action on global change, climate and biodiversity, and my Department and English Nature have commissioned research to address this issue.

Yorkshire and Humberside Regional Chamber

34. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will report on progress in the establishment of the Regional Chamber in Yorkshire and Humberside. [94246]

Ms Armstrong: The Regional Chamber for Yorkshire and Humberside was designated, under the Regional Development Agencies Act 1998, on 27 July 1999.

Rural Public Transport

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the provision of rural public transport. [94238]

Mr. Hill: We have received representations on the provision of public transport from a range of individuals living in rural areas, as well as from a number of interested organisations.

Housing Benefit Subsidy

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the reduction in expenditure by his Department on housing benefit subsidy in respect of rent rebates paid to local authorities in each of the years 1989–90 to 1998–99 as a result of large scale voluntary transfers of tenants to registered social landlords; and what are his estimates for 1999–2000 and for each of the years from 2000–01 to 2029–30. [94346]

Mr. Mullin: The only estimates which have been made are the projections made for three years ahead at the time of each transfer. These are set out in the following table. Our records do not extend back to cover transfers made before 1991–92. No figures are available for 1999–2000 and future years because we do not yet know what transfers may occur.

Renovation Grants

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to increase renovation grants for (a) improving the quality of housing in the private sector and (b) helping owner-occupiers on low incomes; and if he will make a statement. [94796]

Mr. Mullin: Local authorities are responsible for paying renovation grants to help owner-occupiers on low incomes improve their homes and are funded from within the local authorities' housing capital programme, partly from subsidy allocated by central Government and partly from authorities' own resources. Decisions on the size of their renovation grant programme are taken by authorities in the light of their housing strategy and the housing needs of the different forms of tenure. From April next year, there will no longer be a separate ring-fenced allocation to support renovation grant expenditure. The resources will, instead, be included in a new single capital allocation for housing. This will give local authorities more freedom to decide the balance between investment in their own housing stock and in private sector renewal. Next year, local authorities will be allocated an additional £30 million [redacted] capital investment in housing, which is part of the additional £5 billion being made available over the life of this Parliament.

Minicabs

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will extend section 37 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to cover minicabs, with particular reference to the problems of sight-impaired people with guide dogs. [94865]

Mr. Hill: Such a change would require primary legislation and at this stage we have no plans to introduce any amendment in respect of private hire vehicles (PHVs).

Having said that, there is a power available to licensing authorities outside London under Section 51(2) of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 enabling them to attach such conditions to the grant of a PHV driver's licence as they consider reasonably necessary. Bearing in mind that this power is subject to an appeals procedure, it would be up to individual councils in their capacity as licensing authorities to consider whether it could, or should, be applied in respect of guide dogs.

With regard to the situation in London, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 25 October, Official Report, column 669.

Railway Policing

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to enhance railway security and policing, with special reference to assaults on railway staff. [95171]

Mr. Hill: The Government expects all public transport operators to adopt the crime prevention strategies in our guidance "Personal Security on Public Transport—Guidelines for Operators". This includes measures such as CCTV, improved lighting and the availability of trained staff.

My Department has launched the Secure Stations scheme, with the British Transport Police (BTP) and Crime Concern, to encourage railway companies to work with the BTP to improve security and reduce the fear of crime. Stations can apply to become accredited as "Secure Stations" by meeting agreed standards on crime prevention measures. 21 stations have so far been independently awarded "Secure Station" status.

Assaults on railway staff are a growing problem and the Health and Safety Commission's Railway Industry Advisory Committee (RIAC) organised a conference in July to discuss what could be done to address this matter. The conference was attended by representatives of the Health and Safety Executive, Railtrack, the BTP and the train operating companies. It was agreed that RIAC should develop guidance setting out good practice to assist railway managers with developing action plans to combat the problem. RIAC are now developing these proposals.

Parish and Town Councils

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the future of parish and town councils. [95329]

Ms Beverley Hughes: As stated in our White Paper "Modern Local Government—In Touch with the People" (Cm 4014)

"Parish councils will continue to play a key role in many of our towns and villages".

In our forthcoming Rural White Paper we intend to address further how we see parish councils playing their part in rural local governance.

Paddington Rail Services

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total number of scheduled passenger train services entering and leaving Paddington railway station in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996, (iii) 1997 and (iv) 1998. [94874]

Mr. Hill: This information is not held by the Government.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to give further protection to designated areas of outstanding natural beauty. [95224]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment expects to make an announcement shortly about measures to conserve and enhance designated Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the preparations made by housing associations in respect of the millennium computer bug. [95215]

Mr. Mullin: The Housing Corporation is responsible for assessing preparations taken by Registered Social Landlords (RSLs) to deal with the millennium computer bug.

In its progress report to the Action 2000 National Infrastructure Forum on 21 October 1999, the Housing Corporation confirmed that no evidence had been found, in respect of those RSLs owning about 80 per cent. of total RSL stock to suggest that millennium bug concerns had been inadequately addressed.

The Housing Corporation anticipates that all remaining RSLs will be prepared for the millennium change by mid November.

Thermal Insulation

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what changes were made to BS 5422 on thermal insulation of pipes after the Rio Earth Summit; and what assessment he has made of its compliance with Part L of the Building Regulations 1991. [94886]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Changes to British Standards are a matter for the British Standards Institute and its technical committees. I am aware however that BS 5422 is currently being revised to incorporate among other things a new method of assessing appropriate insulation thicknesses that takes account of environmental issues.

BS 5422 is referenced in the Approved Document which supports Part L of the Building Regulations. This too is currently under review. During the course of the review we shall be examining whether standards of insulation applied to vessels, pipes and ducts should be increased, and also whether the reference to the revised BS 5422 is still appropriate.

Ragwort

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to combat the spread of ragwort (a) along roadside verges and (b) in liaison with local authorities and utilities in respect of land owned by them. [95318]

Mr. Hill: For roadside verges, eradication of noxious weeds on road verges in England is the responsibility of highway authorities. These authorities take measures to eradicate ragwort when made aware that a problem exists. The Highways Agency's current policy on noxious weeds for the trunk road and motorway network in England is to seek out infestation and take appropriate control measures. Maintenance of roadside verges on local authority roads is the responsibility of the local highway authorities, who are free to set their own standards. However, DETR are working with local authorities to produce a new code of practice for maintaining their roads, and will recommend that they adopt the same procedures for ragwort elimination as on national roads.

For land owned by local authorities and utilities, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has policy responsibility for control of injurious weeds, of which ragwort is one, under the Weeds Act 1959. Under its provisions, the Ministry may investigate complaints from any occupiers of agricultural land who consider that their land is threatened by ragwort spreading from land nearby. Where a specific complaint is received about ragwort spreading from land occupied by utilities or local authorities, the local Ministry regional service centre may approach the utility or authority concerned to request that control measures be taken. Where such measures are not put in hand, the Weeds Act gives the Minister powers to implement statutory procedures to ensure that weed control is carried out.

Shorthold Tenancy Agreements

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from (a) landlords and (b) tenants regarding shorthold tenancy agreements; and if he will make a statement. [94885]

Mr. Mullin: Since April 1999, nine letters have been received from landlords and 26 from tenants regarding various aspects of assured shorthold tenancy agreements.

The main topics raised are repossession and tenants' rights (by landlords) and affordability, condition, housing benefit and security of tenure (by tenants).

We believe that to encourage growth in long term, good quality accommodation for private letting, we must secure the confidence of landlords in a stable policy framework while at the same time ensuring that the interests of tenants are protected. We therefore have no plans to change the legislative framework of assured and assured shorthold tenancies established under the Housing Act 1988.

Noise (Heathrow)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the level of night-time noise around Heathrow Airport in connection with attempts to meet the night-time noise exposure levels under the EU Fifth Environmental Action Programme by 2000. [95248]

Mr. Mullin: The Fifth Environmental Action Programme does not require such an assessment to be made.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the long-term implications for noise from air traffic around Heathrow Airport and under its flight paths of the adoption of an EU noise abatement programme which has as its objective ensuring that no person should be exposed to levels of noise which endanger health and quality of life; [95247]

(2) what assessment he has made of the long-term implications of the adoption of the EU noise abatement programme with regard to the operations and competitiveness of (a) Heathrow and (b) other UK airports. [95246]

Mr. Mullin: The European Commission has stated its intention to make a proposal for a Directive on environmental noise. However, this is not expected until late next year and the UK Government will treat the proposals on their merits as they emerge.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what level of noise from air traffic he has assessed to be excessive around Heathrow Airport and under its flight paths between 2300 and 0700 hours in the past year; [95460]

(2) how many people are exposed to excessive noise from air traffic around Heathrow and under its flight paths between 2300 and 0700; and what were the number for each year since 1993; [95461]

(3) what steps have been taken to measure the levels of noise experienced at night between 1 and 2 metres above ground level in residential areas (a) around Heathrow Airport and (b) under flight paths to Heathrow. [95468]

Mr. Mullin: For many years, one of the objectives of the night restrictions has been to protect local communities around Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports from excessive aircraft noise levels at night. It has been the view of successive Governments that policy on night noise should be firmly based on research into the relationship between aircraft noise and interference with sleep and that, in order to preserve the balance between different interests, this should continue to be the basis for decisions. The "Night Restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted: Second Stage Consultation", published on 17 November 1998, included a summary of research. Copies were placed in the Library.

My Department has for many years published daytime (7.00 am—11.00 pm) aircraft noise contours for the area around Heathrow. They show a substantial improvement in the daytime noise climate over the past two decades.

The Department does not publish night-time noise contours. A 1998 study found that there is not enough research evidence to underpin scientifically robust night contours relating noise to annoyance. Its publication was announced on 27 February 1998, Official Report, columns 403–04. However, a comparison of the seasonal totals of the 'quota count' (QC) ratings of aircraft counted against the noise quotas, indicates that there has been an improvement in the night noise climate around Heathrow, between 11.30 pm and 6.00 am, since the introduction of the present night restrictions regime in 1993. Information on this was also given in the "Night Restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted: Second Stage Consultation".

Night Flights

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for changing the night flight restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports. [95233]

Mr. Mullin: The Government announced new night flight restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports on 10 June 1999, Official Report, columns 378–80, which will last for five years, from 31 October 1999 until the end of the 2004 summer season. This followed a two-stage consultation between February 1998 and February 1999. The 10 June announcement included notification of a review of the QC system before the 2002 summer season. It also recognised that it may be necessary to review the Stansted night restrictions before 2004 if the current strong growth in traffic there were to continue. We expect to announce shortly the decision on Part 2 of the second-stage consultation on options for changes to the preferential use of Heathrow's runways at night.

Birds of Prey

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will require owners of birds of prey to have a licence of competence before allowing them to fly freely. [95320]

Mr. Mullin: Adequate statutory controls are already in place to regulate possession, welfare and trade in these sensitive species. I believe we can continue to rely on the long tradition of British falconry and its voluntary associations to maintain and disseminate satisfactory standards for those who fly birds of prey.

Turkish Earthquake

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the assistance being given to the UK construction industry to help in Turkey following the earthquake. [R] [95464]

Mr. Raynsford: I led a construction sector trade mission to Turkey on 20–24 September. One of the themes of this visit was to explore ways in which UK companies might participate in the planning and redevelopment of the areas worst affected by the tragic earthquake on 17 August.

I and the businessmen who travelled with me were appalled by the extent of destruction, particularly in the city of Adapazari. Adapazari has a population of 350,000 and is part of the industrial heartland of Turkey with some 350 factories. The World Bank investigation team estimated that the rebuilding of this city would require more time and more careful planning than the others which it had visited, because of the extent of the damage and the poor ground conditions that exist in the area.

Following the visit, the Government has in principle agreed to provide financial support, on a 50:50 basis, for an initiative by a group of nine UK companies which would provide much-needed consultancy advice on the reconstruction of Adapazari. This offer of assistance was delivered to the Deputy Prime Minister of Turkey on Monday 18 October.

Countryside Access

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to provide for greater rights of public access to (a) coastal land, (b) privately-owned woodland and (c) riverbanks. [95434]

Mr. Mullin: In March this year, the Government announced plans to introduce a new statutory right of access on foot to specified categories of open countryside—mountain, moor, heath, down and registered common land. As part of its announcement, the Government also asked the Countryside Agency, together with the Countryside Council for Wales and the Forestry Commission, to report on the case for extending public access to other types of open countryside, such as coast, woodland and riverside. We look forward to receiving their formal report and advice very shortly (I am aware that the Countryside Agency has already set out its recommendations on its website). We will wish to consider their views carefully before deciding how best to proceed.

Driving Standards Agency

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of practical driving tests were passed each year from 1983; and in which year the Driving Standards Agency became fully self-funding. [95540]

Ms Armstrong: Driving test pass rate data are not available for the years prior to 1989. Details for the financial years 1989–90 to 1998–99 are given in the following table.

Year	Car	Motorcycle	Lorry	Bus
1989–90	52.2	71.0	50.0	55.0
1990–91	52.4	52.0	51.0	55.0
1991–92	50.8	68.3	50.0	56.0
1992–93	49.75	69.70	50.0	53.0
1993–94	47.9	70.15	49.0	52.0
1994–95	46.9	70.5	47.5	70.5
1995–96	45.7	70.1	47.0	49.3
1996–97	44.7	67.5	48.1	48.7
1997–98	46.7	68.6	52.8	47.7
1998–99	45.9	67.9	51.8	47.8

The Driving Standards Agency became a Trading Fund in April 1997. Prior to that, it operated as an on-Vote non-statutory trading body, and was required to recover its full costs through fees and charges.

Parish Councils

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to make an Order to effect the establishment of parish councils for (a) Hereford City and (b) Belmont; and if he will make a statement. [95676]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We intend to consult the Herefordshire Council and other interested parties shortly on a draft Order. Subject to that consultation the intention is to make the Order before the end of 1999 with the view to first elections for the new parishes being held in May 2000.

Pubs (Business Rates)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance on the application of the powers to reduce business rates to 50 per cent. on public houses. [95634]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The village shop rate relief scheme gives billing authorities a discretionary power to grant up to 100 per cent. rates relief to any business in a listed rural settlement, provided the rateable value of the property occupied is less than £10,000 and, in the view of the authority, is used for purposes which are of benefit to the local community. The legislation does not rule out any business or premises from receiving relief, and public houses might therefore qualify.

Guidance on the village shop rate relief scheme and eligibility for discretionary relief was issued to all billing authorities on 12 December 1997.

Leasehold Tenure

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce plans to reform leasehold tenure; and if he will make a statement. [95915]

Mr. Mullin: We have almost completed our analysis of the responses received to our consultation paper on residential leasehold reform, and will announce our conclusions shortly.

Building Regulations

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the Electrical Wiring Regulations set out in Building Standard BS 7671 to be incorporated into the building regulations. [95263]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department has been working with the Building Regulations Advisory Committee and others to develop proposals for amendments to the Building Regulations that would introduce requirements for electrical safety in dwellings. The draft proposals indicate that following the recommendations in the British Standard BS 7671 would be a way of achieving compliance. The Building Act 1984 requires consultation with interested bodies before substantive amendments are made to the Building Regulations. I intend to announce consultation on these proposals once I am satisfied that they meet our better regulation criteria. Whether and when amendments are made will depend upon the outcome of this consultation. Electrical safety requirements for buildings other than dwellings are already made in the Electricity at Work Regulations 1989.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contingency plans are in place for visitors to travel to the Millennium Dome in the event that the Jubilee Line extension is not fully operable by 1 January 2000. [95807]

Mr. Hill: The Government expects that the whole of the Jubilee Line extension will be up and running from end-to-end in time for the opening of the Millennium Experience and hope that all stations will be open by the end of this year. A 15 train per hour Monday to Friday service is already operating to North Greenwich station through the Stratford to Waterloo section of the line. This is expected to be increased to 24 trains per hour seven days a week when through running from Stanmore to Stratford is successfully achieved in due course. Visitors to the Dome will therefore be able to travel on the Jubilee Line, even if access to the line is not possible from all of the stations at the end of the year.

It had, however, been decided in June 1998 that it would be irresponsible not to have contingency arrangements in place to manage problems on any of the main transport links to the Millennium Dome during the Millennium Year. London Underground Ltd. have therefore, in association with London's other transport operators, developed plans to cover a wide range of possible scenarios and a robust command and control strategy to direct those plans should they need to be invoked.

In the event of disruption, contingency provision will be made available through a combination of spare capacity on the other available public transport links to the Dome and a small number of additional buses and boats that have been contracted to be made available at short notice. A summary of the contingency plan arrangements has been placed in the Library of the House.

Dogs (Identification)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what legislation exists to require dogs to be identified; and if he will make a statement. [95665]

Mr. Hill: The Control of Dogs Order 1992 made under the Animal Health Act 1981 requires every dog (with some exceptions) while in a highway or in a place of public resort to wear a collar with the name and address of the owner inscribed on the collar or on a place or badge attached to it. My Department has set up a Dog Identification Working Group to reflect a consensus view on all the available options for dog identification. They will be producing a report in due course. No decisions will be taken until we have fully considered the report.

Recycling

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the EU measures relating to recycling which apply in the UK; and if he will make a statement on the UK's performance in respect of such measures. [95562]

Mr. Mullin: Currently only the EC Directive on Packaging and Packaging Waste (94/62/EC) imposes recovery and recycling targets for the UK. The Directive requires Member States to recover 50 per cent. of all packaging materials by 2001, of which half must be recycled.

The Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997 implement part of the Directive in the UK. In 1998, according to returns to the Environment Agency and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency—the bodies responsible for monitoring compliance with the Regulations—UK business exceeded their recovery obligation of 2,393,327 tonnes, with a total of 3,322,715 tonnes, with 2,874,316 tonnes having been recycled.

Plants (EU Transportation)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) guidelines and (b) legislation applies to the application of fees for transporting certain types of plants across EU borders; what the (i) cost and (ii) purpose of licences for such transportation is; what plans he has to make representations to the EU on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [95728]

Mr. Mullin: EU Wildlife Trade Regulations 338–97 and 939–97, implementing the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES), contain provisions for the control of trade and movement of listed species of endangered animals and plants. The controls apply to imports and exports across the external frontier. Member states may set fees for issuing the relevant import and export permits. Under the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Fees) Regulations 1997 the current fee for import and export permits for plants issued by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions is £7 per genus. There is a reduction to £5 per genus for non commercial consignments and for consignments of 5 or more genera.

Within the European Union there are controls on the sale (including movement for sale) and purchase of the most endangered category of plants listed in Annex A of Council Regulation 338–97. Such activities may be subject to the issue of a certificate from my Department although no fee is charged. Detailed guidance is available on demand to all applicants for CITES permits or certificates.

Domestic Electrical Installations

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to require domestic electrical installations to conform to a national minimum standard; and if he will make a statement. [95572]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department has been working with the Building Regulations Advisory Committee and others to develop proposals for amendments to the Building Regulations that would introduce requirements for electrical safety in dwellings. The draft proposals include the publication of approved guidance indicating that following the recommendations in British Standard BS 7671, "Requirements for Electrical Installations" would be a way of achieving compliance. I will announce consultation on these proposals once I am satisfied that they meet our better regulation criteria. Whether to amend the Building Regulations will depend upon the results of this consultation.

Draft Waste Strategy

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the draft waste strategy; what representations he has received on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [95563]

Mr. Mullin: The Government published for consultation its draft waste strategy for England and Wales, "A Way With Waste", on 30 June 1999. We have received over 500 substantive submissions from a wide range of interested parties, and around 20,000 postcards urging higher recycling targets from members of the public. These views will be taken into consideration as we develop the final strategy.

The final version of our sustainable waste management strategy—which we will publish early next year—will be a long-term strategy for handling the waste generated by businesses, service providers and households. The Government is committed to introducing and promoting sustainable waste management across the UK. This means using materials resources efficiently, to cut down on the amount of waste we produce. And where waste is produced, dealing with it in a way that actively contributes to the economic, social and environmental goals of sustainable development.

Mobile Telephone Masts

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the planning requirements as regards the siting of mobile telephone masts. [95679]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The provisions of Part 24 of Schedule 2 to the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 (GPDO) which govern the installation of mobile telephone masts were amended earlier this year by SI 1999 No. 1661. Guidance on these changes is contained in DETR Circular 04/99 which complements Planning Policy Guidance note 8 (revised) (PPG8) on telecommunications. In December 1998 the Department issued for consultation a draft circular prepared jointly with the Department of Health on land use planning and electromagnetic fields. We are currently considering the responses received.

Consumer Protection (Spending)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the levels of spending on consumer protection per head of population in (a) Staffordshire and (b) each other county of England (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the last three years. [94016]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

The figures requested are contained in the following table. Expenditure per head has been calculated by dividing the total expenditure on consumer protection for each county (excluding those abolished during local government reorganisation), as collected by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, by the total population of the county. The population data used are the latest available, namely for mid 1997.

Total expenditure figures for the financial years 1996–97 and 1997–98 are actual out-turns; those for 1998–99 are provisional out-turns; and the 1999–2000 figures are budget estimates.

Figures reflect the changes in local authority boundaries that came into effect in 1998–99.

Consumer protection net expenditure per head of population for the Shire counties for the years 1996–97 to 1999–2000

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Commissioners

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the amount paid to each European commissioner who resigned earlier this year (a) arising from their resignation and (b) over the period to the appointment of the new Commission. [94807]

Mr. Vaz: Commissioners' terms and conditions of service are set down in the 1967 Council Regulation 422/67, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current state of investigations into former EU commissioners in respect of possible fraud or misconduct. [94808]

Mr. Vaz: The Council has commenced proceedings in the European Court of Justice against Mr. Bangemann, a former Commissioner, under Article 213 (2) of the Treaty. This matter is sub judice.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of each of the proposed reforms to the EU Commission put forward by the Commissioner for Administrative Reform. [94809]

Mr. Vaz: We fully support the process of reform in the new Commission. We welcome the progress already made; and in particular, the adoption of a new Code of Conduct covering Commissioners' behaviour, a re-organisation of Directorates General and a reorganisation of senior jobs (which are now filled according to merit rather than on the basis of a quota system). We welcome the Commission's intention to publish a White Paper on reform early next year.

Paul Van Buitenen

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the European Commission about the position of EU employee Paul van Buitenen; and if he will make a statement. [94810]

Mr. Vaz: We have not made any representations on this matter. We welcome the Commission's intention to bring forward proposals for such guidelines and procedures as part of its package of reform.

Corpus Juris

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the official positions in the European Communities currently held by contributors to the Corpus Juris document. [95229]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

The research study "Corpus Juris: introducing penal provisions for the purposes of the financial interests of the European Union" was published in April 1997. It was written by a group of experts from the Association of European Lawyers for the Protection of the Financial Interests of the Community (ALPFIEC). Although the experts worked under the aegis of the Directorate General for Financial Control (DGXX) of the European Commission, they were independent of the Commission and held academic appointments which are listed in the publication. Information on any official positions currently held by the authors of the study is not available.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures have been taken to reorganise his Department's workload in accordance with the Working Time Directive; and if he will make a statement. [95399]

Mr. Battle: The Department constantly reviews its workload to take account of changing demands and priorities. Guidance issued to staff and managers requires line managers to re-prioritise the work on their staff to ensure that working hours comply fully with the Working Time Directive and Regulations.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of his Department's staff are exempt from the Working Time Directive. [95401]

Mr. Battle: All staff are subject to the provisions of the Working Time Directive and Regulations.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the cost to his Department to date of implementing the working time regulations; what additional paperwork has been required; and what checks are undertaken internally. [95403]

Mr. Battle: No additional financial costs have been incurred so far. Staff who have opted to waive their rights to a maximum 48 hour week are required to keep records of the hours they work. Guidance for staff and managers on the application of the Working Time Directive and Regulations have been circulated to staff. Line Managers are required to ensure that the working hours of their staff comply fully with the Working Time Directive and Regulations.

Chinese President (State Visit)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department made to the Metropolitan Police about the public order implications of the state visit of the President of China. [95647]

Mr. Battle: As is normal practice in preparing for State Visits, there were routine Whitehall meetings to go through the programme so that the Metropolitan Police could make their operational decisions.

Refugees

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the UK's participation within NATO in respect of the provision of intelligence information regarding refugees. [95569]

Mr. Vaz: It is longstanding Government practice not to comment on intelligence matters.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial responsibility the UK has accepted in respect of refugees from the former Yugoslavia. [95570]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

Currently, refugees who arrive in the United Kingdom and claim asylum are entitled to welfare benefits if they claim asylum at the port of entry, or help under the National Assistance Act 1948 or the Children Act 1989 if they make their claim after they have entered the country.

International Criminal Tribunal (Former Yugoslavia)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial provision he has made in connection with requests from the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement. [95566]

Mr. Hain: Our total UN assessed contribution to the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) to date is £7.1 million since the Tribunal was established in 1993. In addition, we have made voluntary contributions totalling just over £2.6 million towards, for example, the construction of ICTY's second court-room; its Exhumations Programme; the translation of Prosecution documents; and more recently a UK Scenes of Crime Team which is helping ICTY's investigation of atrocities in Kosovo.

China

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Chinese Government about the persecution of people who practise Falun Gong; and if he will make a statement. [95561]

Mr. Battle: We have made a series of representations expressing our disappointment to the Chinese Government at the banning of the Falun Gong on 22 July and supported an EU Presidency demarche in Peking on 29 July to the Chinese Government. We reiterated our concerns about the Chinese government's treatment of Falun Gong adherents during the latest round of our high level Bilateral Human Rights Dialogue between 13–15 September. Both the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary raised the issue of human rights, including freedom of expression and freedom of religious belief, with the Chinese during the State Visit.

Burma

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Burma regarding the alleged massacres at Kwei and Hpway Plaw villages, and the killings at Ta Hpo Hkee and the Tavoy District; and if he will make a statement. [95669]

Mr. Battle: We had heard reports of these appalling events, but have been unable to substantiate the details. We remain deeply concerned about human rights violations against the Karen and other ethnic minorities in Burma and raise our concerns regularly with the military regime. We will continue to do so.

Egypt

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department is currently giving to those planning to travel to Egypt; and if he will make a statement. [95574]

Mr. Hain: The FCO travel advice for Egypt, as valid on 22 October 1999 is as follows:

Begins

"British nationals travelling to Egypt should keep in touch with developments in the Middle East. Any increase in regional tension might affect travel advice.

Over 200,000 British nationals visit Egypt each year. Most enjoy a trouble-free stay. Visitors should dress modestly, and respect local customs and sensitivities.

Beginning in 1992 extremists conducted a campaign of violence against the Egyptian Government, mainly in the Governorates of Minya and Assiut (half way between Cairo and Luxor) but with sporadic attacks in other areas. Most incidents were directed at the police, or were sectarian in nature. However, some were directed against tourists. In March 1999 the principal extremist group reportedly announced a ceasefire, which has held so far. But the risk of a renewed campaign, including attacks on foreigners, remains. In addition, Egypt is one of a number of countries where we believe there is a threat to British interests from global terrorism.

The Egyptian authorities have expressed their determination to prevent attacks on foreign visitors and have taken a number of steps to increase security, especially at tourist sites. British nationals should be vigilant and respect any advice from the local security authorities.

There remains a small risk from unexploded mines in some desert areas, and some limited coastal areas. Visitors should follow local advice, especially if travelling off road.

Local driving conditions and poor vehicle maintenance make road travel outside the main cities hazardous, especially at night. In the event of an accident emergency medical facilities are limited.

Millennium Bug

The Egyptian Government are continuing their efforts to minimise the effects of any Millennium Bug problems in Egypt. Based on the information available at present, we believe that as elsewhere, there is a risk of limited disruption in some sectors. Particular sectors include health and the mobile telephone network. British nationals resident in or visiting Egypt should take the potential for temporary disruption into account when making their plans for the New Year period. These should include checking insurance cover and having enough cash to cover contingencies."

Ends

FCO travel advice represents an objective assessment of the risks to British nationals. It is designed to help them choose whether to travel and how to reduce their exposure to danger. It is reviewed regularly.

International Criminal Court

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to ratify the Rome Statute for an International Criminal Court; and if he will make a statement. [95567]

Mr. Hain: The Government will bring forward legislation to enable ratification of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits. We are strongly committed to the Court and intend to be among the first sixty states to ratify.

Libya

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to appoint a commercial officer to the British Embassy in Tripoli; and if he will make a statement. [95887]

Mr. Hain: We have selected and appointed two UK based commercial officers to our Embassy in Tripoli. Following pre-posting preparation, the Head of Commercial Section should be in Tripoli in early December with his deputy following early next year.

British Trade International now offer a trade promotion service, within the constraints of the present lack of specialist commercial staff in Tripoli.

Full commercial support in Tripoli will be available when the commercial section is operational but staff in Tripoli will meanwhile continue to help where they can.

Special Operations Executive

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to release more records of the wartime Special Operations Executive. [96166]

Mr. Battle: The records of the Special Operations Executive (SOE) have been released on a rolling basis since 1993. The seventh batch, comprising SOE Section Histories and its Headquarters War Diaries, will be opened at the Public Record Office today. Further records, including Headquarters policy files, will be released in due course.

Congo

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of the Republic of Congo about torture of child witch doctors in Kinshasa. [95231]

Mr. Hain: We have asked our Embassy in Kinshasa to investigate these reports. We maintain a regular dialogue with the Minister for Human Rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, covering all facets of human rights and child rights issues. We condemn all acts of violence against civilians and any acts that cause unnecessary suffering. We continue to urge the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to apply rigorously international humanitarian law and human rights law, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Tunisia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Tunisian Ambassador; and if he will make a statement on UK-Tunisian relations. [95097]

Mr. Hain: The Secretary of State has not yet met the Tunisian Ambassador, Mr. Jhinaoui. I last met him on 6 September.

Bilateral ties go back a long way and remain mutually productive. Tunisia is an important trading partner and Britain is one of the largest international investors there. Tunisia is also a constructive and moderate influence on many of the Middle East's regional problems. Human rights form an important part of our bilateral agenda. We have welcomed the recent release from gaol in Tunisia of two people championed by international human rights NGOs. We hope to build on this at both bilateral and EU level for a resolution to other outstanding cases.

Gender Impact Assessment

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason his Department has not carried out any gender impact assessments since June 1997. [95228]

Mr. Battle: My Department has introduced three pieces of legislation since June 1997 which were needed to implement internationally negotiated treaties in the United Kingdom. Gender impact assessments were not considered necessary for the legislation concerned.

My Department works closely with the Women's Unit, and will continue to consider the need for gender impact assessments for all new legislation.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Lifelong Learning

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what contacts he has made with (a) trade associations and (b) trades unions on the formulation of strategies for lifelong learning and continuing professional development. [95723]

Mr. Wicks: The Department works closely with a variety of organisations in formulating its strategies for lifelong learning and continuing professional development. These include Trade Associations and Trade Unions.

Toddington and Didbrook

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to make public his decision on the amalgamation of Toddington and Didbrook primary schools in Gloucester. [95712]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State informed Gloucestershire local education authority on Thursday 21 October that he had rejected the proposals. The letter containing the Secretary of State's decision asked the local education authority to inform objectors.

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came; and which of these twinnings related to the (i) education and (ii) employment aspects of his Department. [93998]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 25 October 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 25 October 1999, Official Report, columns 739–40.

New Deal (Disabled People)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to announce the national roll-out of the New Deal for Disabled People. [95726]

Ms Jowell: Together with colleagues at the Department for Social Security, we are currently considering what has been learnt from the pilot phase for a national extension of this New Deal. We hope to make an announcement on this in the near future.

Supported Employment

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what use he is making of research his Department has recently (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the demand for places for supported employment. [95727]

Ms Jowell: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Tim Boswell, dated 25 October 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked Leigh Lewis to reply direct to your question about research into the demand for place for our Supported Employment Programme. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

The research was conducted by Sheila Honey and Matthew Williams at the Institute for Employment Studies and published in July 1998 under the title: Supply and Demand for Supported Employment. A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

The Programme provides job support to over 22,000 disabled people with a range of employers and in supported factories and businesses. It is open to disabled people who face more complex barriers to getting or keeping a job because of their disability, but who can work effectively with support. The Programme is delivered in partnership with over 230 local authority and voluntary organisations and Remploy Ltd. Around 12,000 supported employees work in a variety of jobs with mainstream employers with the remainder working in around 190 supported factories and businesses, including some 6,3000 in Remploy factories.

The research provided estimates, using a variety of data sources, of the extent to which the supply of places on our Programme matched the potential demand on a geographical basis. Depending on the definition, the research indicated a potential additional demand of between 40,000 and 180,000 places. The lower figures was based on people who were unemployed and actively seeking work and the upper figure included those who were currently inactive in the labour market (such as students, those looking after families or homes, or people temporarily unable to work due to illness). It is unlikely, however, that all of those estimated as eligible for our Supported Employment Programme will actually demand a place—many are likely to find work in open employment or training.

The research also indicated that the degree to which the potential supply of places on the Programme matched the potential demand varied by Employment Service Region. Wales had the closest match between supply and demand, followed by the South West and the Northern Region. The greatest mismatch between supply and demand occurred in London, followed by the West Midlands and the North West.

East year some 3,000 people enter the Programme; and we are using the findings of the research to inform contract discussions with a view to addressing geographical imbalances over time. One key factor we take into account in these discussions is that any rapid redistribution of existing places could force people off the Programme (and potentially out of work). Many contractors also have a specific geographical rather than a national remit, for example local authorities, and cannot support people elsewhere.

Government funding for our Supported Employment Programme for 1999–2000 is £155.1 million. A further £5 million for this financial year and the two following financial years to March 2002 has been allocated as part of a new £30 million fund for disability services, announced in 1998 by the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. We are using this additional resource to increase the grant per place to local authority and voluntary body contractors, to support developments at Remploy, and to support proposals for a series of projects to develop and test ways of improving the effectiveness of the Programme and, in particular, its success in helping people to progress into open employment. Helping those disabled people who can cope with unsupported open employment to make the transition will release places for new people to enter the Programme.

I hope this is helpful.

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) the reports published by his Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by his Department, (c) the decisions his Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria he uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93970]

Mr. Wills: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Council on 19 October 1999, Official Report, column 429.

Remploy

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent discussions he has had with Remploy in connection with divergence from their corporate plan. [94726]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 19 October 1999]: There have been no discussions with Remploy regarding changes to their Corporate Plan. Ministers have approved the strategy in the Board's Corporate Plan for 1999–2002, and remain committed to Remploy's current Corporate Plan.

Age Diversity in Employment

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the outcome of his Department's consultation with heads of employment tribunals about the legal status of the Code of Practice on Age Diversity in Employment. [95951]

Ms Jowell: The consultation confirmed that as the Code is non-statutory it cannot be used as the basis of a legal decision. It may, in time, though, help inform the thinking of Employment Tribunals on what constitutes "reasonable behaviour". That will, however, be a matter for the Tribunals themselves.

Higher Education

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many higher education places remain unfilled at the start of the academic year. [95725]

Mr. Wicks: Student number targets are set by the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) each year covering home and EU students (whether fundable by HEFCE or not) who are on full-time or sandwich courses, or on courses of initial teacher training (ITT). For 1998 these targets were broadly met in aggregate at the sector level. Equivalent figures are not yet available for 1999.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students he estimates are entering higher education in the current year; and if he will make a statement on trends relative to the last three years. [95724]

Mr. Wicks: The latest figures from the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) show that, as at 13 October, the number of UK domiciled applicants accepted for entry to full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses was 247,318, which represents an increase of 2 per cent. compared to 1998. Figures from the Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA), which cover both full-time and part-time students, show that undergraduate recruitment has held up over the last three years.

Employment Service

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the additional number of staff required in the Employment Service if unemployed claimants had to register every day; and what would be the cost in a full year of employing such staff. [95656]

Ms Jowell: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Hilary Benn, dated 25 October 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked Leigh Lewis to reply to your question concerning the additional staff numbers and costs that would be required should daily registration be required from unemployed claimants. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

Using the current live headline unemployment level of 1.2m along with staffing assumptions for current registration activities, the total additional staff numbers required to manage the daily registration would be approximately 25,000 at a cost of £400m in a full year.

I hope this is helpful.

TECs

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with the Chairman of the TECs regarding their contribution to a legal fighting fund to challenge the Governments' proposals on the use of their reserves and assets when they are wound up. [95413]

Mr. Wicks: We are aware that the TEC National Council (TNC) has been taking legal advice on behalf of TECs. Officials and the Department's legal advisers have met the TNC on a without prejudice basis to discuss the legal aspects and implications around the termination of the Licence. We have also made it absolutely clear to TEC Chairmen and Boards that we expect TECs to work with us to ensure a smooth transition to the new arrangements and that resources are used effectively and efficiently for the benefit of learners, businesses and local communities.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the reserves and assets of each TEC indicating those moneys which came from (a) public and (b) private sources. [95414]

Mr. Wicks: The following table sets out the reserves of each TEC in England based upon information drawn from the companies' audited statutory accounts for 1998–99. The table splits the reserves into those which TECs believe attributable to funds derived from payments made by the Secretaries of State and those attributable to funds from other sources. Reserves include all assets less any liabilities of TECs. We are currently discussing with TECs the basis on which non attributable reserves have been calculated.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps his Department is taking to monitor the use of reserves and assets of TECs in the period leading to their being wound up. [95415]

Mr. Wicks: All TECs were sent a formal notification on 13 July 1999 that their Licences would terminate on 25 March 2001. Since then, in accordance with the terms of the Licence, TECs have been required to inform Government Offices of any proposed new commitments or expenditure and must comply with all reasonable requests either to provide information or to limit expenditure. In addition, Government Offices receive regular information from TECs on their financial position and continue to monitor their financial and audit systems.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will ensure that funds commercially generated by TECs from money originally from public sources returns to the public sector. [95416]

Mr. Wicks: Under the terms of the Licence, any funds derived from payments made by the Secretaries of State for Education and Employment, for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, and for Trade and Industry will return to the relevant Secretaries of State on termination of the Licence. The Secretaries of State will determine their use to ensure that Government priorities and commitments are met.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what telephone access to the Immigration Service is currently available to (a) asylum seekers and (b) local Benefit Agency sections on asylum seeker matters; what plans he has to improve the current level of telephone access; and if he will make a statement. [93984]

Mrs. Roche: Asylum seekers, in common with other members of the public, can telephone the Immigration and Nationality Enquiry Bureau to seek information on general immigration matters or to chase progress on applications. Major improvements have recently been made in telephone call handling with around 4,000 calls (75 per cent. of calls) now being answered each day. Further measures are planned with the aim of increasing this to 5,000 calls a day.

Arrangements have been made with the Benefits Agency that local offices should use a dedicated fax line to make inquiries about an asylum seeker's immigration status. Urgent inquiries will be dealt within three days. Inquiries from the Fraud Unit or in connection with terminally ill claimants can still be made by telephone.

Scout and Guiding Movement

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimate he has made of the amount of income that will be generated from fees paid by the Guide Association Movement in the UK arising from use of the proposed Criminal Records Bureau in the first three years of its operation; [93728]

(2) what estimate he has made of (a) the annual revenue raised from the Scout and Guiding Movement as a result of the charges for carrying out security checks on new volunteers, (b) the cost of administering each charge associated with security checks on people who work with children and (c) the number of individuals subject to such a charge per annum. [94703]

Mr. Charles Clarke: When the Criminal Records Bureau comes into operation, it will be expected to recover its costs through charges for the certificates it will issue, on application, to individual employees. The overall cost to the Scout and Guiding Movement will depend upon their decisions as to the circumstances in which its volunteers should apply for a certificate and whether to reimburse the cost. Until the Bureau's operating costs have been determined it will not be possible to fix the charges for certificates but our best early estimate is £10 for the most expensive certificate, the Enhanced Criminal Record Certificate. We have made clear our intention to keep the cost as low as possible.

Wildlife

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives his Department has launched to protect wildlife (a) in the UK and (b) on Merseyside. [94653]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Government policy responsibility for wildlife conservation rests mainly with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR). There are no initiatives on this in which the Home Office has the lead role.

The principal national initiative, overseen by the DETR, but to which the Home Office suscribes, is the Partnership for Action against Wildlife Crime (PAW), launched in 1995 and fully supported by this Government. It provides a forum for Government Departments, voluntary organisations and wildlife user groups to make a strategic contribution to the fight against wildlife crime. PAW supports a network of over 250 Police Wildlife Liaison Officers (PWLOs) in police forces across the United Kingdom, including the Merseyside Police. PAW also hosts an annual conference of PWLOs.

Enforcement responsibility for wildlife crime rests with the police and, in the case of illegal imports and exports, with Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. Local initiatives to combat wildlife crime are matters for chief police officers in the light of their overall policing priorities. Merseyside Police are active in this area, and have most recently been targeting unlawful collection of birds' eggs, with the result that prosecutions are pending. A number of persons in Merseyside have also been cautioned for wildlife offences this year.

To assist local enforcement efforts across the country, PAW has made a number of recommendations, including that the courts be given the option, at present unavailable to them, of imposing custodial sentences for wildlife offences. The Government will be implementing this as soon as a suitable legislative opportunity arises.

Eurodac

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made with the implementation of the Eurodac Implementing Rules (8140/99); and if he will make a statement. [94131]

Mrs. Roche: The draft Eurodac implementing rules were drawn up in respect of the draft Eurodac Convention and associated draft Protocol, which were not adopted by the Council prior to the entry into force of the Treaty of Amsterdam. A draft Eurodac Regulation is currently under discussion as a First Pillar measure. My right hon.

Friend the Home Secretary announced on 7 October that the United Kingdom was opting in to the draft Regulation. Implementing rules for the draft Regulation may need to be supplemented in the future in the light of technical developments.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had about the possible transfer to the Commission of competence for implementing the provisions of the Eurodac Regulation; and if he will make a statement. [94130]

Mrs. Roche: The Commission has proposed that competence for implementing provisions of the Eurodac Regulation should be transferred to the Commission by the Council in accordance with the terms of the first sentence of Article 202 of the Treaty Establishing the European Community. The Council will need to decide whether there are grounds in this instance for reserving that competence to itself in accordance with the third sentence of Article 202.

The Regulatory Procedure which the Commission has proposed for the implementing rules for the draft Eurodac Regulation would give the Member States considerable control over the Commission's exercise of delegated powers.

Prison Education Courses

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the amounts of money available in each prison for education courses in each of the past 10 years at current prices and the percentage increase for each year. [94570]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not available in the form requested. The table sets out actual expenditure on certain separately identifiable areas of education spend covering payments to education service providers and purchase of education materials. These cover the financial years 1995–96 to 1998–99 and are at 1998–99 prices; information for earlier years is not readily available, neither is information on education costs at private sector prisons.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the amount per head of population of each prison available for education courses for each of the past 10 years. [94571]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not available in the form requested. The tables set out actual annual expenditure on certain separately identifiable areas of education spend covering payments to education service providers and purchase of education materials divided by the average population for each prison in that year. These cover the financial years 1995–96 to 1998–99; information for earlier years is not readily available, neither is information on education costs at private sector prisons. The figures are at current, 1998–99, prices.

The percentage of the population which would have been engaged in education will have varied from prison to prison and from year to year, so any conclusions drawn from these figures must be treated with caution.

EU Documents

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what draft documents were presented by the Presidency of the European Union to be considered at the European Council in Tampere, on 15 and 16 October concerning any aspect of the Union's area of freedom, security and justice; when these were received by Her Majesty's Government; and what steps were taken by the Presidency to make documents publicly available prior to the meeting. [94363]

Mr. Straw: The Presidency have produced only one draft document for consideration at the European Council itself. This was a paper dated 5 October on the composition and working arrangements for the body to be charged with the preparation of a draft European Union Charter of Rights; I understand that it was not published. In July, the Presidency presented three discussion papers on possible themes for the Tampere European Council intended to assist member states in their preparations. I understand that these documents were not published.

I should add that the Presidency have been happy to make widely known their developing policy towards this European Council. In this regard, for example, they gave oral evidence before Sub-Committee F of the House of Lords European Communities Committee on 6 July, in the context of that Sub-Committee's inquiry into Prospects for the Tampere European Council. They have also placed extensive material on their internet website.

Rapparee Cove, Devon

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1999, Official Report, column 162, regarding the status of the human remains found in 1997 at Rapparee Cove in Devon, if the scientific examination has commenced; and when he estimates it will be completed. [94801]

Mr. Boateng: I understand tests to establish the origin of the remains have commenced, but are not yet completed.

Airguns

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will revise the guidance he has issued to the Firearms Consultative Committee on strengthening the provisions on the ownership and use of airguns. [94839]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government have asked the Firearms Consultative Committee (FCC) to look at a wide range of firearms issues as part of its work programme for this year, including the controls on air weapons. The FCC has made clear that its main focus in considering these issues, including the controls on air weapons, is in terms of protecting and improving public safety. We look forward with interest to the FCC's annual report at the end of the year and any recommendations the Committee may make.

Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the procedure for the transfer of persons held in custody under the Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters (1999/C251/01); if the burden of proof will be equivalent to that required in British courts; and what is the status of this proposal. [95255]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Article 9 of the draft Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters provides that a member state requesting a criminal investigation in another member state may temporarily transfer a person in custody in its own territory to the member state carrying out the investigation to assist in that investigation. Transfer can take place only with the agreement of the competent authorities of both member states concerned, which includes agreement on the date by which the prisoner is to be returned to the requesting member state. Paragraph 3 of the Article would also enable the United Kingdom to seek the prisoner's consent to be transferred. The period of detention in the territory of the requested member state must be deducted from the period of detention that the prisoner would serve in the requesting member state.

Since the transfer is temporary and is not done for the purpose of prosecuting the prisoner in the state to which he is transferred, the question of burden of proof does not arise.

The wording of this Article of the draft Convention has been agreed by all the member states.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of requests he will receive for telecommunications intercepts following ratification of the Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters between EU states. [95254]

Mr. Charles Clarke: It is not possible to provide a meaningful estimate of the number of requests likely to be received for the interception of telecommunications under the European Union Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters if it is agreed and ratified.

The number of requests made will depend on the requirements of other member states. However, requests to intercept the telecommunications of targets in the United Kingdom will not be granted unless all the tests for issuing a warrant under the United Kingdom's domestic interception legislation have been met.

Defence Exhibition

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of policing the Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition flotilla this summer in the Isle of Dogs. [94898]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Metropolitan Police Commissioner tells me that the total cost for policing this event was about £331,000.

Ms Snejana Fournadjieva

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a decision will be taken on the applications by Ms Snejana Fournadjieva for leave to remain in the United Kingdom, References F1001194 and PO 15309/99. [95321]

Mrs. Roche: Leave to remain on the basis of marriage was granted to Ms Fournadjieva on 21 October.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost of policing demonstrations in London connected with the arrest and detention of Senator Pinochet. [94899]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Metropolitan Police Commissioner tells me that the cost of policing these demonstrations has been about £94,500.

Immigration

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for indefinite leave to remain on the basis of the concession to overseas domestic workers have been received by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate; how many of those applicants have now received a decision on their application; and how many of those applications were successful. [95166]

Mrs. Roche: The introduction of a revised concession to overseas domestic workers was announced on 23 July 1998. Some 230 such workers were granted indefinite leave to remain in the period July 1998 to September 1999. Available data on the number of applications received for indefinite leave to remain and the number refused do not separately identify overseas domestic workers.

Metropolitan Police Authority

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria the proposed Metropolitan Police Authority will use in determining whether a police/community consultative group continues to receive approval and support; and what role PCCGs themselves will have in devising an acceptable process for assessing each PCCG's performance. [95167]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Subject to the passage of the Greater London Authority Bill, it will be the responsibility of the Metropolitan Police Authority (MPA) (after consulting the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis) to make arrangements for obtaining the views of Londoners about matters concerning policing in the Metropolitan Police District and for securing their co-operation with the police in preventing crime in that area. This responsibility will be identical to that currently falling on police authorities outside London. It will be for the Metropolitan Police Authority to determine what criteria it will use to assess whether and to what extent individual Police/Community Consultative Groups help it to fulfil its statutory responsibility. In assessing the effectiveness of all its arrangements for public consultation, the MPA will be under the duty of Best Value.

Drug Treatment Programmes

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was in total and in respect of each prison and young offender institution in England and Wales (a) the number of prisoners currently taking part in a drug treatment programme, (b) the number of current prisoners who have completed a drug treatment programme and (c) the number of prisoners who are waiting to join a drug treatment programme. [94904]

Mr. Boateng: As an integral part of the £76 million programme to expand drug treatment for prisoners, the Prison Service will be introducing early next year a comprehensive monitoring system to evaluate the effectiveness of both the new services and those already operating. Until then, the information requested cannot be provided.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state in respect of each police force in England and Wales the number of offenders entering drug treatment programmes as a result of arrest referral schemes (a) during 1998–99 and (b) during 1999–2000 to date; and if he will make a statement. [94907]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is not currently available. Information from Drug Action Teams' plans for 1999–2000, submitted in December 1998, suggested that coverage of custody suites by arrest referral schemes was partial across police forces. We have set targets to double the number of schemes this year, with coverage of all custody suites to be achieved by 2002.

Tackling drug related crime is one of the Home Secretary's Policing Priorities for 1999–2000, and it is accompanied by a supporting key performance indicator concerned with the numbers entering treatment as a result of arrest referral. Police forces will report to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on their performance at the end of this financial year.

To assist the national roll out of arrest referral, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced in July that up to £20 million will be available to police forces to accelerate the introduction of arrest referral schemes and to help ensure that treatment is available for those with drug problems identified by these schemes.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was in total and in respect of each prison and young offender institution in England and Wales, (a) the number of prisoners who were tested for drugs in (i) 1997, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000 to date and (b) the number of such prisoners who tested positive for drugs. [94903]

Mr. Boateng: The number of prisoners tested under the random mandatory drug testing programme by establishment and as a total figure, for the periods 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 to date, together with the number of prisoners who tested positive, is given in the table.

The number of prisoners tested for drugs under the random mandatory drug testing programme and the number of those tested who were positive for drugs for the periods 1997–98, 1998–99, 1999–2000 to date[1]

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state in respect of each month from January to date (a) the number of occasions when visitors to prisons or young offender institutions have been caught trying to smuggle illegal drugs, (b) the number of such visitors who have been banned from further visits, (c) the number of such visitors who have been charged with a criminal offence, (d) the number of such visitors who have been prosecuted in court and (e) the number of such visitors who have been convicted. [94906]

Mr. Boateng: The total number of visitors arrested for drug offences is given in the table, together with the number of visitors banned. Figures for the number of visitors subsequently charged, prosecuted and/or convicted are not recorded by the Prison Service.

Prison Officers (Assaults)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state, in respect of each prison and young offenders institution, the number of prosecutions which have been brought against inmates for assault on prison officers in each year from 1992 to date. [94913]

Mr. Boateng: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, information on prosecutions for assault is now being collected and will be available in future years.

The Prison Service collects centrally information on the numbers of proven charges of assault at adjudications under the Prison Rules, and the available information is set out in the table. These figures relate to assaults on staff of all grades, not solely prison officers, together with any assaults on others excluding prisoners, such as contractors or visitors.

Club Closures

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions to date local authorities have used powers under the Public Entertainments Licences (Drug Misuse) Act 1997 to shut down clubs; and if he will list the local authorities which have exercised these powers. [94908]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No arrangements exist to collect this information centrally. Close contact with the police and the club trade suggest, however, that the powers of the Public Entertainments Licences (Drug Misuse) Act 1997 have not yet been used by a local authority to close a club.

Martin McGartand

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further progress has been made by Northumbria Police in identifying those involved in the attempted murder of Martin McGartand at Whitley Bay on 17 June; if the weapon used has been identified and/or connected with any other crime; and if he will make a statement. [95335]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Northumbria Police continue to make inquiries into this crime. I understand that, at the present time, there is no firm evidence to identify those involved in the shooting; nor has the weapon used been identified or confirmed as being connected with any other crime.

Cycling Fines

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many on-the-spot fines for cycling on the pavement have been issued by each police force since the scheme was introduced. [95310]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information is not yet available.

Each police force has been asked to monitor the new fixed penalty provisions which came into force on 1 August 1999, but the figures are not likely to be available until early in the new year.

Racing Pigeons

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been convicted of offences involving racing pigeons in each of the last three years for which figures are available under the criminal law section of the Theft Act 1969 and section 1 of the Criminal Damage Act 1971; and if he will make a statement. [95319]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information is not collected centrally. Although the Home Office Court Proceedings database identifies the legislation under which a defendant is proceeded against, it generally does not hold information on the characteristics of individual cases dealt with by the courts.

Prisoners (Civil Claims)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil claims by prisoners against the Prison Department have been settled out of court in each year since 1995. [95074]

Mr. Boateng: The information is available only from 1997 onwards and is given in the table.

Paramapathy Pavanathan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. Paramapathy Pavanathan of Acre Road, Kingston, will hear the results of his application for refugee status. [95235]

Mrs. Roche: On 21 October, Mr. Pavanathan was granted leave to remain in the United Kingdom until 1 March 2000.

Domestic Fires

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fires occurred in domestic dwellings caused by (a) an electrical source and (b) misuse of electrical equipment and appliances in the United Kingdom during each of the years from 1989 to 1998. [94974]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is given in the table.

Asylum Applications

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the average time from the lodging of the asylum application to the determination of the appeal for those cases where a determination of an appeal to an adjudicator against an initial asylum decision has been made in each of the last three calendar months; [95884]

(2) what has been the average time from the lodging of the application to the initial decision for those cases where an initial decision has been made on an asylum claim, where the asylum seeker was a single person, in each of the last three calendar months; [95883]

(3) what has been the average time from the lodging of the application to the initial decision for those cases where an initial decision has been made on an asylum claim, where the asylum seeker had dependent children, in each of the last three calendar months; [95886]

(4) what has been the average time from the lodging of the application to the initial decision for those cases where an initial decision has been made on an asylum claim in each of the last three calendar months; and how this average has been calculated. [95885]

Mrs. Roche: The available information is given in the table. The figures were calculated by taking the mean length of time between the date that the asylum application was lodged and the date of the initial decision, for asylum decisions taken in July, August and September 1999. The figures relate to asylum applications lodged by principal applicants only. Separate figures for single people and for people with dependent children are not presently available.

Immigration and Asylum Bill

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with Amnesty International regarding the provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Bill; and if he will make a statement. [95568]

Mrs. Roche: I met representatives of Amnesty International on 19 October to discuss the provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Bill.

Laser Pens

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to regulate the use of laser pens; and if he will make a statement. [95668]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Anyone carrying a laser pointer as a weapon in a public place or a school may be liable to prosecution under section 1 of the Prevention of Crime Act 1953. In addition, laser pointers which may present an unacceptable risk in the hands of the general consumer, are subject to consumer safety legislation.

We have no plans to introduce further regulation in this area.

Police Officers

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were employed in England and Wales during the most recent year for which figures are available; and how many he expects will be employed in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02. [95664]

Mr. Charles Clarke: As at 31 March 1999, there were 126,096 police officers in England and Wales. Under legislation passed by the previous Government, the powers of the Home Secretary to set overall police numbers were removed. The number of police officers at any given time is determined by chief constables on the basis of resources made available to them. The Government are making available additional resources, in a new ring-fenced crime fighting fund, to provide 5,000 extra police recruits over the next three years.

Vivisection

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the benefits to medical science of vivisection; what plans he has to review the practice; and if he will make a statement. [95722]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The development of many new drugs and medical technologies has depended on, and continues to depend on, the use of animals. Their use is regulated by the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, which is widely viewed as the most rigorous piece of legislation of its type in the world.

In 1998, the Animal Procedures Committee completed a review of the operation of the Act. Its results were published in November 1998 as part of the Committee's annual report for 1997. The Committee concluded that further examination of the cost/benefit assessment should be undertaken and that the validity of science using animals could be part of their review. The Committee is planning to consult publicly and I await their further advice.

Convicted Sex Offenders

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requirement there is (a) for convicted sex offenders against children to notify authorities of addresses they are staying at abroad and (b) for sex offenders convicted abroad for offences against children to notify authorities when residing in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [95564]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under the Sex Offenders Act 1997, there is no requirement for offenders to register if they travel abroad or for those with overseas convictions to register if they reside in the United Kingdom. This is one of a number of issues we are looking at in evaluating the operation of the registration requirement in the 1997 Act. Once the review is completed, we shall then need to consider whether, and if so what, changes are necessary.

TREASURY

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [93994]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 25 October 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 25 October 1999, Official Report, columns 739–40.

ONS

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the reasons are for the Office for National Statistics five-year survey of companies' fixed assets; [95917]

(2) how many companies in (a) manufacturing and (b) food-processing industries have been sent questionnaires by the Office for National Statistics requesting details of their fixed assets; and what is his estimate of the total compliance cost involved. [95916]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Nick Gibb, dated 26 October 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary questions on companies' fixed assets.

The new Fixed Assets Survey to collect details of capital stocks held by businesses is one of a number of measures introduced to improve the quality of the National Accounts. The survey was introduced in 1999 to provide a more reliable basis for calculating the value of fixed assets held in the UK, required for the National Accounts. It will cover all industries in a rolling programme so that each industry is surveyed only once in about five years.

The questionnaire requesting details of fixed assets was sent to a sample of 264 companies in manufacturing, of which 257 were in the food processing industry. The estimate of the total compliance cost for these industries is £19,000.

Revenue

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total revenue was raised (a) directly and (b) indirectly (i) 30 years ago, (ii) 20 years ago, (iii) 10 years ago and (iv) currently. [95517]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Frank Field, dated 26 October 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on revenue as a proportion of direct and indirect taxation.

The ONS does not publish data under the headings of direct and indirect taxation.

In table 10.1 of the United Kingdom National Accounts (Blue Book) 1999 a full list of UK taxes is published on a European System of Accounts (ESA 1995) basis. Copies of this publication are available in the House of Commons Library. Broadly speaking they are split into:

(i) taxes on products and production (D.2 taxes) including taxes such as VAT and business rates and the rest which includes

(ii) taxes on income and wealth including taxes such as income tax, corporation tax, motor vehicle duties (D.5)

(iii) social contributions including employers and employees compulsory contributions (D.611)

(iv) capital taxes including taxes such as inheritance tax (D.91)

Year	1968	1978	1988	1998
Taxes on production as a percentage of total taxes	39.0	35.2	38.1	38.4
Other taxes as a percentage of total taxes	61.0	64.8	61.9	61.6

EU Funding (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the National Assembly for Wales with regard to the provision of additional funds from the Treasury for the financial year 2000–01 and subsequent years, to enable Wales to take up European Union strategic funds fully in each year from April 2000, without having to reduce spending on other services to provide the necessary Welsh funding; and if he will make a statement. [95769]

Mr. Andrew Smith: My predecessor discussed these matters with the First Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales. I have also held discussions with the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that the full sums of money provided by the EU for Objective 1 strategic projects in Wales will be passed to Wales outside the Welsh block and not be subject to the application of the Barnett formula; and if he will make a statement. [95770]

Mr. Andrew Smith: UK Government Departments, the Scottish Executive and the National Assembly for Wales are required to find full public expenditure cover for EU Structural Funds expenditure.

I will consider on their merits representations from the National Assembly about the public spending implications arising from Objective 1 status as part of next year's spending review.

Crown Estate

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the past five years payments to the Consolidated Fund made by the Crown Estate Commissioners. [95271]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The information requested is as follows:

Financial year	£ million
1994–95	81.9
1995–96	94.3
1996–97	103.1
1997–98	116.6
1998–99	122.0

Fuel Duty

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to end the above-inflation rises in fuel duty; and if he will make a statement. [95274]

Mr. Timms: The Government's policy on fuel duty escalators is set out on page 121 of the 1999 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Mortgage Mis-selling

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has received in the past four months on the mis-selling of mortgages. [95158]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The deadline for submissions to the Treasury's consultation on whether mortgages should be regulated was 22 October. The Treasury has received over 150 responses to date. Analysis is now taking place, with some responses still being received. A decision will be announced by the end of the year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the median total weekly income of those current recipients of Incapacity Benefit or Invalidity Benefit below state pension age who have private pension income in excess of £50 per week. [94698]

Mr. Bayley: Around 80 per cent. of current recipients of Incapacity Benefit below State pension age either have no private pension or a pension of less than £50 a week.

The median weekly household income before housing costs of current recipients of Incapacity Benefit below State pension age with income from a private pension in excess of £50 a week is £309 a week. The average weekly household income for this group is £343 a week. The average is higher than the median because a significant proportion have high pension incomes.

Notes:

1. Incapacity Benefit replaced Sickness Benefit and Invalidity Benefit in April 1995. All existing recipients at that date became Incapacity Benefit recipients.

2. Weekly income is unequivalised income net of tax and other deductions of the household that the benefit recipient lives in.

3. All figures are in April 1999 prices and are rounded to the nearest £.

4. Figures are estimates from the Households Below Average Income (HBAI) dataset based on the 1997–98 Family Resources Survey (FRS) for Great Britain.

5. Private pensions are defined as occupational and personal pensions.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list his Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93682]

Mr. Rooker: The Department has spent £3.216 million on official publications in the period May 1997 to the end of September 1999.

Income Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumption about the indexation arrangements for Income Support underlies his estimate that on unchanged policies one in three pensioners will be in receipt of Income Support by 2050. [94699]

Mr. Rooker: For the above estimate, Income Support is assumed to increase in line with average earnings from the year 2000. The assumed rate of increase in average earnings is 1.5 per cent. per year above the rate of inflation.

Notes:

1. The estimate referred to above was obtained through an approximate extension of the results for 2025 of the Departments' microsimulation model, PENSIM.

2. PENSIM provides estimates of pensioners' incomes up to 2025. Using the 2025 income estimates, all sources of private incomes were assumed to increase in line with average earnings (1.5 per cent. per year above inflation) up to 2050. State income (other than Income Support) was assumed to increase only with prices. This provided an estimate of the distribution of pensioners' incomes in 2050. The model's caseload was re-weighted to reflect the projected size and composition of the pensioner population in 2050.

3. The number of pensioners in 2050 with estimated income below Income Support levels in this year was calculated. The same proportion of this group receiving Income Support in 2025 was assumed to receive Income Support in 2050. This resulted in an estimate of around 30 per cent. of the total pensioner population in 2050 receiving the benefit.

4. The Department does not currently have a tool to estimate pensioners' incomes in 2050 although a long-term project is underway to develop one.

Fraud

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of benefits claimants receive benefits by (a) cash payment through the Post Office and (b) direct credit transfer; and what amount of benefit fraud arises from (i) cash payments and (ii) direct credit transfer. [95176]

Mr. Rooker: As at August 1999, about 65 per cent. of all benefit recipients were receiving payment in cash by order book or girocheque at the Post Office. Thirty-four per cent. were receiving payment by direct credit transfer and 1 per cent. by other methods of payment into banks (these include payable orders and the small proportion of girocheques paid into bank accounts).

It is estimated that fraudulent losses during 1998–99 from cash payments were £19 million in respect of girocheques and £83 million in respect of order books. No fraud has been detected to date directly arising from payment by direct credit transfer.

Overseas Pensions

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations have been received from (a) the Canadian Government and (b) other Governments since 1 May, in favour of restoring parity between the state pension available to British citizens resident overseas and that available to United Kingdom residents. [95076]

Mr. Rooker: The issue of frozen rate pensions was raised by Donald Campbell, of Canada's Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade, during a meeting with my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 6 October 1999 in Canada.

The Australian Government made representations in July 1999 for a limited unfreezing of pensions for some UK pensioners living in Australia. We rejected this proposal. The Australian Government indicated that it would be abrogating the Social Security agreement with the UK. Formal notification of this has not been received.

We have had no other formal approaches from Governments about unfreezing pensions during the period.

Pensions

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the value of the basic state pension for (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples for each year since November 1979 to April 1999; what it would have been if it had been uprated in line with whichever was the higher of average earnings or prices; and what were the average earnings and retail prices index figures in the month which determined the level of the state pension each year since 1979. [95678]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the tables.

1. The Retail Prices Index (all items) has been used as published by the Office for National Statistics.

2. Average Earnings Index Whole Economy (Non Seasonally Adjusted) as published by the Office for National Statistics.

3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest 5 pence at each uprating.

4. From April 1994 the basic rate of Retirement Pension has been increased by 50p on a single person and 70p on a pensioner couple to reflect VAT on fuel.

5. The figures for November 1978 to November 1982 have been calculated using actual increases in Retail Prices Index rather than forecast increases.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases have been considered to date under the Periodic Inquiry into Disability Living Allowance; and of these, how many have resulted in (a) a higher assessment, (b) an unchanged assessment and (c) a lower assessment. [95477]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 25 October 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many cases have been considered to date under the Periodic Enquiry into Disability Living Allowance; and of these, how many have resulted in (a) a higher assessment, (b) an unchanged assessment and (c) a lower assessment.

Statistics for periodic enquiry are to be published on a quarterly basis. The first figures, which will show the position up to and including 30 September, are due for publication within the next two weeks. They, and all further Periodic Enquiry statistics, will be available in the House of Commons library.

I hope this is helpful.

Changes to Regulations

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a list of all changes to Social Security regulations since May 1997, giving a brief summary of the effect of each change, the number of people affected, the cost or saving of each change and the average cost or gain to individuals as a result of each change; and if he will make a statement. [95266]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available has been placed in the Library.

It is only possible to provide a list of subordinate legislation made by the Secretary of State for Social Security since 1 May 1997. Summaries of the legislation can be found in the explanatory note attached at the end of each piece of subordinate legislation which are also held in the Library.

State Pension

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual cost in the next five years of raising the state pension over inflation by (a) £3, (b) £5 and (c) £8 for single claimants and (i) £5, (ii) £8 and (iii) £11 for couples. [95284]

1. Gross costs have been calculated by the Government Actuary's Department. Net costs take account of means-tested benefit offsets using the 1999–2000 Policy Simulation Model based on the 1996–97 Family Resources Survey.
2. It is not possible to provide net costs for the third option (£8-single, £11-couples) because they involve disproportionate increases for different categories of pension, which the Policy Simulation Model cannot distinguish between.
3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest 10 million and are in 1999 prices.
4. Linked benefits include Widows Benefits and Incapacity Benefit.

HEALTH

Overseas Treatment

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there is any Government funding for medical treatment overseas using advanced techniques currently not available in the United Kingdom. [94639]

Ms Stuart: National Health Service legislation contains no general power allowing purchase of treatment outside the United Kingdom for UK residents. European Community law does permit referral of individual patients elsewhere within the European Economic Area for treatment. Exceptionally, a health authority can seek approval from the Department of Health for ex-gratia funding of treatment outside the European Economic Area provided the costs are met from within the authority's existing resources.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in each year from 1994 to 1999 for Southport and Ormskirk Trust and Fazakerley Trust hospitals (a) how many people were on waiting lists and (b) what was the average waiting time for an operation involving (i) orthopaedic, (ii) heart, (iii) urology, (iv) carcinoma and (v) opthamology matters. [94591]

Mr. Denham: Table 1 shows the size of the waiting list at the end of March 1994 to 1999 for each provider site.

Tables 2 and 3 show the average waiting time by selected hospital provider for the financial years 1994–95 to 1997–98 for the following areas:

An operation involving the trauma and orthopaedic, urology and ophthalmology specialties.

Heart operations.

An operation involving a selected primary diagnosis of neoplasms (carcinoma).

Waiting time statistics from HES are not the same as the published waiting list statistics. HES provides counts and waiting times for all patients admitted to hospital within a given period whereas the published waiting list statistics count those waiting for treatment at a given point in time and how long they have been on the waiting list. Also, HES calculates the waiting time as the difference between the admission and decision to admit dates. Unlike published waiting list statistics, this is not adjusted for self-deferrals or periods of medical/social suspension.

Eye Tests

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in Sefton over the age of 65 years had their eyes tested in each year between 1995 and 1998. [94590]

Mr. Hutton: From information obtained on the age of patients from an annual, national sample survey of opticians' workload, we estimate that the following numbers of sight tests were carried out among the 54,400 people aged over 65 who we estimate are resident in Sefton.

	Number of sight tests
1995–96	21,000
1996–97	21,400
1997–98	21,900
1998–99	22,200

Trust Funding

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding over and above base budgets was received by Fazakerley Trust and Southport and Ormskirk Trust hospitals in each year from 1992 to 1999; and what specific projects were so funded. [94589]

Mr. Denham: The table gives details of the funding above base budgets and the projects funded for Aintree Hospitals National Health Service Trust (including Fazakerley Hospital), the former West Lancashire NHS Trust (acute services only) and the former Southport and Formby NHS Trust for each year from 1992–93 to 1998–99.

The information provided is not kept centrally and was obtained from Southport and Ormskirk Hospitals NHS Trust and Aintree Hospitals NHS Trust. Further details may be obtained from the trusts if required.

Young Disabled People

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to collect information on the long-term care needs of younger disabled people. [93829]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has recently introduced a new collection—the Resources, Assessment and Packages of Care (RAP) Project—which will provide information on the numbers of disabled people aged 18–64 assessed by social services and the services identified as being required to meet their needs as a result of the assessment. The data are not broken down further by age. The report of the first "Dress Rehearsal" for the RAP Project has just been published. Copies are available in the Library.

The Department also collects information on the numbers of younger disabled people in residential or nursing care and the residential and nursing care market provision. Information is also available on the numbers of younger disabled people who receive different forms of day and domiciliary care. Again, this information is available for the 18–64 age group, but it is not possible to break these figures down further by age.

NHS Direct

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how NHS Direct will be funded once the pilot funding has been discontinued; and if he will make a statement; [94892]

(2) if primary care groups and primary care trusts will acquire budgetary responsibilities for NHS Direct once the current pilot funding is discontinued. [94895]

Ms Stuart: NHS Direct is currently funded through a central budget. The National Health Service Executive Headquarters and NHS Executive Regional Offices will continue to have budgetary responsibilities for NHS Direct for the foreseeable future.

Airlines (Emergency Medical Equipment)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice he plans to offer commercial airlines in respect of the equipment they routinely carry against the possibility of medical emergencies; [94893]

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the equipment carried by commercial aircraft for use in medical emergencies. [94894]

Ms Stuart: Following informal discussions with the Department, the Medical Directors of the Association of European Airlines are reviewing current provision of emergency equipment and training on aircraft with the European Resuscitation Council. This will take account of what the Civil Aviation Authority already set out, the updated requirements of the EC harmonised Joint Airline Regulations covering commercial airlines, recommendations from the Aerospace Medical Association and ongoing international work. We will consider the expert advice when it is ready and discuss what action may be needed with Ministerial colleagues in other government departments and with the industry.

Surgical Operating Departments

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to establish a scheme of statutory registration for surgical operating department practitioners. [95234]

Mr. Hutton: Under powers provided by the Health Act 1999, we are reviewing the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960. As part of that review, consideration is being given to the regulation of health professions which are not currently state registered, including operating department practitioners. The aim will be to provide for an NHS which is modern, reliable and fully responsive to patient needs. There will be full consultation before a final decision is taken.

Community Prescribing

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the second part of the Crown review on community prescribing to be published. [95245]

Yvette Cooper: The final report of the Review of Prescribing, Supply and Administration of Medicines was published for consultation and comment on 8 March. We are currently giving detailed consideration on how best to take forward the Report's recommendations in the light of all comments.

NHS Trusts (Capital Charges)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the capital charges on health service buildings and lands payable by NHS trusts. [95244]

Mr. Denham: All the land and buildings in the National Health Service estate were re-valued by the Valuation Office Agency in an exercise completed by 31 June 1999. The resulting valuations will be brought to account in NHS trusts' financial statements at 31 March 2000 and will consequently determine the amount of capital charges payable by NHS trusts in the financial year 2000–01.

Estimates of capital charges payable in 2000–01 were received from NHS trusts by the NHS Executive in August 1999. These estimates inform the process of allocating funding to health authorities for 2000–01 such that the NHS trusts sector is fully funded for capital charges thus estimated.

Carers

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many carers' assessments have been carried out under the Carers Act 1995; and if he will make a statement. [95334]

Mr. Hutton: Using information provided from the first dress rehearsal of the Referrals, Assessments and Packages of Care Project, which not all local authorities in England completed, we have been able to extrapolate an indicative number of carers' assessments carried out under the Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995 for the period 1 January 1999 to 31 March 1999. This indicative figure is 62,384. No earlier data are available centrally.

St. Dunstan's

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons St. Dunstan's recent application for Government funding was rejected. [95911]

Mr. Hutton: St. Dunstan's has submitted an application under the current round (2000–01) for section 64 grants. No decision has yet been made. It is expected that Ministers will make their decisions early in 2000.

Under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, the Department has powers to fund voluntary organisations in England whose activities support the Department's policy objectives relating to health and social services. St. Dunstan's is eligible, as are all registered charities, to apply under the scheme.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional sums for treating coronary heart disease will be allocated to the Morecambe Bay Health Authority in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01. [95483]

Mr. Hutton: Plans for allocating the additional £50 million to help the National Health Service increase numbers of heart operations over the next two years, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 18 October, have yet to be finalised.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to reply to the Question tabled for answer on 16 July on winter pressures (91791). [95811]

Mr. Denham: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply to his earlier Question as soon as possible.

Human Tissue Act 1961

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the provisions of the Human Tissue Act 1961 to require coroners to consult relatives before removing body organs; and if he will make a statement. [95571]

Mr. Hutton: In view of the concerns raised about the removal and retention of organs at post mortem, we have asked the Chief Medical Officer to conduct an investigation. This investigation will look at what has happened in the country generally and at the implications for the National Health Service. Any recommendations relating to coronial practice emerging from the CMO's investigation, the Bristol Inquiry, or other local reviews will receive full consideration.

Social Workers

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to reduce the incidence of violence against social workers; and if he will make a statement. [95730]

Mr. Hutton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the right hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 750.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the report from the National Institute for Clinical Excellence regarding the benefits to sufferers of multiple sclerosis of being prescribed Beta Interferon; and if he will make a statement. [95560]

Mr. Denham: We consulted earlier in the summer on a proposal to refer beta interferon to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE), for an authoritative appraisal of the available evidence, and an announcement will be made about the outcome of the consultation in the near future

It will be for NICE to determine its timetable for the appraisal of technologies once they are referred by the Government.

Response Times Targets

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received over the response times targets for Category B and Category C calls; what discussions he has had with Community Health Councils over these response times; what plans he has to review the times; and if he will make a statement. [95565]

Ms Stuart: My noble Friend the Baroness Hayman and I have recently replied to Gloucestershire Community Health Council on the subject of Category C calls and officials have written directly to a number of Community Health Councils setting out Government policy in this area.

Ambulance response times are reviewed annually and published in a Statistical Bulletin. We have asked ambulance services to submit proposals for pilot studies looking at alternative ways of dealing with less urgent non-life threatening 999 calls. Several services are already piloting such projects, however careful monitoring and evaluation is needed to ensure patients receive appropriate clinical care.

Health Inequality

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment his Department has made of current levels of health inequalities in England. [93175]

Yvette Cooper: My right hon. Friend the Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) commissioned an Independent Inquiry into Inequalities in Health, under Sir Donald Acheson, whose report was published in November 1998. This report contained an assessment of current levels of health inequalities in England.

Our new health strategy, "Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation", sets out the main measures of success we shall be using. We shall shortly be publishing a Technical Supplement which will outline in more detail the types of information that will be collated nationally and locally.

Published alongside the health strategy was "Reducing Health Inequalities: An Action report" which sets out the action being taken across Government—and through partnerships between local and regional organisations—to reduce health inequalities.

Mental Health Services

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further improvements he plans to make to the quality and provision of mental health services. [93176]

Mr. Hutton: Our plans for improving mental health services were set out last year in "Modernising Mental Health Services". This made clear that improvements would be delivered through the implementation of the National Service Framework for Mental Health, reviewing mental health legislation and through new investment and reprioritisation of existing resources.

We published the National Service Framework on 30 September which sets out detailed standards, service models and milestones for measuring improvements in services. Implementation of the National Service Framework will be subject to rigorous performance management.

We have made clear our commitment to investing new resources in mental health services over this and the next two years to help health and social services reshape mental health services.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

EU Regulations

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the Government's current position in relation to the European Commission proposal to adopt the amended Brussels Convention and the new draft Rome II Convention, pursuant to Article 65 of the Amsterdam Treaty; and if a regulatory impact assessment of the costs and benefits to small and medium sized enterprises of the implementation of this proposed EU regulation has been undertaken. [95174]

Mr. Lock: Pursuant to the Protocol to the Treaty of Rome governing the special position of the United Kingdom and Ireland in relation to measures adopted under the Title IV of that treaty, the Government is not yet required to decide whether the United Kingdom should opt-in to the negotiations on the recent proposal for a regulation to replace the 1968 Brussels convention. This decision must be taken before 8 December 1999.

No proposal for a regulation has yet been made in relation to the draft Rome II Convention which will establish choice of law rules in relation to non-contractual matters; negotiations on this proposed agreement are still at an early stage. There will be proper consultation on it at the appropriate time.

No regulatory impact assessment of the costs and benefits to small and medium sized enterprises of the implementation of the proposed regulation to replace the Brussels Convention has been undertaken. Such an assessment was not considered appropriate in this case.

Competition Law (QCs)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he has examined the effect of EU competition law, with particular reference to articles 52 and 85, in relation to the operation of the Queen's Counsel system. [95083]

Mr. Lock: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor is satisfied that the operation of appointments of Queen's Counsel is consistent with the Treaty provisions mentioned.

Robert Hamill

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the inquest into the death of Robert Hamill will be held. [95358]

Mr. Lock: The holding of an inquest into the death of Robert Hamill is a matter for the Coroner for the District in which Mr. Hamill died. The Coroner has indicated that the inquest will be held on a date to be fixed in the New Year.

Public Trust Office

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the constitution of the Public Trust Office; who are its members and officers; to whom it is accountable; how it calculates its charges; and if he will make a statement. [95575]

Jane Kennedy: The Public Trust Office was established as an executive agency on 1 July 1994. Its purpose is to ensure the effective management of private assets and financial affairs entrusted to its care. This includes the administration of private trusts, the supervision or management of the financial affairs of mentally incapable persons and the care of funds paid into court.

The responsible minister is the Lord Chancellor. The head of the agency is the Chief Executive who holds the statutory offices of Public Trustee and Accountant General of the Supreme Court. The Public Trust Office employs around 580 staff.

The Chief Executive is responsible for decisions relating to the day to day management of the Public Trust Office and is directly accountable to the Lord Chancellor for the effective and efficient management of the Public Trust Office.

The Public Trustee is required by statute to cover the cost of work related to the administration of trusts. Fees are fixed by the Treasury and sanctioned by the Lord Chancellor.

In relation to mental health work, the Public Trust Office charges a fee calculated against annual income after certain deductions e.g. non-taxable social security benefits.

The Court Funds Office recovers its costs out of income from investments which are managed by the National Investments and Loans Office in accordance with the provisions of Section 39(2)(b) of the Administration of Justice Act 1982.

Hereford Crown Court

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans the Lord Chancellor has to review the (a) site and (b) operation of Hereford Crown Court; and if he will make a statement. [95933]

Jane Kennedy: The lease on the current court building will expire on 31 December 2001. A review will be necessary in advance of that date to determine how the court should operate in future. At this stage, it is too early to judge whether changes to the site or operation of the court will be required.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list his Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93688]

Dr. Reid: The spending on official publications by my Department and its predecessor, The Scottish Office, since May 1997, which includes the costs incurred by the Department in publishing, preparation and purchase of copies for official use was £225,802. These costs exclude the cost of publications produced for internal use. Where the Department makes use of a private sector publisher, the publishing, printing and design costs are generally met by the publisher as part of their acceptance of the risks of publication.

CABINET OFFICE

Ecstasy

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many (a) women and (b) men aged 16 to 25 years died as a direct result of ecstasy overdose in 1998–99. [95871]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jonathan Shaw, dated 26 October 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on how many (a) women and (b) men aged 16 to 25 years died as a direct result of ecstasy overdose in 1998–99.

In 1997, the latest year for which data are available, there were five drug-related deaths among men aged 16 to 25 years in which ecstasy was mentioned on the death certificate. No deaths associated with ecstasy were recorded among women in this age-group in 1997.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Mr. Love: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress she has made in implementing the national strategy for neighbourhood renewal. [94214]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government will publish the national strategy for neighbourhood renewal for consultation in Spring 2000. It will set out a proposed approach for dealing with England's most deprived neighbourhoods.

The strategy will aim to bridge the gap between the most deprived neighbourhoods and the rest; and to deliver on four key outcome targets in deprived neighbourhoods: more jobs, less crime and better health and educational achievement.

The Social Exclusion Unit has set up 18 Policy Action Teams to drive forward the work to develop the strategy, focusing on key problem issues. These teams bring together civil servants from across Whitehall and outside experts. But the strategy will also need to draw on other work, particularly on ensuring that mainstream public services are enabled to do their job in deprived areas.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list for each of the Next Steps agencies (1) the number of civil servants employed in Scotland; [95281]

(2) (a) the total wage bill and (b) the wage bill for staff based in Scotland. [95282]

Mr. Ian McCartney: This is a matter for which the Scottish Executive is responsible.

WALES

Wages Growth

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the average percentage growth in wages in Wales in 1997 and 1998 respectively. [94873]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Figures for the percentage increase in average gross weekly earnings of full time employees, on adult rates in Wales for 1997 and 1998 are set out in the following table:

	Percentage
April 1996 to April 1997	5.3
April 1997 to April 1998	4.1
April 1998 to April 1999	3.2

Source:
New Earnings Survey, Office for National Statistics

GDP

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the percentage GDP growth in Wales in 1997 and 1998. [94875]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There is no official estimate for GDP growth in Wales.

Departmental Title

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the title of his Department. [96245]

Mr. Paul Murphy: With the agreement of the Prime Minister, my Department is known as "Wales Office (Office of the Secretary of State for Wales)".

The name is designed to address the new, post-devolution, role of my post in Government. It is important that it is clear that I do not retain responsibility for matters which are devolved to the National Assembly for Wales. The name reflects the responsibilities I have for representing Wales in Parliament and in the UK Government. At the same time it points to my role in Wales—that is promoting Government policies and making sure that a wide constituency of interest in Wales are able to make their views known directly to the UK Government.

In Cardiff, I have an office in the National Assembly for Wales building; to avoid confusion my Department will be known there as "The Office of the Secretary of State for Wales".

World Wide Web

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to secure a Wales Identifier on the World Wide Web. [95159]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Wales Office has already secured such an identity on the World Wide Web at: http://www.ossw.wales.gov.uk.

Calf Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what role he played with regard to negotiating with the European Commission about the acceptance of the calf scheme proposed by the National Assembly for Wales; and if he will make a statement. [95777]

Mr. Paul Murphy: It is for the UK Government to put any proposals for a calf-processing scheme to the Commission, and for the National Assembly for Wales to develop any proposals for such a scheme in Wales. I have every confidence in the way the Assembly contributed to the informal discussions which MAFF and UKRep held with the Commission on the proposal. I have been in close contact throughout with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and with the First Secretary and Secretary for Agriculture and Rural Development of the National Assembly for Wales.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what data he has collated on National Lottery ticket sales by (a) constituency and (b) social class. [95533]

Kate Hoey: Information on National Lottery ticket sales by constituency is not available. Ticket sales are only broken down on a geographical basis by television region. Average weekly spend on the Saturday and Wednesday draws between July 1998 and April 1999 is shown in the following table, which was provided by the Lottery operator, Camelot Group plc.

TV Region	Average weekly spend by those participating (£)	Average percentage participating
LWT Carlton	3.55	44
Meridian/South	3.44	48
Anglia	3.08	50
West Country	3.09	49
Wales and West	3.23	51
Central	3.11	50
Granada	3.20	48
Yorkshire	3.37	55
Tyne Tees	3.45	63
Scottish	3.26	52
Ulster	3.00	43
Total	3.29	49

Ticket sales by social class as shown in the following table, also provided by Camelot.

percentage

Social class	Saturday game	Wednesday game
AB	21	20
C1	25	25
C2	26	27
DE	28	28

Note:
No breakdown is available for instants sales.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will provide an estimate of moneys he anticipates will be received by each of the good causes up until the end of the current lottery contract; how much has been received by each good cause to date; and if he will make a statement. [95275]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 26 October 1999]: By 30 September 1999 the total income (including interest) to the Good Causes from the National Lottery was as follows:

£ billion

Good cause	Lottery income received (including interest)
Charities	1.48
Heritage	1.50
Arts	1.44
Sports	1.48
Millennium Commission	1.66
New Opportunities Fund	0.63
Total	8.19

The forecast income for the Good Causes to the end of the current Licence has been estimated using three different scenarios:

£ billion

Good cause	Low forecast	Medium forecast	High forecast
Charities	1.88	1.91	1.97
Heritage	1.89	1.92	1.99
Arts	1.85	1.88	1.94
Sports	1.88	1.91	1.98
Millennium Commission (including interest)	2.019	2.019	2.019
New Opportunities Fund	1.16	1.22	1.36
Interest for the period 1 October 1999 to 30 September 2001	0.34	0.35	0.38
Total (including interest)	11.02	11.21	11.64

The income data for the individual Good Causes (except the Millennium Commission) exclude interest for the period from 1 October 1999 to the end of the Licence. It is not possible to calculate the future allocation of interest between the Good Causes, because this will depend on the rate at which the Distributors draw income from the NLDF. The estimated total interest for all the Good Causes from 1 October 1999 to the end of the Licence is shown separately.

Television Licences

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what guidelines he gives to the Television Licensing Authority regarding the purchasing of licences part-way through a calendar month; and if he will make a statement. [95711]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 26 October 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has issued no such guidelines. Since 1991, the BBC has had statutory responsibility for the administration of the television licensing system and Television Licensing carries out the day to day administration as agent for the Corporation. However, I understand that the practice of issuing new licences to expire 12 months from the end of the month preceding that in which they are issued follows previous Home Office practice.

Public Bodies (Vacancies)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will set out the current vacancies on non-governmental public bodies sponsored by his Department, together with the dates on which the vacancies arose and when they were advertised. [95154]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The information is listed. For reasons of proportionality, it is my Department's policy only to consider advertising for posts which are of widespread public interest and/or with annual remuneration of above £10,000. The majority of appointments to my Department's public bodies do not fall within this definition.

National Museum of Pop

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to support further the National Museum of Pop in Sheffield. [95756]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I regret that the National Centre for Popular Music is in difficulty. This is an exciting venture designed to celebrate the world's rich heritage of popular music. I understand that the NCPM is working with all interested parties, including the Arts Council of England, Yorkshire Arts, English Partnerships and Sheffield City Council, to arrive at a solution to the Centre's difficulties.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to visit the National Museum of Pop in Sheffield. [95470]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has at present no plans to visit the National Centre for Popular Music in Sheffield.

World Cup

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the European Commission officials who were given World Cup tickets at the time of that event; if these officials were involved in assessing the fine on the football authorities imposed by the Commission; and if he will make a statement. [95498]

Kate Hoey: My Department does not hold information on the distribution of tickets for the 1998 World Cup Finals to European Commission officials. That is a matter for the organisers of the 1998 World Cup Finals and the European Commission.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many holidays were taken in the United Kingdom by British residents in (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998. [95436]

Janet Anderson: In 1996 UK residents took 64.8 million holidays within the United Kingdom. By 1997 this figure had risen by 6 million to 70.8 million, an increase of 9 per cent. However, in 1998 the number of holidays taken had declined by 5.7 million to 65.1 million, a decrease of 9 per cent.

Local Libraries

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list those local authorities to which, within the last year, he has made written representations over their plans to reduce local library services. [95130]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 25 October 1999]: My Department has been involved in detailed discussions with 10 authorities about major changes to their library services, including service reductions. It is our policy at this stage not to name or list the authorities concerned. Our experience is that there is more chance of finding acceptable resolutions if this policy is followed, and indeed this has happened in several cases already.

Television Advertising (Children)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his policy is regarding television advertising to children; and if he will make a statement. [95924]

Janet Anderson: Under the Broadcasting Act 1990, it is the duty of the Independent Television Commission to draw up and maintain a code covering advertising on television. Appendix 1 of the Commission's Code of Advertising Standards and Practice includes detailed regulations which ensure that television advertisements aimed at children do not mislead or exploit or encourage unsafe or dangerous behaviour. The regulations also prohibit the advertising of certain types of product during childrens' programmes. The Code was revised last year following consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, the television and advertising industries, viewer and listener groups and other bodies.

Trafalgar Square

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people are estimated to have celebrated the New Year in 1999 in Trafalgar Square; and what the capacity of Trafalgar Square for celebrating the New Millennium will be if proposals to create an ice skating rink there go ahead. [95927]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Approximately 90,000 people attended the New Year's Eve celebration in Trafalgar Square in 1999 and it is anticipated that this number will be exceeded on New Year's Eve this year. The proposed ice rink will be removed from the Square before New Year's Eve for public safety reasons.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Low Fat Diet

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee if a low fat diet is to be available in the canteens and restaurants in the House; and what medical advice has been sought on this subject. [94932]

Mr. Dennis Turner [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The House of Commons Refreshment Department is committed to a policy of encouraging "healthy eating" throughout all its cafeterias and dining rooms, ensuring that customers are given a sufficiently wide choice of foods to be able to modify and regulate their own diet. Regular promotions are held in conjunction with the House of Commons Occupational Health Service to help educate customers and to assist them in making healthier food choices.

The availability of low fat foods is an important part of this approach to the promotion of a balanced diet, and the Refreshment Department has for several years adapted its recipes and cooking methods to make use of healthier alternatives wherever possible. A "healthy eating" dish is publicised on daily cafeteria and dining room menus, in addition to which fish is offered on most menus and can generally be served without sauce or added fat. Skimmed and semi-skimmed milk is available throughout the Department, as are butterless vegetables, lean meats, un-dressed salads and reduced fat dressings, low fat yoghurts and sandwiches, and a wide range of fruit and vegetables. In addition there is usually a vegetarian option in all outlets which tends to be more healthy and lower in fat.

The Department aims to ensure that adequate choice is available for customers wishing to follow a low fat diet and plans to continue to develop its policy of encouraging a rounded approach to healthy eating and a balanced diet.

In fulfilling this policy, the Refreshment Department liaises closely with the medical and lay staff of the House of Commons Occupational Health Service, as well as with staff of the Gymnasium. Many senior managers and chefs of the Department have received some formal education or training in nutrition and dietetics, but further advice and guidance on specific issues is taken from external dieticians, the Health Education Authority or other professional bodies.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Gender Impact Analysis

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what initiatives and policies have been subjected to a gender impact analysis in his Department. [94497]

Ms Beverley Hughes: As an employer we monitor the impact on women of our recruitment, appraisal and promotion processes. To help women balance the demands of work and home, we have a range of policies including support for childcare, career breaks of up to five years and a policy that all posts (with very few exceptions) are available for part-time working and job-sharing.

We are continuing to make use of consultations, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy on women. Specific examples of these include the recent consultation of various women's organisations on smoking in taxis and the development of a public transport gender audit. We are also requiring the inclusion of policy appraisal statements in each Ministerial policy submission. Other initiatives include the requirement to promote social inclusion (including meeting the transport needs of women and other social groups) in the Department's assessment of local authorities' provisional Local Transport Plans.

Our policies are subject to evaluation and will pick up differential impacts on specific groups, particularly where they are disadvantaged. Some policies do have intentional differential gender impacts; for example, the priority afforded to pregnant women and lone parent households (the majority of which are headed by women) in the allocation of council housing.

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by his Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94851]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 682.

Railway Vandalism

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of offenders who committed vandalism causing train accidents in 1998–99 are being prosecuted; and what action he is taking to ensure that train operators and Railtrack provide adequate security. [95172]

Mr. Hill: The Health and Safety Executive reported that in 1997–98 there were 1,098 reported railway accidents caused by malicious action, including 512 incidences of damage to the cab driver's window. The figures provided by the British Transport Police for the same year show that they dealt with 6,419 reported incidences of 'stone throwing' or 'Line of Route' offences, such as obstructing the line, of which 718 were either charged or cautioned, or no crime was found to be committed.

Train operating companies are expected to follow the crime prevention strategies in our guidance 'Personal Security on Public Transport—Guidelines for Operators', including measures such as CCTV, improved lighting and the availability of trained staff. My Department also encourages train operators to join the 'Secure Station' and 'Secured Car Park' schemes where they apply for accreditation by meeting agreed standards on crime prevention measures.

Federal Express

Mr. MacGregor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what concessions he obtained from the United States Government in return for the rights recently given to Federal Express to deliver freight from Prestwick Airport to third countries. [95331]

Mr. Prescott: In granting fifth freedom rights from Prestwick to US cargo carriers, we have said to the US Government that we would expect it to give favourable consideration to equivalent applications for extra-bilateral rights to UK carriers. Although United Kingdom airlines will not benefit directly from the granting of these rights at Prestwick, there will be significant economic benefits accruing to the region. In the longer run, UK airlines and airports will gain when we have achieved our wider goal, which is the liberalisation of the overall market.

Private Sector Renting

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the numbers of private sector rooms for rent in each standard region for the last five years for which figures are available. [94884]

Mr. Mullin: The term 'private sector rooms' is open to interpretation and so the following table shows estimates from the Survey of English Housing of the number of private tenancies in each Government Office region.

Private tenancies (excluding rent free) by Government Office region

Thousand

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99

Notes:
1. Each private tenancy corresponds to a separate agreement by which a tenant or tenants rent their accommodation from their landlord.
2. Excludes rent free tenancies, but includes those where whole rent is met by Housing Benefit.

Artificial Reefs

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if his Department plans to investigate the environmental impact of building artificial reefs to create surfing waves around Britain's coast; [95929]

(2) what investigation his Department has carried out to assess the impact on the surrounding coastline of creating an artificial reef off the coast at Bournemouth. [95930]

Mr. Mullin: No assessments have been made because no firm proposals have been submitted. More than one permission would be required. Constructing an artificial reef to create surfing waves would require prior written consent from this Department to ensure that danger or obstruction to navigation was not likely to result. Such works would also require a licence from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. They would take full account of effects on the marine environment.

Under 18-year-olds

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the number of residents under 18 years of age at 30 June 1996, as used in the local government finance settlement, in each local authority area in England. [95734]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Registrar General's estimates of the number of residents under 18 years of age at 30 June 1996 were used in the 1998–99 and 1999–2000 local government finance settlements. The Office for National Statistics published revised population estimates for 1996 on 27 August 1998. These were used in the 1999–2000 settlement.

The following table details the estimates of the number of residents under 18 years of age for each relevant local authority as used in the 1998–99 and 1999–2000 local government finance settlements.

Water Industry

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what representations he has received and what research he has commissioned on the likely effect of the periodic review of water prices in England and Wales on those employed (a) directly and (b) indirectly within the water industry; and if he will make a statement; [95553]

(2) what representations he has received and what research his Department has (a) evaluated and (b) commissioned, on the implications of the loss of further jobs in the water industry in England and Wales for (i) safety, (ii) customer service standards, (iii) continuity of supply and (iv) environmental standards; and if he will make a statement; [95554]

(3) what discussions he has held with (a) the Director General of Ofwat and (b) other organisations over likely job losses in the water industry in England and Wales as a result of the periodic review of water prices; and if he will make a statement. [95555]

Mr. Mullin: My Department has received representations about possible job losses in the water industry, from some water companies, from Water UK, from employees of water companies and from the union, UNISON. My Department has not undertaken or commissioned research on employment in the water industry, nor discussed this with the Office of Water Services.

The examination of the water industry's costs and efficiency assumptions is a matter for the Director General of Water Services. He has a statutory duty to secure that water companies properly carry out their functions and are able to finance them. These functions must be carried out in full compliance with all legal requirements, including drinking water quality (regulated by the Drinking Water Inspectorate), health and safety (regulated by the Health and Safety Executive), environmental standards (regulated by the Environment Agency) and customer service and continuity of supply (regulated by the Director General himself). In conducting his periodic review of water price limits the Director General is expecting companies to improve on efficiency savings that they have already achieved. It will be for water and sewerage undertakers to ensure that they maintain the necessary staff and other resources to meet these obligations in full.

The Government believe that it is possible to deliver substantial quality improvements and reductions in customers' bills, for the benefit of consumers. The environmental and water quality improvement programmes will create significant new employment opportunities.

MPG6

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to revise Minerals Planning Guidance Note 6, Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England; and if he will make a statement. [95453]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Review of the Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England has commenced and it is expected that a paper on the main issues will be published for public consultation early in the New Year. Following consideration of the responses, a revised draft of the guidance will be published for consultation later in 2000.

Housing (Voluntary Transfers)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many housing units are currently the subject of proposals for large-scale voluntary transfers. [95914]

Mr. Mullin: Seventeen local authorities on the 1999–2000 Housing Transfer Programme are proposing, subject to the approval of tenants, to transfer 112,432 housing units in this financial year. Details are set out in the table.

Mr. Mullin: The Housing Transfer Programme currently runs from 1 April each year until 31 March the following year. In 1996–97, 22,248 housing units were transferred. In 1997–98, 32,982 units were transferred, and 73,900 units transferred in 1998–99. Details are set out in the table:

Thames Transport

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what action he is taking to ensure that London River Services and the Port of London Authority honour the contracts which they entered into with Thames riverboat operators under the Partners in Progress scheme; [95481]

(2) what powers he has to enforce sanctions against London River Services and the Port of London Authority should they fail to honour the contracts which they entered into with Thames riverboat operators under the Partners in Progress scheme. [95480]

Mr. Hill: As part of the Government's Thames 2000 initiative to revitalise passenger transport on the Thames, London River Services (LRS) took over key central London piers from the Port of London Authority (PLA) on 1 April this year. LRS has been in discussion with Thames riverboat operators about the arrangements to transfer the licence agreements reached with the PLA to LRS.

LRS hope to be able to reach agreements with all the Thames riverboat operators on the transfer of licences. Indeed, the majority of operators have now signed new LRS licences. However, I am aware that some operators are still in negotiation with LRS about contractual arrangements, and I understand that the possibility of legal proceedings has been raised. In view of this it would be inappropriate for me to comment further.

Railtrack

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the current status of the proposal to give Railtrack plc infrastructural control of the sub-surface lines of London Underground; and when he expects an agreement to be made. [95992]

Mr. Hill: Railtrack and London Underground are continuing to work together to explore the options for linking the sub-surface Underground lines with the national rail network in a Public Private Partnership.

Subject to the outcome of the discussions currently underway, Railtrack would submit a priced bid for the sub-surface railway PPP contract and the integration schemes next year. As with the two deep tube PPPs, no bid will be entertained that does not contribute significantly to Tube safety.

London Underground

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers the Mayor for London will have to alter the terms of the proposed public-private partnership for London Underground Ltd. [95998]

Mr. Hill: The Mayor and Transport for London will take over PPP contracts designed to secure the efficient maintenance and improvement of the Tube network. These will be contractually binding, but they will have built into them flexibility for the Mayor to make adjustments over time, to deliver changing performance requirements. The Mayor, through Transport for London, will have the necessary controls to ensure that the Tube plays its full part in a properly integrated strategy for transport in London. Fares, ticketing, service levels and the operation of stations and trains will be the responsibility of the Mayor.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies he has undertaken into the operation of public/private partnerships in other countries similar to that proposed for London Underground Ltd. [95997]

Mr. Hill: Public private partnership is an area in which the UK is leading the way. The London Underground PPP is a bespoke arrangement to cater expressly for the needs of our Underground.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many extra District Line trains were run each day during the closure of the Circle Line service. [95994]

Mr. Hill: This is an operational matter for London Underground. However, I understand that two extra District Line trains ran each peak period during the closure of the Circle Line service. Demand in out-of-peak hours did not require the additional services.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Maintenance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of absent parents who are liable to pay child maintenance following an assessment by the Child Support Agency but who do not do so; and if he will estimate the number of these who are currently in receipt of (a) income support/jobseekers allowance or (b) a disability benefit. [94697]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mike Isaac to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 26 October 1999:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of non-resident parents (NRPs) who do not pay child maintenance following an assessment by the Child Support Agency. You also asked how many of these non-resident parents are in receipt of Income Support(IS)/Job Seekers Allowance Income Based (JSAIB) or a Disability Benefit.

The most recent figures available show that at the end of May 1999 there were 863,960 NRPs with a full maintenance assessment and that 98,620 (11.4%) were known to be paying nothing at all. Included in this latter figure are 1,520 individuals on an Incapacity/Disability Benefit. As recipients of IS/JSAIB have nil maintenance liability, they will not therefore be included in the category of payers or non-payers. A contribution to maintenance may however be payable and may be deducted at source by the Benefits Agency.

When an NRP refuses to cooperate with the Agency in calculating a maintenance assessment we may impose a punitive Interim Maintenance Assessment (IMA). This may be for a much higher amount than would otherwise be due and is intended to encourage the NRP to provide the information needed. At the end of May there were 78,340 IMAs in force with 45,560 NRPs not making any payment. The very lack of information that led to the IMA prevents us knowing the precise number in receipt of Incapacity/Disability Benefit though we are aware of 240 such cases.

The Department's Analytical Services Division produces a CSA Quarterly Summary of Statistics that is available in the House of Commons Library and you may find the information it contains of further interest.

I am very keen to improve compliance levels and to this end CSA has entered into partnership with Deloitte Touche. Working together, we will develop a strategy to increase the number of maintenance payments made on time and reduce the build up of arrears. The Agency will introduce effective compliance and enforcement procedures that will get rid of the 'soft touch' image it has acquired with some people. Furthermore, appropriate earlier contact with NRPs, by telephone, letter or face to face will encourage natural compliance. These measures will generate improvements in the short term and contribute to a sound base for achieving maximum benefit from the Child Support Reforms.

I hope this is helpful.

State Pension

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual cost of reinstating the link with earnings for the state pension from 1 October. [95425]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 October 1999]: Social Security benefits are uprated in April each year.

The net costs of uprating the basic state pension in line with the average earnings index from 1 April 2000

Million (1999–2000 prices)

Year	Excluding linked benefits	Including linked benefits
2000–01	730	850
2001–02	1,040	1,210
2002–03	1,510	1,750
2003–04	2,060	2,390
2004–05	2,610	3,040

Notes:

1. As annual costs are not constant over time the first five years are shown.
2. Costs are in 1999–2000 prices and are rounded to the nearest £10 million.
3. Net costs are estimated using gross costs provided by the Government Actuary's Department, together with income-related benefit offsets produced by the Policy Simulation Model and PENSIM in the Department for Social Security. Overseas cases are included.
4. Costings assume the Minimum Income Guarantee continues to be uprated in line with earnings. No allowance is made for introduction of the State Second Pension or the measures in the Welfare Reform Bill.

Discretionary Social Fund

Mr. Neil Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he intends to make to the Discretionary Social Fund. [96567]

Angela Eagle: As a consequence of the Decision Making and Appeals provisions contained in the Social Security Act 1998, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be making changes to the Social Fund directions and guidance. These will come into effect on 29 November 1999. Also included is a range of other minor improvements, the need for which has been identified in the course of routine monitoring. Details of these changes have been placed in the Library.

I am also pleased to announce that the Social Fund guide will be made available on the DSS internet site from 29 November.

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by his Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94844]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer from my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 682.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply from the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency to his letter of 1 September regarding a constituent, ref: 15499. [94919]

Angela Eagle: A reply was issued to my hon. Friend on 22 October 1999.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by his Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94847]

Mr. Straw: Yes. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Minister for the Cabinet Office and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, my right hon. Friend the Member for Redcar (Marjorie Mowlam), on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 682.

Travel Documents

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants for travel documents have been waiting for more than six months. [94795]

Mrs. Roche: There are approximately 3,000 travel document applications awaiting consideration which were received over six months ago. In recent weeks, there has been a substantial increase in staff numbers in the Travel Document Section of the Integrated Casework Directorate in order to process increasing volumes of new applications as well as older cases from the backlog.

This, combined with streamlined working practices, has resulted in dramatic increases in output from averages of 120 per week during August to well over 700 last week.

Corporate Killing

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to implement the 1996 recommendations of the Law Commission on the issue of corporate killing. [94821]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government are well aware of the weaknesses in the current law on corporate manslaughter. An interdepartmental working group of officials, which includes a member of the Law Commission, is currently considering the recommendations made in the Law Commission's report Number 237, "Legislating the Criminal Code: Involuntary Manslaughter".

We expect to receive the conclusions of the interdepartmental working group within the next few weeks and will then consider the way forward.

HMP Liverpool

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report of the investigation into allegations of bullying in relation to nursing staff at HMP Liverpool will be completed; and to whom it will be made available. [95948]

Mr. Boateng: The report of the investigation into allegations that nursing staff at Liverpool prison had been the victims of bullying and harassment from other staff has been completed. None of the allegations were substantiated. However, the report makes a number of recommendations to improve the management of the health care centre in the future. The area manager is considering these recommendations and is determined to ensure that nothing along the lines alleged could happen undetected at Liverpool prison.

The report is an internal document and contains information and unsubstantiated allegations which could cause further distress to individuals named in it if it was made public. However, the governor is making it available to the Board of Visitors at Liverpool prison. The investigating officer has discussed the contents of the report with the family of Robert Price, the former nurse whose death prompted the investigation. The Coroner recently recorded a verdict of suicide. Managers will arrange to discuss the report with any of the other members of staff involved who request it.

Pellet Guns

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what controls are available and how often they have been exercised in the last five years over the (a) manufacture, (b) sale, (c) possession and (d) use of ball-bearing pellet guns. [95367]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There are two basic categories of guns designed to fire small ball-bearings (BB guns).

The first is the ball-bearing repeater pistol. These guns usually have a muzzle energy of less than one joule. Under the definition of "firearm" given in section 57 of the Firearms Act 1968, guns with a muzzle energy as low as this are not classed as firearms because they are not lethal and are incapable of inflicting more than trivial injury. As such, they do not come under the control of the Firearms Acts.

The second category consists of BB rifles. These are air rifles which are capable of firing ball-bearings as well as the more normal waisted pellet. Being low-powered airguns, there is no requirement for them to be held on a firearm certificate but in all other respects they come under the control of the Firearms Acts.

There are no controls under the Firearms Acts on the manufacture of low-powered airguns but their sale to, possession and use by young people is controlled by the Acts, as is the use of such weapons by adults.

For the purposes of the legislation, airguns capable of firing ball-bearings are classed simply as "air weapons". For this reason, it is not possible to distinguish between convictions for offences in which guns firing ball-bearings were used and those involving guns capable of firing only the conventional waisted pellet.

The table gives the number of convictions for the most common airgun offences for the five years between 1993 and 1997 (the last year for which figures are available).

Offence	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Carrying a loaded air weapon in a public place	506	614	511	575	540
Person under 14 having an air weapon	92	95	92	82	60
Person under 17 having an air weapon in a public place	448	361	462	396	297

The figures relating to other offences under the firearms legislation cover the misuse of all types of firearms. It is not possible to separate out those convictions relating to air weapons except at disproportionate cost.

Police Funding

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he intends to make to the police funding formula following the report into the sparsity element of the formula. [95781]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We are considering the findings of the research report on the cost of policing in rural areas. We intend to announce soon details of how the police funding formula will operate in relation to next year's finance settlement.

Farm and Country Watch Schemes

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support his Department provides to farm and country watch schemes; how many such schemes are currently in place; and if he will make a statement. [95778]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government recognise that people in rural communities have different policing needs from those who live in urban areas, although they suffer from most of the same sorts of crime as urban areas. Rural communities can also suffer the twin problem of the lack of an obvious police presence and longer response times to emergency calls.

That is why the partnership approach between the police and the local community is the most effective means of tackling crime in rural areas. We encourage farm and country watch schemes as means by which members of the public can help themselves and the police to engage in a positive way in the fight against crime.

As farm and country watch schemes are run in conjunction with local police forces, the Home Office does not keep records of such schemes.

Police Resource Implications

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the resource implications for the police service of (a) a ban on hunting with hounds and (b) the trialing of GM crops; and if he will make a statement. [95779]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Most police forces can, from time to time, face unexpected demands on their resources. We would normally expect forces to meet the additional costs from within their existing budgets or from their contingency reserves.

CCTV

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of his Department's planned expenditure on closed-circuit television schemes will be targeted on rural areas; and if he will make a statement. [95780]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under the first round of the Crime Reduction Programme Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) initiative, Crime Reduction Partnerships in England and Wales have been invited to prepare final proposals on 376 bids for new and extended CCTV schemes with a potential capital cost of £68 million. The main priorities for the first round of the initiative have been to tackle vehicle crime and serious crime problems in housing areas, but shortlisted schemes to the value of over £1.5 million are specifically directed at rural crime. Final decisions will be announced later in the year.

The priorities for future rounds of the initiative have not yet been set, and increasing the emphasis on rural crime is one of the options that will be considered.

Prisons (Visitors)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was in total and in respect of each prison and young offender institution (a) the number of occasions in 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 to date that visitors have been caught trying to smuggle illegal drugs, (b) the number of such visitors in 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 who have been banned from further visits as a result of their actions, (c) the number of such visitors in each year who have been charged with a criminal offence as a result of drug smuggling, (d) the number of such visitors in each year who have been prosecuted in court and (e) the number of such visitors in each year who have been convicted. [94905]

Mr. Boateng: The total number of visitors arrested for drug smuggling and the breakdown for individual prisons is given in the table. From 1 April-30 June 1999, a total of 387 visitors were banned. The number of visitors banned by individual prisons is not collated centrally. Figures for the number of visitors subsequently charged, prosecuted and/or convicted are not recorded by the Prison Service.

[1] Year to date

Bail

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the proportion of persons granted bail who subsequently returned to court for breaching their bail conditions in the year 1998–99. [95550]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information is not collected centrally on the number of persons granted bail who are returned to court for breaching bail conditions. Information is available on those granted bail who fail to appear for trial; the most recent figures are published in "Criminal statistics England and Wales 1997".

At magistrates courts in 1997, out of 549,900 bailed defendants, 64,600 (11 per cent.) failed to appear for trial; and 44,200 defendants (68 per cent. of those who failed to appear) were proceeded against for failing to surrender to bail.

At the Crown court in 1997, out of 72,000 bailed defendants, 5,400 (8 per cent.) failed to appear for trial. Bench warrants were issued against 4,000 defendants (74 per cent. of those failing to appear).

Research undertaken in 1996 to provide a detailed picture of the extent and nature of offending on bail, particularly in relation to police conditional bail, found that 9 per cent. of those given conditional bail by courts in parts of Northumbria and Greater Manchester were detected in breach.

Voucher System

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussion his Department has held with (a) the retail trade and (b) other appropriate agencies in relation to the new voucher system set out in the Asylum and Immigration Bill; and if he will make a statement. [95685]

Mrs. Roche: A seminar about the proposed voucher system, at which many of the major retail groups were represented, was held in June. Officials have also had discussions separately with some of the retail groups and with security printing companies, various banks, other Government Departments and local authorities. Meetings were also held recently with the asylum authorities in Berlin, where they have had experience of asylum seekers being issued with vouchers with which to obtain essential living needs since 1993.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has held with member authorities of the Local Government Association outside London in relation to the dispersal of asylum seekers from London; and if he will make a statement. [95687]

Mrs. Roche: The Asylum Support Project Team has been working very closely with the Local Government Association and the Association of London Government for the past 12 months, concerning the new asylum support arrangements and in particular the new dispersal schemes. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary wrote jointly with Sir Jeremy Beecham to the leaders of all local authorities in England in November 1998 encouraging them to participate in a voluntary dispersal scheme. Since then, officials have issued consultation documents and held discussions with a variety of local authorities around the country. These discussions continue and further meetings are scheduled.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what numbers are proposed for the new agreed dispersal programme for asylum seekers in each local authority area in the north-east. [95878]

Mrs. Roche: No firm decisions have yet been made on the number of asylum seekers to be sent to any given region within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many placements in the north-east of England have been made under the Refugee Allocations Project; how many have been allocated to each local authority area; and what the costs of such allocation have been. [95877]

Mrs. Roche: The Refugee Arrivals Project assists about 75 newly arrived asylum seekers a month to access private rented accommodation in the north-east of England. Most of the accommodation is situated in the Newcastle local authority area, and it is that authority which pays the housing benefit entitlement to the landlords. The other costs involved are the transport costs from London to the north-east and the payments of income support by the Benefits Agency. No records of these costs are kept by the Home Office.

Dyfed-Powys Police Authority

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were employed by the Dyfed-Powys Police Authority on 1 April 1997, 1998 and 1999. [95792]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on police numbers is collected at the end of March and September. The figures for the period requested are set out in the table.

	Total officer strength
31 March 1997	1,005
31 March 1998	1,002
31 March 1999	1,026

Licensing Laws

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the licensing laws for restaurants after 11 pm. [95928]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: On 8 October, we published a consultation paper seeking views on proposals to allow restaurants to serve alcohol with meals after 11 pm without needing to apply for a supper hour certificate or provide entertainment. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Library.

Police Cells (Rural Areas)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the provision of police cells in rural areas. [95765]

Mr. Charles Clarke: It is an operational matter for Chief Constables to determine the number and location of police cells and stations. Chief Constables are best placed to judge these matters, in consultation with the local community where appropriate. It would not be right for Ministers to intervene in operation decisions.

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [93997]

Mrs. Roche: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz), on 25 October 1999, Official Report, columns 739–40.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many anti-social behaviour orders have been (a) applied for and (b) granted. [95700]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the number of Orders made is not held centrally, but we are aware of six Orders which have been made since 1 April 1999. We are not aware of any Orders applied for which were not granted.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the costs incurred to date by (a) police authorities and (b) local authorities in setting up procedures aimed towards the obtaining of anti-social behaviour orders. [95450]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 lays down no specific procedures which must be followed when considering applying for an anti-social order, other than that the police and local authority must consult each other. Where there is behaviour which is giving rise to concern, both agencies are already likely to be in touch with each other. Information about the cost of any additional consultation, or any other procedures which the police or local authority decide to establish, is not available centrally.

Road Traffic Law Enforcement

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that new technologies are utilised and developed by all road traffic law enforcement agencies. [94507]

Mr. Charles Clarke: New advances in technology are being regularly introduced for police use. The Home Office has responsibility for approving technological devices for road traffic law enforcement by the police. The Home Office Police Scientific Development Branch (PSDB) has a programme of work on road policing, to support all United Kingdom police forces and road traffic law enforcement agencies, specifically the Driver Vehicle Licensing Authority, the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Highways Agency, and the Government Office for London. PSDB do this by providing technical, operational and policy support as well as experimental research and development of technology applicable to traffic law enforcement and road safety.

The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) has an established sub-committee, ACPO (Traffic Enforcement Technology), whose prime function is to assess the usefulness of the new technologies being developed by manufacturers. The police must be satisfied that any new device is a genuine technical advance in helping law enforcement. All devices must also be tested rigorously by PSDB or the Forensic Science Service to ensure that evidence provided by the device is accurate and will give reliable evidence.

Council of Ministers (Action Plan)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what documents were presented to Parliament relating to the Action Plan adopted by the Council of Ministers of the European Union on 3 December 1998 concerning implementation of the provisions in the European treaties now in force for the development of an area of freedom, security and justice; to what Parliamentary procedures they were subject; and if he will make a statement on the future implementation of this plan. [94364]

Mrs. Roche: In addition to the Action Plan itself (12028/1/98 REV 1), the following documents were presented to Parliament in accordance with the current arrangements for Parliamentary scrutiny as amended in November 1998:

Commission Communication "Towards an Area of Freedom, Security and Justice" (10787/98), and Presidency paper for the Europol Working Group on Implementation of the Treaty of Amsterdam and Action Plan of the Council and the Commission on how best to implement the provisions of the Treaty of Amsterdam establishing an Area of Freedom, Security and Justice with a view of Europol (6245/99).

Further implementation of the Action Plan will be carried forward in the light of the Presidency Conclusions from the Tampere European Council on 15 and 16 October.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Boarding Schools

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many boarders there were in each of the boarding schools (a) five years ago and (b) in this academic year. [94376]

Mr. McFall: The figures for the academic year 1999–2000 are not yet available.

The numbers of boarders in 1998–99 and in 1993–94 is included in the following table:

Grant-aided schools

Road Schemes (Carryduff)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present volume of traffic on the Saintfield road near its junction with Buckhill road; what is the maximum volume of traffic which is acceptable at this location; what is the estimated increase in volume of traffic if all present planning applications for housing developments in the Carryduff area were approved; what plans there are to improve the Saintfield road between Buckhill road and Carryduff; what area plans are proposed for the Carryduff area; and if he will make a statement. [94549]

Mr. McFall: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to Mr. G. P Fraser of the Roads Service. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from G. P. Fraser to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 25 October 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked our Chief Executive to respond to your recently tabled Parliamentary Question about, inter alia, the present volume of traffic on a section of Saintfield Road, Belfast and associated issues. In the absence of our Chief Executive, I am replying.

It is assumed that your question relates to the volume of traffic on Saintfield Road near its junction with Beechill Road and not Buckhill Road as stated in the question. The latest traffic figures available for this location relate to surveys carried out in 1998. These show that the 2-way average 24-hour flow on Saintfield Road is approximately 30,000 vehicles at the Ivanhoe Inn with a peak hour 2-way flow of 2,700 vehicles.

As regards the maximum acceptable volume of traffic at this location, I should explain that there are many factors that have an influencing effect on road capacity and it is not possible to quote an 'acceptable' maximum volume of traffic for any particular road. For most urban roads, it is the junctions that act as the constraint on traffic capacity rather than the road links between them. However, the theoretical design flow capacity for a 4-lane undivided carriageway, such as Saintfield Road, is 1,700 vehicles per hour in each direction. On this basis, current traffic flow on this section of Saintfield Road is below the theoretical design capacity.

You also asked what is the estimated increase in volume of traffic if all present planning application for housing developments in the Carryduff area were approved. At present we are not in a position to determine the estimated increase in traffic generated by proposed developments in the area as the developers for the major applications have not yet completed Transportation Impact Assessments for their respective developments.

As to plans to improve Saintfield Road between Beechill Road and Carryduff, Roads Service has no proposals at present to carry out any major road improvements on this section of road. We are, however, currently introducing "Quality Bus" measures in the Saintfield Road corridor between Carryduff and Belfast. These measures include bus lanes, bus stop infrastructure, improved traffic signal control and traffic management arrangements. The introduction of a "Park and Ride" site in the corridor is also being pursued.

Finally, you asked what area plans are proposed for the Carryduff area. Colleagues from the Department's Planning Service have advised me that the Carryduff area will be included in the proposed Belfast Metropolitan Plan which will encompass the district council areas of Belfast, Lisburn, Carrickfergus, Castlereagh, Newtownabbey and North Down.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Road Schemes (Ards Peninsula)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a proposal for a bridge across Strangford Lough was last considered by the Department for the Environment; what is the estimated cost of such a bridge; what is the present planned investment in roads in the Ards Peninsula over the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [94720]

Mr. McFall: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its Chief Executive Mr. C. James. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from C. James to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 22 October 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to respond to your recently tabled Parliamentary Question about the provision of a bridge across Strangford Lough and planned investment in roads in the Ards Peninsula over the next 10 years.

The Department of the Environment considered the proposal to construct a bridge across Strangford Lough as recently as September 1999 following a request from a local interest group. The span across the lough between Portaferry and Strangford measures approximately 0.6 miles and the cost of constructing a bridge at this location is estimated to be in the region of £25M-£30M, depending on detailed design requirements. The Department considers that such an investment would not represent value for money compared to other higher priority road schemes which are required across Northern Ireland.

As regards planned investment in roads in the Ards Peninsula over the next 10 years, approximately £180K is scheduled to be spent on minor road improvements during the 2-year period 2000/01–2001/02. The level of funding for future road programmes over the next 10 years is unknown, but assuming it is maintained at current levels, some £0.9M will be spent on minor road works in the Ards Peninsula over that period. While the Department's 5-year Major Road Works Programme 1999/2000–2003/04 does not include any schemes in the Ards Peninsula, the 6–15 year Forward Planning Programme includes 4 schemes in Newtownards (total value approximately £5.2M). This programme is, however, currently under review and, even if these schemes are retained, the timing of their implementation will depend on the availability of funding.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Pupil Statistics

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils were enrolled (a) in this academic year and (b) five years ago in (i) each of the primary schools and (ii) each of the secondary and grammar schools in the constituency of Strangford. [94375]

Mr. McFall: The figures for the 1999–2000 academic year are not yet available. The information for 1998–99 and 1993–94 is included in the following table:

Police Stations

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Chief Constable of the RUC has to close police stations in Northern Ireland within the next three months. [95340]

Mr. Ingram: None.

21-gun Salutes

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what factors underlay the decision to look at alternative venues to Parliament building, Stormont for traditional 21-gun salutes to mark royal anniversaries; and if he will make a statement. [95342]

Mr. Ingram: Gun salutes are fired by the Army to honour various anniversaries connected with members of the Royal family. As the Crown and Armed Forces remain excepted (i.e. non-devolved) matters under the Northern Ireland Act 1998, it is felt that it might be more appropriate for future salutes to be fired at a location other than Stormont, which is effectively transferred to the Northern Ireland Assembly under the Act. Alternative locations are being considered but no final decisions have yet been taken.

DEFENCE

BVRAAM Programme

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department started discussions with the United States Government regarding the Beyond Visual Range Air to Air Missile capability; when these discussions are expected to be concluded; with which section of the United States Department of Defense his Department is holding these discussions; and whether his Department is holding discussions with other United States Departments regarding this matter. [93864]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Discussions with the United States Government regarding the UK's Beyond Visual Range Air to Air Missile (BVRAAM) programme commenced after the receipt of the Raytheon Systems Ltd. (RSL) bids in May 1998. These discussions will continue until the BVRAAM competition concludes around the end of the year. Discussions have been held with the US Air Force Departments of Acquisition, International Affairs, and Armaments Co-operation in Washington D.C. and with the Air to Air Joint Systems Program Office at the US Air Force Base Eglin, Florida. The MOD is not currently involved in discussions with any other US Government Departments regarding this matter.

UN-designated Standing Reserves

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which units will replace UN-designated standing reserves when those units are otherwise deployed. [95410]

Mr. Hoon: The UK does not earmark specific forces for UN peacekeeping operations, and therefore the issue of replacing UN-designated units on deployment does not arise. We updated our declaration of forces potentially available to the UN in June in the form of a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU). The MOU makes clear that declared forces may not be available at the time of a UN request because of other commitments.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Indonesian pilots and instructors are currently receiving training in the UK, (b) UK personnel are in Indonesia (i) to train Hawk pilots and (ii) to service Hawk aircraft; and what is the cost of the training and servicing. [95338]

Mr. Spellar: No Indonesia pilots or instructors are currently receiving training on Hawk in the UK, and no UK service personnel are in Indonesia to train pilots or service aircraft.

Rapier Missiles

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what the security implications are to the United Kingdom of the manufacture of components of the Rapier missile system being undertaken outside the United Kingdom; [95344]

(2) what the value to Turkey will be of work undertaken there in respect of co-production of Rapier Mk 2 missiles for the Turkish Army and the Turkish Air Force Command and for the British Army and the RAF. [95343]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The value of work to be undertaken in Turkey for the Turkish and British Rapier missile procurement programmes is around £30 million. There are no security implications concerning the manufacture of these components outside the United Kingdom. The technology involved is not sensitive and the prime contractor, Matra BAe Dynamics, is responsible for meeting the MOD's contractual specification and for ensuring continuity of supply.

Challenger Tanks

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Challenger 1 MBTs are to be sold to the Jordanian army; [95373]

(2) what is the value of the Challenger 1 MBTs to be sold to Jordan. [95345]

Mr. Kilfoyle: As part of its support for King Abdullah of Jordan on his accession to the throne, and in response to a request from His Majesty, the Government announced in March that we had agreed to supply Jordan with Challenger 1 Main Battle Tanks as they come out of service with the British Army over the next few years. Up to 288 Challenger 1s will be supplied.

The Challenger 1s currently in service with the British Army have a current average book value of £750K each but, on leaving service, that value will reduce to zero. The tanks will therefore be supplied to Jordan at no cost. However, agreement has been reached with Jordan that the Jordanian Government will meet the MOD's additional costs arising out of the Challenger 1 transfer programme.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Strategic Environmental Assessment examining the impact of the implementation of the Strategic Defence Review to be published; if the Assessment team has been authorised to make recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [95522]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The Strategic Environmental Assessment (SEA) is still subject to consultation within MOD and with external Statutory Bodies, it is hoped that the final document will be available early next year. Its work is being taken forward within the methodology agreed with Statutory Bodies and will inform decision-making on the Strategic Defence Review outcomes.

Vehicle Movements

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason two tank transporters were stationary on the A303(T) near Winterbourne Stoke on 15 October; how long it was before they were moved; and what assistance was (a) sought and (b) given by the Wiltshire constabulary. [95805]

Mr. Spellar: At around 1700 hours on 15 October a single empty Scammell Crusader tank transporter travelling east on the A303 towards Stonehenge broke down due to engine failure. The civilian and MOD police were informed shortly afterwards and I understand that civilian police assistance arrived at around 1800 hours. The civilian police directed traffic at the scene of the incident. Due to the volume of traffic, the recovery vehicles, a Scammel Commander and a Seddon Atkinson tractor and trailer, did not arrive until around 1900 hours, and the broken down tank transporter was removed at around 1930 hours.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of a return journey between RAF Honnington and Salisbury Plain training area by one low loader vehicle carrying equipment for use by the Joint NBC regiment. [95803]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Operation Abbott

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost of Operation Abbott. [95804]

Mr. Spellar: The cost to date of the operation to clear buried wartime ordnance at Winterbourne Gunner carried out between November 1998 and July 1999, Operation ABBOTT, is some £500,000. This amount relates to the clearance operation, compensation paid to freehold and tenant farmers for loss of harvest and payments made to DERA Porton Down. Negotiations continue with DERA Porton Down over the cost of disposal of the remaining items. The final cost of the operation will not be known until the disposal programme, scheduled to finish in the financial year 2002–03, has been completed.

Kosovo

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications he has had or plans to have with the new Secretary General of NATO in respect of the concerns expressed by the Chairman of the United Nations Balkan Environment task force over NATO co-operation with the task force on the use of depleted uranium shells by allied forces during the Kosovo conflict. [95635]

Mr. Hoon: None. The North Atlantic Council does not discuss the deployment of specific munitions by individual member states. However, my hon. Friend may wish to note that depleted uranium-based ammunition was not used by UK forces during the Kosovo campaign.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to evaluate the study sponsored by the United States Department of Defense, published on 19 October, into the possible role played by exposure to pyriostigmine bromide in the causation of Gulf War Syndrome. [95631]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has already undertaken a preliminary assessment of the RAND review of the scientific literature on pyridostigmine bromide (PB), as it pertains to Gulf War illnesses. The report does not present any new research on PB and does not imply that PB is necessarily a causal factor in Gulf veterans' illnesses, only that the possibility cannot be dismissed. We will now be studying this large and comprehensive report in detail.

The report calls for more substantial research into the effects of PB. MOD is currently funding research into possible interactions between PB and the vaccines given to UK troops in the Gulf (initial results show no untoward health effects). We are also conducting a neuromuscular symptoms study (one of the areas specifically mentioned in the RAND paper). The MOD welcomes new proposals for research into Gulf veterans' illnesses and would look favourably on any proposals recommended by the Medical Research Council who act as our independent assessors and advisers.

Naval Recruiting and Training Agency

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency for 1999–2000. [96021]

Mr. Spellar: The following Key Targets have been set for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency for 1999–2000:

Key Target 1:

To deliver personnel to the trained strength (or to other training organisations) within 5 per cent. variance from the tasked requirement.

Key Target 2:

To obtain 95 per cent. satisfactory assessments from the employers of NRTA trainees.

Key Target 3:

To maintain success rates of 95 per cent. in Career Training and 97 per cent. in examined Pre-joining training.

Key Target 4:

To reduce the variance between RNR Trained Strength and Trained Requirement to 39 per cent.

Key Target 5:

To retain tasked capacity while operating NRTA within its 1999–2000 cash allocation.

Key Target 6:

To achieve net benefits of £8.1m in FY 1999–2000 from the partnering arrangement with Flagship Training Limited.

Departmental Controls

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the defence procurement contracts with value of greater than £5 million for each year since 1995 and (b) the companies involved in each of these contracts. [95351]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 26 October 1999]: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Army Regiments

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the current location in the United Kingdom of each army regiment; the number of service and support personnel at each such site; and the total wage bill for each such site in the last year for which figures are available. [95276]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 26 October 1999]: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Japanese Prisoners of War

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to make ex-gratia payments to former prisoners of war who were held captive by the Japanese in the Second World War; and if he will make a statement. [95573]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 26 October 1999]: There are no plans to make an ex-gratia payment to former Japanese prisoners of war. The Government's emphasis is on providing support to those who are in current need, through health services, pensions and war pensions as appropriate.

Departmental Property Sales

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all former buildings of his Department or land sold since 7 May 1997, and the sale price for each. [95283]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 26 October 1999]: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Gurkha Pensions

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the examination of Gurkha pensions and gratuities; and if he will make a statement. [96019]

Mr. Spellar: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced in the House this afternoon, gratuities payable in respect of death attributable to service for Gurkhas will be brought into line with those of their British counterparts. The new payments take effect from 26 May this year and so will apply to the widow of Staff Sgt Balaram Rai killed in Kosovo in June.

The announcement is the result of the first stage in our examination of Gurkha pensions and gratuities. The increase remains firmly within the conditions set out in the 1947 Tri-Partite Agreement between India, Nepal and the UK and follows increases that have been implemented recently by the Indian Government. To take account of the fact that the UK is the home base for British Gurkhas I have introduced a UK element to substitute for the Indian State Government payments which are variable throughout India. This will bring payments for all deaths attributable to service up to British Army rates.

We are also looking at Gurkha pensions, still within the context of the Tri-Partite Agreement, and I hope to report on this by the end of the year.

Soldiers (Minimum Age Limit)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current minimum age for soldiers of the British Army to be sent into armed combat; and what plans he has to alter this limit. [96260]

Mr. Spellar: On 22 October 1998, Official Report, column 1161, my predecessor announced that Service personnel would no longer be deployed on operations if under 17 years of age, although in practice most personnel will be well over 17 prior to their being deployed. Personnel under 18 years of age are not deployed on UN peacekeeping operations, at the request of the UN. Both our recruitment and deployment policies are in line with international standards set by the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and the recent International Labour Convention 182.

TREASURY

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the monetary value of the poverty line for a family with two children aged under 11 years which is consistent with his estimate of the number of children taken out of poverty by the working families tax credit; and what is the rate of Income Support for a family of this size and composition. [94694]

Dawn Primarolo: For the analysis behind the estimate that around 800,000 children will be lifted out of poverty by recent Budget measures, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the former Economic Secretary on 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 244. Latest statistics on household incomes (covering 1997–98) can be found in "Households Below Average Income 1994–95 to 1997–98" and current rates of Income Support are published in "Social Security Statistics 1999", both published by the Department for Social Security. The Government have also increased the personal allowance for children under 11 on Income Support by £4.70 from this October, and announced a further increase of at least £1.05 from next April.

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by his Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94840]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer the Minister for the Cabinet Office gave her on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 682.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the organisations represented on each working group in respect of the national changeover plan; [95301]

(2) if he will make a statement on progress to date, by each working group, on the Outline National Changeover plan. [95302]

Euro

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the nature of the circumstances whereby the Bank of England will be required by the European Central Bank to prosecute breach of copyright of euro banknotes, with reference to ECB/1999/3 (1999/656/EC); what manner of appeal is permitted; and what part he played in the discussions leading to the decision. [95400]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Guideline of the European Central Bank (ECB) on certain provisions regarding euro banknotes (ECB/1999/3 and 1999/656/EC) is addressed to the national central banks of participating member states. As such, it does not apply to the Bank of England, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer was not involved in the adoption of the Guideline by the ECB Governing Council.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the cost in terms of lost revenue of exempting trades under £5,000 from stamp duty on share transactions. [95090]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The 1999 Budget forecast of revenue from stamp duty on transactions in shares and other securities is £3.3 billion in 2000–01.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the cost in terms of lost revenue of reducing the rate of stamp duty on share transactions to (a) 0.4 per cent., (b) 0.3 per cent., (c) 0.2 per cent., (d) 0.1 per cent. and (e) 0.003 per cent. [95091]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The 1999 Budget forecast of revenue from stamp duty on transactions in shares and other securities is £3.3 billion in 2000–01. The estimated costs of reducing the rate of duty from the current 0.5 per cent. are given in the table. These estimates take account of the impact the relevant changes would be expected to have on the value of share transactions.

£ billion

Reducing the rate of duty on share transactions to	Estimated cost
(a) 0.4 per cent.	0.6
(b) 0.3 per cent.	1.2
(c) 0.2 per cent.	1.8
(d) 0.1 per cent.	2.5
(e) 0.003 per cent.	3.3

Exchange Rate

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list his Department's latest estimates for the real effective exchange rate on a monthly basis since May 1997, taking into account relative inflation and United Kingdom trade-weighted movements in other exchange rates. [95638]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Neither the Treasury nor the Office for National Statistics publishes monthly estimates of the real effective exchange rate. However, the OECD produce monthly estimates in their publication "Main Economic Indicators", with the latest estimates summarised on page 36 of the September 1999 Edition.

Pensions

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many public service widows currently receive a pension based on (a) one half of their husband's pension entitlement and (b) one-third of that entitlement. [95516]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The major public service pension schemes do not hold information disaggregated on this basis, with the exception of the Teachers' Pension Scheme which can identify some 3,500 widows receiving a pension at one half rate; 60 at one third rate; and 31,700 receiving a widow's pension at the rate of some other fraction of their husband's pension. A widow's pension at a rate of between half and one third would result if the scheme member's service straddled the point at which public service pension schemes raised the rate of widow's pension from one third to one half, in 1972, and the member did not pay the maximum additional contributions fully to upgrade the entitlement in respect of previous service.

ISAs

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his most recent estimate of the number of people who have taken out both a mini and a maxi ISA. [95519]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The Inland Revenue holds no data to enable it to make estimates of this kind.

WALES

Barnett Formula

8. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with Treasury Ministers in relation to the operation of the Barnett Formula as regards Wales. [94082]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have not had any discussions with Treasury Ministers regarding the operation of the Barnett Formula for Wales, as a sound framework is already in place.

Cross-border Environmental Management

9. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the liaison between his office, the National Assembly and the Welsh region of the Environment Agency on issues which affect Welsh-English cross-border environmental management issues. [94084]

Mr. Hanson: I have regular discussions with Assembly Secretaries and with Government Colleagues.

NHS Technical and Scientific Staff

10. Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Health about pay, recruitment and retention of qualified technical and scientific staff in the NHS in Wales. [94085]

Mr. Hanson: I have had no discussions with the Secretary of State for Health on these issues. When considering the annual pay settlements for NHS staff, the pay review bodies will take evidence from the Assembly along with the Department of Health and other devolved administrations.

Welsh Assembly (Funding)

11. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the total amount of funding allocated to the National Assembly for Wales. [94086]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have received a number of representations about this matter, including in particular about the need for funding to permit Wales to take advantage of its access to funds under Objective 1.

Mr. Paul Murphy: None. The Assisted Areas map published on 15 July 1999 constituted the Government's proposals to the European Commission. It is the European Commission which must approve the map and the matter is now with the Commission for a decision.

Policing (Millennium)

16. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Welsh Executive on policing needs over the millennium period. [94092]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I understand that there have been liaison meetings between the National Assembly for Wales and local service providers, including the police services, in the interests of co-ordinating activities at the local level.

However, I have not had any discussions with the National Assembly for Wales on policing needs over the millennium period. Police issues are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, and millennium preparations in Wales are the responsibility of the National Assembly.

EU (Welsh Interests)

17. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the UKRep regarding the presentation of Welsh interests to the European Commission. [94093]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I plan to visit Brussels and meet senior UKRep officials shortly to discuss a range of issues. The UK Government remain responsible for relations with the European Union but wishes to involve the Assembly as fully as possible in decision-making on EU matters which touch on devolved areas. The concordat between the UK Government and the National Assembly for Wales on co-ordination of European Union policy issues, published earlier this month, sets out the framework for ensuring that the Assembly's interests are adequately represented.

Health and Education

18. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the responsibilities of his Department in relation to (a) health and (b) education. [94094]

Mr. Hanson: The Secretary of State has been in consultation with the Assembly on aspects of Health and Education policy affecting Wales, which may be the subject of primary legislation in the near future.

Universities (Grants)

20. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has made to the DfEE to ensure that Welsh universities receive a greater share of grants from UK research councils. [94096]

Mr. Hanson: None. I am aware of measures being undertaken by the National Assembly for Wales to address this situation.

Poverty

21. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about UK Government actions to tackle poverty in Wales. [94097]

Mr. Hanson: I regularly discuss this issue with colleagues and the appropriate Assembly Secretary to ensure that we are working together to reduce poverty in Wales.

Post-16 Education and Training

24. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that Welsh interests are advanced in any future reorganisation of post-16 education and training following the recent Government White Paper. [94100]

Mr. Hanson: The recent Government White Paper, "Learning to Succeed", put forward proposals for reorganisation of post-16 education and training in England.

The Welsh Office issued its own consultation paper which drew on work done by the Education and Training Action Group, which was set up by Welsh Office Ministers.

Any primary legislation brought forward to effect reorganisation as recommended in these papers will take account of Welsh interests.

Youth Unemployment

25. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on measures to help the young unemployed in Wales. [94101]

Mr. Hanson: I met my right hon. Friend, the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities, earlier this month and we discussed a range of issues in relation to the Government's Welfare to Work agenda in Wales.

Funding Programmes

26. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provisions he intends to make to ensure that funding for European structural fund programmes in Wales is additional to funding allocated to the National Assembly for Wales under the Barnett Formula. [94102]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Welsh Block currently has provision for European Structural Funds.

Next year's Spending Review is designed to review the Government's overall expenditure plans. The Treasury has agreed to consider on their merits representations from the National Assembly for Wales about the public spending implications of Objective 1 status for West Wales and the Valleys as part of the 2000 Review. I will be fully involved in those discussions.

Reserved Powers

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a guide for the public on the reserved powers relevant to Welsh matters; and how they are dealt with in the House. [94088]

Mr. Paul Murphy: A Guidance Note is being prepared and will soon be placed in the Library.

Child Abuse Tribunal

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to receive the report of the North Wales Child Abuse Tribunal of Inquiry. [96415]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Tribunal's report has been delivered to my Department this afternoon. We will now consider the report and set in hand arrangements for its printing and presentation to Parliament at the earliest opportunity. At the same time I will present an executive summary of the document which is still in preparation by the Tribunal. I will present this summary in Welsh and in English. I expect all this work to be completed by January and I do not plan to make any further statement on the report and its findings until then.

Road Infrastructure

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions concerning studies carried out into the impact of investment in road infrastructure in England upon the economy of Wales. [94078]

Mr. Hanson: None. I understand that Assembly officials are in direct contact with their DETR counterparts.

Mr. Paul Murphy: The National Assembly for Wales is responsible for all matters pertaining to the sea fishing industry for up to 12 miles from the Welsh coast line. The UK Government have powers from 12 miles to the British fisheries limit of 200 miles.

Cardiff International Airport

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the potential for Cardiff International Airport to attract additional traffic from passengers living in South West England. [94090]

Mr. Paul Murphy: None. This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister.

HEALTH

Cancer Statistics

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress has been made by regional cancer registries in submitting 1997 information to the Office for National Statistics; and if he will make a statement; [94060]

(2) what steps he has taken to prevent future backlogs of submissions by regional cancer registries to the Office for National Statistics; and if he will make a statement; [94061]

(3) if he will list the regional cancer registries, indicating the latest year they have submitted data to the Office for National Statistics; and if he will make a statement. [94063]

Yvette Cooper: The latest year for which cancer registries in England have submitted complete data (as compared to the number of registrations in previous years) are:

Year	Registries
1997	East Anglia, South and West (Winchester), Oxford, Trent and West Midlands
1996	South and West (Bristol)
1994	Yorkshire, North Western
1993	Thames, Northern, Merseyside and Cheshire

For 1997 data, five registries have submitted substantially complete data, two have submitted some data and four have submitted no data.

We are concerned to promote more timely submission of cancer registration data. In February 1999, we commissioned Professor Charles Gillis of the Department of Public Health, University of Glasgow to review the cancer registration system in England and Wales and to make recommendations for improvement. His final report is expected early in the New Year and is expected to make recommendations to improve timeliness and quality of published cancer statistics.

Cancer Care Action Group

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Cancer Care Action Group has met; at each meeting what new best practice and joint working projects were established; and if he will make a statement. [94066]

Yvette Cooper: The Cancer Care Action Group (CCAG) was established to bring together the leading cancer voluntary organisations with the National Health Service Executive. It advises and makes recommendations to the National Cancer Forum on key issues on developments in cancer and palliative care policy at a national level and the implications for voluntary sector organisations, and represents those with cancer and their carers in so doing.

The CCAG has met twice so far, on 27 January 1999 and on 29 September 1999.

The CCAG has been consulted on the development of the New Opportunities Fund initiative for palliative care. It was also consulted on the cancer information strategy and as a result of this, CancerBacup and Macmillan Cancer Relief have joined the Departmental Steering Group which is developing the strategy.

Following the first meeting the National Council of Hospice and Specialist Palliative Care Services undertook to co-ordinate a project to scope the training and education provided by voluntary organisations. The findings were considered at the second meeting and it was agreed that they offered a good basis for considering further developments in this area.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by his Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94845]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office, on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 682.

Objective 2 Funding

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he received from the Welsh Assembly on Objective 2 funding for Wales. [95741]

Mr. Caborn: The proposals for the Objective 2 map were prepared having regard to advice from the Assembly First Secretary and the Assembly Economic and Development Secretary. Their concern was to ensure, within a total population coverage agreed for Wales of 270, 000, that the best balance was struck between coverage of disadvantaged urban areas and rural areas.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which areas were identified in the submission by the Welsh Assembly for Objective 2 funding in Wales. [95742]

Mr. Caborn: The proposed Objective 2 map envisages coverage in Wales of parts of Powys, Newport and Cardiff. These proposals took account of advice from the Assembly First Secretary and the Assembly Economic and Development Secretary.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the deadline for amendments to the draft map of areas of Objective 2 funding in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [95739]

Mr. Caborn: The UK proposals for Objective 2 coverage have been submitted to the European Commission, and these are now the subject of discussion with the Commission. We hope to have agreement on the proposals by the end of this year.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria were used to allocate Objective 2 funding to areas of Wales. [95740]

Mr. Caborn: The criteria that the Government used are set out in the document URN99/1021 "The Government's proposals for new Objective 2 areas", copies of which were sent to all hon. Members.

The criteria were based on levels of unemployment, in combination with measures of high dependency on industry or agriculture and a decline in those sectors. For urban areas, an index of local deprivation was used.

Textile Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent steps he is taking to (a) promote and (b) safeguard the future of the UK textile industry. [95790]

Ms Hewitt: The Government work closely with the textiles industry on a number of key areas, including trade policy, education and training, exporting and industrial sponsorship.

On the latter, the Department of Trade & Industry's Textile, Clothing and Footwear Unit is dedicated to assisting these industries to compete effectively. The Unit is currently funding over 20 projects targeting specific areas for future development, including product innovation, design, marketing, benchmarking and the development of supply chain partnerships.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for competitiveness met with the industry-led Textiles and Clothing Strategy Group on 13 October 1999 to discuss with them progress on the development of a national strategy for the industry.

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [94019]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 25 October 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 25 October 1999, Official Report, columns 739–40.

Mirror Group

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the report into the circumstances of the Mirror Group flotation, following the appointment of inspectors in June 1992. [95520]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The inspection is being conducted by independent inspectors.

They are still carrying out their work and consequentially they have yet to report to me.

Company Regulations

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the regulations which a company manufacturing refrigerators and employing 1,500 people has to comply with. [95921]

Ms Hewitt: The regulations applying to a refrigerator manufacturer, employing 1,500 people, include those deriving from company law, taxation, health and safety, land planing requirements and environmental legislation.

Regulatory information relating to the operational aspects of all types and size of business will be available through the Direct Access Government (DAG) INTERNET web site, which is currently being updated and will be relaunched as part of the Small Business Service.

The Government announced a tougher approach to regulatory control in the Modernising Government White Paper in March, with the aim of eliminating unnecessary regulation and minimising the burdens that necessary regulations impose.

Telephone Dialling Codes

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimates his Department has made of the adjustment costs associated with the planned change in telephone dialling codes; and what proposals his Department has to assist charitable organisations which face exceptional costs in making the change. [95640]

Ms Hewitt: The administration of the National Numbering Scheme is a matter for Oftel. Oftel has not carried out any specific research into the adjustment costs associated with the planned changes to telephone codes. The changes to geographic codes have been made in response to the views of consumers and businesses following "Phoneday" in 1995 in order to meet additional demand for numbers. In order to minimise the costs to businesses, Oftel has given long periods of notice of changes and put in place parallel running for old and new numbers and "changed number announcements". This enables businesses to plan for the future.

This Department has no proposals to assist charitable organisations with their exceptional costs in making the change. Grants may in certain circumstances be awarded to bodies in the health sector under Section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, through a scheme administered by the Department of Health.

Droit de Suite

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the effect on the London art market of introducing Droit de Suite. [95133]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 25 October 1999]: An independent assessment of the potential risk carried out earlier this year concluded that, business could be lost to markets where droit de suite is not applied and that, by 2005, sales of works covered by droit de suite could fall by as much as 78 per cent., from £280 million to £61 million, resulting in lost earnings of £57 million per annum; and total sales could fall by £750 million or 23 per cent. (due to vendors unwillingness to spilt lots), putting many jobs at risk.

Former Paymaster General

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria will determine whether the report in preparation on the business affairs of the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) will be published. [95557]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The criteria which determine whether information from an inquiry is made public are the nature of the case itself and other considerations such as the applicable law and commercial confidentiality. Subject to these constraints, I would wish to be as open as possible on these matters.

National Export Strategy

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the National Export Strategy. [95465]

Mr. Caborn: I hope to make a statement shortly.

Minimum Wage

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will break down the number of employers who have been reported by minimum wage inspectors for paying less than the national minimum wage by (a) region and (b) firm size. [95949]

Mr. Alan Johnson: National Minimum Wage compliance officers have dealt with over 3,000 cases of suspected underpayment of the national minimum wage. The latest available figures of complaints by region and by employer size is provided in the following tables. These data and other information on enforcement activity will be included in the Government evidence to the Low Pay Commission which we will publish shortly.

1. Totals may not sum due to rounding.
2. The reason for the large number of complaints that appear to have no geographical region is that anonymous calls cannot be identified by Government Office regions since precise addresses are not taken; the complaints are simply dealt with by the nearest IR compliance team.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress there has been in discussions with industry regarding the impact of the Climate Change Levy. [95953]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government have had extensive discussions with industry about the impact of climate change levy, which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget Statement on 9 March 1999, Official Report, columns 173–90.

The Government have made clear that they wish to design the levy in a way which maximises its environmental benefit while seeking to protect competitiveness. They have been concerned to develop the best possible understanding of business's perspective in discussions over recent months, in order to inform their decision on the levy for the Finance Bill 2000.

The Government have said that they recognise the special circumstances of energy intensive sectors of business in this context including their energy usage and exposure to international competition. The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) has been leading the discussions with a number of key trade associations representing energy intensive sectors to develop negotiated agreement. Under these agreements, sectors which are to be subject to Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control regulation would earn significantly reduced rates of the climate change levy in return for commitments to targets for energy efficiency and/or emissions reduction. The DETR has been conducting detailed negotiations with an initial ten trade associations. Some initial offers of targets have now been made. The period for these discussions has been extended from mid-October to 20 December in order to give the trade associations more opportunity to consult their members.

Gas-powered Electricity Generation

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications to construct gas-powered electricity generating plants are awaiting consent. [95813]

Mr. Caborn: Currently there are 35 proposals involving gas-firing before the Department (a mixture of CCGT, CHP and other) awaiting a decision. Decisions on these will be taken in accordance with the policy set out in the White Paper entitled 'Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government response to fourth and fifth Reports of the Trade and Industry Committee' (Cm 4071), and announced in due course.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal (Over 50s)

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the New Deal for the over 50s. [96391]

Ms Jowell: The New Deal 50plus has been introduced this week in the following nine areas of the country: Durham; Dorset; Oxfordshire; Black Country; North Derbyshire; Manchester—City Pride; Hull; North East Wales; and, Edinburgh, East and Midlothian. The programme will be introduced throughout the UK in Spring 2000.

Basic Skills Agency

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he proposes to undertake a review of the Basic Skills Agency. [96392]

Mr. Wicks: The Government have a policy of conducting five-yearly reviews of all non-departmental public bodies. As the Government are the major contributor to the funding of the Basic Skills Agency, we believe that the Agency should be subject to comparable review procedures. Since the last review of the Agency was in 1994, the Department has commissioned a new review of the Agency.

I am placing in the Library a copy of a letter to Sir Claus Moser, Chairman of the Basic Skills Agency, setting out further details of the review, including its terms of reference.

Age Diversity in Employment

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the Code of Practice on Age Diversity in Employment (June 1999) on reducing age discrimination in the workplace. [95950]

Ms Jowell: The Code was launched barely four months ago and it is therefore too soon to make a full assessment of its impact on age discrimination in the workplace.

The effectiveness of the Code is being evaluated through a large-scale research project looking in detail at its impact on employer policies, attitudes and practices. Specific topics to be covered include recruitment, selection, promotion, training, redundancy and retirement. The results of the evaluation will be published in early 2001.

Windfall Tax (New Deal)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what amount and percentage of the proceeds of the windfall tax allocated in the 1998 Budget report [HC620] to (a) the New Deal for 18–24 year-olds, (b) the New Deal for the long-term unemployed, (c) the New Deal for lone parents and (d) the New Deal for the sick and disabled, for expenditure during the 1998–99 financial year were (i) spent during that year and (ii) carried forward for future years, giving reasons for any underspend. [95086]

Ms Jowell: The table shows the amount of windfall tax set out in the 1998 Budget Report allocated to the Department for Education and Employment, for the New Deal programmes shown, in 1998–99 together with expenditure and carry forward.

£ million

Programme	1998–99 Allocation	Expenditure[1] Amount	Percentage	Carry forward
New Deal for young people	534	189	35	345
New Deal for long term unemployed	114	12	10	102
New Deal for lone parents[2]	17	17	100	0
New Deal for disabled[2]	5	2	40	3
Totals	670	220	33	[3]450

[1] Expenditure excludes a total of £82 million spent out of existing Departmental provision

[2] New Deals for lone parents and the disabled are programmes operating jointly between the DfEE and DSS and figures given are those for DfEE only

[3] £103 million of which was returned to the windfall tax reserve

To some extent, underspends resulted from the timing of submission by contractors of their invoices for services provided to the New Deal. In addition, the numbers of people entering New Deal programmes were lower than had earlier been projected on the basis of the Government's unemployment assumption at the time. Finally, the success of the New Deal for young people itself contributed to underspends.

The programme aims to help as many young people as possible to leave its Gateway for jobs. The original planning assumption was that 60 per cent. would need to move on from the New Deal Gateway into one of the four options. The Gateway performed much better in 1998–99 and some 55 per cent. of entrants were leaving New Deal without needing to move first into an option. Fewer young people into options has the effect of reducing expenditure on option provision, allowances and Follow-Through.

Expenditure on the New Deal is, of course, planned over the Parliament as a whole and unspent resources in any single year are available for spending on the New Deal in future years.

CABINET OFFICE

Gender Impact Analysis

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which Government policies have been subject to gender impact analysis; and if the gender impact analyses are publicly available. [94504]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are committed to ensuring their policies are fair and inclusive, of high quality and flexible. This aim is contained in guidance (published 1998) which helps Departments consider the impact of their policies on women and other groups, and is a cornerstone of the Modernising Government White Paper. It is for individual departments to consider how to make use of this guidance. There is no formal requirement to carry out a gender impact assessment for every policy or regulation, and the absence of a separate document does not mean that gender impact was ignored during policy making.

The Women's Unit in the Cabinet Office is working with the Home Office, and Department for Education and Employment to produce more comprehensive guidance for departments on equality impact assessment—to sit within the consolidated guidance described. In addition the Women's Unit is developing a framework for gender impact assessment.

The Government have introduced a wide range of policies clearly designed to meet the concerns, priorities and circumstances of women. These include the National Minimum Wage, Working Families Tax Credit and the Childcare Tax Credit, Sure Start and the National Childcare Strategy, the New Deal for Lone Parents and increases in Child Benefit. These measures help women make real choices in their lives.

Fight the Fog Campaign

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on developments since April 1998 in the Fight the Fog Campaign. [95293]

Marjorie Mowlam: "Fight the Fog" is an internal management initiative within the European Commission. I wish it every success.

Further information on the initiative can be obtained on the Commission's website at http://europa.eu.int/comm/sdt/en/ftfog/index.htm.

EU Working Groups

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to her predecessor's answer of 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 155–56, concerning EU working groups, for what reasons he did not make a statement at that stage. [95418]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer the hon. Member to the Answer given by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Secretary on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 155–56. My right hon. Friend the then Minister for the Cabinet Office did not make a separate statement as this Answer contained all the relevant information.

Property Advisers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate have (a) paid and (b) been contracted to pay to (i) S. J. Berwin and (ii) DTZ Debenham Thorpe since 2 May 1997. [94901]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. John Locke, to write to the hon. Member and I will ensure a copy of the letter is placed in the Libraries of the House.

Letter from John C. Locke to Mr. David Lidington, dated October 1999:

The Minister of State, Cabinet Office has asked me, as Chief Executive of the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate to respond to your question about the level of the Agency's payments to S J Berwin and DTZ Debenham Thorpe since May 1997.

PACE do not, and never have, employed S J Berwin in any capacity, therefore the question of payment does not arise.

DTZ Debenham Thorpe have held a Management Commission with PACE since 1997 and have also received a number of smaller Commissions since that time. PACE has paid DTZ a total of £3,215,036.00 since May 1997. Work is normally ordered on a call-off basis and as a consequence there are no significant payments contracted in future, other than the current work in progress, which amounts to approximately £50k.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the members of the Board of the Property Advisers to the Civil Service and the annual remuneration each board member receives. [94902]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The current members of the management board of Property Advisers to the Civil Estate (PACE) their salary and accrued pension (in £5,000 bands) and pensions increase for the last complete year (in £2,500 bands), is set out in the table:

£000

	Salary (including performance pay)	Total accrued pension at 60 at 31 March 1999	Pension increase (net of inflation)
Chief Executive
Mr. John Locke	[1]75–80	5–10	0–2.5
Directors
Mr. Barry Redfern	55–60	10–15	0–2.5
Mr. Arnold Butler	55–60	10–15	0–2.5
Mr. John Hathaway	55–60	15–20	0–2.5
Mr. Jay Jayasundara	45–50	5–10	0–2.5

[1] The Chief Executive's salary shown does not include performance-related pay. He is entitled to an annual performance bonus of up to 10 per cent. of basic salary, but the bonus payable in the current year has yet to be determined."

Further information on PACE's activities and its performance during the last financial year will be provided in PACE's Annual Report and Account 1998–99, which is due to be published shortly. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps she has taken to promote policy appraisal for equal treatment; if she will promulgate a checklist for strategic policy making; and if she will place a copy of the checklist in the Library. [95371]

Marjorie Mowlam: Guidelines on policy appraisal for equal treatment were published jointly by the Home Office, Department for Education and Employment and the Women's Unit in the Cabinet Office in November 1998. These were circulated to all departments to ensure that the effects of any policy changes on all groups within society are considered at the earliest stage of policy development.

On 2 August 1999 the Cabinet Office Regulatory Impact Unit launched an IT-based checklist for policy makers on the Cabinet Office website. Among other things the checklist provides up to date information and advice in taking account of a range of issues including gender, ethnicity, disability and age in advice to Ministers. It also provides advice and contact points on statutory requirements, for example the Human Rights Act, good practice in consultation and other impact assessment tools like regulatory impact assessment. Policy makers are advised to use the checklist at the beginning of the policy formulation process, as part of their on-going work and in evaluation.

The checklist is IT-based to help ensure that it is kept up to date and is accessible to a wide range of users. It is available on the Cabinet Office website at http://www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/regulation/1999/checklist/intro.htm

A copy of the checklist is available from the Libraries of the House.

Government Car and Despatch Agency

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to review the Government Car and Despatch Agency. [96390]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The first review of the Government Car and Despatch Agency (GCDA) is due to be completed by the end of March 2000. I have decided that the Cabinet Office should now begin work on this review.

The review will consider the options for the future delivery of the Government Car and Inter Despatch mail services, taking account of the lessons of the Agency's past performance. The options are: continued agency status, contracting out, market testing, merger with another organisation, privatisation and abolition. Each option will be considered on its merits, and the preferred option will be the one that offers best value for money, taking into account the interests of the customers and staff of the Agency, and security issues.

Implementation of the review's recommendations and revision of the Framework Document (if appropriate) will follow.

Anyone who wishes to contribute to the review of GCDA should contact David Smith at the Cabinet Office Agencies Unit, Room 206, Ashley House, 2 Monck Street, London SW1P 2BQ (Tel: 020–7-276–2758/ Fax: 020–7-276–2739/ e-mail: dsmith@cabinet-office.x.gsi.gov.uk) by 31 January 2000.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by his Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94850]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 682.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning staff hours in connection with the Working Time Directive. [95402]

Mr. Battle: Ministers have regular meetings with staff representatives. Working hours have been discussed at such meetings. The staff of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are committed to advancing British interests overseas. The outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review is enabling the Department for the first time in years to recruit the staff it needs to meet its objectives, and to fill the gaps which have been a major cause of long hours.

Indonesia

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on measures taken to prevent the arrival in Indonesia of Hawk aircraft in line with the common position of the European Council of 16 September. [95249]

Mr. Battle: Following the adoption of the common position of the European Council of 16 September which imposed an immediate arms embargo and suspension of military cooperation with Indonesia, no Hawk aircraft have been exported from the UK. None will be exported while the embargo is in place.

East Timor

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) the Indonesian Government and (b) the UN regarding the return of East Timorese people held in camps in West Timor. [95241]

Mr. Battle: We are deeply anxious at the plight of the many thousands of East Timorese refugees in West Timor and elsewhere in Indonesia. Those wishing to return should be free to do so at the earliest opportunity. We have made it clear to the Indonesian Government that we expect them to ensure the safety and security of the refugees. I raised this with former President Habibie on 8 September. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised this with the then Indonesian Foreign Minister Alatas in New York on 22 September. And my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister wrote to the then President Habibie to reinforce our concerns. We welcome the news that several hundred returnees per day are being repatriated from West to East Timor by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). But there is an urgency to get the refugees moving in much larger numbers. To this end, we are providing financial support and working closely with UNHCR who have established an office in West Timor. We continue to assist the United Nations with this urgent task.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in East Timor. [95432]

Mr. Battle: We welcomed Indonesia's decision on 20 October to reverse its claim on East Timor and look forward to welcoming East Timor as the newest member of the community of democratic nations. In the meantime we remain deeply anxious at the plight of the many thousands of East Timorese refugees in West Timor and elsewhere in Indonesia. We have made it clear to the Indonesian Government that we expect them to ensure the safety and security of the refugees. I raised this with the then President Habibie on 8 September. Over 18,000 East Timorese have so far been repatriated by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), but there is an urgency to get the refugees moving in much larger numbers. To this end, we are providing financial support and working closely with UNHCR who have established an office in West Timor. We have also fully supported international efforts to ensure that those guilty of human rights abuses in East Timor are brought to justice. We co-sponsored the resolution adopted on 27 September at the Special Session of the UN Commission on Human Rights which called for an International Commission of Enquiry to be set up. The Commission is to provide the UN with its conclusions by 31 December.

European Commission

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the Government's policy that the President of the European Commission should be granted the authority to appoint, dismiss, and reshuffle commissioners. [95214]

Mr. Vaz: We support the process of reform in the new Commission. This is necessary following the events which led to the resignation of the Commission earlier this year. Next year's IGC is likely to consider Treaty provisions on appointment and dismissal of Commissioners.

EU Treaties

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of granting the European Commission the authority to draft new European Union treaties. [94900]

Mr. Vaz: The Treaty sets out the Commission's role with respect to intergovernmental conferences. The Commission may make proposals to the IGC, but decisions are taken by the member states. We see no reason to change this.

Tunisia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government take to ensure that financial aid to Tunisia under the Euro-Mediterranean Agreement is not used to fund the Tunisian state security apparatus. [95094]

Mr. Vaz: Financial aid under the Euro-Mediterranean Agreement is administered by the European Commission which is responsible for ensuring that these funds are used to further the goals of the Agreement: the establishment of an area of peace and stability; shared prosperity; and partnership in human, social and cultural affairs. We monitor the use of these funds through our membership of the Med Committee established under the Agreement.

Consular Matters

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on plans to change arrangements for dealing with representations from hon. Members on consular matters. [94915]

Mr. Vaz: It is the practice of hon. Members wishing to raise consular matters with the Foreign Secretary to write to him or to a Minister in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Baroness Scotland of Asthal, is responsible for consular matters. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Responsibility for representations on visa matters rests with me. I am currently reviewing the procedures for dealing with representations concerning visas. The objective will be to provide an efficient system to enable hon. Members to assist their constituents. All correspondence should in the first instance be sent to the Migration and Visa Correspondence Unit at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, 1 Palace Street, (Room 4.3.5) London, SW1 5HE.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange a comprehensive investigation into the complaints made by Mr. Mike Bingham, a resident at Stanley in the Falkland Islands as requested in his letter of 9 October in relation to the Governor's action in suspending Mr. Bingham's residency on 28 May 1998, and associated matters relating to his residency; and if he will make a statement. [95330]

Mr. Battle: The Government are aware of the allegations made by Mr. Bingham against the Falkland Islands Government. We have consulted the Governor of the Falkland Islands who has investigated the matter thoroughly. We have no grounds to believe that there has been maladministration on the part of the Falkland Islands Government or the Royal Falkland Islands Police in their dealings with Mr. Bingham. Some of the matters raised by Mr. Bingham are between himself and his former employer, Falklands Conservation, which is entirely independent of the Falkland Islands Government.

Mr. Bingham already has a Residence Permit, valid until September 2000. It is his application for a Permanent Residence Permit which is under review. This process has been complicated by the various legal difficulties to which Mr. Bingham has been subject. The Governor is satisfied that the Falkland Islands Executive Council has handled the consideration of Mr. Bingham's applications for permanent residence status properly and impartially.

International Criminal Court

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the UK will ratify the statute of the International Criminal Court. [95476]

Mr. Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson) on 26 October 1999, Official Report, column 805.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report those countries which have (a) signed and (b) ratified the International Criminal Court Treaty. [95420]

Mr. Hain: Eighty-nine States have signed the Intentional Criminal Court Statute: Albania, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Eritrea, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Georgia, Ghana, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lesotho, Liberia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Macedonia (Former Yugoslav Republic), Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Monaco, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Portugal, Poland, Romania, Samoa, Saint Lucia, San Marino, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Four States have ratified the Statute: Italy, San Marino, Senegal and Trinidad and Tobago.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom Government intend to ratify the International Criminal Court Treaty. [95421]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson) on 26 October 1999, Official Report, column 805.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United States Government on their failure to sign the International Criminal Court Treaty. [95422]

Mr. Hain: The Secretary of State has frequently raised the International Criminal Court in contacts with the United States Government. In his talks with Mrs. Albright on 21 September in New York, he again urged the United States to sign the Statute.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with the President of China during his visit to the United Kingdom on China's position concerning the International Criminal Court Treaty. [95423]

Mr. Battle: The issue was not specifically raised during the visit. The Chinese Government are well aware of our strong position on the International Criminal Court.

Pakistan

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Chief Executive of Pakistan concerning (i) the restoration of democratic Government and (ii) his plans for those persons under house arrest. [95789]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has called for the restoration of democracy and the rule of law in Pakistan. He has also called on the new regime to respect the safety and legal rights of those arrested. The British High Commissioner in Islamabad reinforced these points on 15 October when he called on General Musharraf.

China

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if during the visit to the United Kingdom by the President of China he raised with the President (a) the use of capital punishment in China and (b) the Chinese policy on compulsory abortion; and what replies he received. [95424]

Mr. Battle: The use of capital punishment figures prominently in the human rights dialogues with the Chinese which we hold both bilaterally and with the EU. The Chinese Government are in no doubt about our strong opposition to the use of the death penalty. We have regularly raised our concerns about China's population policy in the EU and the bilateral human rights dialogues, and at higher levels. We believe that coercion has no place in family planning and our bilateral aid programme does not include funding for population programmes.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary was able to discuss human rights in China with the Chinese Foreign Minister, Tang Jiaxuan, when they met on 20 October, and my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister also raised human rights issues with President Jiang on 21 October. Specific issues, including capital punishment and the Chinese birth control policy, are also addressed through the regular high level human rights dialogue between us, which we remain convinced is the best way to secure progress over the longer term.

Business Ambassadors

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Ambassadors for British Business are held accountable for their duties. [95308]

Mr. Battle: The Ambassadors for British Business are asked to make a portion of their time available to the Ambassador for British Business scheme when travelling overseas on company business. This is entirely voluntary and the Ambassadors for British Business receive no remuneration. There are no fixed duties and no obligation to undertake engagements.

Minurso Mission

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor), of 26 July 1999, Official Report, column 143, what was the previous United Kingdom commitment to Minurso (a) in manpower and (b) financially; and at what level the decision not to recommit was made. [95417]

Mr. Hain: From September 1991 until September 1993, the UK contributed 15 military observers, including the Chief of Staff to Minurso. The cost of this deployment was approximately £1,148,080.

Since the establishment of the mission, the UK has been liable for its share of UN assessed contributions. In the financial year 1998–99, the UK paid £2,359,371 in assessed contributions for Minurso.

The Government fully support the UN's efforts to bring peace to the region. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashfield (Mr. Hoon) made clear in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor) on 26 July 1999, we are unable to consider re-committing manpower to Minurso at this time due to heavy commitments elsewhere.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Intervention Board

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what key performance targets Ministers have set the Intervention Board for 1999–2000. [96526]

Mr. Nick Brown: In agreement with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, the Minister for Rural Affairs, Scotland and the Secretary for Agriculture and Rural Development, Wales, I have set the following targets for 1999–2000:

	Target
Percentage of claims processed within deadlines	99.0%
Percentage of claims process correctly	98.5%
Cumulative running cost efficiency gains	2.5%
Improvement in index of productivity	4.0%
Ratio of disallowance to EAGGF funds handled	0.40%
New value for money savings in procurement of goods and services	7.0%
Yield: cost ratio of anti-fraud activities	3.0:1.0
Percentage of invoices paid within deadlines	98.5%

Abattoirs

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is (a) the range and (b) the average hourly rate of charge for official veterinary surgeons employed in abattoirs. [R] [90384]

Ms Quin: The current hourly rates for Official Veterinary Surgeons employed in abattoirs range from £25.01 to £106.18 and the average hourly rate is currently £40.76. This range reflects the results of the tendering exercise undertaken in 1997.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list his Department's spending on official publications since May 1997. [93680]

Mr. Morley: Central expenditure on the production and printing of official publications, since May 1997 totals £1.5 million. Information about publications bought for official use and those produced for internal use only is not held centrally.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the titles of the in-house publications and newsletters which were produced for the staff of his Department, excluding non-departmental public bodies and agencies, in the last five years, specifying the dates on which each title was first produced, the frequency with which each title is produced and the current secrecy classification of each title. [93854]

Mr. Morley: In house publication and newsletters produced for the staff in MAFF on a regular basis are as follows:

The MAFF Bulletin; the Department's staff magazine having been published monthly from April 1957 to August 1999. It has now been replaced by a new monthly magazine called "Landscape".

Infrastructure Support and Information Services (ISIS); a newsletter produced by the Departments Information and Technology Division and has been published on a bi-monthly basis for the last four years.

LIT (Library, Information and Translations) UPDATE; a quarterly newsletter produced by the Departments Library and Translation Service. It was first published four years ago.

Building and Estates Management (BEMD) Newsletters. Published periodically since June 1996.

IIP (Investors in People) Newsletter. A monthly newsletter first published in December 1998.

"FINRAB"; a newsletter from the Finance Planning and Resources Group commenced publication in August 1999 on a monthly basis.

Offices Notices; these inform staff about operational matters and have been published in a weekly journal since April 1985. Prior to that date notices were circulated individually.

Not included are numerous other publications produced on a one off basis.

EU Sugar Regime

Ms Keeble: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what account is being taken of the needs of the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries in relation to the reform of the EU sugar regime. [94135]

Ms Quin: My Department has consulted the full range of UK sugar interests, including the ACP-London Group, for views on the forthcoming reform of the EU sugar regime. Responses to this exercise will help the Government formulate their line in time for next year's negotiations. Meanwhile we would strongly encourage the ACP to make their views known in Brussels to enable the Commission to take them into account as it draws up its reform proposals.

Ms Keeble: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make a submission to the European Commission on the EU sugar regime; and if he will make a statement. [94136]

Ms Quin: The EU sugar regime is due for review next year. We have consulted UK sugar interests on their views in preparation for the forthcoming negotiations. At this stage we have no plans to make a submission to the European Commission. We expect them to come forward with proposals for sugar reform early in the new year.

Badgers

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is the Government's intention to remove all badgers in the proactive areas of the badger culling trials. [93740]

Ms Quin: The Government neither intend nor expect to remove all badgers in the proactive areas of the badger culling trial. Given the operational constraints deliberately imposed on welfare grounds—principally restricting the method of capture to cage trapping, and limiting the capture period—the Independent Scientific Group established that around 80 per cent. of the badgers in an area could be captured. In other words, one fifth of the badger population would be expected to remain in place. The statistical experts in the Scientific Group have designed the trial specifically to take account of such factors, and are satisfied that the results it yields will be robust.

Export Promotion

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many of his Department's staff have been dedicated to export promotion in each of the past five financial years; what were his Department's budgets for export promotion for each of the past five financial years; and if he will make a statement; [94607]

(2) what further measures he proposes to take to promote food and agricultural exports; and if he will make a statement. [94608]

Ms Quin: Over the past five financial years my department has directly deployed 35 staff on dedicated export promotion related activity. The overall budget for each of these years (including the MAFF contribution to Food From Britain) was:

Year	£ million
1994–95	6
1995–96	7.1
1996–97	6.7
1997–98	6.3
1998–99	6.9

The Ministry will continue to play its full role in government export promotion activities in conjunction with the overall aims and strategies of British Trade International. This will be undertaken both by staff within the Ministry and by other bodies such as Food From Britain, Meat and Livestock Commission, and Home Grown Cereals Authority.

Potatoes

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what volume of imports from the United States, for the latest year for which figures are available, came in the form of (a) raw potatoes, (b) processed potatoes, including powder and (c) potatoes present in finished products destined for human consumption. [94466]

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 October 1999]: Imports of processed potatoes from the United States are given in the following table. There were no recorded imports of raw potatoes and imports of potatoes present in finished products are not separately identifiable.

Imports of potatoes from the USA in 1998

	Processed potatoes [1]
Thousand tonnes	6.1
Raw equivalent (thousand tonnes)	9.6

[1] Includes prepared, frozen, canned, crisped and dehydrated.

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if an action plan for increasing the representation of women in public life has been (a) prepared by his Department and (b) published since November 1998. [94856]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 682.

Fisheries (Grant Aid)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of his decision to cut fisheries grant aid on inbound fisheries with particular reference to (a) salmon in the Test and Itchen and (b) sea trout in rivers in the south. [94897]

Mr. Morley: The planned reduction in grant-in-aid to the Environment Agency to fund its work on salmon and freshwater fisheries in England will come into effect in 2001–02. It will be for the Environment Agency to determine its spending priorities for that year in the light of the fall in grant-in-aid. Until it has done this it is not possible to assess the impact of the reduction on individual rivers.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review his decision to cut fisheries grant aid; and if he will make a statement. [94896]

Mr. Morley: The planned reduction in grant-in-aid to the Environment Agency to fund its work on salmon and freshwater fisheries in England is one of a number of economies made to keep MAFF's expenditure within the limits set by the Comprehensive Spending Review. The reduction will come into effect in 2001–02, and will be reviewed as part of the forthcoming review of Government spending that will determine expenditure plans for the period starting in 2002–03.

Morocco (Fisheries)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his position regarding the renegotiation of a fisheries agreement with Morocco; what is the estimated cost of the deal; how many (a) United Kingdom and (b) other EU vessels will be affected; and if he will make a statement. [95294]

Mr. Morley: The UK will be aiming to ensure that any new agreement that can be negotiated with Morocco offers value for money, contains costs, promotes sustainable stock management and is coherent with developmental policies for Morocco. We would not expect the cost to be more than the cost of the existing agreement (125m euros p.a.).

Around 500 vessels from Spain, Portugal, France and Greece fish in Moroccan waters under the current agreement. No UK vessels are affected.

Ragwort Infestation

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to counteract ragwort infestation. [95317]

Mr. Morley: MAFF has policy responsibility for control of injurious weeds, of which ragwort is one, under the Weeds Act 1959. Under its provisions, MAFF may investigate complaints from any occupiers of agricultural land who consider that their land is threatened by ragwort spreading from land nearby. It seeks to resolve disputes between neighbours about control of injurious weeds primarily through persuasion and good advice.

However, where such approaches are ineffective, the Weeds Act empowers MAFF to give occupiers of land formal written notice requiring them to take control measures. If they fail to do so MAFF may enter onto the land with an accompanying agricultural contractor, carry out the controls, and then recover the costs of the work, as a debt due to the Department.

In the case of any persistent offenders, MAFF will continue to give careful consideration to bringing a prosecution under the Act. However, past experience has been that use of the powers of entry and recovery of reasonable costs incurred in taking direct weeds control action is sufficiently effective.

There has been some doubt about the policy for enforcement of the Weeds Act where land is used to graze horses and is threatened by ragwort growing nearby. Each complaint about injurious weeds will be dealt with on its own merits. However, MAFF has policy responsibility for farmland and for farmed animals, rather than animals kept for non-agricultural businesses or for recreation. MAFF will not normally investigate complaints about weeds threatening land used for horses, ponies or donkeys. Higher priority will be given to protecting farm livestock.

MAFF supported the Country Landowners Association national awareness campaign to help eradicate ragwort, which came to an end during August. That campaign helped horse owners understand what they can do to protect their own animals, as well as their neighbours' from this poisonous weed.

GM Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what advice he has received concerning the Dutch permission for sale in the Netherlands of genetically modified raddicio rosso, containing an antibiotic marker gene; [94866]

(2) what steps he is taking to prevent the importation to the United Kingdom of genetically modified raddicio rosso recently licensed in the Netherlands. [94867]

Ms Quin [holding answer 21 October 1999]: The Dutch authorities have confirmed that, contrary to recent reports, they have not granted permission for the sale of genetically modified raddicio rosso in the Netherlands. Applications for approval for the commercial planting and food use of this crop within the Community are still being scrutinised by the EC Commission and member states and no conclusions have yet been reached.

Pollution Prevention and Control

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with farmers about the likely cost to them of the Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control Measure; what representations he has made to the EU about the potential impact on British farmers of this measure; and if he will make a statement. [95714]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 26 October 1999]: The National Pig Association raised this issue with the Minister when he and I met them on 5 October; we have also received representations from farming organisations in the context of the Review of Regulatory Burdens on Agriculture announced on 9 September. The Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control Directive was adopted by the Environment Council in 1996. Its implementation is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, who is also responsible for approving charges set by the Environment Agency to meet its costs in enforcing the relevant regulations. My officials are in contact with him about these charges which will be consistent with the Government's better regulation principles and take full account of the circumstances of industries which have not previously been subject to Integrated Pollution Control regulations.

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he is making to the EU regarding the review of the EU Transport Initiative with respect to the transportation of live animals; what representations he has made to the French Government over the Eid-el-nabin festival; and if he will make a statement. [95576]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 26 October 1999]: The Commission is obliged, under the terms of Directive 91/628 on the protection of animals during transit, to bring forward a report during 1999 to enable the Council of Ministers to review the terms of the Directive. We consider it regrettable that there is as yet no sign of this happening, as we consider that the review will be an important opportunity to press for improvements to the rules in this area.

We deplore the flagrant infringements of EU animal welfare rules and appalling acts of cruelty which take place when sheep are slaughtered at the annual festival outside Paris and which—commendably—have been highlighted by animal welfare organisations. We look to the French government to enforce the law and to the Commission to fulfil its responsibility to make sure that this is done.

We have pressed the Commission and the French government on both these matters, and will continue to do so until suitable action is forthcoming.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Luxembourg on 26 October; and if he will make a statement. [96192]

Mr. Morley: The Fisheries Council met in Luxembourg on 26 October. I represented the UK together with John Home Robertson, Deputy Minister for Rural Affairs in the Scottish Executive.

The Council had extensive discussions on two draft regulations. The first, revising the market regime for fish and aquaculture products, and the second, reforming the structural funds in the fisheries sector in the context of Agenda 2000. I stressed that the fishing sector needed to be economically, as well as biologically, sustainable and that this needed to be reflected in the market and structural measures to be applied. It did not make sense to sustain excessive capacity in relation to the available fish stocks; and import arrangements needed to be adjusted to meet the actual market circumstances. The Council will resume discussion on both proposals at its next meeting on 22 November.

The Commission reported that it hoped to take up contacts with Morocco shortly to begin negotiations on a successor agreement to the current EC-Morocco Agreement which expires on 30 November. The Commission also introduced the findings of an independent study it had commissioned on the costs and benefits of third country fisheries agreements which will now be examined in detail. There was an initial discussion of a draft Council regulation on improving the dialogue with the industry. This was remitted for further examination.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Stipendiary Magistrates

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to increase the number of stipendiary magistrates. [95471]

Jane Kennedy: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor recently consulted on a proposal to increase the present ceiling of 50 provincial stipendiary magistrates. After considering the responses received to the consultation, the Lord Chancellor proposes to seek parliamentary approval to an increase in the ceiling to 56.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to increase the jurisdiction of the stipendiary bench. [95473]

Jane Kennedy: I have no plans to increase the jurisdiction of the stipendiary bench.

Derbyshire Magistrates Courts

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the annual estimated manning costs of Derbyshire's magistrates courts will be in the three years immediately after the completion of the Private Finance Initiative for the county's courts; and what were their running costs on the same basis in 1996, 1997 and 1998. [95482]

Jane Kennedy: Cleaning and care-taking costs for the three years mentioned are 1996–97—£114,461; 1997–98—£116,656; 1998–99—£123,572. The cost of providing security cover is separately provided by the private sector: 1996–97—£86,500; 1997–98—£92,595; 1998–99—£105,037. These costs include cash carrying duties that cannot be separated from guard duties. No information on the likely costs under the PFI project will be available until bids in response to the Invitation to Tender are received and evaluated during December. Any decision to transfer staff to the private sector will be made on a value for money basis.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the latest estimated cost of the investigation and preparation of the Private Finance Initiative for property connected with Derbyshire magistrates courts. [95527]

Jane Kennedy: The latest estimated cost of advisers and the local authority management fees for the investigation and preparation of the Private Finance Initiative project involving Derbyshire magistrates courts is £673,582. Costs have increased because work has been undertaken to establish the feasibility of bringing back in to use a listed building as a magistrates court.

Office for the Supervision of Solicitors

Mr. Flight: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the operation of the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors. [95451]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor wrote to the President of the Law Society on 23 July. The letter set targets for the Law Society to achieve; these are that the number of unresolved cases on the Office's books should be down to 6,000 by 31 December 2000; and following this, 90 per cent. of cases should be dealt with within three months of receipt and 100 per cent. within five months. For the three months to date the backlog has been reduced by 1,700 cases ahead of target. I am encouraged with the progress that the Office has made towards reducing the backlog of complaints. I do recognise, however, that there is a long way to go for the Office to reach the targets set by the Lord Chancellor.

Hague Convention on Child Abduction

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what response the Government have made to the recent request from the Secretariat for the Hague Convention on Child Abduction for an increase in funding from states who are parties to the Convention. [95479]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor met the Secretary General of the Hague Conference on Private International Law in The Hague on 22 October. This issue was not raised. As and when a request of this nature is made it will receive due consideration.

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he (a) has established and (b) published a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [94864]

Jane Kennedy: The Government are committed to ensuring their policies are fair and inclusive, and focus on public service users, not providers. This aim is contained in guidance (published in 1998) which helps Departments consider the impact of their policies on gender, ethnicity and disability. In addition to considering impact the guidance encourages consultation with women's groups and others where appropriate and action to deal with any differential impact if this appears appropriate. My Department applies the principles enshrined in the guidance in developing its policies. For example in developing the Community Legal Service (CLS), a wide variety of views is being canvassed. For the CLS website we are investigating how access can be facilitated for people with disabilities or who do not use English as a first language. In developing the Quality Mark for services to be provided by CLS members, we have consulted bodies representative of the interests of ethnic minority groups and of people with disabilities. Indeed bodies such as the Commission for Racial Equality and DIAL UK are members of the Task Force charged with progressing this development.

Witness Summons Fee

Mr. Field: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the intended use is for the funds raised from new witness summons fee of £30. [95531]

Jane Kennedy: The fee is intended to recover the cost associated with the service for which the fee is paid. This includes not only the work involved with the issue of the witness summons but also the extra time at the trial likely to result from the witness giving evidence.

Mentally Incapacitated Adults

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Government will publish its proposals for making decisions on behalf of mentally incapacitated adults. [96525]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor has today issued a Policy Statement, "Making Decisions" which sets out the Government's proposals. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 28 October 1999

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the President of the Council if she (a) has established and (b) published a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [94861]

Mrs. Beckett: The major Privy Council Office activity that involves the need to ensure equal treatment is the making of appointments to public bodies. The practice of my Department in relation to the representation of women on public bodies was explained in my answer of 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 707. The same practice is adopted in relation to the representation of people from ethnic minorities on such bodies.

Millennium Compliance

Ms Keeble: To ask the President of the Council what steps she has taken to ensure the House is informed of progress in tackling the millennium bug during the summer recess. [94882]

Mrs. Beckett: During the recess, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary and I wrote to all Members summarising the progress for Government Departments and their agencies maintained in the monthly and quarterly questionnaire returns. I placed the full, completed questionnaires in the Libraries of the House and on the internet.

I also wrote to MEPs in October to inform them of the EU's initiative, set up at the UK's suggestion, to set up a high level group to consider cross border issues such as ports and shipping, custom and immigration and some energy supplies.

I have placed in the Libraries of the House summaries of the reports of the June, July and August tracking research on public awareness of and attitudes towards the millennium bug.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the members of her departmental Committee whose work involves the rebuttal of misinformed allegations in the media in relation to millennium date change issues, together with the Committee's terms of reference and mission statement. [95675]

Mrs. Beckett: The Year 2000 Communications' Committee supervises the Government's overall millennium bug presentation strategy and its intrinsic parts, including keeping the public informed.
Its membership comprises:

President of the Council (Chair)

Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry

Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for the Home Department

Parliamentary Secretary, Privy Council Office.

Its terms of reference are:

"To ensure that all communications initiatives relating to the Millennium (Millennium Bug, 'celebrations', and contingency and emergency planning), including paid publicity, are brought together in a coherent way so that they remain focused on the core message and underlying key points agreed by Ministers; that Millennium Bug and Y2K civil contingency communication planning is integrated and tested; and that departments play their full part in responding to issues arising or likely to arise".

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish (a) actual visitor numbers to date and (b) visitor numbers forecast at the time of lottery awards, for each of the completed major capital projects funded by the National Lottery. [95116]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 25 October 1999]: According to the information received from Lottery distributors, the actual visitor numbers and the numbers forecast at the time of application for completed projects funded by the National Lottery, with awards of £15 million or more, are as follows:

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [94003]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 25 October 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 25 October 1999, Official Report, columns 739–40.

Royal Armouries, Leeds

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the present financial circumstances of the Royal Armouries in Leeds. [95115]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 25 October 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) on 19 October 1999, Official Report, column 428.

[illegible] Libraries

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list, by local authority, those public libraries which (a) have closed within the last 12 months and (b) are currently scheduled for closure. [95129]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 25 October 1999]: Annual Library Plans and the data collected by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy enable me and my officials to monitor the public library service, including the number and opening hours of the libraries operated by each authority. However, we do not keep a definitive list of actual or potential building closures, since many are due to the reorganisation of services or the replacement of old facilities with new ones.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Occupational Therapists (Recruitment)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to ensure that the Down Lisburn Trust, Newry and Mourne Trust and Banbridge and Craigavon Trust recruit and train additional occupational therapists. [94460]

Mr. George Howarth: None. The levels of staff employed by HSS trusts in any professional discipline in Northern Ireland are directly related to the activity levels required by the commissioners of services. Unless commissioners deploy additional resources, HSS trusts are unable to pay for the services of additional staff.

So far as I am aware, there are presently no difficulties in recruiting Occupational Therapists in any of the trusts mentioned, and the number of training places at the University of Ulster has been increased from 36 places to 50 places per year since 1992.

Police Ombudsman

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the post of Police Ombudsman was created; when the post was first advertised and how many applications were received; what qualifications were required and in what ways all of the first applicants failed to meet those requirements; how many applications were received as a consequence of the second advertisement; how many of those applicants met the criteria set out; and if there were differences in the qualifications required by the two advertisements. [94778]

Mr. Ingram: The post of Police Ombudsman was created by the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 1998. It is expected that the Police Ombudsman will assume her full statutory powers next Summer. In the meantime, Mrs. O'Loan will act in a designate capacity.

The post was first advertised both locally and nationally between 30 November and 3 December 1998. There were 18 applicants.

Applicants were asked to describe how they met the competencies for the post. These were: leadership and teamwork; organisational awareness/knowledge; developing and maintaining networks; managing financial and physical resources; and customer service.

Of the applications received, five candidates were subsequently shortlisted for interview by a panel which included a person independent of Government. From this group two candidates were selected for subsequent interview by the Secretary of State and the Minister of State. In the event, while Ministers acknowledged the quality of the candidates, they were not satisfied that either candidate fully met the requirements of the post.

The post was readvertised both locally and nationally and in local legal journals between the 20–25 May 1999. Forty-seven applications were subsequently received. The range of competencies for the post were identified as: legal skills; leadership/strategic planning; developing and maintaining networks; public relations and decision making. From the applications received, nine candidates were shortlisted for interview by a panel which included a person who was independent of Government. The two leading candidates were subsequently interviewed by the Secretary of State and myself.

It would not be appropriate to discuss the merits or otherwise of individual candidates. The selection process followed the guidelines of the Commissioner for Public Appointments. The underlining principle of this guidance is appointment on merit.

Inward Investment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Irish Development Board sponsored visits of prospective incoming (a) foreign and (b) United Kingdom investors there have been to each council area in each of the last five financial years and the current year to date; and how many were carried forward to investment. [94833]

Mr. McFall: Visits arranged by IDB to Northern Ireland District Council areas for potential investors in the four years to 31 March 1998 are detailed in the following table. The details for 1998–99 will be made available with the publication of the IDB Annual Report in mid-November. Separate figures for prospective foreign and United Kingdom investors are not available for 1994–95 and would involve disproportionate costs to extract.

3 Total District Council visits may exceed total visits to Northern Ireland as companies may visit more than one District Council area.

Companies investing in Northern Ireland may have visited more than once and in relation to different projects before making the decision to invest, Information relating investment to specific visits is not available and would involve disproportionate costs to extract. The number of inward investments promoted by IDB for each of the last five years is detailed in the table:

Equality Commission

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effect of (a) the retirement of senior officials in the Disability Directorate and (b) the delay in forming the Equality Commission on the Commission's ability to enforce rights by April 2000 under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [95179]

Mr. George Howarth: None. A number of members of the former Disability Council have been appointed to the Equality Commission and several others have agreed to act in a consulting capacity to the Commission. It is intended that a draft Order-in-Council to confer the necessary disability rights enforcement powers on the Equality Commission will be laid before Parliament shortly. The Commission is making preparations to recruit and train staff to ensure that these powers are given effect from April 2000.

Patten Commission

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of the production of the report of the Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland. [95896]

Mr. Ingram: The Independent Commission on Policing (the Patten Commission) issued its report, "A New Beginning: Policing in Northern Ireland", on 9 September 1999. The Commission arranged for 30,000 copies of the report to be printed at a cost of £90,000—£3 per copy.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many copies of the report of the Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland have been requested by members of the public. [95888]

Mr. Ingram: It is difficult to put a precise figure on the number of copies requested by members of the public as the initial distribution was handled by the Patten Commission before it disbanded. In addition to the 21,000 copies distributed to libraries and each of the district councils, and each police officer and civilian members of PANI, approximately 5,000 copies were issued by the Commission to members of the public. Since 30 September there have been 404 requests from members of the public to the freephone number announced by the Secretary of State on 9 September 1999. The whole report is also available on the internet.

RUC

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many armoured landrovers the RUC has. [95890]

Mr. Ingram: The RUC currently have 434 armoured landrovers.

Plastic Batons

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research, and at what cost, is currently being carried out in Northern Ireland into less potentially lethal alternatives to the plastic baton round. [95893]

Mr. Ingram: There is currently no formal research programme into alternatives to plastic baton rounds in Northern Ireland. The report of the Independent Commission on Policing recommended such a programme should be established and this will be addressed in the Government response to the report.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Recruitment Industry

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of proposals for the regulation of the private recruitment industry (URN: 99/774) published by the Department of Trade and Industry on those buying care privately. [96060]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The consultation document published on 31 May on revised regulations to govern the conduct of the private recruitment industry contains a regulatory impact assessment covering possible cost consequences to those hiring staff through bureaux, including those buying care privately.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his officials have contacted Mrs. Gifford of Able Community Care Norwich, concerning the costs attributed by her to the VAT charges arising from the introduction of regulations for the private recruitment industry (URN: 99/774); and on what basis those calculations were made. [96062]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My officials wrote to Mrs. Gifford on 22 July and 12 August 1999. A meeting was held on 19 August and officials also spoke to her at a conference on 13 October. We do not accept that the costs which she calculates would in fact result from the proposed amendments to private recruitment industry regulation.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the working of the national minimum wage in the United States. [94273]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The independent Low Pay Commission in its First Report on the national minimum wage examined the operation of the minimum wage systems in a number of countries, including the United States.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further measures are proposed to ensure compliance with the minimum wage legislation. [94285]

Mr. Byers: Enforcement powers are set out in the National Minimum Wage Act 1998. National minimum wage inspectors (comprising officials from the Inland Revenue and the Agriculture Departments) follow up complaints from workers and third parties. Since August, inspectors have also been carrying out targeted inspections throughout the United Kingdom based on risk assessments, which identify where underpayments are most likely to occur.

Bananas

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has held with representatives of the ACP banana-producing countries concerning matters relating to the European Union's banana regime and the Lomé commitment; and if he will make a statement. [95821]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government had a number of discussions with ACP banana producers and others about further reform of the EU's banana regime in the course of this year. It is however for the European Commission to come forward with a formal proposal for changing the EU's banana regime consistent with the rules of the World Trade Organisation and with Lomé commitments. The UK has made clear that we would like to see a proposal as soon as possible which will end this dispute and address the needs of the vulnerable banana producers.

Small Business Service

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the local boundaries for the Small Business Service. [96729]

Ms Hewitt: In July, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry asked for the advice of the Regional Development Agencies and the London Development Partnership on the boundaries for local delivery of services on behalf of the Small Business Service and the proposed Learning and Skills Council. Lufthansa (Dismissals)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations his Department has received concerning Lufthansa's dismissal of workers following a strike. [96244]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Department has received a number of letters urging the Government to give its support to the strikers in the Skychefs dispute. However, it is not the Government's policy to intervene in industrial disputes or be seen to take sides by commenting on the conduct of one side or the other. Disputes are a matter for the parties concerned to resolve with the assistance of the independent Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS) where both parties agree.

We intend to bring Section 16 and Schedule 5 of the Employment Relations Act 1999 into force by Easter next year. These provisions will extend the right of protection for those dismissed for taking lawfully organised industrial action to complain to a tribunal of unfair dismissal. They are designed to stop precipitate dismissals and to place an onus on both employers and unions to settle disputes by negotiation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Easter Adjournment

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Council when she expects the next Easter adjournment to take place. [95941]

Mrs. Beckett: I am not yet able, before the start of the new Session, to forecast when the House will not be sitting, but I hope to give further information nearer the time.

Staff Pensions

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Council how many hon. Members use the Fees Office facility to contribute to pension provision for their staff; and how many staff are covered by the facility. [95654]

Mrs. Beckett: The information requested is as follows (and was current at 22 October 1999).

625 hon. Members use the Fees Office facility to contribute to pension provision for their staff; and 1,276 staff are covered by this facility.

Archival Paper

Mr. Gordon: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if she will make available to hon. Members samples of the archival paper which the Committee recommends should replace vellum as the means of preserving record copies of Acts. [96313]

Mrs. Roe: Yes; I am please to advise the hon. Lady that I have arranged for samples of the archival paper, which it is proposed should replace vellum, to be placed in the Library.

Private Security Services

Mr. Flynn: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what plans he has to use private security services in the Palace of Westminster. [95819]

Mr. Kirkwood: There are no current plans to use private security services in the Palace of Westminster. A new contract for security services came into force with the Metropolitan Police on 1 September this year. It is for two years with the option for annual extensions thereafter.

Harmon CFEM Facades (UK) Ltd.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on the matter of Harmon CFEM Facades (UK) Ltd. v. The Corporate Officer of the House of Commons. [95880]

Mr. Kirkwood: A Judge of the Technology and Construction Court has found the Corporate Officer of the House of Commons liable for damages in relation to its decision to award the external cladding package for the New Parliamentary Building to an Austrian/British company, Seele Alvis.

The Commission is concerned by the Judge's finding that the project team unlawfully promoted a "Buy British" policy. Given the liquidation of Harmon in March 1998, the House would have been put in a disastrous situation if the contract had gone to them. Another contractor would have to have been found which would have caused delay to the project and would have meant major financial loss, estimated to be an additional £12 million, on a project which is on time and under budget.

The Judge has held that Harmon is entitled to recover its tender costs (claimed at not more than £438,000) and any profit it can prove it would have earned. These are to be determined at a later hearing. The Judge has said that the fact that Harmon went into insolvent liquidation during the period it would have carried out the contract, cannot be ignored.

Advice on the grounds for appeal is being sought.

TREASURY

Tax Havens

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the OECD's list of tax havens and its recommendations pertaining to them; and if he will make a statement. [94805]

Dawn Primarolo: The OECD has not yet completed its evaluation of tax havens.

Fiscal Harmonisation

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those elements of fiscal harmonisation currently being discussed at EU level to which he (a) has and (b) has not raised objections; and if he will make a statement. [95225]

Dawn Primarolo: As the joint statement made by the Prime Minister and the German Chancellor last December makes clear, the UK Government will not support proposals leading to a higher tax burden and jeopardising competitiveness and jobs in the EU. We fully support enhanced co-operation in the fight against tax abuse and evasion, and to combat unfair tax competition.

EU Tax Ministers Meeting

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the (a) conclusions, (b) minutes and (c) agenda of the meeting of EU Tax Ministers held on 13 and 14 October at Fiuggi near Rome. [95093]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 13 July 1999, Official Report, column 182.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Optical Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made in providing self-correcting spectacles in countries with limited optical services; and if she will make a statement. [94804]

Clare Short: We are providing a grant of £250,000 to "Adaptive Eye Care Ltd.", to assist in funding a 12 month programme in Africa and Asia, to further develop the adaptive spectacles. The programme covers market research, product field trials and local staff training.

Aid Criteria

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what criteria her Department employs in determining whether to suspend aid to a foreign Government. [96223]

Clare Short: In our White Paper on Eliminating World Poverty we lay out a number of criteria for partnership in development. These include a commitment to the elimination of poverty, to good governance and to human rights. In some cases the behaviour of a government so offends against the interests and rights of their people that we can no longer work with the offending regime. Instead we will focus on those within civil society who are working for change. Our primary concern must be to continue to deliver support to the poor and to help them realise their rights.

Serbia

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what humanitarian aid her Department is currently providing for Serbia. [96220]

Clare Short: Since May 1999, European Community Humanitarian Office (ECHO) has allocated 26.5 million euros for assistance to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY), of which the UK attribution is about 15 per cent. This consists of food and hygiene assistance to up to 770,000 vulnerable people, repairs to accommodation for displaced people, psycho-social support, small-scale emergency water and sanitation projects, and support to social institutions. Programmes are being implemented through major agencies such as the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (UNHCR).

Export Credit Guarantees

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations her Department has made to the DTI in the past three months regarding the cancellation of export credit guarantee debt. [96217]

Clare Short: Debt is primarily the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I work closely with the Chancellor on debt and our combined efforts have enabled the Government to deliver their objectives on the revision to the heavily indebted poor countries (HIPC) initiative. The new HIPC framework will deliver twice as much debt relief, and the link to poverty reduction has been greatly strengthened with the introduction of poverty reduction strategies. This provides an opportunity to make much greater progress on eliminating poverty and achieving the international development targets. My officials work closely with those from Treasury, Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO), on HIPC and other aspects of the Government's debt policy, including the assistance provided on the UK's export credit debt in the context of the Paris Club of bilateral creditors.

World Trade Organisation

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's policy towards the World Trade Organisation discussions in Seattle. [96222]

Clare Short: The WTO Ministerial meeting in Seattle, 30 November to 3 December, will consider the scope, modalities and structure of a new round of multilateral trade negotiations. I have called for the next WTO round to be a "development round", with a comprehensive agenda which offers all countries the chance to make solid and substantial gains. A comprehensive Round would offer important development opportunities, through increased market access and improved rules. My Department has been working closely with the Department of Trade and Industry and other Departments to give a clear development focus to the EU position in advance of Seattle, and is working hard to win support for a wide ranging round.

NGOs

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the revised funding arrangements entered into between her Department and non-governmental organisations. [96221]

Clare Short: I refer to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member on 26 July 1999, Official Report, columns 12–13.

The Guidelines for the operation of the Civil Society Challenge Fund have been widely distributed and the first application round began on 1 October. The Fund will operate on a 50:50 matched funding basis. In recognition that non-governmental organisations currently in receipt of 100 per cent. funding for reproductive health activities would find it helpful to have time to adjust to the revised arrangements, I have agreed that they should receive 85 per cent. funding in the first year of the new Fund, 70 per cent. funding in the second year, reaching 50 per cent. in the third year.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many staff were employed directly by her Department on 30 September. [96219]

Clare Short: Figures are not yet available for 30 September but as at 1 July, my Department directly employed a total of 1,728 staff including casual staff and staff on contract not classified as civil servants. In addition the Department employed a further 320 staff who are appointed in-country through its overseas offices.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Penalty Fare Scheme

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has made to London Transport concerning the operation of their penalty fare scheme. [95232]

Mr. Hill: In July this year LT presented Ministers with a copy of the LT/LRPC report on their review of the Underground Penalty Fares Scheme. Ministers have made no representations to London Transport on this matter since then.

Farm Plastics

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department will respond to the consultation on the disposal and recovery of farm plastics issued by his Department 12 months ago. [95879]

Mr. Mullin: The consultation paper received a fairly limited response and subsequently we have been reassessing the proposals for a new industry initiative based on the Government's commitment to apply waste management controls to agricultural waste which is not excluded under Article 2 of the amended Framework Directive on waste. This means that most agricultural waste will be subject to the controls which apply to "controlled waste". The commitment was most recently confirmed in the waste strategy "A Way With Waste" which was published on 30 June. We will make a further statement in the light of this work.

Flooding (Newcastle)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he plans to require the Environment Agency to eliminate the risk of flooding, contamination and storm sewer overflow in the Ouse Burn/Jesmond Dene Stream, Newcastle; and if the effects of climate change have been assessed in calculating these risks. [95910]

Mr. Mullin: The Environment Agency is aware of the risk of flooding within the Ouse Burn catchment. The Agency's records identify the majority of properties which have been affected previously. In addition, a hydraulic study, carried out under section 105 of the Water Resources Act 1991, has identified the properties at risk from a 1 in 100 year flood event.

The Agency considers that it is not possible to eliminate flood risk completely. However, the risk can be minimised by appropriate management of the river channel and appropriate development in the flood plain.

The Environment Agency is working closely with Northumbrian Water to agree prioritisation of a continuing programme of work to improve unsatisfactory storm sewer overflows. The Government have pressed for this programme to be accelerated under the current Periodic Review of water industry price limits.

Since 1991 estimates of rising sea levels arising from geological movements of the British mainland and from climate change effects have been built into the appraisal of options for flood defence.

Health and Safety

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has received from the Health and Safety Executive their proposals for the Health and Safety (Miscellaneous Modifications) Regulations 1999; what response to the proposed Regulation 6(8) he plans; and if he will make a statement. [95800]

Mr. Meacher: I have not yet received proposals from the Health and Safety Commission for the Health and Safety (Miscellaneous Modifications) Regulations 1999. I understand the proposals will be submitted to me by the Commission shortly.

Rating Valuations

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the latest average capital values of dwellings by tenure and region for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [95767]

Mr. Mullin: The latest information on capital values for all housing tenures is from the English House Condition Survey 1996. Average values by tenure and region for April 1996 are provided in the table.

	Owner occupied	Private rented	Local authority	RSL
North East	53,282	43,602	26,697	25,949
Yorkshire and the Humber	54,767	36,976	25,025	31,107
North West	59,435	42,795	25,636	26,085
East Midlands	59,818	41,411	28,298	29,432
West Midlands	62,965	53,363	32,127	33,597
South West	70,286	59,036	35,325	42,923
Eastern	77,541	54,055	44,485	43,905
South East	92,617	67,101	44,924	43,687
London	102,143	79,280	48,848	58,354

The English House Condition Survey is based on a sample of dwellings throughout England and is carried out every five years. It provides values for all housing types and tenures at one point in time, and not just recent transactions. Therefore, in the private sector, values will differ from other sources of information on house prices.

Railway Stations

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the public funding available to improve the condition of run down railway stations. [95762]

Mr. Hill: Investment in station facilities may be eligible for funding under the Rail Passenger Partnership scheme, set up to help provide new or enhanced local and regional rail services which contribute to the Government's wider objectives for rail. The shadow Strategic Rail Authority (SSRA) has issued guidance on bidding for funds for this purpose and is evaluating proposals already received.

A decision on the first group of bids for Rail Passenger Partnership funding is likely to be announced by the SSRA towards the end of 1999 or early in the new year.

Radio Frequency Field Exposure

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects that the study into occupational exposure to radio frequency fields will be completed; and if he will make a statement. [95717]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 26 October 1999]: The Institute of Occupational Health at the University of Birmingham, in collaboration with the National Radiological Protection Board, is undertaking the study of occupational exposure to radio frequency fields. I am advised the current intention is that the study, which is funded by the industry together with a contribution from the Ministry of Defence, will be completed by the end of 2001.

Negative Housing Subsidy Regime

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning the impact of his changes to the negative housing subsidy regime. [95976]

Mr. Mullin: I met a delegation of representatives from the "Negative Subsidy" authorities on 14 September to discuss the potential impact on local authorities of our proposals to change the accounting arrangements for the Housing Revenue Account (HRA).

I have since written to the leader of that delegation indicating that the Government are prepared to agree in principle to provide some form of transitional measures when Rent Rebates are removed from the HRA. These will be primarily for those authorities where the transfer represents a significant proportion of their General Fund expenditure, and is long standing. The transitional measures will allow time for "Negative Subsidy" authorities to make necessary financial and procedural adjustments in preparation for the new arrangements. It is too early to say what form these transitional arrangements might take since there are many factors which may potentially affect the level of transfers before the new arrangements are implemented.

Train Services (Cancellations)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish weekly and monthly material available to the Rail Regulator on the numbers of cancelled train services, broken down by rail operator. [96038]

Mr. Hill: Cancellation data, broken down by rail operator and also, in some cases further sub-divided by route group, are published in the Franchising Director's quarterly Bulletin (Copies are in the House Library). There are no immediate plans to publish this data on a more frequent basis. The recent "Instructions and Guidance to the Franchising Director" (copies are in the House Library) would allow him to change the present quarterly interval between Bulletins subject to consultation with Ministers.

GM Products

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his Department's policy will be in the negotiations at the EU in relation to commercial growing of (a) GM beet produced by Monsanto and (b) GM oil seed rape produced by AgrEvo. [96231]

Mr. Meacher: The UK vote at the EU negotiations will be based solely on the scientific assessment of the information provided in the applications by Monsanto and AgrEvo. In order to vote in favour of granting consents, we would need to be satisfied that the information provided by the companies was accurate and complete. We would also need to be confident that the information showed clearly that there were no significant risks to the environment from the products covered in the consents. This assessment of the risk would be in accordance with the requirements of the Directive at the time the applications were made. However, since the applications were made I, and my colleagues in other Member States, have decided that future applications must include an assessment of a wider range of risks to the environment, including indirect effects and impacts on bio-diversity. We are seeking assurances and commitments from industry that they will provide such assessments through post-market monitoring before any general cultivation in the UK is permitted. Our vote will therefore also be conditional on receiving these commitments.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the earliest date by which biotechnology companies could proceed to commercial planting of any GM crops in the UK. [96230]

Mr. Meacher: Before any genetically modified (GM) crop can proceed to commercial planting in the UK, up to four statutory approvals are required. These are: Part C (marketing) consent under European Directive 90/220/EEC, food safety approval under EU Novel Foods and Novel Food Ingredients Regulation (258/97), National List of approved seeds, and pesticide approval to cover, where necessary, the use of a pesticide in different circumstances on the new GM crops.

The crops nearest to gaining all the necessary approvals for commercial planting in the UK are GM herbicide tolerant oilseed rape and GM herbicide tolerant maize. These crops are currently being assessed in the Government's programme of farm-scale evaluations to determine whether or not commercial cultivation would harm farmland bio-diversity. These evaluations are due to be completed in 2003.

Leylandii Trees

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress his Department has made regarding measures to control the planting of leylandii trees around boundaries. [96210]

Mr. Mullin: The voluntary code of practice on the information to be provided on the sale of hedging plants, drawn up by the Leylandii Working Group, was launched to the horticultural and landscape industry on 15 June. Otherwise, the position remains as set out in the reply given to the hon. Member for Colchester (Mr. Russell) on 17 November 1998, Official Report, column 473.

Blackwall Tunnel

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the creation of high-occupancy vehicle lanes on the approaches to the Blackwall Tunnel. [96000]

Mr. Hill: No final decision has been made on whether to proceed with a trial scheme for a high occupancy vehicle (car sharing) lane on the approaches to the Blackwall Tunnel. We will consider the traffic effects of the extensions to the Jubilee Line and Docklands Light Railway before deciding on whether to introduce a scheme.

London Underground Services

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the London Underground line closures and service reductions planned for (a) October 1999 to March 2000 and (b) April to September 2000. [96001]

Mr. Hill: This is an operational matter for London Transport. However, I understand that the following line closures and service reductions are planned:

(a) Between October 1999 and March 2000:

Date

23–31 October

Location

Queen's Park—Harrow and Wealdstone (Bakerloo Line)

Purpose

Railtrack track replacement works on Silverlink and Bakerloo shared lines

(b) Between April 2000 and September 2000:

Date

April 2000 (provisional)

Location

Victoria—Brixton (Victoria Line)

Purpose

Track works to replace life-expired cross-over at Brixton

Date

May—August 2000 (provisional)

Location

High St Kensington—Earl's Court (District Line)

Possible re-routing of Wimbledon-Edgware Rd service via Gloucester Rd, and no Olympia service.

Purpose

Strengthening covered way.

These works are still provisional as London Transport is finalising the details of its work programme and of specific projects. In doing this they will seek to minimise disruption to passengers.

Fuel Source Development

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish revised planning guidance for on-shore oil, gas and coalbed methane development. [96523]

Mr. Raynsford: We have today issued draft guidance on on-shore oil, gas and coalbed methane development for public consultation. The consultation period will run until 7 January 2000. While the guidance on oil and gas updates that previously contained in Circular 2/85, the proposed guidance on coalbed methane is the first that has been prepared in respect of this potentially important new energy source. Copies of the consultation draft are available in the Library.

Rail Safety

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) which body is responsible for determining which signals are to be fitted with train protection warning system devices; [95954]

(2) what percentage of all signals are to be fitted with train protection warning system devices; [95955]

(3) what plans he has to fit train protection warning system devices to freight train loop lines; [95956]

(4) if signal SN109 outside Paddington railway station was scheduled for the fitting of a train protection warning system device within existing plans. [95958]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 27 October 1999]: The Railway Safety Regulations 1999 require a train protection warning system to be fitted at all signals on a railway where a train could collide with another oncoming, converging or crossing train. These are estimated to account for 30–40 per cent. of all signals. As required by the Regulations, Railtrack is developing a train protection installation programme which must be approved by the Health and Safety Executive. Signal SN109 outside Paddington station falls within that programme.

Parts of a railway which are normally used only for the carriage of freight are excluded from the scope of the Regulations.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many signals passed at danger there have been in each of the last five years on tracks between (a) London Paddington and Oxford and (b) Oxford and Evesham. [95988]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 27 October 1999]: Information is not held in the form requested. I have asked the initial Capital Chair of the Health and Safety Commission to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice on railway safety he received before announcing the phasing-out of slam-door trains. [95986]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 27 October 1999]: The announcement of the phasing out of slam-door carriages without central locking was made after careful consideration of the Health and Safety Commission's formal recommendations.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many recorded incidents of diesel fuel tanks becoming separated from trains there have been in each of the last five years. [95990]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 27 October 1999]: The Health and Safety Executive does not record this type of information and is therefore unable to supply any data.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the reporting stages for signals passed at danger from trackside to Secretary of State; and if he will make a statement. [95987]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 27 October 1999]: Incidents of signals passed at danger (SPADs) are required to be reported monthly under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 to the Health and Safety Executive (Her Majesty's Railway Inspectorate). They are reported monthly by the Safety Managers for the individual Railtrack zones and then submitted by Railtrack to HMRI. This information is published in HMRI's Annual Report on Rail Safety.

Following the tragic accident at Ladbroke Grove on 5 October, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister asked the Health and Safety Commission to arrange for him to be sent a weekly report on the number of signals that had been passed at danger (SPADs) in the previous week. The information is collated and tabulated by HMRI and submitted to the Deputy Prime Minister every Friday. He has received two of these reports so far.

The Deputy Prime Minister has also requested the monthly analysis of SPADs. This report is due at the beginning of November and will be published.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the safety record of (a) diesel multiple unit trains and (b) trains hauled by a diesel locomotive. [95993]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 27 October 1999]: The Health and Safety Commission, with the operational assistance of the Health and Safety Executive (HSE), monitor and review the safety performance of all types of rolling stock including that of diesel multiple units and trains hauled by diesel locomotives. Details of train accidents caused by technical defects affecting all types of locomotives and multiple units are published in HSE's Annual Report on Railway Safety.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions since September 1998 (a) Ministers and (b) officials have (i) met and (ii) corresponded with (1) train operating companies and (2) Railtrack plc regarding signals passed at danger incidents; and if he will place the resulting minutes and letters in the Library. [95982]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 27 October 1999]: The lead responsibility for dealing with signals passed at danger rests with the Health and Safety Commission and Executive.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) signal failures and (b) signals passed at danger there have been since the accident at Ladbroke Grove. [95991]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 27 October 1999]: The information requested on signal failures is not yet available. Railtrack is required by law to report on a monthly basis incidents of signals passed without authority (commonly known as a 'SPAD') and failures in the signalling system where they endanger or have the potential to endanger the safe passage of trains. In addition my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has asked for weekly reports of SPADs which will be collated and publicised monthly. The first report will be available in early November.

The relevant report for signal failures following the accident at Ladbroke Grove will not be available until mid November.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when random testing for alcohol and drugs was introduced for train drivers. [95989]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 27 October 1999]: Random testing for frontline railway staff, including train drivers, was introduced by regulation made under the Transport and Works Act 1992. The regulation came into force in December 1992.

DEFENCE

School of Electrical and Mechanical Engineers

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which contractor is responsible for the training of Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers at the School of Electrical and Mechanical Engineers, Borden; what penalty clauses are contained in the contract; and if they have been invoked. [95672]

Mr. Spellar: The contractor responsible for the majority of training at the School of Electrical and Mechanical Engineering is Vosper Thorneycroft. Contract performance is regularly monitored and there is an annual review of the contract price, which can vary depending on the number of courses run or the number of students trained during the year. There are no specific penalty clauses in the contract, but full payment depends on the contractor meeting the required performance standards. To date there has been no reason to consider reducing payment on these grounds.

Helicopter Command

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many defence service personnel are serving with Joint Helicopter Command Headquarters; from which service areas they are drawn; and if he will make a statement. [95794]

Mr. Spellar: The Joint Helicopter Command Headquarters is established for 84 Service personnel. The actual strength as at 25 October 1999 is 82. The Service areas from which they are drawn are as follows:

Service	Established strength	Actual strength
Royal Navy	12	12
Army	48	48
Royal Air Force	24	22
Total	84	82

RAF Honington

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of converting the east hangar at RAF Honington for use by the new NBC regiment. [95802]

Mr. Spellar: The cost of refurbishing 'E' Hangar at RAF Honington for use by the Joint NBC Regiment would be £1.33 million plus VAT. However, no financial decision will be made on the requirement for this refurbishment until the long term location of the Joint NBC Regiment is known.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are employed in Scotland by executive agencies responsible to his Department in total; and where those staff are located. [95278]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 26 October 1999]: As at 1 July 1998, there were 8,448 staff employed in Scotland by executive agencies responsible to the Secretary of State for Defence, as detailed in the table. This is the last year for which figures are available. The MOD has since restructured and a number of the Agencies mentioned in the table have ceased to exist and other new Agencies have been created.

Notes:

1. The data cover UK regular forces and UK based permanent civilian personnel counted in official Ministry of Defence civil service figures. Civilian figures are full-time equivalents, where part time staff are counted in proportion to the hours worked.
2. The data exclude all Defence Evaluation and Research Agency Staff and the UK Hydrographic Office, on whom reliable data is not available on the same basis.

It would not be possible to give the location of each member of staff without disproportionate cost. However the locations of the Agencies which employ the majority of staff in Scotland are as follows:

Queen Victoria School—Dunblane, Perthshire;

Army Base Repair Organisation—Forthside, Stirling;

Defence Codification Agency—Glasgow;

Army Personnel Centre—Glasgow;

Army Training and Recruiting Agency—Glencourse;

Ship Support Agency—Rosyth;

Naval Recruiting and Training Agency—Rosyth and Greenock;

Naval Bases and Supplies Agency—approximately 2,800 of the 4,016 staff employed in Scotland by the Naval Bases and Supplies Agency are based at Faslane, with the remainder located at a number of different sites throughout Scotland;

Staff employed by the Meterological Office and the MOD Police are located in a number of different sites throughout Scotland.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state for each of the executive agencies responsible to his Department, the (a) total number of staff employed and (b) wage costs in (i) England and (ii) Scotland in the last year for which figures are available. [95279]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 26 October 1999]: The table gives details of the number of staff employed by each of the agencies responsible to the Secretary of State for Defence, in England and Scotland as of 1 July 1998, which is the last year for which figures are available. Notes:

1. The data cover UK regular forces and UK based permanent civilian personnel counted in official Ministry of Defence civil service figures. Civilian figures are full-time equivalents where part-time staff are counted in proportion to the hours worked.
2. The data exclude all Defence Evaluation and Research Agency staff and the UK Hydrographic Office staff, for whom reliable data are not available on the same basis.

It would not be possible to give the wage costs for each Agency without disproportionate cost.

UN Peacekeeping Operations

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to contribute to UN peacekeeping operations in (a) East Timor, (b) Sierra Leone and (c) Congo. [96229]

Mr. Spellar: The UK already contributes two military liaison officers to the UN Mission in East Timor; 15 Service personnel to the UN Observer Mission in Sierra Leone; and six military observers to the UN in the Congo. We will consider any UN requests for further contributions to these operations in the light of other commitments.

Procurement

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the procurement budget is to be spent through European joint procurement structures. [96226]

Mr. Hoon: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Belize

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Ministers in his Department visited Belize in each year between 1990 and 1997; and what support his Department gave Belize in each year. [96212]

Mr. Spellar: As far as available records show, Belize received official visits from the following Defence Ministers between 1990 and 1997.

January 1990:

Archie Hamilton (Minister of State for the Armed Forces).

October 1990:

Lord Arran (Under Secretary of State for the Armed Forces).

September 1993:

Jeremy Hanley (Minister of State for the Armed Forces).

May 1994:

Malcolm Rifkind (Secretary of State for Defence).

The MOD maintained a small garrison in Belize until September 1994, and has provided support to the Belize Defence Force through the Defence Policy and Military Assistance Funds. The amounts provided in support of the Belize Defence Force in each Financial Year between 1990 and 1997 are set out in the table:

Year	£
1990–91	787,195
1991–92	721,808
1992–93	670,000
1993–94	792,775
1994–95	806,120
1995–96	834,927
1996–97	502,105
1997–98	283,967

PRIME MINISTER

Foreign Affairs Committee

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government have responded to the Eighth report of the House of Commons Select Committee on Standards and Privileges on the premature disclosure of reports of the Foreign Affairs Committee. [96614]

The Prime Minister: I wrote to my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon), the Chairman of the Committee, on 14 September 1999 to indicate the Government's intention to abide fully by the Committee's recommendations. Copies of my letter and its attachments have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total number of people aged (a) 60 to 74, (b) 75 to 79 and (c) over 80 years living in (i) England, (ii) Scotland, (iii) Northern Ireland and (iv) Wales whose weekly income is £10 above the income support level. [94198]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Couples and single persons with income between the income support level and £10 above the income support level in April 1999 in the United Kingdom

Thousand

Age of eldest partner	Single person	Couple	All single persons and couples
60 to 74	60	20	80
75 to 79	140	40	180
80 and over	90	10	100
All 60 and over	290	70	360

Notes:

1. Due to small sample sizes, separate estimates for England, Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales are not available.
2. Income is defined as net income before housing costs.
3. Incomes are derived from the 1996–97 Family Expenditure Survey, uprated to April 1999 using the retail prices index. Therefore this analysis assumes that the real value of pensioners' incomes is the same in April 1999 as in 1996–97.
4. The levels of income support are based on April 1999 rates for singles and couples, taking account of age-related increases in rates. The analysis does not take account of other increases in rates, such as disability-related premia. Therefore some people identified in the analysis may be eligible for income support at a higher rate.
5. Estimates should be treated with caution since they are based on small sample sizes.
6. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10,000 but are not necessarily accurate to that degree.

Family Expenditure Survey

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the number of claimants receiving Income Support at the end of August 1996 in each local authority area in England; [95738]

(2) what was the number of dependent children of claimants receiving Income Support at the end of August 1996 in each local authority area in England. [95736]

Mr. Bayley: The information has been placed in the Library.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the additional expenditure by his Department on housing benefit subsidy in respect of rent allowances paid to local authorities in each of the years from 1989–90 to 1998–99 in respect of tenants of registered social landlords created as a result of large scale voluntary transfers. [94345]

Angela Eagle: The only estimates made are projections for transfers of funds from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions to this Department for the three years following each tranche of large scale voluntary transfers. The Rent Allowance expenditure relating to transferred properties cannot be identified beyond this three year period because the Housing Benefit data does not distinguish between Registered Social Landlord tenants in transferred properties, and those in other Registered Social Landlord properties. The estimates for each three year period from 1992–93 are set out in the table. Our records do not extend back to cover transfers before this date.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage and number of pensioners are entitled to but not receiving one or more of (a) Income Support, (b) Housing Benefit and (c) Council Tax Benefit. [95632]

Mr. Rooker: The information is as follows:

Take-up of income related benefits by pensioner benefit units 1997–98

	Income Support	Housing Benefit	Council Tax Benefit	Total
Average number of recipients (Thousand)	1,470	1,830	2,600	5,870
Numbers entitled but not receiving benefit (Thousand)	530 to 870	0 to 250	640 to 1,190	1,170 to 2,310
Percentage non take-up rate	27 to 37	0 to 12	20 to 31	17 to 28

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on the 1997–98 Family Resources Survey.
2. Estimated numbers entitled to, but not receiving benefit have been rounded to the nearest 10,000 cases. The sum of the components (the individual benefits) may not add up to the total due to rounding.
3. A pensioner benefit unit is defined as a single person aged 60 or over or a couple (not necessarily married) at least one of whom is aged 60 or over.
4. The estimates under "total" in the table refer to the total of Income Support, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. They should be regarded as rough estimates only because they count recipients of more than one benefit more than once and count those entitled to but not receiving more than one benefit more than once.

SERPS

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the basis on which the estimate of the cost of SERPS changes was made by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, reported in the House of Lords Official Report of 11 October 1991, column 31. [95532]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my right hon. Friend to the Written Answer my hon. Friend, the then Minister of State, gave the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) on 22 March 1999, Official Report, column 103.

Chief Child Support Officer Report

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the Chief Child Support Officer's annual report for 1998–99. [96728]

Angela Eagle: The annual report of the Chief Child Support Officer for the year 1998–99 is published today. This report provides information, based on monitoring of decision making in the Child Support Agency during 1998–99, on standards of decision making and levels of accuracy in the assessment of child support liability. The report indicates that, although substantial progress has been made there is still cause for concern about standards of decision making in child support. The Chief Child Support Officer's analysis of the causes of the inaccuracy in the scheme is a valuable contribution to the process of reform. In particular the report highlights the damaging effect the excessive complexity of the current maintenance formula.

The report shows that, of the assessments examined in 1998–99, fewer than one in five were definitely wrong in cash terms. In a further 22 per cent. there was insufficient evidence to tell whether the assessment was right or not. Overall, 60 per cent. were definitely correct in money terms, a slight rise from the 59 per cent. achieved in the previous year.

We expect to see continuing progress both as the result of continued efforts by Child Support Agency staff and as the provisions in the Social Security Act 1998 are implemented. It is clear that radical reform is the only real solution and the White Paper "A new contract for Welfare: Children's Rights and Parents' Responsibilities" sets out our proposals for a simple straightforward and transparent child support scheme.

Parental Leave

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what help will be available from the benefits system for people exercising the right to parental leave. [96730]

Mr. Bayley: New rights to unpaid parental leave will be introduced from 15 December 1999. Under existing benefit rules a lone parent who is working will be able to qualify for Income Support while taking parental leave from their employer provided that they meet the normal qualifying conditions. This will also be the case for parents who are able to qualify for Income Support on sickness or other grounds. Some parents may be able to qualify for other benefits such as Housing Benefit or Jobseekers Allowance if they can meet the normal conditions. Precise numbers of people who claim in these circumstances will depend upon how many people decide to exercise their right to take up parental leave. We estimate there could be around 8,000 people per year who will claim under existing benefit rules, at an additional cost of some £10 million.

We also propose to change Income Support rules to make Income Support available for couples who would not otherwise qualify while on parental leave. The change will apply to couples on a low income who are exercising the new rights to statutory unpaid parental leave to care for a child who lives with them. Income Support will be available when the only earner is taking unpaid parental leave and the family is in receipt of either Working Families Tax Credit, Disabled Persons Tax Credit, Housing Benefit or Council Tax Benefit on the day before the parental leave is taken. (Where both members of the couple work, Income Support will be available if both take statutory unpaid parental leave at the same time). Our latest estimate is that about 1,000 people per year will claim Income Support under these new provisions, at a cost of £1.5 million.

We are committed to helping families achieve a balance between their home and work lives. This measure will support the new parental leave entitlements in the Employment Rights Act and help low income families take up their statutory entitlement.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his oral answer on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 698, how many parents with care his Department anticipates will have their entitlement to maintenance reduced under the proposed changes to the CSA; and by what amount. [96057]

Angela Eagle: The purpose of the reforms is to get maintenance flowing more regularly to more children. Overall more than 1 million children will be better off as the changes take effect.

If all existing cases moved to the new scheme today, average maintenance liability for non-resident parents in work would fall from around £38 now to an estimated £30.50. On this basis about 350,000 parents with care, whose non-resident parent is in paid work, would have a lower maintenance assessment as a result of the new child support rates. The average reduction would be about £17 a week. 190,000 parents with care would have a higher assessment, with average increases of around £11.50 a week[1]. Changes will be phased in for existing cases.

But assessments bear little relationship to amounts paid. Fewer than half of those using the CSA's collection service are paying everything that is due. Overall only around 66 per cent. of maintenance due is collected. We expect this to rise to 80 per cent. or more.

In addition all parents with care who are on Income Support, for whom maintenance is being paid, will benefit from the child maintenance premium. Over time, we expect the number in this position at least to double as a result of the new simpler scheme. Parents with care receiving Working Families Tax Credit will have any maintenance payments fully ignored.

Taking these factors into account the effect of the reform will be to make around 85 per cent. of parents with care better off at the point they first come to the CSA than they would have been under the previous arrangements.

[1]New scheme maintenance modelled on August 1998 five per cent. scan of Child Support Computer System. Caseloads calibrated to forecast 'A' day levels, and rounded to the nearest 10,000. The average change in maintenance entitlement is rounded to the nearest 50 pence.

WALES

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additions were made to the Welsh Block in respect of 1999–2000 after the announcement of the last CSR settlement; and to which expenditure heads within the Welsh Block such additions were allocated. [94790]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given by my predecessor on 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 391.

Match Funding

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what requests he has received in relation to match funding for EU Structural Funds from the First Secretary. [96554]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I hold regular meetings with the First Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales. We have discussed a range of issues, including Structural Funds support in Wales, and I am aware of the importance of the issue.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Solicitor-General if he (a) has established and (b) published a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [94863]

The Solicitor-General: The Government are committed to ensuring its policies are fair and inclusive, and focus on public service users, not providers. This aim is contained in guidance (published in 1998) which helps Departments consider the impact of their policies on gender, ethnicity and disability. In addition to considering impact, the guidance encourages consultation with women's groups and others where appropriate and action to deal with any differential impact if this appears appropriate. The CPS applies the principles enshrined in the guidance in developing its policies. For example responsibility for providing a co-ordinated service to witnesses is shared by all agencies in the Criminal Justice System.

The Crown Prosecution Service works together with others in the Criminal Justice System to implement the Trial Issues Group National Standards of Witness Care in the Criminal Justice System via Local Service Level Agreements to ensure the special needs of witnesses are catered for.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Leave to Remain

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average processing time for applications for indefinite leave to remain by people seeking settlement in the United Kingdom. [95549]

Mrs. Roche: The information requested is not available.

The time taken to process an application for indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom is affected by a number of factors, including the complexity of individual cases. About half the applications for variation of leave, which includes applications for indefinite leave to remain, can be dealt with as "fast track" cases. Such cases are at present being determined within six weeks, but applications where further inquiries are needed may take considerably longer. Streamlined procedures are, however, being introduced throughout the Integrated Casework Directorate to speed up the consideration of all applications.

Asylum Applications

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum applications made prior to 1 January are outstanding from citizens of (a) Somalia, (b) Afghanistan, (c) Iraq and (d) Kosovo; and if he will make a statement; [95688]

(2) how many asylum applications were processed in the months of (i) July, (ii) August and (iii) September from citizens of (a) Somalia, (b) Afghanistan, (c) Iraq and (d) Kosovo; and how many were (1) agreed and (2) refused. [95689]

Mrs. Roche: The available information for July to September is given in the table and relates to the general breakdown of decisions that have been taken. A breakdown of asylum decisions and the number of cases awaiting an initial decision by nationality is not currently available.

[2] Cases decided under pragmatic measures aimed at reducing the pre 1996 asylum backlog

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the total number of outstanding asylum applications and (b) the targets of his Department for clearing the current backlog. [95686]

Mrs. Roche: The number of asylum applications outstanding at the end of September was 90,685. We are committed to meeting the targets set out in the White Paper "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—A Modern Approach to Immigration and Asylum" of deciding asylum applications within an average of two months, by April 2001. To do this we must eliminate the backlog. We are developing new procedures to speed up the consideration of both new cases and those in the current backlog. We are also recruiting around 250 new staff to deal purely with asylum applications, and training more of our existing staff in asylum skills.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the backlog of asylum claims which will be awaiting initial decision at 31 December. [95443]

Mrs. Roche: The current figure for the backlog of asylum claims which were awaiting an initial decision at 30 September 1999 was 90,685. The backlog at 31 December will depend on a number of factors including the levels of new asylum applications and asylum initial decisions over the next three months.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications were awaiting initial determination at the end of each of the last five years for which figures are available. [95442]

Mrs. Roche: The available information covering the period 1994 to 1998 is given in the table.

Mrs. Roche: Figures are not collected centrally on this basis.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum have been made in each of the last 12 months for which figures are available. [95440]

Mrs. Roche: The available information covering the period October 1998 to September 1999 is given in the table. Information on the number of asylum applications received in 1999 can be found on the Home Office internet site at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/index.htm.

Immigration and Asylum Appeals

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he proposes to take to re-establish contact with (a) failed appellants under immigration law and (b) asylum seekers who are awaiting an initial determination; [95445]

(2) what mechanisms exist whereby (a) his Department and (b) other authorities maintain contact with (i) failed appellants under immigration law and (ii) asylum seekers who are waiting an initial determination. [95478]

Mrs. Roche: The onus is on applicants and their representatives to keep the Home Office informed of their whereabouts. In general, asylum seekers bring themselves to the notice of the Home Office and it is in their interest to maintain contact so as to be aware of the outcome of their applications. Asylum seekers will usually be issued with a Standard Acknowledgement Letter (SAL) which demonstrates their immigration status for the purpose of claiming benefits. If an asylum applicant is claiming benefits, the Benefits Agency would be able to provide information about their whereabouts. Immigration offenders who seek asylum will often be required to report to the police or the Immigration Service.

Exceptional Leave to Remain

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases he granted exceptional leave to remain within the past 12 months for which figures are available. [95447]

Mrs. Roche: Data for the period from September 1998 to August 1999 are given in the table.

Grants of exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom [1]

	Number
Asylum applicants
Refused asylum but granted exceptional leave to remain	2,570
Granted exceptional leave to remain[2] under backlog criteria	7,030
Non-asylum applicants

Overseas Electors

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by parliamentary constituency, the number of overseas electors included in the 1998–99 electoral register, together with totals for each constituent part of the United Kingdom. [95437]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The number of overseas electors included in the 1998 register was 17,315 and in the 1999 register 13,677. A table showing a breakdown by parliamentary constituencies and constituent parts of the United Kingdom has been placed in the Library.

Police Numbers

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to allocate the £35 million for extra police officers to each police authority. [95753]

Mr. Straw: The money will be allocated through the Crime Fighting Fund. Forces in England and Wales will be invited to bid for the money. Bidding guidance is being prepared and will go out shortly.

Deportations

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to deport from the United Kingdom those whose (a) immigration appeals and (b) asylum applications have failed. [95446]

Mrs. Roche: The Government have made clear their commitment to remove from the United Kingdom those persons who have no lawful basis of stay; this includes people whose immigration appeals have failed and who do not otherwise qualify to remain.

In order to effect a person's removal or deportation, it is often necessary to overcome a number of barriers such as a lack of documentation, further representations, absconding or the refusal of the person's home country to accept them back. The Immigration Service has instituted a range of measures aimed at addressing these difficulties and streamlining the process as a whole. Among the steps already taken are the establishment of a specialist documentation unit to liaise with issuing authorities, the tasking of a dedicated absconder tracing team and bilateral discussions with source countries.

In addition, the Immigration and Asylum Bill currently before Parliament contains a range of measures to tackle delays in the removal of failed asylum seekers and others whose appeals have been dismissed. These include provisions to create a new combined appeal process that will limit the scope for failed applicants to make successive appeals aimed solely at frustrating removal, a simplified administrative procedure to replace deportation in routine cases and procedures to restrict the activities of bogus representatives. Immigration officers involved in enforcement activity are also to be given enhanced powers to assist them in tracing absconders and others liable to removal and a new offence of using deception to avoid, postpone or revoke enforcement action will be created.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each of the last three years, how many deportation orders have been (a) made and (b) carried out. [95449]

Mrs. Roche: The information requested is given in the table. It should be noted that some deportation orders cannot be enforced immediately, either for legal reasons or because of other barriers to removal such as absconding. There are also cases where a deportation order has been signed, but it is later decided that deportation is no longer appropriate.

Deportation action 1996 to 1998 [1]

	Deportation orders signed	Deportation orders enforced [2]

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the efficiency of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate Headquarters in Croydon. [95681]

Mrs. Roche: In March, my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Office (Mr. O'Brien), established a recovery project to identify and implement measures to bring the output of the Integrated Casework Directorate (ICD) back to acceptable levels. We are now seeing the effect of these measures. Since mid-September, overall weekly output has exceeded the average weekly level prior to reorganisation. ICD is taking forward a range of initiatives to improve productivity further so it can meet the targets set out in the Government's White Paper and to reduce the backlogs. Around 340 staff have already been recruited for Croydon and there are plans to recruit a further 200. A detailed business plan is being developed to enable the Directorate to deploy its resources to maximum effect.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken by (a) the Immigration and Nationality Directorate and (b) himself to respond to hon. Members' letters on immigration matters. [95448]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington), on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 687.

Jill Dando

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions he has discussed the Jill Dando murder inquiry with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and if he will make a statement. [96269]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Ministers have no involvement in the conduct of this inquiry; it is an operational matter for the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police.

State Visits (Policing)

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidelines are issued to the Metropolitan Police on the screening of protestors from the sight of invited members of Governments during state visits to the UK; [96045]

(2) what guidelines are issued to the Metropolitan Police on the removal of placards and flags from peaceful demonstrators during state visits to the UK. [96046]

Mr. Charles Clarke: None.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will require the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to report to his Department the number of occasions and the circumstances in which police vehicles have been used to screen peaceful demonstrators from the sight of state visitors to the UK during his term of office as Commissioner. [96047]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I am advised by the Metropolitan Police that the deployment of vehicles in front of demonstrators is a tactic which would only be used when the proximity of demonstrators to Her Majesty the Queen or other protected persons, or the behaviour of demonstrators, was such that it was felt necessary to employ the tactic to ensure the security of the protected persons.

As far as can be ascertained, the only occasion during Sir Paul Condon's term of office on which it was felt necessary to employ this tactic during a State Visit was during the recent visit by the President of China. On one occasion, demonstrators had taken up a position without prior arrangement with police; on a second, missiles were thrown; and on a third, demonstrators broke through crowd control barriers.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has made to Cambridgeshire Constabulary about the policing of the state visit of the President of China. [96233]

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions he gave to the Metropolitan Police regarding the prohibition of peaceful protests during the state visit of the President of China. [96042]

Mr. Charles Clarke: None.

Plastic Baton Rounds

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research, and at what cost, is currently being carried out into less potentially lethal alternatives to the plastic baton round. [95894]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office's Police Scientific Development Branch keeps a watching brief on "less-than-lethal" weapons which may be in use or under development in other parts of the world and keeps the police service informed of what it learns, but neither the Branch nor the police service have identified any alternatives to plastic baton rounds (other than CS, which remains available) which appear to merit extensive evaluation. A new design of plastic baton round which offers increased accuracy of aim is currently being developed under the auspices of the Ministry of Defence, the Home Office, and the Northern Ireland Office.

Mandatory Drug Tests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has assessed of the effects of mandatory drug tests in reducing crime rates. [95816]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The options for introducing drug testing at various points in the criminal justice system are currently being assessed. This will include consideration of the evidence base for the contribution the testing can make to reducing drug related crime.

Passport Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to revise the level of fees charged by the Passport Agency. [96055]

Mrs. Roche: No decision has been taken on any passport fee increase. Fees are currently being reviewed, and various options are under consideration.

Illegal Entrants

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many clandestine entrants were detected at each port of entry into the United Kingdom in each month since 30 April 1997. [96051]

Mrs. Roche: The available information on the number of clandestine entrants detected each month from May 1997 to September 1999 is given in the table. The recording arrangements were changed at the start of 1999 and the two sets of figures may not be directly comparable. I regret that details of numbers of attempted entrants who are detected at port are not recorded separately.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state in respect of each month since 30 April 1997 the number of illegal entrants detected at United Kingdom ports who have been (a) granted temporary admission to the United Kingdom, (b) detained and (c) removed from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [96052]

Mrs. Roche: Information on the number of illegal entrants detected at United Kingdom ports where temporary admission has been granted or where they have been detained or removed is not stored centrally. However, the total number of persons removed or who made a voluntary departure as an illegal entrant from the United Kingdom by month, from May 1997 to September 1999, is shown in the table.

Unmarried Partners Concession

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been granted leave (a) to enter and (b) to remain in the United Kingdom under the provisions of the unmarried partners concession. [96048]

Mrs. Roche: Data for the period October 1997 to June 1999 are given in the table.

Asylum Absconders

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum absconders are currently recorded on the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's port and enforcement databases. [96050]

Mrs. Roche: The latest available information dates from the end of 1998. At that time, there were approximately 20,000 asylum absconders recorded on the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) enforcement and port databases comprising around 12,000 in-country enforcement and 8,000 port absconders. This information was taken from a snapshot of the IND port and enforcement databases of those persons (excluding dependants) who have applied for asylum at some stage and who have breached conditions of temporary admission, temporary release or restriction order, or are otherwise found to be out of contact with IND.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what decision he has made on changes in the administration of the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 in order to offer further incentives to carriers. [96829]

Mrs. Roche: I have agreed a proposed extension to the concessions contained in the Approved Gate Check (AGC) scheme. AGC status is an administrative concession which benefits carriers who are responsible towards their obligations under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 and who operate a sufficiently high standard of checking procedures abroad for their services to the United Kingdom. Where a passenger arrives in the United Kingdom without documents from a station that has been granted AGC status, the carrier will normally be given the benefit of the doubt. In such a case, because of the high standard of checking, it is assumed that apparently genuine documents must have been produced at the time of embarkation and must have been subsequently disposed of. Charges are normally waived accordingly. I have agreed that the concession will now be extended to include certain circumstances where passengers arrive with mutilated documents. Provided that the inadequately documented passenger/arrival with a mutilated document:

arrives from an AGC station; and there is no evidence of:

(i) a reasonably apparent and material falsity;

(ii) a reasonably apparent impersonation; and/or

(iii) use of a fantasy or other unacceptable travel document;

then the charge will normally be waived unless, in the case of a visa national, it is clear from the mutilated document that (because, for example, every visa page is intact) the passenger, at the point of check-in, did not hold a requisite United Kingdom visa, or exemption from the visa requirement. Mutilated documents include documents which have been partly destroyed usually by the removal of pages and/or photographs.

HEALTH

Intensive Care

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to use resources from the modernisation fund to improve intensive care units. [95693]

Ms Stuart: Within the additional £18 billion made available for the National Health Service in England over the remainder of this Parliament, health authorities and NHS trusts are finalising plans for more adult intensive care and high-dependency beds for this year than last, particularly over the crucial winter period. In addition, a further £15 million has been specifically targeted at improving paediatric intensive care in 1999–2000 (including £5 million from the modernisation fund).

Accident and Emergency

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to cope with future increases in the numbers of people requiring accident and emergency treatment. [95692]

Ms Stuart: Our plans to improve access to National Health Service services are well under way. Earlier this year the Government announced a £115 million programme to modernise, expand and update accident and emergency departments. This significant sum will ensure that all accident and emergency departments in England which need it are being upgraded: in all, over three-quarters of accident and emergency departments in England are benefiting from the programme.

Other initiatives which will be beneficial in coping with any future increases include NHS Direct, which enables patients to obtain advice by telephone without delay. By the end of next year, there will be complete coverage of NHS Direct in England.

NHS walk-in centres, currently being introduced, are part of our wider plan to modernise and to improve access to and convenience of NHS services. 36 centres across the country will open in 1999–2000, providing quick access to a range of NHS services, including free consultation and treatment of minor injuries, to some 10 million people.

Small Injury Units

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria have been employed in the two rounds of additional funding allocations to small injury units in NHS hospitals; and what number and proportion of applicant hospitals have so far won bids. [95709]

Ms Stuart: The two rounds of additional funding were £30 million and £85 million to modernise, expand and upgrade hospital accident and emergency departments. 242 schemes have been approved for 182 hospitals. Over three-quarters of accident and emergency departments are benefiting from the programme.

The primary criterion against which schemes were assessed was whether the scheme met our commitment to upgrade and modernise accident and emergency departments. Schemes cover a wide range of improvements, for example creating dedicated areas for children, enlarging resuscitation areas, and improving security for patients and staff.

Work on most of the schemes is now under way, and the majority of schemes are scheduled for completion by next summer.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the level of funding for community health councils in each of the past three years and the real terms increase between each year and the proposed real terms increase for 2000–01 broken down by (a) NHS region, (b) health authority and (c) CHC. [95806]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 26 October 1999]: Information for individual community health councils is given in the table. National Health Service regional boundaries changed on 1 January 1999. Also, community health councils are not always co-terminous with health authorities. It is not therefore possible to provide this information by NHS region or by health authority. Decisions on funding for 2000–01 have not been made yet.

For consistency the figures shown are Community Health Councils allocations at the start of each year. Allocations may change during the year and the final allocations for 1999–2000 are not yet known.

Inflation factors used to calculate real terms change are 2.54 per cent. for 1998–99 and 2.5 per cent. for 1999–2000.

Generic Medicinal Drugs

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to reply the question tabled for answer on 12 July 1999 by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside regarding the introduction of price controls for NHS purchases of generic medicinal drugs (ref. 91509). [96120]

Mr. Denham: I shall write to my hon. Friend about her previous question as soon as possible.

Autism

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what records his Department collates on autism; and how many new cases of people diagnosed as autistic have been notified for each of the last five years. [96109]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available. It is for the local statutory agencies to determine the needs of people with autism in their area and work together effectively to ensure that these needs are met.

Podiatric Services

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated regarding (i) the cost effectiveness, (ii) the popularity among patients and (iii) the health benefits of dedicated podiatric surgical services units. [96207]

Mr. Hutton: The King's Fund undertook a study of the cost-effectiveness of podiatric surgery services in response to podiatric surgery being identified as one of nine research priorities in "Feet First", which was funded by the National Health Service. The King's Fund report set out to answer the question, Do specialists in podiatry surgery represent a clinically and cost-effective way of providing for foot surgery? The report stated that there was not enough information to allow a satisfactory answer to be given to the question.

Following the review of "Feet First", the Department's research and development division have undertaken a review of the literature of general practice podiatry, which was completed in September 1999. The review investigated the then current nature of research publications. The review has not yet been published but will demonstrate the need for better quality research in this area.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost per episode of care treatment for (a) outpatients and (b) inpatients by (i) orthopaedic surgeons and (ii) podiatric surgeons. [96206]

Mr. Hutton: There are no comparable figures available because information regarding podiatric surgery is not collected centrally. However, figures for the speciality of orthopaedic surgery are:

Cost per episode of patients using a bed (including day cases) is £1,491.07;

Cost per attendance of outpatients (including nurse clinic and ward attenders) is £56.26.

Hormone Replacement Therapy

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of discontinuing the levying of a prescription charge for each item when more than one hormone is prescribed in hormone replacement therapy. [96044]

Mr. Hutton: It is estimated that around £8.3 million in charge income would be lost if a single prescription charge was paid when more than one hormone in hormone replacement therapy was supplied by community pharmacists in England.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Stipendiary Magistrates

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what studies have (a) been carried out by and (b) been received by the Home Office concerning the relative (i) efficiency and (ii) speed of decision making of the Stipendiary Bench and the Lay Bench; [95472]

(2) what studies he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the potential savings to the criminal justice system of increasing the jurisdiction of the Stipendiary Bench; and if he will make a statement. [95439]

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the comparative cost of like cases being dealt with by (a) panels of lay justices and (b) stipendiary magistrates in the magistrates' courts; and if he will make a statement. [95793]

Jane Kennedy [holding answer 27 October 1999]: No such studies have been carried out by the Home Office.

The Government are committed to the principle that the lay magistracy will continue to play a significant part in our system of justice. The Government's overriding concern is to have in place a system of criminal justice in which the public has confidence. The Government have commissioned research to assess the relative costs, effectiveness and other benefits/disadvantages of Stipendiary and lay magistrates, taking into account all related costs including those of other agencies. The research will be used to assess whether the current balance between the use of lay magistrates and Stipendiaries is satisfactory; whether each set of magistrates is deployed in the most effective way; and the weight of the arguments that are heard for an against the use of lay or Stipendiary magistrates in particular circumstances.

The research will be conducted during 2000.

Commonhold

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to announce plans for commonhold; and if he will make a statement. [95913]

Mr. Lock: This Government are committed to introducing commonhold. Many of the issues that are included in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' recent consultation on leasehold reform will affect how we proceed with commonhold. My Department is working with DETR in planning the way ahead and I hope to announce shortly how we will take commonhold forward.

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Watts: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action he proposes to take to provide further information about the system for judicial appointments in England and Wales. [96615]

Mr. Lock: The first ever Judicial Appointments Annual Report, covering the period 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999, is published today. The Report includes a detailed account, with relevant statistics, of the competitions for each judicial office during that year as well as information about how the judicial appointments system works and details of the changes the Lord Chancellor has made, and plans to make, to that system. Copies of the Report have been placed in both Libraries. The Report is also available on the internet.

Asylum Appeals

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) asylum and (b) immigration appeals are waiting to be heard at the (i) adjudicator and (ii) tribunal tier. [96054]

Jane Kennedy: As at 30 September 1999, there were 2,666 asylum and 2,077 immigration appeals waiting to be heard by adjudicators. A further 2,310 asylum and 757 immigration appeals were waiting to be heard by the tribunal.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time adjudicators are employed to deal with immigration and asylum appeals. [96053]

Jane Kennedy: There are currently 50 full-time and 197 part-time adjudicators employed to hear immigration and asylum appeals. A further 50 part-time adjudicators have been appointed, and will begin to hear appeals from February 2000.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many decisions on (a) immigration and (b) asylum appeals have been made by (i) adjudicators and (ii) tribunals in each month since 30 April 1997. [96049]

Jane Kennedy: The information is as follows:

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Science Laboratories

13. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the guidance on the design of science laboratories in schools. [94262]

Jacqui Smith: The Department has reviewed the guidance on the design of science laboratories in secondary schools. A revised Building Bulletin updating "Science Accommodation in Secondary Schools: A Design Guide" will be published shortly. General guidance on the design and layout of school science rooms for primary schools is offered in Building Bulletin 82, "Area Guidelines for Schools".

Secondary Education (Gloucestershire)

16. Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions his Department has had with South Gloucestershire local education authority about the provision of secondary education in Bradley Stoke. [94265]

Ms Estelle Morris: Officials from the Department have met with South Gloucestershire LEA on several occasions and the provision of places was discussed.

It is the LEA's responsibility to ensure that there are sufficient secondary school places within its area.

The Department has supported capital bids from South Gloucestershire which met the published criteria for basic need.

Flexible Working

18. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has held with employers about promoting flexible working arrangements for employees with family commitments. [94269]

Ms Hodge: We have had discussions with a number of leading employers about how we might work together to promote flexible working arrangements which both benefit the business and enable employees to balance work and home better. We are publishing today a research study showing how such arrangements have helped small and medium enterprises.

Student Transport (Lancashire)

19. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the provision of post-16 student transport in Lancashire. [94272]

Mr. Wicks: Decisions on support for transport for post-16 pupils is a matter for local discretion. Lancashire local education authority has withdrawn transport support for all new students except those who meet very strict criteria for "extenuating circumstances".

Nursery Education

20. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in providing pre-school places for three-year-olds. [94274]

Ms Hodge: We are well on the way to achieving our aim of doubling the number of free places for three-year-olds by 190,000 by 2002. £40 million has been allocated this year to 57 local education authorities with the greatest social need and 80 per cent. of the places provided are in the private and voluntary sector. This will be followed by £100 million for all local education authorities next year and £250 million in 2001–02. This is the first time government has specifically targeted funding on the provision of nursery places for three-year-olds.

School Exclusions

21. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the educational arrangements for pupils excluded from schools. [94276]

Jacqui Smith: Excluded pupils are likely to be educated in either a pupil referral unit (PRU) or through home tuition by the LEA. Ofsted has a rolling inspection programme of PRUs. LEAs are inspected over the full range of their education responsibilities.

School Transport

22. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the operation of home to school transport. [94277]

Jacqui Smith: We will be considering carefully the recommendations of the School Travel Advisory Group which will report later in the autumn.

New Deal (Over 50s)

23. Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements have been put in place for piloting the new deal for people aged 50 years and over. [94279]

Ms Hodge: The New Deal 50plus is an important new package of practical help for people aged 50 and over who are looking for work. It offers: a tax free employment credit of £60 per week paid for up to a year to an individual entering full-time work (£40 for part-time work, 16–30 hours per week); an in-work training grant of up to £750; a personal advice service for the individual to provide help with looking for work.

Pupil Funding (Northumberland)

24. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received about differences in funding per school pupil between Northumberland and other areas. [94280]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from Northumberland expressing concern at differences in the Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) per pupil between Northumberland and other local education authorities. We have already acknowledged that there are valid objections to the current SSA formula. The Government, in partnership with local government, have set up a three year programme of research to investigate thoroughly whether there is a better way of determining the distribution of funds which is simpler, more stable, more robust and fairer than the present arrangements.

Grammar Schools

25. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what represenations he has received about proposed changes to the admissions criteria for grammar schools. [94281]

Ms Estelle Morris: Since June 1997, the Department has received some 200 letters from Members of this House on the subject of grammar schools, and some 2,000 letters and e-mails from other interested parties. There have also been 60 parliamentary questions tabled.

26. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the future of grammar schools. [94282]

Ms Estelle Morris: Mechanisms allowing local parents to petition and ballot on the future of grammar schools are now in place. It will be for eligible parents to decide if grammar schools should continue as such.

Careers Education

27. Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to establish nationally validated quality standards for careers education and guidance. [94283]

Mr. Wicks: We have no plans to introduce standards for careers education and guidance provision. However, on 19 October, we launched the national occupational standards for careers teachers and others who deliver careers education and guidance in schools and colleges. These enable teachers to evaluate their skills and knowledge against recognised national standards and develop careers education and guidance provision.

University Access

28. Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions his Department has had with the Sutton Trust regarding improving access to Oxford and Cambridge universities for students from state schools. [94284]

Mr. Wicks: Ministers and officials meet Mr. Peter Lampl and Sutton Trust employees frequently to discuss issues of mutual concern, including improving access to universities for students from disadvantaged backgrounds. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be meeting Mr. Lampl on 11 November to discuss summer schools at universities for state school pupils.

"Learning to Succeed"

29. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to implement the proposals contained in the White Paper, "Learning to Succeed". [94286]

Mr. Wicks: The White Paper contains a broad timetable for the implementation of our proposals. It also sets out a number of issues on which we have asked views by 15 October 1999. Once we have had time to consider those views, we will be publishing detailed proposals for implementation.

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what contribution business will make to the arrangements set out in the White Paper, "Learning to Succeed". [96828]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave today to the hon. Member for Vale of York (Miss McIntosh), Official Report, column 1079.

New Deal (Yorkshire)

30. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many new deal places have been started in Yorkshire and Humberside this year. [94287]

Ms Jowell: In Yorkshire and Humberside, from the beginning of the year to the end of July, 15,230 young people have started New Deal. In the same period there have been 10,590 starts on New Deal for Long Term Unemployed people aged 25+.

Class Sizes

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the average size of secondary school classes. [94264]

Ms Estelle Morris: The average size of a secondary class was 21.8 in January 1999. January 1999 saw the first fall in overall average class size for 10 years from 24.9 in January 1998 to 24.8.

National Curriculum

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the consultation period on the national curriculum will end. [94268]

Jacqui Smith: Consultation on my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's proposals for revisions to the National Curriculum for the year 2000 ended on 23 July 1999. On 9 September my right hon. Friend announced his decisions on a revised National Curriculum, which will raise educational achievement, while safeguarding every child's entitlement to a broad and balanced education. We also consulted between 15 September and 18 October on the draft statutory Orders which give effect to these provisions. Revised National Curriculum documents will be sent to all schools in November.

Area Inspectors (Young Adult Provision)

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to undertake area inspections of 16 to 19 years provision. [96731]

Mr. Wicks: In its White Paper "Learning to Succeed—a New Framework for post-16 Learning" the Government looked to Ofsted to lead area-wide inspections of 16–19 education and training, encompassing all providers. From 2001 these inspections will be partnership with the proposed new adult inspectorate; prior to that the work will be done jointly with the FEFC Inspectorate and the Training Standards Council.

The programme of inspections will commence in autumn 1999 and will focus in some cases on areas where the challenge to raise achievement and participation is particularly acute. For inspection purposes, areas will usually be single LEAs, but they may comprise more than one LEA, or part of a large LEA.

Most school sixth forms, colleges and major training providers in the area will be visited in the course of the inspection, but the emphasis will be on provision in the area as a whole, rather than on individual organisations. Inspectors may draw on evidence from other recent or current inspections of individual institutions or providers, in complementing, rather than duplicating inspection activity.

The inspections will be in two stages. In the first, the focus will be on visits to institutions and providers to gather and interpret evidence on performance, curriculum and programmes, and cost/resource issues, and to meet staff and students or trainees. In the second stage, usually several weeks later, inspectors will visit a sample of lessons/sessions to assess the quality of what is provided and students' and trainees' responses to it. In addition, certain themes, such as guidance, will be addressed across the different sectors. Inspectors will also consider the contribution of the LEA(s), the local TEC(s) and the Careers Service to 16–19 provision in the area, and will take account of available information on the local market and skills needs.

Each inspection will result in a published report which will include judgments on:

the standards achieved and quality of provision in the area;

the range and coherence of provision available;

the value for money provided.

By commenting on the match of provision to local demand, the inspection programme will provide a basis for future planning of 16–19 education and training.

Public Libraries (Computer Network)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's latest policy towards introducing a new computer network for public libraries, as outlined in his publication, "New Library—People's Network". [95322]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility within Government for the People's Network rests with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport.

We are making £70 million available through the New Opportunities Fund to create content for the Public Libraries ICT Network and to train library staff in ICT skills. In addition, up to £200 million is available through the New Opportunities Fund's Community Access to Lifelong Learning programme to support the development of the network infrastructure. Libraries also stand to benefit from a range of other educational programmes including the £252 million set aside for the development of learning centres under the Capital Modernisation Fund.

Local Learning and Skills Councils

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reason the regional development agencies have been tasked to determine the boundaries of local Learning and Skills Councils. [96002]

Mr. Wicks: Regional Development Agencies are well placed to advise on local Learning and Skills Councils boundaries in their regions because of their leading role in developing economic strategies for the English regions. In reaching their recommendations they have consulted widely with business and wider communities in their regions.

Associate Degrees

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to develop the concept of associate and pass degrees for those unable to take a full degree; and at what national level of attainment they would be scored. [96118]

Mr. Wicks: All qualifications in higher education should represent positive achievement at specified levels and should offer scope for further progression in lifelong learning. The independent Quality Assurance Agency for Higher Education is consulting on proposals for a qualifications framework based on these principles. The framework will include provision for existing qualifications below honours degree level and is intended to be flexible enough to accommodate new qualifications that may be developed. The Government believe that there is an important place for high quality qualifications below honours degree level that are valued by employers.

Post Code Discrimination

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will issue guidance to higher education institutions concerning post code discrimination in admissions policies. [96119]

Mr. Wicks: Entry to higher education institutions should be based on merit and the ability to benefit from the courses they offer, not on social background. New information services from the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service will help institutions assess whether they are reaching all the potential students who could meet their entry requirements. The Department does not intend to issue guidance.

Student Loans

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment at what point of annual income a graduate with an income-contingent student loan will start to repay less in the current year than a graduate with an old-style mortgage loan. [96110]

Mr. Wicks: Assuming a borrower was repaying an old-style mortgage loan at £1,000 a year (reflecting a loan of £5,000 being repaid over a five year period), someone with an income-contingent loan of the same size would repay less until they earned over £21,111 a year.

The repayment of income contingent loans will be fairer than mortgage-style because it will be tied closely to income. Repayments will be based on 9 per cent. of income over £10,000 a year so that repayments will increase or decrease in line with changes in income. £21,111 would be quite a high salary for a new graduate, so most new graduates will initially be repaying small amounts each year in line with their income.

The repayment of mortgage style loans above a threshold—currently £18,192—is not income contingent. A fixed proportion of the loan has to be repaid each year: someone earning £20,000 a year will repay at the same rate as someone earning £40,000.

Graduate Apprenticeships

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the numbers of (a) industrial sectors which have developed programmes of graduate apprenticeships and (b) students currently involved in such programmes. [95782]

Mr. Wicks: Seven sectors of industry and business are currently developing Graduate Apprenticeships in a series of pilot projects: chemical manufacturing and processing; electronics and software services; engineering (aerospace sub-sector); management and enterprise; rail; steel; and sport and recreation. A total of 34 Graduate Apprentices are involved in the pilot projects.

Level 3 Curriculum

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on implementation of the revised level 3 curriculum for 2000–01 as it affects teaching and staffing at further education and sixth form colleges and school sixth forms, respectively. [96111]

Mr. Wicks: The 16–19 qualification reforms arising from the Government's 1997 "Qualifying for Success" consultation document will be introduced for teaching in further education and sixth form colleges and school sixth forms from September 2000. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority has already issued detailed guidance on how different types of institution might introduce the broader, more demanding post-16 curriculum which the reforms are designed to encourage, in the light of their own circumstances and the resources—including staffing levels—available to them. In addition, the Government have made available substantial additional resources specifically for staff development and training in support of the introduction of the new qualifications next year. Many schools and colleges have already indicated that they will be responding positively and constructively to the opportunities which the revised advanced level curriculum will create.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he will take to help those children who were to have moved from primary to secondary education under the assisted places scheme. [94789]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Education (Schools) Act 1997 contains a discretionary power to allow children in receipt of primary education to continue to hold their assisted places for a further period in which they receive secondary education. Any application for such an extension is considered on its individual merits and discretion is exercised where it is reasonable to do so in view of the particular circumstances relating to the child. Of the 356 applications we have received to date, 205 have been approved.

School Web Pages

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to encourage schools to design and maintain their own web pages. [94270]

Mr. Wills: We have set a target for all schools to be connected to the Internet by 2002. Through the National Grid for Learning programme we are providing over £700 million to equip schools. Alongside that, £230 million of New Opportunities Funding is available to train serving teachers in the curriculum use of ICT. The NGfL provides the framework for public and private providers to offer additional services. For example, Tesco has set up SchoolNet 2000, which has involved more than 80,000 pupils in creating school websites. We would expect that an increasing number of schools will take the opportunity afforded by these measures to set up their own websites. DfEE has published advice, guidance and further information on setting up and maintaining websites in its Superhighway Safety pack. Schools are also encouraged to seek advice from the British Educational and Communications Technology agency (BECTa) as well as their Local Education Authority's ICT advisers.

Mill Hill County High School

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many objections the adjudicator has received to the admissions policy operated by Mill Hill County High School. [94267]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Office of the Schools Adjudicator received objections to Mill Hill County High School admissions policy from Barnet Local Education Authority and from a total of 127 parents.

A decision on these objections was issued to all parties concerned on 3 September 1999.

Homework Targets

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in setting homework targets as a feature of parent-teacher co-operation. [94266]

Jacqui Smith: National homework guidelines for primary and secondary schools were published in November last year. They include flexible guidance on how much homework and what sort of activities should be set for pupils of different ages. For schools to develop successful homework policies it is clearly important that there is good liaison between teachers and parents, and that parents are given guidance about how to help their children.

Further Education and Training

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure that businesses have an effective role in the new framework for further education and training. [94275]

Mr. Wicks: Businesses make an essential contribution to the framework for Further Education and Training through their involvement with Colleges, Training and Enterprise Councils and local learning partnerships. The new arrangements set out in the White Paper "Learning to Succeed" provide an enhanced role for business through the establishment of the LSC. Employers will be the largest single group on the national and local LSCs, and will be able to use their expertise and knowledge to influence more effectively the type and nature of learning provision.

In addition to their involvement of members of the national and local LSCs, the wider business community will also be able to play an important role through the local learning partnerships.

CABINET OFFICE

Oral Statements

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list (a) the reports published by her Department and its associated bodies, (b) the reports received from bodies set up by her Department, (c) the decisions her Department has taken and (d) events in the UK and elsewhere, since 27 July, which satisfied the criteria she uses for deciding whether to apply to make oral statements to the House when the House is sitting. [93971]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Council on 19 October 1999, Official Report, columns 429–30.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the (a) budget, (b) size and (c) function of the Regulatory Impact Unit. [95305]

Marjorie Mowlam: For the financial year 1999–2000 the Regulatory Impact Unit has a budget of £1,950,000. Fifty-three staff are currently employed in the Unit, of whom two are part-time and four are seconded from outside the civil service.

On the function of the Regulatory Impact Unit, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have to my hon. Friend the Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas) on 21 October 1999, Official Report, columns 649–50.

Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans have been made to reform section 5 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, dealing with enforcement of regulations. [96831]

Marjorie Mowlam: On 28 September, a consultative document was published on the proposed amendments to Section 5 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, dealing with enforcement of regulations. Copies of the document have been placed in the Libraries of the House. The proposal is intended to act as an incentive to spread best practice in enforcement policies and procedures and to reduce the regulatory burden on business. Subject to the responses to the consultation exercise, I will be seeking to amend the Act as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the Next Steps agencies currently in operation, indicating the number of civil servants employed in each. [95280]

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures his Department is taking to encourage the curtailment in Kosovo of the activities of the Sherbimi Informativ I Kosaves; and if he will make a statement. [95295]

Mr. Vaz: The Sherbimi Informativ I Kosaves was affiliated to the now disbanded Kosovo Liberation Army, acting as its intelligence and security service. As part of the demilitarisation process, the KLA has undertaken to disengage in conflict and re-integrate into civilian society, an undertaking which is under constant scrutiny by KFOR and UNMIK.

KFOR and UNMIK take a wholly even-handed approach to law and order. They will act against any report of illegal activity from whatever source.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of whether the Kosovo Liberation Army has fully disarmed; and if he will make a statement on the KLA's reserves of military equipment. [95227]

Mr. Vaz: On 20 September KFOR reported that the KLA was broadly in compliance with the undertaking to demilitarise which was given to NATO on 21 June.

The then commander of KFOR, General Sir Mike Jackson, said on 13 October that over 10,000 weapons and 5 million rounds of ammunition had been handed in by the KLA. Any weapons now found on ex-KLA members are unlawfully held and are subject to seizure and destruction.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the export of military equipment for the use of the international civil and security presences in Kosovo since 26 July. [96830]

Mr. Vaz: UN Security Council resolution 1160 imposed an arms embargo against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY). The only exception to this embargo is that in UNSCR 1244, which provides that prohibitions imposed by UNSCR 1160 shall not apply to the sale or supply of arms and related material for the use of the international civil and security presences in Kosovo. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (United Nations Sanctions) Order 1998 sets out the licensing requirements in relation to this embargo.

Since 26 July 1999, the Government have licensed the export of the following equipment on the Military List to organisations involved in demining activities in Kosovo on behalf of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission In Kosovo (UNMIK). The United Nations FRY Sanctions Committee has approved the export of all of these goods.

60 helmet and visor assemblies

60 mine search jackets

4 de-armers/disruptors

2 rocket wrench

2 box of 66, .05 cartridges for de-armers/disruptors

20 RBR fragmentation vests

5 high energy mini shrikes (used for mine destruction)

10 LBA armoured protective helmets

50 RBR warrior helmets

50 protective vests

35 protective trousers

50 spare advanced fragmentation visors

12 Beethoven Mk 19 exploders.

The Government have also licensed the export of the following equipment on the Military List to the international KFOR contingent in Kosovo.

demining explosives

4 armoured Land Rovers 110s.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in relation to the most recent delivery of three Hawk aircraft to Indonesia, if he will give (a) the date on which the aircraft left the United Kingdom, (b) the reason for the temporary grounding of the aircraft in Bangkok, (c) the nationality of the pilots flying the aircraft from the United Kingdom to Indonesia, (d) by whom the pilots were employed and (e) the date on which the aircraft became legally the property of the Indonesian Government. [95339]

Mr. Battle: The aircraft referred to left the UK on 31 August. Once the aircraft left UK shores, the details of the export became a matter for the company concerned.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ask the Indonesian Government for a full and independent investigation into the death of the Balibo five during the Indonesian invasion of East Timor in 1975. [96024]

Mr. Battle: We have no plans to do so. The Australian Government, who have led on the issue (the five journalists killed were based in Australia and worked for Australian TV stations), commissioned a comprehensive investigation by a former Solicitor General of Australia, Tom Sherman, in 1995. The Sherman Report remains our benchmark. New information about the incident which came to light last year was referred by the Australian Government to Mr. Sherman. Mr. Sherman's second report contained no major new revelations or conclusions.

Chevening Scholarships

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many additional Chevening scholarships for overseas students are being provided; and what is the cost to (a) private and (b) public funds. [96112]

Mr. Hain: At present about 2,200 Chevening Scholarships are awarded each year. On 18 June my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that the scheme would be expanded by up to 1,000 additional scholarships each year through Government and private funding. The cost of 1,000 extra scholarships is likely to be about £15 million each year. Discussions are continuing between Government, higher education institutions and the private sector with the aim of building up to the target set by the Prime Minister.

Belize

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Ministers in his Department visited Belize in each year between 1990 and 1997; and what support his Department gave Belize in each year. [96213]

Mr. Battle: The following Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) Ministers visited Belize in the years 1990–97: Mr. Tristan Garel-Jones (1991), the right hon. David Heathcoat-Amory MP (March 1994) and Sir Nicholas Bonsor (June 1996).

The total Overseas Development Administration programmes for Belize were as follows:

Year	£
1989–90	2,905,000
1990–91	2,678,000
1991–92	2,970,000
1992–93	4,273,000
1993–94	5,693,000
1994–95	5,395,000
1995–96	3,499,000
1996–97	1,995,000
1997–98	2,300,000

The 1997–98 figure includes the period during which the Department for International Development was established. A breakdown of these statistics is available in "British Aid Statistics/Statistics on International Development" which is available in the Library of the House. The Commonwealth Development Corporation also invested in Belize during this period. In addition to the above funding from its ODA wing, the FCO provided Belize with other support in a variety of forms including sponsored visits, scholarships and military training and equipment. Figures for the total value of this support are not readily available.

UNSCOM

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the use of the procedures contained in the Additional Protocol of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty has formed part of the current UN negotiations for the reintroduction of UNSCOM into Iraq. [96421]

Mr. Hain: The Additional Protocol does not form part of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT). It is an extension to the safeguards agreement negotiated between the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and NPT member states. Iraq has not agreed an Additional Protocol with the IAEA, hence this subject has no direct bearing on current discussion in the UN on re-establishing IAEA and UNSCOM operations in Iraq under UN Security Council resolution 687.

Consular Procedure (Islamabad)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the operation of the interim appointment system in Islamabad for applicants seeking entry clearance. [95657]

Mr. Vaz: In an attempt to reduce waiting times for interviews, our High Commission in Islamabad has set up a system aimed at processing some straightforward applications for settlement visas more quickly. Applications which are judged to fall into this category may be submitted to the High Commission on any Tuesday for consideration.

Chinese State Visit

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings concerning the security and policing arrangements for the visit of President Jiang Zemin were held between his Department and the Metropolitan Police; who attended those meetings; what advice and guidance on security arrangements and the policing of possible demonstrations his Department offered at those meetings; and if he will publish the minutes of the meetings. [96113]

Mr. Battle: Officials of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and representatives of the Police discussed the security and policing arrangements for the Chinese State Visit on a number of occasions between July and October. Minutes were not taken. Such discussions and meetings are a standard part of preparation for State Visits, to take the police through the proposed programme to enable them to make their operational decisions. These meetings involved officials from the Foreign Office and representatives of the police services concerned. Officials from Buckingham Palace, representatives of the Chinese Embassy and organisers of individual events attended as appropriate.

Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials and the Metropolitan Police discussed the proposed programme for the State Visit and the concerns of the Chinese authorities about the possible impact of demonstrations on the visit. Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials reported to the police that they had told the Chinese authorities that demonstrations should be expected and that the Chinese should accept that the policing of the visit was a matter for the police's operational judgment. Ministers were consulted only on the arrangements for the welcoming ceremony on Horse Guards Parade and they expressed the view that it should take the same form as on previous State Visits.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which members of his Department's staff were present outside the Cambridge University Library for the arrival of the President of China; and what representations these staff made to the police about their handling of public demonstrations. [96234]

Mr. Battle: In accordance with standard practice for State Visits, Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials from the China Hong Kong Department, Protocol Division and Conference and Visits Group were present at Cambridge University Library to liaise between the Chinese authorities and Cambridgeshire Constabulary on the basis of the discussions referred to in my answer of today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd).

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department made to Cambridgeshire Constabulary about the policing of the state visit by the President of China. [96232]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) at column 993.

There were routine meetings to go through the programme during the preparations for the State Visit, so that Cambridgeshire Constabulary could make their operational decisions.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions (a) Ministers and (b) officials in his Department (i) met and (ii) communicated with Commander Mick Messenger in connection with the Chinese President's visit to London. [96117]

Mr. Battle: There were no meetings or discussions with Commander Mick Messenger.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what involvement (a) Ministers, (b) officials from his Department had in the dialogue between the Home Office and the Metropolitan Police in connection with policing of the Chinese President's visit to London. [96116]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 685–86.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made by Ministers or officials in his Department to (a) Ministers or officials in the Home Office and (b) the Metropolitan Police regarding policing of the Chinese President's visit to London. [96115]

Mr. Battle: (a) None. (b) I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hunting

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to withhold all grants and subsidies to landowners and occupiers of land who allow hunting with hounds on their land. [95653]

Mr. Morley: The Government's position on hunting was set out in the reply by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 715. For so long as hunting remains legal, there would be no grounds for withholding grants and subsidies in the manner suggested.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

A1 Western Bypass

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what date the Highways Agency agreed to postpone the widening of the A1 Western Bypass between North Gosforth and Ponteland Road interchanges consequent upon the development of the Northern Development Area, Newcastle; who were the parties to this agreement; and what size of development will be permitted prior to widening. [95862]

Mr. Hill: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 29 October 1999:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question. You asked "on what date the Highways Agency agreed to postpone the widening of the A1 Western Bypass between North Gosforth and Ponteland Road interchanges consequent upon the development of the Northern Development Area; who were the parties to this agreement; and what size of development will now be permitted prior to widening".

The only widening of the A1 between North Gosforth and Ponteland Road that the Highways Agency has considered is as a consequence of the development proposals for the Northern Development Area. If the development had been granted planning permission, the timing of the widening would have depended on the implementation of the development. No decision has been made on this; it would have been the subject of discussion and agreement with the developer had planning permission been granted.

The application for the Northern Development Area was withdrawn on 3 September 1999. A new application was submitted on the same day for Newcastle Great Park that proposes similar improvements to the A1 Trunk Road.

A new traffic impact assessment has been produced and is currently with the Agency for consideration. As part of those considerations, the size of the development that will be permitted prior to widening will be discussed.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the traffic flows along the A1 Western Bypass of Newcastle and Gateshead at (a) the Metrocentre interchange, (b) the Tyne River crossing, (c) the Ponteland Road interchange and (d) the North Gosforth interchange in (i) 1995, (ii) 1997, (iii) 1998 and (iv) 1999; and what flows are projected for (1) 2002, (2) 2005 and (3) 2010 (x) with and (y) without, the development of the Northern Development Area, Newcastle. [95876]

Mr. Hill: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 29 October 1999:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question. You asked for the traffic flows along the A1 Western Bypass of Newcastle and Gateshead from the Metro Centre to North Gosforth, including the Tyne Crossing.

The attached table, Annex A, sets out the information you requested at the locations where we have traffic counters for the years 1995, 1997, 1998 and 1999 together with projected flows for the years 2002, 2005 and 2010 without the development of Northern Development Area, Newcastle.

A copy of the traffic flows with and without the development for Northern Development Area at assessment year 2013 at Annex B has been placed in the library. In considering planning applications, developers are only required to assess traffic flows for 15 years after the development is brought into use (the assessment year). We do not therefore have the figures for intermediate years. You will note that these are peak hour flows as these are the flows we have used in making our assessment.

As you may be aware, the application for Northern Development Area was withdrawn on 3 September 1999 and a new application submitted on the same day for Newcastle Great Park that proposes similar improvements to the A1 Trunk Road.

A new traffic impact assessment has been produced and is currently with the Highways Agency for consideration. We have asked for more traffic-forecast information from the developer with a revised date of opening of 2000 with the assessment year of 2015. Our initial impression is that the traffic impact will be different from the Northern Development Area application, but until we have this further information and have studied it, we cannot be sure. I am sorry therefore that we do not yet have the information that you have requested in relation to the Newcastle Great Park development.

Schoolchildren (Transport)

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government are taking to encourage the use of public transport by children travelling to and from school. [95766]

Mr. Hill: In December 1998 we established the School Travel Advisory Group (STAG) to promote best practice and develop a more coherent approach to school travel issues.

STAG oversees a programme of research which includes a project, due for completion in Summer 2000, to identify good practice in increasing bus use for journeys to and from school. This will lead to the publication of a guide for local authorities and operators.

STAG has also overseen the preparation of two guides published in June, one for local authorities and one for parents, teachers and school governors, which include guidance on increasing the use of public transport by children travelling to and from school. Both guides also include guidance on increasing levels of walking and cycling.

I have arranged for a copy of both guides to be placed in the Library.

Regional Planning

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he has given the panels inspecting draft regional planning guidance reports about consulting local authorities in the relevant areas. [96108]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Draft Regional Planning Guidance (RPG) is prepared by regional planning bodies made up of the local authorities in the region, working with other stakeholders. A Panel, appointed by the Secretary of State, then holds a Public Examination into the draft guidance. Draft Planning Policy Guidance note 11: Regional Planning advises the Panel to consult local planning authorities, through the regional planning body, in drawing up the list of participants and matters selected for examination by the Panel. The Guidance also advises that the regional planning body should be represented at the public examination. Individual local authorities may also participate at the examination (as they have done at the recent examinations into draft RPG for East Anglia and the South East). Once he has considered the Panel report, the Secretary of State will publish draft changes to the regional guidance for a further short public consultation.

National Speed Policy Review

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends (a) to publish the findings of the National Speed Policy Review and (b) to begin wider public consultation on national speed policy; what representations he has already had with regard to the national speed policy; and if he will make a statement. [96037]

Mr. Hill: The Review of Speed Policy is nearing completion and the conclusions and recommendations will be published shortly. Recommendations requiring changes to legislation will be developed into proposals, and consultation on these will take place. A large number of representations covering wide ranging interests and views has been made about the review, including more than 100 replies in response to the discussion document which was circulated by my Department during the summer.

Roads (Priority Lanes)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the introduction of bus and other priority lanes on (a) motorways and (b) trunk roads. [95999]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 27 October 1999]: There are no immediate plans for further bus or priority lanes on national motorways: on all purpose trunk roads they will continue to be considered as an option to address transport problems.

Fuel Duty Rebate

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what would be the estimated cost of extending the current rebate on fuel duty to community transport schemes. [96170]

Mr. Hill: The term "community transport" covers a wide range of different services and organisations. The cost of extending the scope of the Fuel Duty Rebate scheme would depend on the precise definition of eligibility adopted.

Changes to the scope of the scheme will shortly be considered by the Commission for Integrated Transport as part of its study of value for money for public support for bus services.

South East of England Development Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the cost to public funds of publishing the October 1999 issue of the South East of England Development Agency's newsletter SEView; and how many copies were (a) published and (b) distributed. [96264]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 28 October 1999]: The first eight page edition of SEEDA—South East View was published on Friday 15 October 1999, and was bound into the centre of South East Business Magazine which had a print run of 13,650 copies. Despatch to readers was by First Class post, the cost of which was met by the South East Business Magazine. An additional 3,000 copies of South East View were delivered to SEEDA of which 1,100 have been distributed so far. The total cost was £8,206.22 plus VAT.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 13 September on behalf of his constituent, Ms Pendray. [96291]

Mr. Meacher: My noble Friend the Minister for Transport replied to the right hon. Member on 26 October.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department plans to respond to the letter sent to him on 29 June by the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East addressed to the then Minister for the Regions on the subject of regional development agencies. [96485]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The then Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning, my right hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn), replied to the hon. Member on the 13 July.

Ministerial Duties

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many hours per week the hon. Member for Greenwich and Woolwich (Mr. Raynsford) spent on ministerial duties in (a) September, (b) October and (c) will spend in November. [96493]

Mr. Raynsford: I spend, and will continue to spend, as much time as required to fulfil my Ministerial responsibilities.

Public Transport Expenditure

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much was spent per inhabitant on public transport (a) in the West Midlands and (b) in Greater London in each of the last seven years; and if he will make a statement. [96292]

Mr. Hill: The information is not available in the form requested.

The latest figures available for DETR historic and planned expenditure, and planned spending, on all elements of Transport can be found in the Departmental Annual Report 1999. Expenditure by DETR on public transport over the last seven years is as follows:

DETR does not analyse expenditure by region, or keep records of population by region.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the amount of funding provided by local authorities (a) to the arts, (b) to museums and galleries and (c) supporting the upkeep of listed buildings in the last year for which figures are available. [95491]

Ms Beverley Hughes: English local authorities incurred a total net current expenditure of £137.7 million on museums and art galleries in 1997–98. Expenditure on art activities and facilities and conservation of the historic environment was separately identified for the first time on the 1998–99 returns, and this information is not yet complete. However, budget information for the total net current expenditure on culture and heritage is available for 1999–2000, the figure for English local authorities being £278.5 million. This includes museums and galleries, art activities and facilities, conservation of the historic environment, and archives and records.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list by political party, the number of councillors who sit as board members of each of the Regional Development Agencies; [96012]

(2) what is the total number of Regional Development Agency board members in England; and of those, how many are councillors. [96007]

Ms Armstrong: The eight Regional Development Agencies currently have 102 board members in all, including the Chairmen, and four vacant board positions. Four councillors were appointed to each board, affiliated as follows:

Regional Development Agency	Labour	Liberal Democrat	Conservative	Independent
Advantage West Midlands	3	0	1	0
East of England	2	1	1	0
East Midlands	3	1	0	0
One NorthEast	3	0	0	1
South East	2	1	1	0

[1] Includes one former councillor who was not re-elected at the last election

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of his Department's non-departmental public body (a) employees and (b) expenditure is represented by the eight regional development agencies. [96003]

Ms Armstrong: (a) Approximately 5 per cent. (using available figures of RDAs' staffing on 1 April 1999 compared with NDPBs' staffing on 1 April 1998); and

(b) 24 per cent. (planned expenditure for 1999–2000).

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what have been the set-up costs to date of regional development agencies. [96004]

Ms Armstrong: The Regional Development Agencies spent £5.138 million in the four months before they were established on 1 April 1999. In addition to inherited resources, RDAs have £17 million this financial year to spend on administration.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many meetings (a) Ministers and (b) officials have had with representatives of each of the regional development agencies. [96009]

Ms Armstrong: Ministers and officials have been involved in a regular, and ongoing, programme of meetings with the Regional Development Agencies.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many regional development agency strategies he has received; and when and by what method he intends to respond to them. [96011]

Ms Armstrong: Strategies for all eight Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) were presented to Ministers on 26 October. We aim to formally respond to these by the end of the year. A decision on the appropriate method of response will be made after full consideration of the Strategies.

Regional Chambers

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list, by political party, the number of councillors who are members of each regional chamber. [96010]

Ms Armstrong: The current breakdown, by political party, of the councillors who are members of the regional chambers is as follows:

	Conservative	Labour	Liberal Democrat	Other
East	11	10	5	1
East Midlands	17	37	6	8
North East	2	34	4	2
North West	15	38	10	7
South East	33	15	20	5
South West	23	19	30	8
West Midlands	7	27	6	2
Yorkshire and Humber	4	13	2	3

Oxford Traffic

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the Oxford Transport Strategy's impact on traffic congestion in the city. [96597]

Mr. Hill: The Oxford Transport Strategy has been implemented as a rolling programme since its adoption in 1993, supported by a specific central Government funding from 1994–95 onwards. Oxfordshire County Council has established a programme of continuous monitoring to assess the impact of the Oxford Transport Strategy. They estimate that car flows into the central area of Oxford have decreased by about 4.5 per cent. from 1991 to 1998. The Government will continue to assess the results of this monitoring as part of the Local Transport Plan funding regime.

Council Tax

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the operation of the council tax benefit subsidy limitation scheme for 2000–01. [96951]

Ms Armstrong: The guideline for the 2000/01 scheme will be the same as last year: a 4.5 per cent. increase in council tax or such higher increase as is necessary to give the council an increase in its budget requirement equal to its full cash SSA increase. As indicated last year, the scheme will operate cumulatively. For each authority, we will use its previous year's council tax at guideline as the starting point.

All other aspects of the scheme will operate on the same basis as last year.

Revenue Support Grant

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements he intends to make for the distribution of revenue support grant to local authorities in England. [96952]

Ms Armstrong: I expect to be able to announce to the House full details of the proposed Revenue Support Grant distribution in late November. However it would be helpful both to hon. Members and local authorities to announce now what I am minded to do in terms of grant distribution, phasing in or changes, and consultation.

This year, I propose to set considerable store by stability in the grant system, to help councils plan ahead. In our July 1998 White Paper, "Modern Local Government—In Touch With The People", we said that we would not expect to make fresh changes to the method of calculation of Standard Spending Assessments (SSAs,) except, for example, where there are changes in the functions of councils, or the financing of particular services. We said that the SSAs of individual councils would change to reflect changes in demand for their services as reflected in the data used to calculate the SSAs.

The totals of SSAs will change this year to reflect the increased funding announced last July in the Comprehensive Spending Review. There will be changes to reflect new functions or financing arrangements. The £150 million from the Service Development Fund which we had put in the Education SSA total to help meet the costs of implementing the pay reforms proposed in the Teachers' Green Paper will now be paid as part of a special Grant for that purpose.

Our present intention is that, subject to consultation, and approval by the House, we shall not make any changes to the method of grant distribution generally. We shall need to make some limited adjustments to SSAs to accommodate the establishment of the Greater London Authority (GLA) and related changes, most notably those arising from the alterations to the boundary of the Metropolitan Police area and the Essex, Hertfordshire and Surrey police areas.

We intend to adopt similar rules for Central Support Protection Grant and the SSA Reduction Grant as for this year. This would mean that no authority would receive less central support in 2000–01 than in 1999–2000, and every education authority would receive at least a 1.5 per cent. increase in central support. In both cases, the comparisons must make allowance for the changes connected with the creation of the GLA. The SSA Reduction Grant would operate in the same way as in 1999–2000 but with comparisons moved on a year as necessary.

I am sure that this early indication of our intentions will be welcomed by most authorities for the extra certainty which it gives them in the early stages of their budget decisions for next year.

Given the degree of stability that we propose this year, I do not intend to invite local authorities to hold meetings with Ministers during consultation on the settlement. I expect authorities to put any points in writing; they will all be considered before I finalise my proposals. I shall meet the local authority associations so that they can put any points directly to me. Individual local authorities of course can channel their comments through the associations.

Rail Vehicle Accessibility

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if there is an exemption order for the fleet of new trains to be introduced into service by Serco Metrolink in respect of any of the provisions of the Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations 1998; if he will list all exemption orders from the Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations 1998 since 27 July; and if he will make a statement. [96954]

Mr. Hill: As my predecessor explained in her answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty) on 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 167, we are expecting to receive a number of exemption applications from train and tram operating companies whose designs for new rail vehicles were well advanced prior to the 1998 Regulations comming into force.

We have received an application from Serco Metrolink relating to the new trams they wish to introduce on the Manchester Metrolink extension to Eccles via Salford Quays. The exemptions, which are of a very minor nature, have been discussed with our statutory advisers the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee. An exemption Order relating to the exemption of these trams has been laid in Parliament today. Copies are available from the Library.

Applications for exemption from certain aspects of the Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations 1998 have also been received from both South West Trains Ltd. for their Class 458 rail vehicles and ScotRail Railways Ltd. for their Class 170/4 rail vehicles. The exemptions sought were also discussed with the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee. Exemption Orders relating to the South West Trains vehicles and the ScotRail vehicles were laid before Parliament on 3 September and 13 September respectively. Copies are also available from the Library.

The exemptions will not prevent disabled people from using the new trams or trains. Indeed, we believe that their introduction will make a significant contribution to improving mobility opportunities for disabled people.

DEFENCE

Queen Victoria School

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the key targets for 1999–2000 for the Chief Executive of Queen Victoria School, Dunblane. [96908]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Chief Executive of Queen Victoria School has been set the following Key Targets for 1999–2000:

Achieve a staying on rate at School for S4 to S5 of at least 70 per cent. based on a three year trend.

Exceed by 2 per cent. the average percentage pass rate for all Scottish presentations obtaining five or more Credit awards at Standard Grade based on a three year trend.

Achieve a percentage of the presentation at Higher Grade achieving A to C grade greater than or equal to the Scottish average based on a three year trend.

To achieve a pupil per capital cost of no more than £17,415 (at 1998–99 prices) by March 2000.

To generate income to the School of at least £240,000.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many referrals to the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme there have been; and what research into Gulf War syndrome the programme sponsors. [96063]

Mr. Spellar: At 27 October 1999 there had been 3,128 referrals to the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (GVMAP). The GVMAP does not sponsor research into Gulf veterans' illnesses. Its two main purposes are:

to investigate patients' medical complaints, make a diagnosis as far as is possible, and recommend appropriate management, or provide reassurance if no illness is found; to collate statistical information in an anonymised form as a resource for researchers.

As part of this second role, a paper on the clinical findings from the first 1,000 patients seen by the GVMAP was published in the British Medical Journal on 30 January 1999. This was the first time that the results of clinical examinations of a large number of UK Gulf veterans had been published. A paper on the clinical findings from the second 1,000 patients is in preparation and will be submitted for publication later this year.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if employees of DERA will remain members of the Civil Service Pension Scheme consequent upon his proposals for privatisation. [93705]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Any staff transferring out of the civil service as a result of a Public Private Partnership (PPP) transaction cease to be civil servants and, as such, are no longer eligible for membership of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme (PCSPS). The Government Actuary's Department is responsible for certifying that any new scheme they join offers broadly comparable benefits to those offered by the PCSPS. Staff will be treated fairly and in line with the Government's Statement of Practice for Staff Transfers in the Public Sector which sets out comprehensive guidance for the treatment of staff in PPP deals, including new guidance on the protection of staff pensions.

BRC Information System

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (a) the current status and (b) the future of the biological, radiological and chemical information system. [95801]

Mr. Hoon: The Biological, Radiological and Chemical Information System (BRACIS) is a computer-based prediction system. If a Biological, Radiological or Chemical hazard were detected, the system would assist commanders in the field to understand the implications of the hazard, and take appropriate action.

BRACIS was acquired in 1995 and is used by all three Services. An updated version of the software was acquired this year and this recently began to be used for training purposes at the Defence Nuclear, Biological & Chemical (NBC) School.

A more capable system is being developed with a communications capability which will enable it to be integrated with other systems contributing towards digitisation of the battlespace.

Under 18-year-olds

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many UK service personnel under 18 years of age have been killed in 1998 and 1999 [95630]

Mr. Spellar: Between 1 January 1998 and 26 October, 1999 five UK Service personnel under 18 years of age have been killed, two in 1998 (one drowning, one fall) and three in 1999 (two road traffic accidents, one alcohol poisoning).

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letters of 17 June and 1 September on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Allan. [96281]

Mr. Hoon: I replied to the right hon. Member on 23 October.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the Minister's letter of 30 August, when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a substantive reply to his letter of 10 August on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Hall. [96280]

Mr. Hoon: I expect to be in a position to write to the right hon. Member soon.

Departmental Estate

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the review of his Department's estate in London to be published. [95526]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Following on from the Strategic Defence Review (SDR) a detailed Strategic Development Plan for the Greater London area (SDP GL) is being prepared. Substantial progress has been made on this review of the Department's occupancy of its London-based estate and I expect to be able to make a statement early in the new year following our evaluation of its conclusions and recommendations.

Departmental Contracts

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for the most recent financial year contracts valued in excess of £10,000 including the value of each for (a) London, (b) the South-East of England, (c) England, (d) Scotland, (e) Wales and (f) Northern Ireland. [95352]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 26 October 1999]: The information requested is available only at disproportionate cost. In aggregate the number and value of prime contracts valued in excess of £10,000 extant in Financial Year 1998–99 by the following locations is listed:

Location	No. of contracts	Value of contracts (£)
London	3,026	3,460,927,447
South-East England	10,734	13,130,333,195
England	34,894	54,202,614,303
Scotland	2,297	3,346,377,904
Wales	923	517,423,851
Northern Ireland	226	587,707,167

Forces Married Quarters

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his Department's policy is on the use of armed forces married quarters by forces personnel, after the breakdown of a marriage, during subsequent relationships. [96432]

Mr. Spellar: MOD policy bans cohabitation in Family Quarters. Occupation is therefore restricted to Service personnel and their spouses, together with dependent children if applicable. While this policy is kept under review, there are currently no plans to change it.

In the event of marital breakdown, the Marital Category of the Service person is changed from married to single. At this point, unless the Service person has custodial responsibilities for a child, they are no longer entitled to occupy a Family Quarter and are consequently required to move into single living accommodation. The estranged family is also required to vacate the Family Quarter, but is given a 93 day notice period in which to do so. However, individual circumstances are given consideration consistent with service requirements.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Education Spending

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the levels of spending on education per head of the population in each county of England in each year since 1995–96. [94313]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 19 October 1999]: The information requested is contained in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Accurate information per head of population is not available for each of the years requested. Information has, therefore, been provided on the basis of expenditure per pupil. The information contained in the tables shows for each county in England, (i) total spending in primary, secondary and special schools since 1995, (ii) the total number of pupils in those schools, and (iii) the total spending per pupil.

Emotional Development (Children)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the ability of schools to provide conditions for formative emotional development. [95218]

Jacqui Smith: The Government are committed to fostering children's emotional well-being and to doing everything they can to ensure that they have the emotional maturity and security necessary for effective learning. This is a key theme of the Government's booklet "Desirable Outcomes for Children's Learning" and the recently launched Early Learning Goals.

We are making £21 million available through the Standards Fund for 2000–01 to support innovative work in Local Education Authorities on early identification and assessment of emotional and behavioural difficulties. A further £18 million of Standards Fund Grant is available to support implementation of the revised National Curriculum framework. Personal, Social and Health Education (PSHE) in the Curriculum contains provision for pupils to learn how to recognise the symptoms and address the causes of stress and depression.

National Grid for Learning

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many additional personal computers there are in schools as a result of the National Grid for Learning Initiative. [95639]

Jacqui Smith: A Statistical First Release, published in August, indicated that in 1999 there was, on average, one computer for every 13 pupils in primary schools compared to every 18 pupils in 1998. Similarly in secondary schools, there was one computer for every eight pupils in 1999 compared to every nine pupils in 1998. These are the first signs of the effect of the Government's focused investment on ICT in schools through the National Grid for Learning programme and we expect to see further improvement over the next two years.

School Security

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to assess the threat to security of school premises arising from adjacent public rights of way. [94945]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 25 October 1999]: We treat the issue of school security very seriously and support measures which make schools a safer and more secure environment for pupils and staff. The Department's Working Group on School Security, which includes a representative from the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR), has specifically highlighted public rights of way across school premises an issue to be addressed, and is aware of some local cases. The recent DETR consultation paper, Improving Public Rights of Way in England and Wales, accordingly invited views on proposals to enable highway authorities to divert or close public highways where to do so would protect the safety of the public. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, will announce decisions in the light of the consultations on this in due course. The Department also continues to provide specific grant for school security measures under the Standards Fund : a total of £22 million per year is available specifically for school security improvements, which may include security fencing and other access control measures in order to prevent intrusion.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects syllabuses for A/S level subjects to be available. [95868]

Mr. Wicks: Draft versions of the specifications for all the new Advanced Subsidiary and Advanced level qualifications to be introduced for teaching from September 2000 are now available on the awarding bodies' websites. Synopses of the draft specifications are also available on the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority's website. The finalised specifications will be available to schools and colleges in January 2000.

Franchising

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from the further education sector concerning the proposed changes to the funding arrangements for franchising; and if he will make a statement. [95873]

Mr. Wicks: Representations were invited by the Further Education Funding Council in February 1999 on proposals to tackle the serious problems which had arisen with franchising in some colleges. 153 representations were received of which 136 were from further education colleges. A large majority supported the proposed changes for 1999–2000 which were introduced in July.

PE Teachers

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many PE teachers there were in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools; and what they were as a percentage of the total number of teachers in England, for each year since 1991. [95492]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information is as follows:

PE teachers in secondary schools in England

	Academic year
	1991–92	1996–97
Number of Teachers[1] teaching PE	24,000	20,000
Teachers[1] teaching PE as percentage of all teachers	14	12

[1] Includes teachers without a specific PE qualification

Information about PE teachers in secondary schools for other years, and PE teachers in primary schools is not available.

These reductions took place under the previous administration.

Class Sizes

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 185–86, concerning class sizes (ref. 93239), when he plans to write to the hon. Member for Hertsmere. [96479]

Ms Estelle Morris: I will be writing to the hon. Member next week.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what are, in respect of the revenue in the National Lottery Distributions Fund Reserve (a) the amount (1) received and (2) drawn down, (b) the percentage drawn down, (c) the balance available and (d) the amount committed for (i) the Arts Council of England, (ii) the Arts Council of Northern Ireland, (iii) the Scottish Arts Council, (iv) the Arts Council of Wales, (v) the National Lottery's Charities Board, (vi) the National Heritage Memorial Fund, (vii) the Millennium Commission, (viii) the New Opportunities Fund, (ix) Sport England, (x) the Sports Council of Northern Ireland, (xi) the Scottish Sports Council, (xii) the UK Sports Council and (xiii) the Sports Council for Wales and (xiv) the total of the above. [95486]

Kate Hoey: The following table shows the figures requested, as at 30 September 1999. In addition to the figures shown here, the National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts has received an endowment of £200 million from the National Lottery, all of which has been drawn down from the National Lottery Distribution Fund.

Figures for the amount committed are taken from the National Lottery Awards Database using information supplied by the distributors. They do not include money set aside for a specific purpose but not committed to a particular project.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the percentage drawn down for National Lottery expenditure allocations (a) in the UK and (b) elsewhere; and if he will make a statement. [95493]

Kate Hoey: 56 per cent. of the money paid into the National Lottery Distribution Fund has been drawn down for use by the National Lottery distributing bodies. A further 31 per cent. has been firmly committed but not yet drawn down.

I have made no assessment of the percentages drawn down by lotteries overseas. Given the different ways in which Lottery surpluses are used around the world, I do not believe such comparisons would be helpful. For example, the surplus of many state lotteries are paid straight to the national exchequers, so the question of draw down does not arise.

I am keen to ensure that National Lottery money should be put to effective use as quickly as possible. Many of the reforms that the Government have introduced—such as moving the focus of the Lottery from buildings to people and allowing distributors to delegate their functions—should help to facilitate this.

Sports Strategy

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in announcing his Department's sports strategy. [95485]

Kate Hoey: The sports policy paper will be published early next year. In order for the paper to be truly effective, it is important that there is the widest possible period in which to consult and canvass opinion.

VAT (Listed Buildings)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received regarding VAT on work on listed buildings; and if he will make a statement. [95489]

Mr. Alan Howarth: In the year to 26 October 1999, this Department received 13 representations from organisations and individuals on the subject of VAT on work to listed buildings.

Responsibility for VAT rests with HM Treasury. There is no provision in current EC law to apply a reduced rate to all listed buildings.

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what will be the total sums for each of the next four years to be allocated to out-of-school-hours child care places from the New Opportunities Fund. [95487]

Kate Hoey: The New Opportunities Fund is required by the Policy Directions that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has issued to allocate £220 million in total to out-of-school hours child care places by 2002. There is no pre-determined annual profile for expenditure: the actual allocation of funding is a matter for the New Opportunities Fund taking into account the local child care plans drawn up by the local child care partnerships.

Local Authority Funding

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions regarding the amount of funding provided by local authorities to (a) the arts, (b) museums and galleries and (c) supporting the upkeep of listed buildings. [95488]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not had any recent discussions with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on these subjects. Officials in the two departments keep in regular touch.

Physical Education

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions his Department has had with the Department for Education and Employment about the role of physical education and sport in the national curriculum. [95952]

Kate Hoey: Ministers and officials from DCMS and DfEE work closely together and share a common aim to improve the quality of Physical Education and sport provision in schools. DCMS was involved in the National Curriculum Review announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in September. We welcome the restoration of the PE programme of study for primary schools, to be re-introduced from September 2000.

On 5 October, the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment, my hon. Friend the Member for Redditch (Jacqui Smith), and I both spoke at the Sport England Conference "Education and Sport". We are also working together to develop the Active Schools Sports Co-ordinators initiative in schools. I have met with, and will continue to meet, my hon. Friend to discuss Physical Education and sport in schools.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

RAF Menwith Hill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Solicitor-General what was the cost to public funds of the prosecution of cases, subsequently discontinued, for contravention of bye-laws relating to RAF Menwith Hill; and if he will make a statement. [95745]

The Solicitor-General: The prosecution costs arising from these proceedings are estimated at £700, which includes the cost of case preparation, conferences, and court attendance by a senior Crown Prosecutor at the magistrates court. The figure does not include work undertaken for the test case at the Crown Court and subsequently in the Divisional Court, neither does it include the costs incurred by the Crown Prosecution Service in discussion with the Ministry of Defence police about prosecution policy in general.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Holocaust Survivors

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to the banking industry concerning the amount of bank charges levied for the conversion to sterling from deutchmarks of sums awarded to holocaust survivors; what response he has received from the banking industry; and if he will make a statement. [94822]

Mr. Byers: I am pursuing this matter with the banking industry and will write to my hon. Friend in due course. I will place a copy of the letter in the Libraries of the House.

Tunisia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences for military, security and police exports to Tunisia have been approved by his Department in the last five years; and if he will list the nature of the equipment, together with any current applications being considered. [95098]

Dr. Howells: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 1 January 1994 and 12 October 1999, 57 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) were issued for the export to consignees or end-users in Tunisia of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, commonly known as the Military List. Between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1998, 71 Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were issued for the export to Tunisia of such goods; no OIELs were issued for the export of such goods to Tunisia between 1 January and 12 October 1999.

Details of all SIELs and OIELs issued between 2 May and 31 December 1997 were set out in the Government's Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls, published by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in March 1999. This Report gives details of the military equipment licensed for export during the period as well as the ratings of these goods. Similar details of the military equipment licensed in later years will be set out in the relevant Annual Reports.

A breakdown of the licences issued between 1 January 1994 and 1 May 1997, and between 1 January 1998 and 12 October 1999 are set out in the table. Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings (and OIELs may also cover a range of countries). Where this is so, the licence is included in the Table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

This information should be considered in light of the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08.

In addition, Tunisia is a permitted destination on certain Open General Export Licences, covering the export of goods on the Military List; copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will assess the output of the resource allocation under the comprehensive spending review; and what sectors of the economy he plans to examine as part of this study. [95797]

Mr. Byers: The Department has monitoring processes in place to assess progress against the targets set in its Public Service Agreement on the basis of the CSR settlement for 1999–2001. This work covers the economy as a whole, for example through targets to narrow the productivity gap and improve performance against competitiveness indicators; there are also specific targets covering for example the small firms sector, exporters, uptake of e-commerce, energy and inward investment. Good progress is already being made; for example I have recently increased the target for the number of SMEs wired to the digital market place from 1 million to 1.5 million. Performance against all our targets will be considered in preparation for the next spending review, to set budgets to 2003–04.

As my hon. Friend is aware, the Science Budget underpins all sectors of the economy and the social, health and environmental services. As a result of the science CSR settlement, successful proposals have been announced for the University Challenge and Science Enterprise Challenge initiatives, and for the first round of the now £750 million joint Infrastructure fund. As far as the additional allocations to the Research Councils are concerned, I have asked for a full report on the progress made so far as input to the current spending review.

Trading Names

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to establish a statutory register of trading names. [95787]

Dr. Howells: There are no plans to establish a statutory register of trading names.

Fraud

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to introduce legislation to prevent trading and advertising of services by individuals who have been convicted for fraudulent behaviour in the provision of those services. [96470]

Dr. Howells: The Consumer White Paper "Modern Markets: Confident Consumers" sets out details of the proposals to amend the Fair Trading Act 1973 to provide powers for the courts to grant injunctions against specific practices carried out by specified traders and to ban from trading for a period traders with a history of disregarding their legal obligations.

Timeshares

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the implementation of the EU Directive on Timeshares, which was adopted in United Kingdom law in April 1997. [R] [96318]

Dr. Howells: The EU Timeshare Directive was implemented in the United Kingdom by the Timeshare Regulations 1997, which amended the Timeshare Act 1992. The Timeshare Regulations were laid before Parliament on 25 March 1997 and came into force on 29 April 1997.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what factors underlay the granting of extensions to the period of validity of standard individual export and transhipment licences for transfer to Indonesia, for a period equivalent to the duration of the EU arms embargo; and what is his Department's policy towards the renewal of the embargo after 16 January 2000. [96114]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 28 October 1999]: By a Common Position, adopted on 16 September, EU member states decided to impose an arms embargo to Indonesia for four months. In accordance with this decision, the Government decided that all individual licences covering the export or transhipment to Indonesia of military goods or technology should be suspended for four months and that, because the embargo is time-limited, their period of validity should be extended by four months also. The UK and other EU member states are monitoring closely the situation in Indonesia and East Timor and will take whatever action becomes necessary.

Belize

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Ministers in his Department visited Belize in each year between 1990 and 1997; and what support his Department gave Belize in each year. [96211]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 28 October 1999]: No DTI Ministers visited Belize in the period 1990–97.

The full range of official trade promotion and support services is available to British companies who are interested in undertaking business in Belize. This included support for three trade missions which visited Belize during the period in question:

1991: CARITAG (Caribbean Trade Advisory Group) Investment Mission

1996: CARITAG/LATAG (Latin America Trade Advisory Group) Mission

1997: CABCC (Central America British Chamber of Commerce) Mission.

With the exception of the CARITAG investment mission, all the trade missions were non-sector specific and included companies representing a wide cross sector of industries and services.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which countries have (a) signed and (b) ratified the Additional Protocol to the Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty. [96422]

Dr. Howells: (a) Forty-four States have signed protocols additional to their existing safeguards agreements: Armenia, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Holy See, Hungary, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Monaco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States of America, Uruguay and Uzbekistan. In addition, Cuba has concluded an Additional Protocol which it has not yet signed.

(b) The Additional Protocols of seven States have entered into force: Australia, Holy See, Indonesia, Jordan, Monaco, New Zealand and Uzbekistan.

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the voluntary arrangements by companies and institutions to fulfil the requirements of the Additional Protocol to the Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty. [96416]

Dr. Howells: The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) was this week provided with voluntary declarations of information of the type which the UK will have to provide under Article 2 of the protocol additional to the UK/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement once the protocol enters into force. The declarations were provided with the full co-operation of the relevant companies and institutions.

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for bringing forward ratification of the Additional Protocol to the Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty. [96420]

Dr. Howells: In order for the Protocol additional to the 1976 safeguards agreement between the United Kingdom, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the European Atomic Energy Community to enter into force, primary legislation is required. The Government are considering how legislation for this purpose may best be brought forward at an early date.

Small Business Service

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the Government schemes and programmes that will be delivered by the Small Business Service. [96563]

Ms Hewitt: The Small Business Service will provide access to a comprehensive range of information, advice, counselling and support from government, public, private and voluntary sectors.

International Trade Strategy

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the national strategy for international trade development and promotion. [96906]

Mr. Caborn: I am pleased to announce today, on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, the publication of the national strategy for international trade development and promotion.

I am arranging for copies of the strategy to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Regional Venture Capital Funds

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the outcome of the consultation on the paper, "Addressing the SME Equity Gap-Support for Regional Venture Capital Funds". [96907]

Mr. Byers: I announced to the House on 6 July 1999, Official Report, columns 454–55, that the Government were seeking views on the design and form of the support for the creation of the Regional Venture Capital element of the Enterprise Fund.

During the consultation exercise over 1,000 copies of the consultation document, "Addressing the SME Equity Gap—Support for Regional Venture Capital Funds" were distributed and over 100 replies have been received. The distribution and replies covered a wide range of interested groups and individuals; entrepreneurs, small firms, Regional Development Agencies, the venture capital and finance industries, business support organisations, local authorities, academics and other interested parties.

The proposals for Regional Venture Capital Funds received a significant level of support from respondents. 100 per cent. of SMEs and entrepreneurs supported the outlined proposals as appropriate methods of motivating the creation of viable, regionally based venture capital funds to invest in the equity gap. And over 89 per cent. of all respondents expressed the same view. There was widespread agreement that the lack of small scale equity finance was an inhibitor to growth, especially for SMEs. A full summary of responses to the consultation document have been placed in the Library of the House.

In November, the Government will issue bidding guidance, informed by the responses to the consultation exercise, to Regional Partnerships proposing to stimulate the creation of Regional Venture Capital Funds.

WALES

Equal Opportunities

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he (a) has established and (b) published a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment. [94857]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My Department has no executive responsibilities. For the staff of my Department, most of whom are on secondment from the National Assembly for Wales, my office has adopted the policies of the Assembly which are identical to those of the former Welsh Office.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what projects are currently being undertaken under the New Deal Environmental Task Force within the Llanelli constituency. [95791]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Howell Henry Chauldecott Lowry (HHCL) were the advertising agency appointed on behalf of the Welsh Office by the Central Office of Information to work on the Assembly Information Campaign. That is the only contract awarded to this company in the last year.

Bell Pottinger Good Relations were sub-contracted by HHCL to work on "free media", which formed a part of the Assembly Information Campaign. They were also awarded a contract directly by the Welsh Office to assist with the establishment and maintenance of a web-site for National Assembly for Wales.

Suspended Sentences

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to widen the opportunities for the judiciary to impose suspended sentences of imprisonment. [95474]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Suspended sentences may be imposed only in "exceptional circumstances". Widening the opportunities for their use was one of the recommendations in the Home Affairs Committee's Report on Alternatives to Prison Sentences, published in 1998. As the Government's Reply to the Report noted, we are considering this issue, taking account of the Committee's views.

(2) what discussions (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) officials in his Department hold each year with (i) the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and (ii) other senior Metropolitan Police personnel on the maintenance of public order within (1) the royal parks and (2) the vicinity of the Palace of Westminster; [96214]

(3) what discussions (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) officials in his Department had with (i) the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and (ii) other senior Metropolitan Police personnel on the plans for policing the recent visit of the President of the People's Republic of China. [96215]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 28 October 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary meets regularly with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to discuss policing issues in London, and there are regular contacts with the Metropolitan Police at both Ministerial and official level. There were no specific discussions of the issues specified at my right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary's meetings, prior to the Chinese State Visit nor, as far as can be ascertained, at other meetings between Ministers and officials and the Metropolitan Police. At a regular meeting between my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and the Commissioner on 27 October, the Commissioner told my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary that the Metropolitan Police were conducting an internal review into the policing of the visit of the President of China.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance representatives from his Department issued to the police responsible for the policing of the visit by the Chinese President pertaining to the treatment of demonstrators. [96581]

Mr. Charles Clarke: None.

Mr. Charles Clarke: None.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how may anti-social behaviour orders have been implemented in each police authority area. [96450]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the number of Orders made is not held centrally, but we are aware of six Orders made since 1 April 1999, as follows:

Avon and Somerset—1

Derbyshire—2

Merseyside—2

West Mercia—1.

Police

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of police officers who will leave the police service over the next three years. [95577]

Mr. Straw: Given the uncertainty surrounding the number of officers who take early retirement on medical grounds or who leave the service before normal retirement age for other reasons, it is not possible to project actual wastage in the future. However, the actual wastage over the last three years has been running at around five and a half thousand per year. The hon. Member will wish to be aware of papers and calculations which I presented to the Home Affairs Select Committee on Tuesday 26 October which had been prepared by the Research, Development and Statistics Directorate of my Department and by Professor Buck of Essex University. I am sending the hon. Member a copy, and copies are also available in the Library.

Dangerous Driving

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the issue of deaths caused by negligent or dangerous driving. [95110]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 25 October 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

Research is currently in progress to study the effect of the Road Traffic Act 1991 on prosecutions for dangerous driving. The project, which is being undertaken for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions by the Transport Research Laboratory, began in May 1998 and is due to be completed in October 2000.

Issues covered by the study include: whether there is sufficiently clear guidance on the law and its purpose, and how this affects the choice of penalty; comparison of sentencing trends before and since the 1991 Act; and how the changes in the definition of "bad driving" offences have been implemented by police and courts.

The aim is to obtain an understanding of what leads prosecutors and courts to select one offence or one penalty rather than another. By examining the whole procedure from charging to sentencing, it may be possible to identify ways of improving practice, so as to deter poor driving more effectively.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are not yet receiving their full benefit entitlement because of NIRSII computer problems. [96278]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the Written Answer the then Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms), gave the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 22 July 1999, Official Report, columns 575–76.

HEALTH

Merseyside Health Action Zone

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the Merseyside Health Action Zone programme will tackle ill health, accidents and violence due to alcohol abuse. [94634]

Mr. Hutton: Merseyside Health Action Zone has recognised the effect of problem drinking on the health and quality of life for individuals, their families and the wider community. The HAZ has developed plans to address this issue which include locally developed interventions whereby each district on Merseyside is developing their own schemes to deal with alcohol, linking to the Drug Action Team Plan and Health Improvement Programmes. The "Arrest Referral Scheme" is a Mersey-wide proposal that will work closely with Merseyside Police and the Safer Merseyside Partnership single regeneration budget to provide support to individuals who have been arrested and to put them in touch with relevant services relating to drugs, alcohol, housing, debt and benefit advice and health care services.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the Merseyside Health Action Zone programme will empower people to manage common illnesses. [94632]

Mr. Hutton: The Merseyside Health Action Zone programme includes a number of interventions which will empower people to manage common illnesses. These will complement other Government initiatives like NHS Direct and walk-in centres. An example of a HAZ scheme being developed allows pharmacists to dispense free over-the-counter medication to eligible patients for the treatment of colds and minor ailments without the need to visit their general practitioner.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the Merseyside Health Action Zone will ensure equal access to quality services for cardio respiratory disease, cancer, infectious disease and mental health. [94631]

Mr. Hutton: Ensuring equal access to quality services is a main theme of the Merseyside Health Action Zone. Schemes are being developed and implemented to tackle these major causes of ill health. HAZ funding is being used in an innovative way to set up "Community Cardiology Teams" that will help optimise the care of the estimated 600,000 coronary heart disease sufferers on Merseyside. The HAZ has a further scheme to improve the uptake of influenza vaccination within vulnerable groups e.g. people with chronic heart or respiratory disease.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve and modernise health services on (a) Merseyside and (b) in Sefton. [94652]

Mr. Hutton: Merseyside Health Action Zone is already developing and implementing plans to improve and modernise health services across the whole of Merseyside, including Sefton. The current schemes include £550,000 to tackle coronary heart disease and a further £500,000 to invest in cancer services across Merseyside. The HAZ has also identified £250,000 to support the centralisation of hospital based infectious disease services for Merseyside.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of the Merseyside Health Action Zone. [94650]

Mr. Hutton: Merseyside Health Action Zone is the largest and most complex in the country. Significant energy is being invested in building the partnership across the whole of Merseyside. The HAZ is already implementing schemes both to modernise services and tackle the underlying causes of ill health. Schemes include work to further tackle heart disease and cancer.

Patient-controlled Analgesia

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress is being made in introducing patient-controlled analgesia (a) intravenously and (b) orally in NHS hospitals; [95080]

(2) how many NHS hospitals or trusts have introduced patient-controlled analgesia (a) intravenously and (b) orally. [95081]

Mr. Hutton: Oral analgesia, taken regularly or as required, is available in all National Health Service hospitals where surgery takes place. Patient controlled analgesia administrated intravenously is a safe and effective method of delivering pain relief which is becoming the standard method of administering opioid analgesia in hospitals where major surgery takes place.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that elderly people in need of places in nursing homes can be transferred from NHS hospitals when they are declared ready to be discharged. [95559]

Mr. Hutton: We are working to modernise health and social services and are undertaking a number of relevant activities. Promoting independence is a joint priority for the National Health Service and social services and a key element of this is ensuring that people are not kept in hospital when they do not need to be there. The Health Act 1999 provides new opportunities for health and local authorities to work together in partnership to improve the health of individuals and communities.

We are developing a National Service Framework for Older People to drive up quality and reduce variation in health care for older people. The National Service Framework is being developed with the assistance of an external reference group which, amongst other things, is considering transitions to, from and within hospitals.

We have allocated £887 million over three years to local authorities to help them work with the NHS to develop services which prevent admission to hospital and facilitate early discharge, which help local authorities and NHS bodies to provide more seamless care and which help and support carers.

NHS Research Scientists

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total establishment of research scientists within the NHS by salary grade; and how many are currently employed at the lowest grade. [95683]

Mr. Hutton: Research in the National Health Service is undertaken by a range of staff groups and grades. Workforce information relating to the number of research scientists employed by the NHS is not available.

Wingrove Nurses Home

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the sale of the Wingrove Nurses Home, Westgate Road, Newcastle, has been completed; and what is the name of the purchaser. [95875]

Mr. Hutton: The property has been sold subject to contract to Angel Heights Developments Limited. However, contracts have not yet been exchanged, and therefore the sale has not been finalised.

Junior Doctors (Overtime)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to alter the rules on overtime for junior doctors so that they are paid more for working overtime. [95539]

Mr. Hutton: Traditionally, junior doctors are contracted for duty hours in excess of the standard working week in order to provide continuity of patient care and also to meet their professional and career training needs. These additional duty hours reflect the hours for which the doctor is contracted to be available to work and not the number of hours actually worked.

We have now reached agreement with the junior doctors' negotiators on the principles and structure of a new contract which will replace the old, over-complicated arrangements for next year. We propose a three-year deal to modernise junior doctors' pay, which promises greater rewards for those in the hardest working posts. This will mean that posts will be defined and rewarded according to agreed intensity criteria. Officials are currently negotiating these definitions with the junior doctor negotiators.

Children's Homes

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when measures will be in place to regulate the operation of children's homes which cater for under four children; and if he will make a statement. [95663]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 26 October 1999]: We intend to extend regulation to children's homes which accommodate fewer than four children as soon as we have the legislative opportunity. In the meantime we are considering how we might introduce a voluntary accreditation scheme for such homes.

Care Home Fees

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the category of persons who are admitted to (a) nursing homes and (b) residential care homes who are required to pay for their accommodation and care; and if he will make a statement. [95718]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 26 October 1999]: Where a person is provided with accommodation under Part III of the National Assistance Act 1948, section 22 of that Act provides for them to be charged for the accommodation. Part III places a duty on local authorities to provide accommodation:

> for persons aged 18 or over who, by reason of age, illness, disability or any other circumstances are in need of care and attention which is not otherwise available to them; > for expectant or nursing mothers who are in need of care and attention which is not otherwise available to them.

Section 22 requires the local authority to set a standard rate for the accommodation.

The National Health Service may fund placements in nursing homes for people who are eligible for continuing NHS in-patient care.

Dental Services

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that anyone who requires dentistry work can register with an NHS dentist and receive dentistry work under the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [95667]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 26 October 1999]: We are aware of the existence of problems in accessing National Health dental services in some parts of the country, particularly in some rural areas, which we inherited from the previous administration, and which we have taken positive steps to address through the Investing in Dentistry and Personal Dental Services initiatives.

Schemes approved under the Investing in Dentistry initiative should enable nearly 800,000 patients to access NHS dental services. A first wave of 15 Personal Dental Service pilots began in October 1998, and a second wave of pilots will start later this year. Many of the pilots are in areas where patients have had difficulty finding a NHS dentist.

On the 28 September, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced plans to introduce 30 NHS Dental Access Centres over the next two years and the use of NHS Direct to further improve patients' access to NHS dental care. Further measures to tackle the problem of access will be announced in the Government's Dental Strategy, which will be published later this year.

Community Hospitals (Oxfordshire)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make an announcement on the future of community hospitals in Oxfordshire; and if he will make a statement. [95984]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 27 October 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State fully recognises the concerns of the local community on such an important issue.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is carefully considering all options before reaching a final decision on the future arrangements for community hospitals in Oxfordshire and the future of Bicester Community Hospital.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Oxfordshire Ambulance NHS Trust is millennium compliant. [96005]

Mr. Hutton: On 30 September 1999, the Action 2000 Traffic Light Score, used to assess the readiness of organisations for the Year 2000, was Blue.

A Blue score indicates that assessment of the organisation has not identified any risk of material disruption.

Food Labelling (Nuts)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to issue guidance on the labelling of nuts in food products following the report of the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment. [93554]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

The European Commission is expected to bring forward a proposal by the end of the year which will extend current labelling requirements for pre-packaged foods so that the presence of added allergens such as nuts will always be declared. Organisations representing UK manufacturers and retailers have already produced general guidance notes for their members on allergens and are preparing specific guidelines on labelling. We are continuing to urge industry to take action on so-called 'defensive labelling' such as 'may contain nuts' so that it is restricted to cases where it is absolutely essential.

SCOTLAND

Timor Gap

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what meetings were held by his (a) ministers and (b) officials to discuss Scottish investment in oil or gas developments in the Timor Gap; with whom these meetings were held; when they were set up; what the precise purpose of the meetings was; what involvement there was of Indonesian (i) Government ministers (ii) officials and (iii) businesses; and if he will make a statement. [95268]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 26 October 1999]: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have held any meetings to discuss Scottish investment in oil or gas developments in the Timor Gap. However, I hosted a dinner with an Australian delegation, led by Mr. Darryl Manzie, the Minister for Resource Development for the Northern Territories, on 3 September 1999. The delegation was visiting the UK to seek partnerships with British companies in relation to oil and gas developments in the Timor Gap and elsewhere. No Indonesian government ministers, officials or businesses were involved in this meeting.

Departmental Research

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civil servants his Department employs in a research capacity (a) part-time and (b) full-time; and if he will list his Department's contracts for outside research since May. [96064]

Dr. Reid: There are no civil servants currently employed in my Department in a full-time or part-time research capacity. I will write to the hon. Member on the question of contracts for outside research since May.

TREASURY

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the surplus or deficit in the National Insurance Fund for each of the last five years; and what are the expected surpluses or deficits for each of the next five years; [94916]

(2) what was the total amount of the National Insurance Fund for each of the last five financial years; and what is expected to be the total amount for each of the next five years. [94917]

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current surplus in the National Insurance Fund; and if he will estimate what the surplus will be for each of the next five years. [96056]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 28 October 1999]: The available figures for Great Britain are provided in the table.

National Insurance Contributions Holiday

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) companies and (b) individuals have benefited from the national insurance contributions holiday since its inception. [94693]

Dawn Primarolo: The NIC holiday scheme was introduced in April 1996. By October 1999, only 16,175 individual holidays had been awarded. No information is available on the number of different employers benefiting from the scheme. NIC holidays were available only for jobs starting before 1 April 1999. The New Deal now provides much better methods of encouraging employers to take on the long term unemployed.

The New Deal for young unemployed people was introduced nationally on April 6 1998. It had already been operating since January 5 in 12 pathfinder areas. The New Deal for Long-Term Unemployed People aged 25+ was introduced nationally on 29 June 1998. By the end of August 1999, 58,200 employers had signed a New Deal employer agreement, and by the end of July 1999, 18,660 young people had obtained a subsidised job through the New Deal. A further 4,630 people had gone into subsidised employment from the New Deal for Long-Term Unemployed People aged 25+.

Air Passenger Duty

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the present state of discussions with the European Commission regarding infraction proceedings relating to air passenger duty. [95149]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 25 October 1999]: The Government are considering their response and will make an announcement in due course.

VAT (Church Repairs)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what power the Government have to reduce VAT on church repairs and maintenance. [95466]

Dawn Primarolo: European law does not offer a reduced VAT rate for church repairs and maintenance.

Double Taxation Agreement (Georgia)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government of Georgia first approached the UK Government to agree a double taxation agreement; and when he estimates such an agreement will be concluded. [95469]

Dawn Primarolo: The Georgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs sent a draft agreement for consideration in June 1997. This is being studied carefully. The UK's programme of Double Taxation Agreement negotiations is planned well in advance and we have received no recent representations for an agreement with Georgia.

Cigarette Import Prices

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Government policy towards implementation of Council Directive 1999/81/EC (OJ L211 of 11 August 1999); what was the vote of Her Majesty's Government on this issue; what assessment he has made of cigarette import prices consequential to this ruling, via accompanying tax-take effects; and if the matter was discussed with the Department of Health. [95499]

Dawn Primarolo: The provisions in Directive 99/81/EC, which was agreed unanimously in Council, do not require any change to UK legislation nor to Government policy. There are no practical implications for the UK tobacco market and, therefore, no effect on tobacco prices or on revenue receipts.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of his Department's staff were employed in the Contributions Agency a year before the passing of the Social Security Contributions (Transfer of Functions, etc.) Act 1999; how many are currently so employed; and what the projection is one year hence following the transfer of functions to the Treasury. [95501]

Dawn Primarolo: The following information relates to staff in Contributions Agency/National Insurance Contributions Office at:

31 March 1998, shortly after the Budget announcement of Contributions Agency/Inland Revenue merger;

31 March 1999, date of merger;

1 October 1999, latest position;

31 March 2000, forecast 12 months after merger.

Information from 1 April 1999 is for National Insurance Contributions Office only as former Contributions Agency staff in Field Operations are now included in Inland Revenue Regional Organisation and subject to their resource plans. The information for 31 March 2000 takes into account the re-organisation of National Insurance Contributions Office/Head Office from 1 November 1999.

Company Accounts

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer with regard to the taxation of companies, what his policy is on the accounting treatment of provisions in company accounts and its effect on capital allowances; and if he will make a statement. [95920]

Dawn Primarolo: A provision made in the accounts of a company carrying on a trade will be allowable for tax purposes if:

the provision is in respect of allowable revenue expenditure the making of the provision accords with UK generally accepted accounting practice the timing of the expenditure in question is not affected by any specific tax rule the provision is sufficiently accurate.

Capital allowances, by contrast, give relief for capital expenditure. The tax treatment of provisions, which, as the hon. Member will know, is affected by recent judicial decisions, therefore has no effect on the availability of capital allowances. The Inland Revenue continues to monitor developments in the law in this area.

Tax Starting Rate

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated cost to public funds of reducing the starting rate of tax on savings by half. [96184]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The starting rate of tax does not apply to savings.

Care in the Community

Dr. Brand: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the adequacy of the census data relating to the level of, and need for, care in the community; what guidance he has given to those answering census questions on care; what information he plans to collate with a view to submitting evidence to the Commission on Long-Term Care; and what discussions on the above matters he has held with the Department of Health. [96446]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The White Paper on the 2001 Census, published in March, announced the Government's proposals with respect to the questions to be asked in the next Census. This included, for the first time, a question on provision of care. This followed a lengthy and detailed consultation period including representations from both central and local government and others for a question on provision of care to be asked.

The question on which the Department of Health has been fully consulted, and which has been successfully tested, focuses on the number of hours of care provided per week (defined as help or support to others with long-term physical or mental ill-health, with a disability, or with problems related to old age) in three bands for 1–19 hours, 20–49 hours and 50 or more hours.

Final details will be announced in the Census Order and Regulations to be laid before Parliament shortly.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply (1) to his letter of 6 August on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Jackson; [96282]

(2) his letter of 10 August on behalf of his constituent Mr. Field; [96513]

(3) his letter of 8 September on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Gauvey; [96283]

(4) his letter of 2 September on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Perkins. [96290]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I wrote to the right hon. Gentleman yesterday.

VAT

Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with his counterparts in other EU countries about EU proposals to enable a reduced rate of VAT to apply to (a) labour-intensive industries and (b) work on listed buildings. [95490]

Dawn Primarolo: The terms of a draft Directive to allow member states to apply a reduced rate of VAT to certain labour-intensive services have been discussed by the European Council of Finance Ministers on several occasions this year: final agreement was reached on 22 October.

There have been no discussions specifically about a reduced rate for work on listed buildings.

Debt Management Office

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the UK Debt Management Office's annual report and accounts for 1998–99. [96909]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The DMO's annual report and accounts for 1998–99, its first year of operation, are being published today. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Tax Law Rewrite

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there have been further developments on the Tax Law Rewrite project. [96953]

Dawn Primarolo: I am pleased to be able to tell the House that the Tax Law Rewrite project is continuing to make good progress. The Inland Revenue today published the project's eighth Exposure Draft, containing draft rewritten clauses on the savings and investment income of individuals. In due course, these clauses will be included in a Bill which will completely rewrite income tax legislation. Copies of the Exposure Draft will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Pensioners (Tax)

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioners will be paying tax at the higher rate in (a) 2010, (b) 2020, (c) 2030, (d) 2040 and (e) 2050, assuming that tax bands for pensioners are indexed to prices. [95537]

Dawn Primarolo: Reliable estimates cannot be given, due to uncertainty about levels of pensions and other income so many years ahead.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many, and what percentage of, pensioners paid income tax in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000; and if he will estimate the number who will pay tax in 2000–01. [95733]

Dawn Primarolo: The numbers and percentages of pensioners paying tax in 1997–98, and those estimated to pay tax in 1998–99 and 1999–2000, 2000–01, are as follows:

Year	Number of pensioner taxpayers (million)	Percentage of all pensioners
1997–98	4.0	37
1998–99	4.1	39
1999–2000	3.8	35
2000–01	4.0	37

Notes:
1. The numbers are based on the 1997 Survey of Personal Incomes.
2. Pensioners have been defined as women aged 60 and over and men aged 65 and over.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what marginal tax rates are faced by pensioners in different income groups, taking into account the payment of tax and the loss of eligibility for means-tested assistance. [95518]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

Average Marginal Reduction Rates across more than one benefit are not readily available. The information requested therefore could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Retraining Assistance

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of providing retraining assistance by (a) tax allowances or rebates and (b) facilitating career development loans at lower than commercial rates of interest for individuals in employment but at risk of becoming unemployed; and if he will make a statement. [94811]

Mr. Wicks: I have been asked to reply.

Vocational Training Relief (VTR) is currently available to individuals paying for their own training/retraining in certain circumstances. Individuals who undergo retraining provided by their employer or former employer around the time of redundancy are exempt from income tax on the benefit of that retraining. This is in addition to the general tax exception for employees on the benefit in kind of work-related training funded by their employer.

A national framework for individual learning accounts will be launched in 2000. Under this framework, individuals will be able to obtain 20 per cent. discounts, rather than tax relief, on the first £500 a year of a wide range of learning which they pay for—with 80 per cent. discounts for certain key courses, including computer literacy. Contributions paid by employers towards eligible learning for employees who hold individual learning accounts will qualify for a deduction from taxable profits. They will also be tax and NICs free in the hands of their employees, provided employers contribute to the learning accounts of their lowest paid workers on similar terms. Individual learning accounts will promote lifelong learning and encourage individuals to take responsibility for their own training and development.

The Chancellor announced in this year's budget that VTR is to be withdrawn sometime in 2000–01, when the national framework for individual learning accounts is launched. The incentives announced for individual learning accounts provide a better means of targeting support from public funds than VTR.

There are no immediate plans to change the terms under which loans are offered by banks under the Career Development Loan (CDL) scheme. However, we are actively looking at what improvements can be made to the provision of support for learning, to help individuals to access training. As part of this, we are keeping under review the operation and terms of the CDL scheme, and consideration of the terms under which individual learning accounts should be introduced, in accordance with the proposals in "The Learning Age" Green Paper.

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 28 October 1999]: Voting will take place in the Georgian parliamentary elections on 31 October. We have reports of some intimidation and obstruction of candidates and supporters on all sides during the campaign, as well as a single violent incident when a hand grenade was thrown into the garden of one of the candidates of the Socialist party, fortunately not resulting in any injuries. As well as observing the conduct of the election through the British Embassy in Tbilisi, the Government have committed £70,000 towards the OSCE monitoring mission for the elections, which will fund UK personnel in the management team and both long-term and short-term observers. We welcome the appointment of my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George) as Special Representative of the Chairman in Office of the OSCE: he will co-present the findings of the monitors after the elections. We intend to wait until the official OSCE report on the elections is published before commenting more generally on the conduct of the elections.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hill Farmers

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the deadline for responses to the consultation paper on payments to hill farmers under Agenda 2000. [97030]

Mr. Nick Brown: I intend to issue the consultation paper on payments to hill farmers in England next week. We will be seeking responses by 3 December.

Veterinary Surgeons

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with (a) the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons and (b) the British Veterinary Association concerning the English language skills of foreign-trained veterinary surgeons seeking employment in this country. [88294]

Ms Quin: I can confirm that the Minister and appropriate officials have regular contact with representatives of both the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons and the British Veterinary Association.

The Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons is obliged to register Veterinary Surgeons who have qualified from recognised establishments within the European Union. This is a reciprocal arrangement. Veterinary Surgeons who have qualified from non-European Union non-recognised establishments are required to pass a written examination (in English) before they can be registered with the college. Registration with the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons is a pre-requisite to practising veterinary surgery.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulatory powers he has over the level of fees charged by veterinary surgeons; and if he will make a statement. [89967]

Ms Quin: We have no regulatory powers over the level of fees charged by veterinary surgeons in private veterinary practice. There is a free market in the provision of private veterinary services and animal owners may choose the veterinary practice which treats their animals.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost in 1997 of compensating farmers for (a) cattle compulsorily slaughtered after testing positive in the tuberculin skin test and (b) cattle which were found not to be infected on post-mortem and culture examination. [93738]

Ms Quin: A total of £2.38 million was paid out in 1997 in compensation for 3,298 reactors and 462 contact animals, of which £1.02 million was for reactors subsequently found in post mortem and culture examinations not to have been infected with TB.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research the Government are conducting on the pathogenesis and epidemiology of bovine tuberculosis in cattle. [93739]

Ms Quin: A wide range of research activity is in progress in this area, as set out in the reply given to the hon. Member on 20 July 1999, Official Report, column 495. In addition, the Independent Scientific Group has recently made recommendations on further research needs relating to the pathogenesis of M. bovis and MAFF will shortly be inviting applications for research proposals.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in the development of a tuberculosis vaccine for cattle. [94922]

Ms Quin: The Government are funding expenditure of about £1.4 million a year on vaccine development. The main thrust of the programme in its first five-year phase is to identify vaccine candidates. The work is being carried out by the Veterinary Laboratories Agency and the Institute of Animal Health, drawing on work carried out internationally and in related fields, such as human vaccines, as appropriate. Emerging findings will be published as and when appropriate.

Milk Imports (Stansted)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much milk was imported through Stansted airport from Holland in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [93733]

Ms Quin: No figures are available for imports of milk through individual airports.

Discarding

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the publication date for the research study commissioned from Nautilus Consultants in June on economic aspects of discarding. [95404]

Ms Quin: The research study is jointly funded by MAFF, the Commission and the Dutch and French Governments and involves consultants from UK, France and Netherlands. Nautilus Consultants is the UK Contractor. The project commenced in June and is expected to take about 18 months to complete. It is intended that the results will be published but it is too early to give a precise date for publication.

Cattle Passports

Dr. Fox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the cost of cattle passports is calculated; and what is the cost of similar arrangements in each EU member state. [94289]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Minister announced on 20 September 1999 that the Government would not now be proceeding with their proposals to charge for cattle passports. In the current depressed state of the market this would be an additional burden on farmers. The Government will continue to meet the running costs of the Cattle Tracing System and will not impose charges before 2002–03 at the earliest.

Regarding charges in other member states, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Totnes (Mr. Steen) on 22 July 1999, Official Report, column 660.

GM Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from (a) retailers and (b) consumer representatives on the thresholds of genetically modified material in food currently subject to consultation by the European Commission; what advice his Department has given to the Commission; and if he will make a statement. [94872]

Ms Quin [holding answer 21 October 1999]: MAFF received a number of responses from retailers and consumer representatives in response to the recent EC Commission proposal on thresholds for GM material in food. The vast majority of these supported the threshold of 1 per cent. contained in the proposal as being a practical upper limit taking into account the current situation with regard to analytical methods and supply chain. It was recognised that this threshold would apply to food ingredients so that the level in the final food would be much lower.

The proposal was agreed in Brussels on 21 October with only minor changes.

In agreeing to the 1 per cent. figure we made clear that actual levels of GM material in non GM soya and maize ingredients should be kept as low as possible and that the threshold itself should be reviewed within two years. The Commission will be drafting a statement to accompany the Regulation to cover this point.

We shall be continuing to press strongly for clear EC rules to be agreed on GM free labelling and the labelling of animal foods containing GM material as quickly as possible.

Animal and Food Exports

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has to make bilateral agreements with (a) Poland, (b) Hungary, (c) the Czech Republic, (d) Estonia, (e) Slovenia and (f) Slovakia to minimise regulation and to expedite veterinary inspection relating to the export of UK animal and food products; and if he will make a statement; [94609]

(2) if the EU Commission is seeking to reach agreement with applicant countries for EU membership, in advance of their accession, to minimise regulation and to expedite veterinary inspection relating to the export of EU animal and food products; and if he will make a statement. [94610]

Ms Quin: There are already agreements between the European Union and the applicant countries. One of the objectives of these agreements is a free trade area to establish progressively between the European Union and each of the applicant countries. In addition, Accession Partnerships offer applicant countries EU assistance in meeting priorities for adoption of the Community acquis, including trade rules which underpin the operation of the Single Market.

In the case of the Czech Republic there is a specific Protocol to the Europe Agreement concerning sanitary, phytosanitary and animal welfare measures in relation to trade. Under the terms of the Protocol, there are reduced frequencies for physical checks on certain products traded between the parties. The European Commission has discussed the possibility of similar protocols for trade with Slovakia, Hungary and Poland but these have not yet been concluded.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 1 September on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Doyle; [96287]

(2) when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 2 September on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Newman; [96289]

(3) when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 7 September on behalf of his constituents, Mr. and Mrs. Smith. [96288]

Mr. Nick Brown: I wrote to the right hon. Member on 28 October 1999 in response to the letters to which he refers.

Portugal (BSE)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department is to provide assistance to the Portuguese Government for the incineration of carcases to combat BSE; and if any such carcases will be imported for destruction in the United Kingdom. [95298]

Ms Quin: Should the Portuguese Government ask for technical assistance on incineration of carcases, or on any other matter, we would endeavour to provide it. But we have not been asked to take any bovine carcases from Portugal for destruction and we have no plans to offer this facility.

Departmental Twinning

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many requests there have been to his Department for placement of officials from Central, East European and CIS states as twins of his officials; how many such officials have been accepted as twins; and from which countries (a) those who were accepted and (b) those who were not accepted came. [94007]

Ms Quin [holding answer 25 October 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 25 October 1999, Official Report, column 739.

CAP

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the Coopers and Lybrand review of Common Agricultural Policy administration. [95454]

Ms Quin: A copy of the Coopers and Lybrand review of Common Agricultural Policy administration has been placed in the Library of the House. The review was completed in April 1998, and the Department is now developing an integrated IT system for administering CAP schemes, including a geographical information system (GIS) for the Integrated Administration and Control System.

As part of the Ministry's programme for Modernising Government, and to meet its commitment to review at least 60 per cent. of services by March 2003, the Ministry has now embarked on a wide-ranging review of how aid schemes under the Common Agricultural Policy are administered in England, taking account of the opportunities for improving service delivery which the new IT system will offer. PricewaterhouseCoopers have been commissioned to help with this review. The review is currently under way and PricewaterhouseCoopers are due to report their findings before the end of the year.

Poultry Imports

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the (a) veterinary drug policies and (b) farming practices used in countries from which the UK imports poultry; and if he will make a statement. [95713]

Ms Quin [holding answer 26 October 1999]: Imports of fresh poultry meat must originate only from third countries on a list drawn up by the European Commission. In drawing up the list the Commission must take account of the state in that country of:

- the health of poultry, other domestic animals and wildlife;
- the supply of information relating to the existence of contagious animal diseases;
- rules and organisation on, and implementation of, disease prevention and control;
- the structure and powers of the veterinary service;
- legislation on the use of banned substances;
- the guarantees the country can give with regard to compliance with EU import rules.

In addition, any third country wishing to export fresh meat to the European Union must submit veterinary drug residue testing plans to the Commission. These describe the residue testing programme to be undertaken in respect of their food production and must provide guarantees which are at least equivalent to the requirements of the Community on EC producers. Commission inspectors verify compliance with residue testing plans when they carry out periodic checks on third country slaughterhouses authorised to produce meat for export to the Community.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 336

SESSION 1998–99

26th July—29th October 1999

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index to the daily parts and weekly Hansard is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Contributions by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Significant rulings and statements are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements'.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, res = resolution, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
